Bishop Oldham referred to various diocesan accomplishments and problems and emphasized the importance of augmenting endowments, charging churchmen not to live wholly upon the patrimony of ancestors but to remember both parish and diocese in making wills. The Bishop also briefly reviewed his mission to the Church in Australia and spoke of the coming Lambeth Conference and the meeting of the World Council of Churches in Amsterdam, both of which he will attend this summer. He concluded with a statement concerning the "World and the Church." "We are living," the Bishop said, "in days of chaos and mounting terror of what the morrow may bring. . . . One thing the Church can do is to give men hope, which is the world's most desperate need today." He declared that "hope based upon the very nature of the Eternal" is what frustrated Europeans and cynical Americans need most.

Bishop Barry's address dealt with the missionary work of the diocese. He so vividly set forth the opportunities of this field and so frankly portrayed both efficiency and inefficiency evident in administration as to get the personal interest of the entire convention, who enthusiastically approved his proposed program of reorganization and expansion. Bishop Barry has closely studied the entire field and his proposal for consolidation, centralization, enlarged staff and more liberal support was heartily commended.

A resolution was passed, felicitating Bishop Oldham upon the completion of twenty-five years in the episcopate, the anniversary of which occurred while he was in Honolulu last October. In the evening the Convention honored Bishop and Mrs. Oldham at a reception, when a check was presented him toward his expenses in attending the forthcoming Lambeth Conference.

Churchmen Receive Awards for Conspicuous Service

Albany, N. Y.—At the opening session of the recent diocesan convention Bishop Oldham conferred awards upon several persons who have sacrificially served the Church for long periods of time. The Awards were beautifully illuminated certificates, with the seal of the diocese and his own signature and episcopal seal, and briefly recorded the particular service cited for each recepient.

Mr. Samuel Barlow Coffin received a citation for serving 56 years as vestryman and 37 as warden of Christ Church, Hudson, 33 years a member of the Standing Committee and 16 years Chancellor of the Diocese.

Mr. Luther Henry Tucker received a citation for serving 44 years as vestryman and warden of St. Peter's Church, Albany; 50 years a member and 40 years recording secretary of the Bible and Common Prayer Book Society.

Mrs. John S. Conover received the award for serving 33 years as president of the Woman's Auxiliary, St. George's Church, Schenectady, and 25 years as diocesan Custodian of the United Thank Offering.

The Rev. Mother Alice, S. S. C. J., now in her ninetieth year, received the award for completion of 54 years a member and 27 years Mother Superior of the Sisterhood of the Holy Child Jesus.

Bishop Oldham also graciously presented a certificate to his secretary, Miss Emily B. Gnagey, who has served him during his episcopate of twenty-five years.

Martinsburg, W. Va.—The 71st Annual Council of the Diocese of West Virginia met May 11 and 12 in historic Zion Church, St. Andrew's Parish, Charles Town. The church was crowded for the opening service, at which time the Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, D. D., bishop of West Virginia, preached a stirring sermon on "The Twofold Christian Commission." In the procession were 40 clergymen of the diocese and Zion Church's combined junior and senior choirs of 50 voices.

A plan to strengthen the work of the church at the State University at Morgantown was announced, involving the erection of a new church and student center in connection with Trinity Church there at a total cost of approximately $200,000.

Bishop Strider reported encouraging progress in all aspects of the Church's work during 1947, viewing with alarm only the shortage of clergy and the inadequate salaries paid to diocesan missionaries. Confirmations reached an all-time high of 637 last year, and a goal of 650 has been set for this year. The goal for 1949 will be 900, and the Department of Promotion and Publicity is making plans to assign each parish and mission a proportionate share of that goal and promote the effort in every way possible.

St. Peter's Church, Huntington, for many years a parochial mission of Trinity Church, Huntington, was admitted to union with the diocese as an independent parish. The Rev. Edward M. Blum is rector.

After much discussion, the following resolution was adopted:

Whereas, the principal of separation of church and state is fundamental in American democracy; and

Whereas, certain breaches in that wall have occurred and others are threatened; therefore,

Be it resolved in the interest of said separation of Church and State, That this Council favors an amendment to the Federal School Aid Bill, now pending in Congress, excluding from appropriations all non-public schools.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY, VIRGINIA BRANCH

The 56th annual meeting of the Virginia Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, was held in St. Paul's Church, Alexandria, May 5-7, heard reports that over $42,500 had been handled by its treasurer in the past year, an increase of over $6,000, and the United Thank Offering thus far this year was $8,733.89. The latter was for the whole of last year, $22,696.64 in the diocese.

A bequest of $1,000 from the late Miss Evelyn Meriwether, for years head of the Virginia Branch of the American Mission to Lepers, was given to the new church building to be erected on High Top Mountain, the latest mission in the diocese.

Viva voce pledges of $717.50 oversubscribed askings of $500 to supply extra needs in the Archdeaconry of the Blue Ridge. The remainder was voted to the Louisa T. Davis Pension Fund for Women Workers in the Diocese.

Offerings, including Communion alms, amounted to nearly $400 at the annual meeting. They were distributed to Blue Ridge School, the work in Colombia, South America, Negro work at Alexandria, Va., the National Cathedral, $50 toward the needed salary for a clergyman at Nenana, Alaska, and $156 to the Virginia Seminary Building Fund.

The annual meeting was changed by constitutional amendment to the fall, beginning with the meeting of the 57th annual to be held in Christ Church, Winchester, in the fall of 1949.

Mrs. Harrison Wellford, of Warsaw, presided. The Rev. Thomas Fraser is rector of St. Paul's Church.

Elected as delegates to the provincial meeting at Erie, Pa., next October were: Miss Mary Patten Jordan and Mrs. A. C. Zabriskie; alternates, Miss Frances Wolfe and Mrs. Henry P. Taylor.

SECOND MISSION TO APPLY FOR PARISH STATUS

Panama City, Panama—St. Paul's Church here has applied to Bishop Reginald H. Gooden for recognition as a parish. The mission has been working toward self-support, and now wishes to be given full parish status. If granted, this will be the second mission in the district to apply for parish status since the adoption of new Constitution and Canons last year, authorizing such action. The other parish is Christ Church-by-the-Sea, Colon Beach, which was given full parish status last January.

St. Paul's was started in 1889, under the Church of England, when Anglicans from the West Indies assembled under the direction of catechists, holding services in rented rooms until a clergyman from the Diocese of Jamaica was sent. Since 1915 the work has been under the leadership of the Ven. A. F. Nightengale, Archdeacon of Panama and rector of the parish. His assistant, the Rev. F. R. Atwell, is one of the two perpetual deacons in the district.

MISSIONARIES APPRECIATED

St. Paul, Va.—Deaconess Anne Newman and Miss Alice W. Mayer, missionaries in the Diocese of Southern Virginia, are now in residence and enjoying their new home recently erected at Grace House-on-the-Mountain.

A fund of $103.00 which was raised by the local people, entirely without the knowledge of the missionaries, and was presented to them, together with a list of the donors, with this introduction:

"I pledge the following amount to the purchase of living room furniture for Grace House as an expression of my appreciation to Deaconess Newman and Miss Mayer for their work and help in our community."

In telling the Bishop of all this, Deaconess Newman added:

"The Auxiliary here is also working to raise funds to purchase paint for the interior woodwork of the house. They have begun several projects on the outside to raise the fund, in addition to their usual work at meetings, making quilts and rugs for sale, etc. We have been very much pleased at the fact that both this fund raising and that for the living-room furniture have been undertaken by the members of the congregation on their own initiative entirely, we being merely informed of what they planned to do."

While naturally the diocesan authorities are fully aware of the value of these missionaries, it is gratifying to know the esteem in which they are held by the people among whom they serve.

INSTITUTES

Charleston, S. C.—The Rev. Leland B. Henry, director of Social Relations for the Diocese of New York, conducted two Institutes on Christian Social Relations in the Diocese of South Carolina in connection with the Spring Convocations. They were held in St. Paul's, Summerville, and St. David's, Cheraw. Mr. Henry divided his presentation into three points: The theological basis for Christian Social Relations, the role of the Church in social relations, and techniques for Christian social action.

Bishop Carruthers of South Carolina conducted a Teaching-Preaching Mission at St. Paul's Church, Summerville, S. C., April 18-22. He conducted a "Question Box" and preached each evening.

ANNUAL YOUTH CONVENTION

Flint, Mich.—One hundred and seventy young people, representing more than 65 parishes and missions, attended the annual Youth Convention of the Diocese of Michigan, held at St. Paul's Church, Flint, on April 16-17. The Very Rev. John J. Weaver, dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, addressed the delegates at the annual banquet which opened the Convention, on the subject, "What Are Ye More Than Others?" The Rt. Rev. Richard S. Emrich, Ph. D., Bishop of Michigan, was the celebrant at the service of Holy Communion on the Saturday morning, and spoke at the breakfast which followed.

The Convention was entirely planned and carried out by the young people under the direction of the Diocesan Youth Council, of which the Rev. James O. Carson, Jr., of St. Clair Shores, is advisor.

During the business sessions, Mr. John Booty, of Detroit, chairman of the National Youth Council, explained the Council's program for 1948-1949. Mr. Douglas MacDonald, of St. James' Church, Detroit, gave a brief report on Church World Service, and Miss Shirley Wright, of the Church of the Holy Spirit, Detroit, reported on Inter-Church Work.

Hastings, Neb.—The eighty-first Annual Council of the Diocese of Nebraska was held at St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral May 5 and 6. The Council opened with an Evensong service at which the Rt. Rev. Howard R. Brinker reported "that for the first time in several years all our fields, as they are set up, are in the process of being filled. This does not mean, however, that we have sufficient or adquate manpower with which to carry on the work and promote the Kingdom, since many of our areas are terribly under-manned and understaffed." Bishop Brinker called for a new canon of the diocese to establish a deanery system which will expedite and promote the work of the Executive Council and its departments.

Bishop Brinker reported extensive improvement in the financial condition of all the parishes and missions throughout the diocese. All assessments and missionary quotas of the last year were accepted and paid. The diocese contributed $5,267.93 to the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief in 1947. Bishop Brinker stated that the financial improvement of the parishes and missions reflected itself also on the diocesan level to the point where it could be fairly said that our people are growing in stewardship and the acceptance of giving as a spiritual principle. He stated, however, that our missionary program is still a timid one, and represents only a small part of the real job to be done. He then recommended a detailed program to improve the stewardship and missionary program for the forthcoming year, with emphasis on preaching the missionary gospel at regular intervals; over-all parish programs which plan five or ten years ahead; and emphasis on giving as a spiritual principle. The Bishop said, "Many Episcopalians do not know it is necessary to be generous to be saved. Christ had more to say about giving than almost anything else, and we Episcopalians cannot by-pass giving and be saved. When our Church people discover that giving their money is really extending their own personality, and that their money is really a sacrament and held in trust under God, the Church in Nebraska will flourish, souls now untouched will be won ,and the Kingdom enlarged."

The Bishop called upon the diocese to review the Presiding Bishop's plan for evangelism in Nebraska and to examine the steps already taken, and recommended that we give our wholehearted support in following out the plan. He also urged the cooperation of the diocese in prompting the National Episcopal Radio Hour. The Bishop called for a minimum quota for confirmations in 1948 at ten per cent of our present membership. He reported more confirmations during the past year than in any preceding year in the history of the diocese. The Bishop also reported ten postulants and two candidates for Holy Orders at the present time.

The Council adopted a budget for 1948 totaling $12,881 on the assessment side and $45,912 on the missions side.

A highlight of this year's convention was the annual banquet at the close of the session. Featured speakers on the program were the newly elected Bishop Coadjutor of the Missionary District of Wyoming, the Rt. Rev. J. Wilson Hunter, and the Rev. John S. Higgins, rector of Gethsamane Church, Minneapolis. Bishop Hunter brought the Council an inspiring and thought-provoking address on Evangelism. The Rev. John S. Higgins spoke on the Anglican Communion Today. The Council closed with an expression of appreciation and benediction by Bishop Brinker.

The eighty-second Annual Council was voted to be held in May of 1949 in St. Stephen's Church, Grand Island, Nebraska. .

PAPERS OF INDEBTEDNESS BURNED

Detroit, Mich.—The 25th anniversary of the establishment of St. James' Church was observed at the 11 A. M. service on Sunday, May 2, simultaneously with the ceremony of burning the papers representing the last remaining indebtedness on the present parish property. The Rev. Gordon Matthews, executive secretary of the diocese, was the preacher at the service.

Still worshipping in its original location, the congregation has purchased a new site and will proceed to erect a new building as soon as possible. Many changes have occurred in the neighborhood during the past 25 years, including the coming of a great many new residents, and it has been found that the present building is not only inadequate for the needs of the parish, but not properly located for most effective work.

efficient? What needs to be done right here in our parish? then something is surely going to happen.

This very year is the time of the greatest need and of challenging urgency. We see pretty clearly what needs to be done, and we are fairly certain we know the solution but we are still faced with the consciousness of past failures and we hesitate to launch out. We have the examples of what other men are doing and what has worked in other places and dioceses. That does not mean we are to follow slavishly or that what has been another man's success may not be our failure. We do know this is our day of opportunity, and where we live and worship is our field of service, and if we are faithful God will bless our efforts with success.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

Consecration Sermon

Preached at the Consecration of the Rev. William J. Gordon as Bishop of Alaska, in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Raleigh, N. C., on May 18, 1948

By The RT. REV. THOMAS C. DARST, D. D.,

Retired Bishop of East Carolina

"But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God . . .

Take heed, therefore, unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the Church of God, which He hath purchased with His own blood."—Acts 20: 24 and 28.

St. Paul's thrilling, appealing words to the Convocation of the Elders of the Church at Miletus come to us with fresh meaning and power as we assemble in this Church of the Good Shepherd for the high and holy purpose of Consecrating and sending forth a beloved young brother as a Bishop in the Church of God—sending him forth, endued with the guiding power of the Holy Spirit, to exercise the ministry which he has received of the Lord Jesus, to bear witness to the Gospel of the grace of God, to shepherd the Church of the Lord, which He has purchased with His own blood.

We are committing to him a great task, a compelling opportunity, a glorious privilege, calling for the humble serving duties of a true Deacon, the sacramental, prophetic, pastoral work of a true priest, the loving, understanding guidance of a true Bishop and Shepherd in the Church of the Living God. For today, as never before in the history of the Church, the world needs, and must have, the leadership of a consecrated ministry. It is not enough to be clever or socially minded or popular. We must be good men whose lives are hid with Christ in God, glad bearers of the redeeming cross, humble interpretors of the mind and spirit of Jesus, witness bearers to the truth that shall set men free.

Unless we are joyfully conscious of the blessed fact that we have received our ministry of the Lord Jesus Christ and count nothing dear unto ourselves apart from the faithful exercise of that ministry, it can never be a ministry of power—it can never lead a weary, sin sick people into the joyful fellowship of the family of God.

We cannot demand respect for our office unless we so live and labor and love that men see as the holder of that office, not one who claims honor for himself, but one who counts it all joy that he is permitted to serve the Lord Christ.

I have never known a parish or diocese to disintegrate under the leadership of a Rector or Bishop who proclaimed, in word and deed, "Thus saith the Lord God", but I have seen many a parish, and not a few dioceses, weaken and decay under the leadership of a Rector or Bishop who constantly fell back upon the Canons to bolster his authority.

They won their point, but too often lost their people; they secured their rights and lost their opportunities.

We need, oh how sadly we need, a sacrificial ministry. We have the high and holy privilege of receiving God's children as members of Christ and heirs of the Kingdom through the Sacrament of Baptism, but if we are to train them to be soldiers and servants of the Lord Jesus, be well assured that we, too, must be born again. We, too, must be buried with Christ in His Baptism and risen with Him to newness of life.

We have the highest, the most heavenly honor that can come to the sons of men, the blessed privilege of Consecrating the sacred elements of bread and wine, and administering to weary, hungry souls the body and blood of our Holy Saviour and Lord, but we, too, must be broken bread if we are to feed the unnourished souls of those committed to our care.

In St. Paul's great, moving address at Miletus, he stressed the end and aim and purpose of his ministry, "to testify the Gospel of the grace of God", to bear witness to the good news of salvation through Christ, to present to men, through the power of the Holy Spirit, the glorious gift of eternal life.

The ministry in this disturbed twentieth century can have no lesser objective, no less exalted and thrilling purpose.

We have the message, we have the men who have been commissioned to deliver the message, we have the power of the Holy Spirit to give wings to our words. Have we the will, the burning desire, the compelling eagerness "to testify the gospel of the grace of God"?

I pray that we have, for the world is desperately in need of "good news" today, pathetically eager for messages of hope, assurance, peace. There is so much bad news today, so many dire predictions of disaster and gloom and the breaking down of all that is beautiful and good and lasting.

Anxious men are asking, "Is there any hope?" Can Organized Christianity, as at present constituted, save our civilization from utter ruin? Did Christ die in vain?

We of the ministry, we of the Church, have the answer if we are big enough and brave enough to "testify the gospel of the grace of God".

The answer is found in the Incarnation, in the Cross, in the empty tomb, in the loving Christ who is alive forevermore, in the sure and certain fulfillment of the purpose of a Father Who wills that all men shall be saved.

The answer, however, cannot be given by men who have nothing more than a superficial loyalty to a cause for which they are not willing to die.

The need of a broken world cannot be met through a transient, emotional enthusiasm that vanishes when confronted with Pagan philosophy.

"Revive thy Church, O God, beginning with me" must be our earnest prayer today as we face the unanswered questions of a frightened, unhappy world.

Hear again the stirring words of St. Paul, "Take heed, therefore, unto yourselves, and to all the flock over the which the Holy Ghost has made you overseers, to feed the Church of God which He has purchased with His own blood."

Feed it with the splendid fruit of our consecrated lives, feed it with the word of God from the pulpit, the Bread of God from the Altar, the example of Christ in our daily living.

By God's grace, we can lead it once more to a joyful acceptance of its glorious mission, a courageous determination to make the dream of the Man on Calvary come true, an awakened realization of its Oneness in Christ Jesus, and of its power, through Him, to save a world.

Lead it, in the name of God, away from its pettiness, its exclusiveness, its cold formality, its unhappy, crippling divisions, out to its promised land of peace and power and redeeming love, out to hearts and homes and communities where Christ is not known as Lord and Master of all life, out to the battle scarred world of hate, suspicion and fear.

Fulfilling our ministry, rejoicing in our high commission, inspired by the example of these valiant souls who went out from an obscure Roman Province to found a World Kingdom of righteousness and brotherhood and peace, we will renew our faltering faith at the foot of the Cross, we will go out as heralds of the new day—ambassadors of the Kingdom of God, sure and certain victors, under Christ, over the powers of hate and sin and hell.

For this ministry—for the blessed privilege of sharing with Christ in the redemption of the world—we thank God and take courage, as we go forward with high faith as loving, living, eager witnesses of the gospel of the grace of God.

Charge To The Bishop-Elect

And now, to you, my dear young brother, I address a loving and more personal word.

In your brief ministry, you have proven by your life and joyful, telling service that you gladly acknowledge the meaning and purpose of that ministry.

You heard and heeded the call of Christ for service in a lonely, barren outpost of the Church's Mission Field, and because of your truly apostolic ministry in that field, because you proved to be a faithful, loving shepherd of the few, widely scattered, but very precious children of the Father, your Church, through its Bishops, acting under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, has called you to a wider field of service.

We have placed upon your shoulders a great responsibility. We have laid upon your heart a great trust.

I am well assured that you will prove worthy of the Church's confidence, and with the same zeal and energy and consecrated devotion that characterized your ministry at Point Hope, you will continue to go forward for Christ and His Church as a faithful Bishop and loving shepherd of the family of God in the great frontier district of Alaska.

The words of St. Paul to his son in the faith, Timothy, we make our loving words to you today. "Let no man despise thy youth, but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity." We will be with you as you go forth to your great field of service. Our prayers will go up that you may be wise and strong and tender—that remembering the example of your father, who in his beautiful, consecrated life of service made holy the lowliest path of duty, you may be permitted, in word and deed, to testify, with joyful conviction, the saving gospel of the grace of God.

Religion and Tolerance

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

There is a curious misunderstanding between religious people and the secularists when they speak of the values of religion for democratic life.

Religious people, whether Protestant, Catholic, or Jewish, are inclined to state dogmatically that democracy cannot survive without religion. Secularists, on the other hand, are certain that religion breeds divisiveness and fanaticism.

Ever since the eighteenth century modern secularism has had the fervent belief that a democratic tolerance between groups is possible only if old, and in their opinion outmoded, religious loyalties are destroyed and a modern "scientific" faith in "progress" and in "democracy" or possibly in "good will" is substituted.

In this debate there are misapprehensions on both sides. Secularism is wrong in its belief that it can establish a solid basis for ethical conduct through a scientific analysis of life. All moral judgments are religious judgments in the sense that they presuppose a faith in some system of meaning for life. Particular moral judgments are derived from this faith.

Thus modern secularists who imagine that they are scientific and irreligious actually have certain articles of faith which determine their sense of life's meaning. They usually believe in "progress," which is to say that they regard the historical development of mankind as an answer to all human problems.

Actually historical development sets human problems in ever wider and more complex forms. Or possibly the secularists believe that "science" can create a "common faith" for all men of good will. Actually no scientific procedure can thus unify mankind. On all the ultimate issues of human existence the historic faiths of the western world are immeasurably more profound than modern secularism.

Modern secularists do have a faith, or various types of faith; but their interpretation of human nature and human destiny is being constantly refuted by our actual experience.

On the other hand, religious people are quite wrong in thinking that faith in God automatically issues in conduct and in sentiments which establish the brotherhood of man, or disposes people to a loving and tolerant attitude toward their fellowmen. The reason this does not follow automatically is because men may believe in God but also believe too simply that God is their ally against every competitor and opponent.

This confidence is the root of religious fanaticism and conflict. Fanaticism does not merely belong to ancient and bygone days; it is a constant source of bigotry. Even when the faith which men hold condemns such fanaticism in principle, it remains a possibility in actual practice.

Religious humility which recognizes God as our judge as well as the judge of our opponent and competitor is the fruit of a profound and vital religious life. All merely conventional religion degenerates into fanaticism, no matter what its protestations.

We, therefore, who feel ourselves called upon to contend against the illusions of modern secularism, must never relax our vigilance against the sins which are the characteristic corruptions of religion.

Evangelical Comment on the Faith and Order Statement

The following opinion on the Statement on Faith and Order, prepared for submission to the Lambeth Conference by the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity, has been prepared by a special committee, and is presented to the Church by the undersigned bishops, presbyters and laymen as an expression of Evangelical conviction.

The Statement on Faith and Order, prepared by the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity for submission to Lambeth this summer, is squarely in the tradition of the last two Lambeth Conferences. The Commission has understood the Chicago-Lambeth Quadrilateral in basically the same way as it was understood in the "Appeal to All Christian People," of Lambeth 1920, and the Report of the 1930 Lambeth Conference.

This means that the Quadrilateral is to be understood as being the platform upon which the Protestant Episcopal Church approaches other Christian groups for the purpose of discussing Unity. This means also that the Quadrilateral is to be understood as authorizing an approach to other Christian bodies which recognizes their membership in the Holy Catholic Church and which honors the full reality of non-Episcopal ministeries.

In the Statement on Faith and Order, the Commission on Approaches to Unity relates the viewpoint of this Church to the historic conviction of the whole Anglican Communion that Church Unity is an end to be sought for, and that this Unity, while it must safeguard several points of proven value in the Anglican heritage, must be achieved by mutuality. The Statement quotes with approval the re-statement of the Fourth point of the Quadrilateral in the "Appeal to All Christian People," "A ministry acknowledged by every part of the Church as possessing not only the inward call of the Spirit, but also the commission of Christ and the authority of the whole Body."

Since the Statement defines the Faith and Order of this Church in the light of the Lambeth reports of 1920 and 1930, it must be borne in mind, in substantiation of our comment on it, that the same Report of 1930, which is cited at great length by the Commission, was the one which gave the "green light" to the United Church of South India.

The Statement has the value of combining in one document a number of valuable formulations of Anglican faith —the original action of the General Convention at Chicago in 1886, the restatement by the Lambeth Conference of 1888, significant sections from the "Appeal to All Christian People" of Lambeth 1920, and statements on the meaning of the Episcopacy from the Lambeth Report of 1930. These various formulations are all of one general tradition, and while they are not of equal merit, they do represent a kind of mainstream of Anglican thinking on the subject of Unity.

After all this has been said, we must point out that the Statement prepared by the Commission does not so much clarify disputed points as it amplifies the statements made about them. If there was doubt as to the meaning of the Quadrilateral—as there has been right along—and doubt as to the interpretation of the "Appeal to All Christian People," this doubt remains in the new Statement. It can be read in more than one way.

We understand the very real difficulties under which the Commission has to work, but we know it is a difficulty in which we all share. Language is never definitive on the verbal level, but we do expect in this Statement clarification on the way to decision. We read the document, therefore, with great appreciation, and we seek to find in it steps in the direction which this Church defined for itself in 1937, when it declared its intention to achieve organic union with a non-Episcopal branch of the Holy, Catholic and Apostolic Church. We recognize that this present Statement is immediately addressed to less ambitious questions but that they are related to, and are a part of, that declared policy.

A commentary explanation of the Lambeth Quadrilateral is one thing. It may serve a useful purpose, but it is background only for concrete negotiations. A non-Episcopal communion needs answers to definite questions which the Lambeth commentary does not mention—such questions as: how much of a doctrinal definition of the historic Episcopate must be part of a basis of Union? Will a non-Episcopal ministry receive recognition in a united church, and, if so, in what form? Until the Episcopal Church (or the Anglican churches as a group) give definite replies to these questions which emerge at once in any negotiations, any commentary on the Lambeth Quadrilateral will be in an academic vacuum.

The real weakness of the Statement is that it leaves entirely unresolved the dilemma arising from the insistence that the Episcopate shall be regarded as essential, sustained, and obligatory from earliest Apostolic times; while, however, disclaiming insistence upon "any one formulation of the doctrine of the Ministry." The latter liberty of interpretation would seem reasonable only if Anglican insistence on the acceptance of the Episcopate as a condition of Union is based on emergence through history and proven value. It is worthy of note that the Evangelical does thus regard both the development and the significance of Episcopacy. Consequently, we are opposed to any attempt, whether overt or implied, to impose upon the acceptance of the Episcopacy such a doctrine or theory as arises from the view that it is an indispensable condition of effective grace.

While the Statement bases much of its reasoning upon the Lambeth Report of 1930, it does not seem to us to safeguard sufficiently, in its remarks about the Episcopacy, the pro-Unity spirit of that Report. Along with the sections cited in the Statement should be the following: "But while we thus stand for the Historic Episcopate as a necessary element in any union in which the Anglican Communion can take part, and have given our reasons for so doing, we do not require of others acceptance of those reasons, or of any one particular theory or interpretation of the Episcopate as a condition of union. We recognize as fully the gifts of the one Spirit entrusted to those others, and their equal responsibility to maintain their several trusts; and we are content to believe that the acceptance of the Episcopate itself, in its continuity of succession and consecration, and in the discharge of its historic functions, will bring to the united Church those gifts of Grace which, as we believe, the Providence of God has associated with it."

Evangelicals are prepared to say that the South India Church presents a very good example of what we understand this section of the Statement to mean. We are aware, however, that those who read the Statement from outside our Communion will never be sure that this is the case, since the document can be read also in other ways. Therefore, we regret that the Commission has not attempted to say more clearly what it means—but has been content to continue a difficult ambiguity which has plagued our participation in the movement for Unity ever since the original Quadrilateral.

Since Evangelicals understand that negotiations with the Presbyterian Church of the U. S. A. are still the official policy of the Protestant Episcopal Church, we would point out that the "Proposed Basis for Unity," which was never voted on at the last General Convention seems to us to fulfill all the requirements laid down in this Statement.

We recognize that there are limits to what any Statement of Faith and Order can accomplish, since words are always defined in the context of real decisions and real actions. We know that the internal problems which the Protestant Episcopal Church has encountered during its unity negotiations cannot be resolved by the statement to which everyone agrees. Indeed, we recognize that unanimous agreement under the circumstances is a very good indication of ambiguity.

We have serious hesitation in regard to what appears to be the one innovation in the Statement—regarding the sacramental rites not counted to be Sacraments of the Gospel. We see no justification for officially recognizing them now to any greater extent than that already allowed in this Church. Such a recognition would, doubtless, complicate the only proposition to which this Statement is addressed, namely, "the basis on which the Protestant Episcopal Church in the U. S. A. will act" in relation to other Christian bodies, particularly the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. It must be assumed, therefore, that no innovation at this point is intended, and that the verbal changes do not suggest practices other than those rehearsed in Article XXV, and extend to them no recognition beyond what is there described. On any other basis, this part of the Statement does not describe the Faith of the Protestant Episcopal Church, but only what a small minority would like to have become the faith.

Attention is drawn to the fact that the Statement makes reference to "Absolution" and the "Marriage Blessing" in place of the traditional reference to "Penance" and "Matrimony." The second variation would appear insignificant, but it is worthy of note that while the use of Absolution is involved generally in the services of our Church, the so-called sacrament of Penance most certainly is not. It is, therefore, mistaken and misleading to substitute reference to Absolution as an implied equivalent of Penance.

This little paragraph on the five so-called minor sacraments would not seem to be of much importance at first glance. When it is considered, however, in the light of possible relations with other communions, it seems to place an unnecessary obstacle in the way of negotiations with other Protestant Churches, while at the same time it distorts what most Episcopalians believe to be the actual practice of their own Church.

We are aware that the Commission has not yet defined what is meant by "intercommunion" and "organic federation." We hope that this task will be attempted shortly. Since the subject has not really been dealt with in the Statement, it is unfortunate that the one example cited for "intercommunion" should be that of the Bonn Agreement, since in this country our real concern is with the achievement of inter-communion with other Protestant Churches, rather than comments about the mutual recognition of Catholicity between communions which share certain externals.

When we consider the Statement as a whole, we are grateful to the Commission for having brought so many significant documents into articulate relationship for the education of the Church. We are glad that the best elements in the Lambeth tradition have been continued, and that a significant editorial job has been done which can be put to much good use. We wish, however, that the Commission had understood more clearly that whatever it wrote could not help but be addressed to the whole Christian world and read with interest by members of other bodies.

While recognizing the practical and verbal difficulties involved in composing a Statement on Faith and Order, we must regard this document as being meaningful—in any full sense—only to Anglicans, whose glory is a heritage of freedom of interpretation when it comes to defining its own formularities.

Meditations In His Presence

"While we have time, let us do good" and "ye shall not appear before the Lord empty." (From the Offertory Sentences, pages 72 and 73.)

Probably the greatest single tragedy of any life is to arrive at life's end and find time has run out, without having used it to the full. The things that might have been—passed by, unseen, undone. The precious moments do fly past, and the treasures of countless price contained in each one must be garnered as they come. Tomorrow may be too late. There is nothing so futile as regret. "If only we had . . ."

In this first sentence we are certainly reminded of the need for capturing and holding the fast moving sands of time, by living out each grain to its full destiny. Sins of commission loom large, but mountainously larger are the sins of omission. "While we have time." While we have the opportunity. This moment will never return. We may never pass this way again.

I have no desire to be gloomy. But there is need for warning when procrastination besets us and we put off doing what will probably never be done. Let us do the good we can now, whether it be sharing our money resources with the pitiful victims of war's aftermath, or remembering to be patient, kind, thoughtful, or appreciative to a loved one.

Now, briefly, the second sentence.

God's judgment is loving, but what can God do when we appear before Him empty of the good He assigned to us during the wasted hours of earth life? Of what does a man's eulogy consist? The tangible remains of his goodness! "Ye shall not appear before the Lord empty." And we will not if "while we have time" we seize the endless opportunities to love and to serve.

Our offering, our oblation, before Him may be small indeed, but when a part of it is the good done in proper reason, without neglect, to the full extent of our ability, then God will rejoice, for His Kingdom draws one inch closer.

J. W. KENNEDY.

400th Anniversary of the Prayer Book

A bit more than a year hence we will be celebrating the 400th anniversary of the first English Book of Common Prayer. In January, 1549, Parliament passed the act which gave legal sanction to a "Book of Common Prayer" in English which would henceforth be the one authorized manual of public worship in England. It further recommended that the new book should come into general use not later than Whitsunday, which was June 9th that year.

The principles which guided those who drafted the new book were clearly stated in a Preamble to the Act of Uniformity and in the Preface to the book itself. They were not deeply concerned about changes in the liturgy, particularly the Holy Communion. They were concerned with provision for daily services adapted to the needs and understanding of both priest and people. Herein they stressed "the godly and decent order of the ancient Fathers" in the daily, continuous reading of Holy Scripture, with the recitation of the entire psalter monthly. This was, they stated, "an Order of Prayer . . . a great deal more profitable and commodious than that which of late was used."

That this great anniversary will be fittingly commemorated officially by all the Churches of the Anglican Communion is certain. Our own Church has already made preliminary plans. But it ought to be far more than simply an historic event sentimentally remembered. It could be a time when we take fresh stock of our great liturgical tradition. It could be a time when we might well ask ourselves what principles should govern us in maintaining these great traditions and yet in keeping them alive and vital today. It might well be a time for nation-wide study by the laity of the Prayer Book, with which so few of them are adequately familiar. It might also be a time when we determine to end much of the existing anarchy, contributed to by both high and low Churchmen, in unauthorized ceremonies and service; and seek to recover a degree of unity in the worship of the Church which will not be restrictive nor binding in liberty of interpretation, but which will end many of the imitation Italianisms and Calvinisms that plague us today.

If we attempted thus to keep this anniversary, it might well be a great milestone in the reunification of the Episcopal Church within itself.

Canon Gilbert P. Symons

"Forward—Day by Day," our daily devotional guide, is well known to all Episcopalians. It is about the only residue of the "Forward Movement" that began so enthusiastically and with so much fanfare in our General Convention a decade or more ago. That it and similar fine materials continue to be made available to the Church is due almost entirely to the efforts of one priest of the Church, the Rev. Canon Gilbert P. Symons. Quietly, he renders the Church a unique service. Only those who have written at Canon Symon's request know how much the Church owes to his fine judgment, his excellent editing, and his perceptive revision of material sent to him.

But Canon Symons has been doing more than simply preparing the printed page in recent months. A growing work of mercy has been going on under his direction. It started with Canon Symon's own affection for a devout Old Catholic priest. Through him, fifty needy pastors in the Diocese of Bonn alone were discovered. An appeal in the Lenten issue of "Forward—Day by Day" was the seed that secured the harvest to meet this need. Canon Symons asked anyone who already having given to the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief still wanted to send a personal package abroad to communicate with him. 700 replies kept him working nights, holidays, Saturdays and Sundays to answer them. The circle widened to include families in France, Waldensians in Italy, people in Belgium, Greeks, Welsh, Scots and English.

It is still a little thing compared with the greater relief enterprises. But it has great merit. It tells us what one man can do when he is filled with Christian concern. And to those to whom the packages go, it says, in Canon Symon's words, "We believe in you. You belong to us. This means: God's Spirit cannot be denied."

The Church may well salute Canon Symons as one of our choice souls.

BOOK NOTES

By the Faculty of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific. Edited by Randolph Crump Miller.

Two books of extreme importance this month are the co-winners of the Abingdon-Cokesbury Award. One of them is THE RELIGION OF MATURITY, by John Wick Bowman of the San Francisco Theological Seminary (Abingdon-Cokesbury, $3.00).

In this fine volume, a noted Biblical scholar deals with Jesus and the religion of the altar, book, and throne, and comes to the conclusion that these three emphases are not enough, for they deal with the fragments of man's nature—emotional, intellectual, and volitional. In the New Testament we find a revealed religion which fills the inadequacies of the Old Testament. Its authority is the Incarnate Son who was what God expects man to become. Its sole technique is the spirit of Christ. Its product is the image of God, fulfilling God's purpose in creation. Its institution is the "body of Christ."

The other co-winner is PRAYER AND THE COMMON LIFE, by Georgia Harkness of Garrett Bible Institute (Abingdon-Cokesbury, $2.50.) The three main divisions deal with the foundations of prayer, methods of prayer, and the fruits of prayer. Within this simple framework are many helpful ideas, techniques, and theories are provided. Those who do not pray should read this book to find out what they are missing, those who are concerned and try to pray but cannot will find ways of achieving their soul's sincere desire, and those who believe they pray well will find enrichment for their spiritual life.

MEDITATIONS, PERSONAL AND SOCIAL. By James Myers, Commission on Worship of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. 15c each.

This is a companion volume to Prayers, Personal and Social, which has had wide popularity. In the new volume, Mr. Myers has gathered together insights and ideas from his long and interesting experience which are appropriate to personal and group meditation. As in the previous volume, he has happily combined a profound devotional spirit with social vision. The scope of the 51 Meditations is indicated by the following titles from the list: Unselfish Prayer, Christian Love in Social Legislation, The Ministry a Dangerous Calling, The Church and "Isms," Unity in the Silence, The Content of Conversion, Religion in Labor Movement, The Divine Negative, For Those Who Mourn at Christmas Time.

BISHOP BRENT. By Alexander C. Zabriskie. Westminster Press., 1948.

This is the life of one of the great Christian leaders of the last generation, long waited for by his friends, now completed upon the basis of the work done by Dr. Ogilby, late President of Trinity College, by Dean Zabriskie of the Virginia Seminary.

The story is admirably told. One follows the Bishop from his birth (1862) and his boyhood in Canada on through his college and Seminary, his early ministry in Boston, his acceptance in 1901 of his election as Missionary Bishop of the Philippines, his Senior Headquarters Chaplaincy during the first World War and his ten years as Bishop of Western New York to his death in 1929.

And one discovers that such an outline of his life is only the framework for vast, varied and distinguished service to God and the world. He organized the missionary work of the Episcopal Church in the Philippines. He became a world figure through his work with the International Opium Commission, twice serving as its president. He proposed and led in the work which culminated in the whole Faith and Order Movement, presiding at the Lausanne Conference of 1927. He did an unusual work as Headquarters Chaplain in the first World War.

In all these tasks he was pre-eminent; but it will be his work for unity, the movement which he began, and his writing, which will ensure him a place among the unforgotten names in the history of the Church. And it is his work for unity which makes the publication of his life at this moment, when the World Council is at last achieving form, a real event.

All this story Dean Zabrieskie has told with fine insight, but beyond that he has led us into the deep spiritual richness of Brent's life, his capacity for friendship, the mystical quality of his religion, its depth and power. For everyone who would find inspiration in the hard service of unity in the Church and in the world and for everyone who would find strength in the companionship of a great soul this book will be a joy.

EDWARD L. PARSONS.

THE SPIRIT OF CHINESE CULTURE. By Francis C. M. Wei. Scribners. $2.75.

All who are interested and concerned with the work of the Christian Church in the Far East will want to read this book, written by the President of Central China College, Wuchang, China. The book had its origin in the Hewett Lectures delivered in 1946 at Andover-Newton Theological School, and Union Theological Seminary.

The book is written in a captivating style, and shows the author's mastery of the English language. He gives clear and decisive chapters on Confucianism, Buddhism, and Taoism—and every missionary working in the vast missionary field of China would do well to master these chapters. His final chapter, "Interpretation of Christianity in Terms of Chinese Culture," is an especially daring vision of future Christian work in China, and well merits the close concern of every mission board working in China.

CHARLES F. WHISTON.

CHRIST IN THE DRAMA. By Fred Eastman. Macmillan. $2.50.

"Drama, in its history in occidental civilizations, has usually passed through these phases: an origin in worship, a development into an art which seeks escape from life, a 'show business' conducted for revenue only, and finally a period of repression and censorship." (p. 87). This volume is a fascinating account of what has happened to Christ and Christian influence in the history of the drama, with a long chapter on Shakespeare, another on the period from Shakespeare to Shaw, one on modern British drama, another on modern American drama (O'Neill, Connelly and Wilder), and a final chapter on drama in the churches (which is Eastman's pet hobby). So this book with have a triple appeal: (1) to all drama lovers, (2) to all those concerned for Christian influence on the theater, and (3) to those working on practical dramatics in the churches. No one, beginning with the reading of the opening pages, can quit until he finishes the book.

THE BIBLE IN THE CHURCH. By Robert M. Grant. Macmillan, 1948.

We are convinced that the Holy Scriptures contain all things necessary to salvation, but there is a lack of agreement as to what they contain. Not everyone will concur as to what they say and what they mean.

This book is a study of the various ways in which Christians have interpreted the Bible. As its subtitle indicates it is a "Short History of Interpretation," and so it is. In a brief 175 pages it manages to give a summary of all the significant developments in Biblical interpretation from the use which Jesus made of the Hebrew Scripture down to the recent neo-orthodox movement of Barth and his associates.

Everyone reading this book will certainly be rewarded with a much deeper appreciation of the Bible and the Church.

There are, according to the author, two opposing schools of Biblical interpretation, the fundamentalist and the allegorical, and he presents, with an impartial and scholarly but interesting style, the struggle of the Church to keep a proper balance between the extremes.

One of the especially interesting features of this book is the wealth of quotations from the various scholars who molded opinion. One gains firsthand insight into the thoughts of Origen of Alexandria, Thomas Aquinas, Luther, Pascal, and many other old friends and meets many new ones, as for example Vincent of Lerinum who in 434 gave Catholicism its definition, "What has been believed always, everywhere and by everyone."

This book is a valuable vantage point from which to survey the present conflicting claims of modern Catholic and Protestant Biblical scholarship.

Dr. Grant has done us a great service in preparing this thorough survey of an important but untouched field of the history of Biblical scholarship. It is a "must" book for all students of the Bible.

YOU COUNT

"I am done with great things and big things, and I am for those tiny, invisible, molecular forces that work from individual to individual, creeping through the crannies of the world like so many soft rootlets, or like the capillary oozing of water, but which, give them time, will rend the hardest monuments of men's pride."

Perhaps we face the rising tide of growing tension, conflict and fear with a sense of personal impotence that tends to frustration and inaction. But this is stark defeatism, to which we as Christians must not succumb. A widely-known psychologist, in a recent article on the solving of marital problems, points out that the "only point at which either party can begin is with himself," and this is equally true in regard to international problems. It may be tempting to spend our time in criticizing others, but we can spend it to far greater advantage in improving ourselves. It is no criticism of the "United Nations" to say that it can only function and succeed if the climate of public opinion is favorable to such success.

The way to begin to build peace is to be a peace carrier and a faith bearer and a hope spreader in the area of influence in which you live and work. Peace can never be imposed from above. We must grow it from the grass roots. It must be built out of those tiny, molecular forces and factors which, separated, seem so powerless and insignificant, but which, added together, form and fashion society. The task of Christians is to spread those qualities which make for peace: truth and justice, faith and fellowship, courage and hope. As a writer in the early part of the Second Century describes it:

"What the soul is in the body, Christians are in the world. . . . The soul dwells in the body, and yet it is not of the body; so Christians dwell in the world, and yet they are not of the world. . . . The soul is enclosed within the body, and itself holds the body together; so, too, Christians are held fast in the world as in a prison, and yet it is they who hold the world together."

International relationships begin with personal relationships, and it is there that our primary responsibility lies. The chief question is not, "Why is Russia so unreasonable, so demanding, so materialistic, and so selfish?", but, "Why are you and I sometimes so unreasonable, so demanding, so materialistic, and so selfish?"

Remember—in the long run, it is "those tiny, invisible, molecular rootlets . . . that creep through the crannies" which ultimately prevail.—W. Appleton Lawrence, in The Pastoral Staff.

THE SURSUM CORDA.—We come now to the very center and purpose of the Holy Communion Service. It is essentially a lifting up of our hearts to God.

In most churches these little versicles are sung, but the writer always prefers to have them said so that the entire congregation can repeat them fervently, realizing their full meaning. Singing or chanting by the choir no doubt adds beauty to the service, but it also frequently creates a sense of detachment because the music is far too complicated for the average person to share, consequently they are apt to leave it entirely to the choir and have little or no participation in it. The position of the Sursum Corda in the service is particularly appropriate, since it comes after the heart has been made light through the confession that unburdens it of its sins, the Absolution, reminding us of God's forgiving power, and Comfortable words that have encouraged even the heavy laden and the sinners to come to him.

Its origin is almost lost in antiquity. A reference to it is found as far back as the fourth century where it is specifically mentioned by St. Cyril of Jerusalem in his writing, where he uses the following words, "After this the priest cries aloud, "Lift up your hearts." For truly ought we in that awful hour to have our hearts on high with God, and not below, thinking on earth and earthly things. The priest then in effect bids all in that hour abandon all worldly thoughts or household cares, and to have their heart in heaven with the merciful God." (Daniel on the Prayer Book, Page 372.)

Thus these few lines tucked away on page 76 of our Book of Common Prayer open a window to us that looks down a vista of fifteen centuries of Christian worship, and reminds us of the antiquity of the service of the Lord's Supper.

R. CARY MONTAGUE.

SUMMER OPPORTUNITIES

Now that the air is full of commencements and summer plans it might be well to think about them. What are you planning to do as a family, a church, and a community?

Have you thought about doing things this summer with your family? Family picnics are in order for those liking to "cookout" their meals, to share outdoor life and to enjoy informal living. Some may like to take trips with their children to the zoos, cathedrals, churches, museums and new interest centers. Perhaps you can enjoy your backyard. A fireplace can be built, games purchased, and you can learn to play together. Here your children will receive from you their first lessons in good sportmanship. I remember learning mine playing croquet. Let us try to take more time when our children are free of school and outside activity to be with them. They are fun. If you, as parents, would be interviewed about your children how much would you be able to tell about them? I saw this happen to someone, who, thought he was a good family man and knew his children.

What have you planned for the boys and girls in your church? Have you planned some group activity? Have you closed your Sunday School? Remember here is one great opportunity.

You might have a Vacation Bible School from two to six weeks where the boys and girls can come regularly to you each morning. Here they could worship, play and study together, and would learn more during this session than all winter. Every church should plan some sort of activity during the long vacation period. Special short term interest groups could be held. "Redo" the kindergarten room, make things for the Sunday School play group in the nursery, paint furniture and make new curtains. There can be story hours, record playing times, visual showings followed by discussion and activity. These can be done with good leadership and by some one with imagination and interest. A hobby club can be started, also. One group had a "tinkers club." The boys learned to use tools properly by repairing simple electrical things and radios, etc.

One group had a good time making things for the Overseas Relief Projects. They made over old candles by melting and remolding them, mended clothing, and made simple garments for children. They first read about the needs, saw movies, and then worked with a definite object in view. A summer conference offers another great opportunity. See that your boys and girls attend one, and you also, if possible. This can mean more to growing young persons than most anything I know.

Consultant of Christian Education,

Diocesan Conventions

BETHLEHEM

BISHOP STERRETT CITES OPPORTUNITY IN FUTURE

Scranton, Pa.—Opportunity and responsibility were twin themes of the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Sterrett, bishop of the Diocese of Bethlehem, at the 77th Diocesan convention's opening in the Church of the Good Shepherd, May 11.

At no time since the founding of this Republic have we faced a future so rich in opportunity for human betterment and where wrong decisions can mean so much harm to us and to our world," he declared. "We, who, partly because of our own initiative and resourcefulness, and in part because of forces over which we have no control, find ourselves through God's mercy and providence by far the most powerful nation on earth, should carry a much greater part of the burden of helping a confused and shattered world to find its way back to a good road."

Bishop Sterrett urged the Marshall Plan support 2and discouragement of defeatism.

"We believe that freedom is essential to development of worthwhile living," he declared. "We would defend it and endure sacrifice to see that it survives in our world. We believe that to make it known to all that this is our stand and that until some world order is strong enough to keep a just peace we propose to remain strong enough to support our conviction, would lesson and not increase the danger of armed conflict.

"But to accept war as we know it today with all that it would mean in suffering to the innocent and helpless over the world, until we have tried every honorable means to prevent it, would not only be the most awful folly, but a sin that would expose us to the stern judgment of a just God."

American example will be more impressive than American words," he added in pointing to the Church's part.

"The Bishops of the Anglican Communion for the first time since 1930 will meet this Summer in London, and soon afterward the completion of the organization of the World Council of Churches will be effected in Amsterdam. In the latter it is our hope that the power of united witness of great Communions will be brought to bear on the troubled issues of our time in the spirit and comradeship and neighborly cooperation with those, who in spite of differences, are at one in their common devotion to our blessed Lord."

Warning swiftly followed: "We will make little progress if we underestimate the serious convictions that divide us. But God forbid that in this hour when our troubled world needs the strong voice of a united church that we allow differences that are not vital to keep us apart.

"There is much we can do individually and together to further the solution of the problems that face the church, nation and mankind," the Bishop concluded. "May we be constant in prayer in our homes and in our parishes that the church may be true to her calling, that the spirit of neighborly good-will may prevail at home and that peace with justice may be preserved in our world." He also briefly acknowledged representation of the Polish National Church, saying, "We are honored tonight by the presence of distinguished representatives of the Polish National Catholic Church of America, the headquarters of which are located in Scranton. Our churches are in communion, and we have every hope and confidence that this friendly fellowship between our clergy and congregations will increase during the years."

The Convention voted unanimously to send Bishop and Mrs. Sterrett to Lambeth this Summer. This will be part of the Diocese's gift to the Bishop in celebration of the 25th anniversary of his consecration (November 9, 1923).

It was reported to the Convention that the Diocese had over-subscribed its quota for the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief, and that additional funds were coming in (quota was $15,-545). Every Church and mission in the Diocese had pledged or given to the Fund.

Mr. Frank Atkinson, Chairman of the Bishop's Laymen Committee of the Diocese of Newark, was the special speaker at the supper for church and lay delegates at the opening of the Convention.

LONG ISLAND

Garden City, L. I.—Bishop De Wolfe in his Convention address, held May 18, asked for a Suffragan Bishop. Convention passed acceptance. A special convention will be called on October 12 to elect one, the 1946 General Convention having already given permission.

The Bishop also suggested that the diocese adopt a Diocesan chest, and put into one drive all our giving for: National Council quota, Diocesan Mission quota, Presiding Bishop Fund, Church Charity Foundation, Theological Education, Bishops Call for Advance Work.

He also called attention to much advance work, among new projects being the Youth Center, a 75-acre tract fronting on Long Island Sound. This center was purchased for $22,500 and has five dormitories, dining hall, chapel and faculty house, and was attended last summer by over 700 young people.

LEXINGTON

Bishop Asks For Prayers For Coming World Meetings

The Bishop of Lexington, the Rt. Rev. William R. Moody, D. D., in an address to the 53rd Annual Convention of the Diocese, called upon the Christian Churches to take the leadership in a drive for world-control of atomic power. "If the Churches do not come out for this, now," the Bishop declared, "they will lose the greatest opportunity for spiritual leadership offered in our age."

Referring to the meeting of the Bishops of the Anglican Churches, to be held in Lambeth Palace next July, and to the meeting of the World Council of Churches, in Amsterdam, next August, Bishop Moody declared, "I hope that there will come out of these two meetings a clear and unmistakable call to the Christian world for repentance, and for conversion to the Lordship of Christ. Only a converted Church, believing in the power of Jesus to turn tragedy into triumph, won through the shedding of His blood, can have anything convincing to say to a pagan and unchastened world. We need not deceive ourselves. The Church is not converted, and the world is not chastened."

"I hope that there will come out of these meetings the unmistakable assertion that there are human rights which transcend national boundaries, and that our present system of warlike, competing, and mutually suspicious nationalism is unChristian, and therefore wrong. I hope that somebody will say that the people of this world ought not to have to live under the dreadful threat of atomic war. I hope that the leaders of the Churches will put their spiritual authority squarely behind a movement to bring about international control of atomic power. If the Churches do not come out for this now, they will lose the greatest opportunity for spiritual leadership offered in our age. For in this time of ours God is on the march. He wills mankind to be one. If the Churches do not take the leadership in this, God will find others to take it. World control of atomic power is going to be had. The only choice we have, really, is whether we shall have it now, through the free association of enlightened men, or to have it forced upon us in the ashes of our present world."

Bishop Moody asked that all the Churches in his diocese form prayer groups to meet throughout the summer to pray for the two world meetings of Christian leaders. "I hope that every Communion Service offered in this Diocese between now and the end of the summer will have as its special and expressed intention prayer for these two Conferences, and for the conversion of the world." "I say to the clergymen who are here, Go home from this place and preach the Gospel in confidence and in power, for in the Gospel there is power to set the nations free. Go back and stir up that righteous remnant which is able to save the world."

RHODE ISLAND

Providence, R. I.—The 158th Convention of the Diocese of Rhode Island met in the Cathedral of St. John in Providence on the morning of May 18. It was preceded by a supper and service at St. Paul's, Pawtucket, the evening of May 17. At the service that night the Rt. Rev. Granville Gaylord Bennett, D. D., Bishop of Rhode Island, broadcast his annual address. He indicated the conflicts in the world as to politics, economies and idealogies, and emphasized the fact that only a Christian approach, acknowledging the value of human personality, could be the answer. He deprecated prejudice and discrimination against Jews and negroes.

The report of the Ven. Archdeacon Anthony R. Parshley emphasized the importance of extending the missionary work of the church in this diocese. Many people have removed from city to country in Rhode Island, and the Church must follow them to their new locations. The Convention approved a long-range plan for the financial backing of the diocesan missions.

The Convention approved the dividing of all missionary money received from the parishes and missions in the diocese in the proportion of 38 per cent for the diocese and 62 per cent for the national Church.

The matter of higher education and the incorporation of Seabury (Junior) College was considered, with the diocesan commission continued for further work and report. Permissive legislation has already been enacted in the State Legislature, but no further move will be made for a year.

The new diocesan paper, "The Rhode Island Churchman," was put before the Convention, and action taken for its subsidization until subscriptions should make it selfsupporting. The Editor-in-Chief is the Rev. Harold Whitmarsh, rector of St. James' Church in Woonsocket, R. I.

Preferential voting was agreed to by the Convention, rather than continuing the old plan under which many ballots might have to be taken to determine General Convention and Synod delegates, which must have concurrent majorities among both the clergy and laity. Proportional representation was considered by the committee, but rejected on account of its complexity and impracticability.

Grace Memorial Church, Phillipsdale, the Rev. Anselm Broburg, deacon-in-charge, was admitted into union with the Convention as a parish.

One of the matters over which arose most discussion was the introduction of a resolution against mixed marriages with adherents of the Romanist Church, including a rejection of their claims to being "the only true Church," and their refusal to acknowledge as valid any marriage not performed by a Romanist priest. All this was agreed to "in principle" in the Convention, but many objected to the Romanist Church being mentioned by name, when there are also "Protestant" churches which do not consider marriage as a Sacrament and life-long, and which also have their own hard-and-fast rules as to marriage and baptism. Romanist mixed marriages require a promise on the part of the non-Romanist party to the marriage to have the children baptized and brought up in the Romanist Church. On the other hand, marriages with some "Protestants" have resulted in the loss of children to the Episcopal Church, and the practical lapsing of Episcopal Church communicants from their Church. And to marry a member of the Jewish Church requires, it seems, that Jewish person to be considered "dead" by his or her Church. The Convention finally adopted part of the original resolution as to "mixed marriages," exhorting our clergy to instruct their people in our doctrine of marriage, and the difficulties they encounter in marrying outside the Episcopal Church.

Pilgrimage To "South County"

Narragansett, R. I.—On Saturday, May 15, one hundred and twenty-two women, representing twenty-six parishes in the northern part of Rhode Island, made a pilgrimage to some of the parishes in "The South County," as Washington County is called. They were greeted by the rectors and altar guilds of All Saints', Pontiac, the Rev. D. Q. Williams, deacon-in-charge; St. Mary's, Warwick Neck, the Rev. F. Wm. F. Kite, deacon-in-charge; St. Barnabas', Apponaug, whose new rector has not arrived; St. Luke's, East Greenwich, the Rev. John L. Pickells; St. Paul's, Wickford; the Rev. Canon Leonard H. Flisher, where also they visited old St. Paul's, built in 1707; and St. Peter's-by-the-Sea, Narragansett, the Rev. Thom Williamson, where the ladies were served refreshments in the rectory after a tour through the church.

DELAWARE

Bishop Oldham the Convention Dinner Speaker

Wilmington, Del.—At the 163rd annual convention of the Diocese of Delaware, meeting in Calvary Church, Hillcrest, May 11 and 12, Bishop McKinstry sounded the keynote of diocesan expansion. This included new churches at Newport, Wilmington, and Selbyville, and an extensive recreation camp. He also reported increased baptisms and confirmations, two new parish houses at Rehoboth and Bridgeville, improvements at Delmar and Millsboro, and the opening of the Christina Community Center at Old Swedes Church, Wilmington.

Bishop Oldham, of Albany, at the convention dinner, said that "hope in God, in man, and in the future is the greatest need of men today, and the business of the Church is to give them that hope."

The convention adopted a resolution approving the bill now before Congress permitting 400,000 persons to enter the country during the next four years to take the place of those who could not enter under the quotas during the war years.

VIRGINIA

Council Votes to End Segregation

Richmond, Va.—The Council of the Diocese of Virginia meeting in St. Stephen's Church, May 20-24, took action to remove from its constitution and canons all words that would indicate racial segregation or discrimination.

It passed on first reading, two changes to Article III of its constitution, which defines the groups entitled to representation on the council. To become effective, these changes must pass second reading at the next regular council session next year.

It also approved a resolution calling on Bishop F. D. Goodwin to appoint a committee of white and Negro church members to determine what changes must be made in the canons to make them conform to the proposed constitutional amendments.

One of the changes in Article III deals with a definition of the four classes which compose the lay membership of the council. One of these is listed as "the lay delegates from the Colored Missionary Jurisdiction."

Stricken Sections

The second change in Article III concerns this section: "there shall be two lay delegates from the missionary jurisdiction known as the Colored Missionary Jurisdiction to be elected by the Convocation of the said Jurisdiction from among congregations not otherwise entitled to representation in Council."

Both of these sections would be stricken out if the amendments are finally passed. In terms of church organization, one clergyman said the elimination of these phrases would mean that, instead of belonging to a Negro convocation for the entire diocese, Negroes would become members of the existing convocations in those sections of the diocese where they happen to live. The major part of the $200,000 budget is expended for missionary work. The budget figure for 1948 was $173,119, and every church in the diocese will have its quota increased 15½ per cent in order to meet the increase for next year.

The largest entirely new items in the budget are a 20 per cent increase in salary for lay workers in the archdeaconry of the Blue Ridge, $3,200; new work in the Richmond and Alexandria areas, $6,000, and an advance building program, $7,800. A prolonged debate over the question of electing a bishop coadjuter for the diocese occupied much of the first day's session. A committee appointed to make recommendations as to an assistant for Bishop Goodwin, recommended that a bishop coadjutor be elected at a special session of the council next Fall.

This was defeated in council, where it was decided to elect a suffragan bishop instead of a bishop coadjutor. The Diocese of Virginia already has one suffragan, Bishop W. Roy Mason, who is expected to retire in November, 1950.

The council voted to elect the new suffragan bishop at a special session to be called as soon as the necessary assent from all other dioceses in the United States has been obtained. It also authorized Bishop Goodwin to appoint a committee of not more than 21 or less than 15 laymen or clergymen to submit at least three nominations for the new bishopric at the special session. A proposed Episcopal Home of Men, to be established in Charlottesville as a haven for aged men, was endorsed by the council. A house for this purpose was deeded anonymously to the church. An attempt will be made to raise $25,000 so that the home can begin operations on a limited scale.

The Rev. F. J. Warnecke, of St. Mark's Church, Richmond, introduced a resolution calling for the creation of a permanent diocesan board of Evangelism. The council voted for the resolution.

Terms Lengthened

Also passed for first reading was a motion to change the terms of members of the standing committee from one to three years.

One of the council's final actions was to decide to hold its 154th annual session in May, 1949, at St. George's Church, Fredericksburg. In extending the invitation, the Rev. Thomas Faulkner, rector of the church, said 1949 will mark the 100th anniversary of the present church structure.

The sessions were held in St. Stephen's Church here.

MISSIONARY BISHOP OF ALASKA CONSECRATED

Raleigh, N. C.—In churchly pomp and splendor, thirteen bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America on Tuesday, May 18, consecrated the Rev. William Jones Gordon, Jr., of Spray, N. C., as Missionary Bishop of Alaska.

Led by the Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, presiding bishop of the church, the colorful and impressive rites of consecration were administered in the Church of the Good Shepherd in Raleigh. With his consecration, the Rt. Rev. William Jones Gordon, Jr., became the youngest priest ever elevated to the Episcopate in the United States. He was 30 on May 6. The newly consecrated bishop, who has served in Alaska since 1943, was elected to his office by the House of Bishops last November, when the house met in Winston-Salem. He succeeds the Rt. Rev. John Boyd Bentley, now vice-president of the National Council of the Church.

At the time of his election, however, he was only 29, and since the law of the church does not permit a priest to be consecrated bishop until he is 30, Bishop Gordon had to wait six months for his consecration.

His consecration in Raleigh was the first to be held in the Diocese of North Carolina since the Rt. Rev. Edwin A. Penick, the present diocesan bishop, was consecrated 26 years ago.

Altogether, about 80 clergymen attended the service. These included clergy from the Diocese of North Carolina, clergy from other dioceses, and the clergy of other communions.

With Bishop Sherrill officiating at the consecration service, the Rt. Rev. Thomas Henry Wright, bishop of East Carolina, read the Epistle. The Gospel was read by the Rt. Rev. Richard Bland Mitchell, bishop of Arkansas.

Immediately after the consecration sermon, the bishop-elect was presented to the Presiding Bishop and the co-consecrators, the Rt. Rev. John Boyd Bentley, vice-president of the National Council of the Church, and the Rt. Rev. Edwin A. Penick, Bishop of North Carolina.

The presenting bishops were the Rt. Rev. Henry St. George Tucker of Richmond, Va., retired presiding bishop, and the Rt. Rev. Edmund Pendleton Dandridge of Nashville, Tenn., bishop of Tennessee. An offering was taken, which it was later announced, amounted to $1,132.70. It will be used to employ a missionary in Nenana, Alaska. Immediately after the consecration service, the bishops and other invited guests attended a luncheon given in the Parish House of Christ Church. Bishop Penick served as toastmaster at the luncheon. Speaking briefly, Bishop Sherrill, the presiding bishop, declared that, in a sense, he was responsible for the consecration, since he drafted Bishop Bentley as vice-president of the council. "I do not minimize the sacrifice of the Bentleys in leaving Alaska for New York," he said. "It is, however, a tremendous benefit to the entire church throughout the world. It means a tremendous amount to me that Bentley is right by my side.

"I am confident that Bishop Gordon is the right choice for this field, and I would like to assure the Bishop and Mrs. Gordon of the National Council's loyal support and backing. They have before them an exhilerating and hopeful future. "If these young people can give their lives, we ought to give them the means of support and share their missionary spirit and sacrifice. If we all cared as they do for the Gospel of Christ, then the church would indeed move forward. I take them as symbols of what we can do."

BISHOP GOODWIN WILL ATTEND LAMBETH

Richmond, Va.—The Rt. Rev. F. D. Goodwin, D. D., bishop of the Diocese of Virginia, will be one of over 60 bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States attending the Lambeth Conference in England this Summer. Over 200 bishops of the Anglican communion, from all over the world, are expected to be present.

Bishop Goodwin and Mrs. Goodwin will sail on the Queen Mary on June 24.

The Rt. Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, D. D., bishop of Ohio; the Rt. Rev. William A. Brown, D. D., bishop of Southwestern Virginia, and the Rt. Rev. Angus Dun, D. D., bishop of Washington, are also among those planning to take part in the conference. After an opening service in Canterbury Cathedral, July 1, the bishops will be in conference at Lambeth Palace, the Archbishop of Canterbury's residence. After breaking up into large committees in mid-July, the full conference will resume, July 27 to August 6.

The final service will be held in Westminster Abbey on August 8.

The Lambeth Conference is a gathering of all bishops in active service in the various branches of the Anglican Communion. The Archbishop of Canterbury issues the invitations and presides. The bishops do not attend as official representatives of their several churches but as guests of the archbishop. The conference is not legislative, but its findings carry great moral weight. It is expected this year to clarify movements toward Christian unity and toward unified world-wide Christian action.

Meeting first in 1867, the Lambeth conference has been called at nearly 10-year intervals since. The fourth meeting was held in 1897 to commemorate the 1,300th anniversary of the coming of St. Augustine to England. The 1917 conference was postponed because of World War I to 1920, and World War II forced the 1940 meeting to wait until this year.

Charleston, S. C.—One hundred and sixty-five young people gathered at St. John's Church, Florence, May 7-9 to attend the all-youth convention of the young people of the Diocese of South Carolina.

On Friday night the Rev. M. George Henry of Christ Church, Charlotte, preached the opening sermon.

Saturday morning, the Rev. Charles E. Fish, assistant secretary to the Division of Youth of the National Council, presented the theme of the Convention, "Ye Shall Be My Witnesses." Following this presentation the conference was divided into eight discussion groups under the leadership of eight clergy of the diocese. Subjects assigned to the groups were Personal Evangelism, World Christianity, The Kingdom of God, The False Messiahs, the Church's Influence Upon the World, Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord, Church and State, and Belief and Conduct.

Groups awards were made at the banquet Saturday night by Bishop Carruthers.

On Sunday morning the Bishop delivered his annual address to the young people and installed the newly elected officers.

The meetings were presided over by Ralph Hendricks of Charleston, president of the Diocesan Youth Commission.

New York, N. Y.—The Rev. Charles E. Fish, assistant secretary in the Division of Youth, will give up his present work and enter missionary service in the Missionary District of the Panama Canal Zone, according to announcement by the Overseas Department. Bishop Gooden expects to send him to the Church of the Good Shepherd, San Jose, Costa Rica.

Mr. Fish came to the National Council in 1946, following two and a half years as priest in charge of Christ Church, Xenia, Ohio. While at the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, he assisted at St. Paul's, Malden, Mass., and while in Maryville College, Tenn., he worked with mountaineers in that field. He was ordained in 1943, and is 31 years old.

Mr. Fish expects to be married during the coming summer, and will be accompanied to the field by his bride.

RURAL WORKERS' FELLOWSHIP ORGANIZED

Scranton, Pa.—An interested group of about 20 clergy and lay delegates to the 77th Annual Convention of the Diocese of Bethlehem met at the close of the convention for the purpose of organizing a Diocesan Rural Workers' Fellowship. Interest was expressed not only by delegates from town and country parishes, but by delegates from the city parishes as well. The Rev. W. Francis Allison, secretary of the Fellowship, spoke of the work of the Fellowship before the Convention and acted as temporary chairman of the meeting. The Rev. William Schmidgall, of St. Peter's Church, Tunkhannock, Pa., was elected chairman and was instructed to make arrangements for a formal meeting early in the fall. The Rev. William McClelland, Jr., of St. Mark's Church, New Milford, and the Rev. Burke Rivers, of St. Stephen's Church, Wilkes-Barre, together with the chairman were elected to serve as a nominating committee and also as a program committee for the first meeting. The Rev. Mr. Allison outlined some of the many activities and interests of the Fellowship and answered questions. The meeting in the fall will probably be on one of the Ember Days in September.

FUND FOR CATHEDRAL UNITS OVERSUBSCRIBED

Spokane, Wash.—Construction of the new choir and sanctuary unit of the Cathedral of St. John the Evangelist was assured last week when the $225,000 Building Fund Campaign was oversubscribed by $18,500 at the conclusion of a ten-day drive.

Plans are being made to proceed as soon as practical with the construction work, which will include the Cathedral tower as well as the choir and sanctuary. Gifts made prior to the campaign have provided sufficient funds for the entire construction program, which will involve an investment of $1,000,000.

The Cathedral tower will be constructed as the gift of Mr. and Mrs. G. F. Jewett, members of the Cathedral congregation.

The choir and sanctuary unit will add 102 feet to the length of the Cathedral, which occupies an imposing hill top location. When the choir and sanctuary are in their permanent location, the space they now occupy in the crossing will provide seating capacity for an additional 450 persons, bringing the total seating capacity of the Cathedral to 1,500.

The transepts on each side, which will complete the cruciform floor plan, will remain for future construction.

The original construction, which included the nave and narthex, was completed 19 years ago.

Stone to be used in the new construction will match that used in the original building. Exterior stone is now being cut by a Washington State quarry, while the interior stone is being cut by an Indiana quarry.

The Rt. Rev. Edward M. Cross, bishop of the Missionary District of Spokane, who inspired the construction of the original Cathedral unit, and the Very Rev. Charles E. McAllister, dean of the Cathedral, took active parts in leadership of the campaign just completed.

W. S. Gilbert, Spoken attorney, and senior warden of the Cathedral, was general chairman of the campaign, which was under the direction of Don Fry, of Spokane, professional director of fund raising campaigns.

An attractive two color brochure, profusely illustrated with both interior and exterior views of the Cathedral, was issued in connection with the campaign and mailed to all communicants and friends of the Cathedral.

The Cathedral architecture is by Whitehouse and Price, of Spokane.

CHURCH ARMY SERVICE

New York, N. Y.—On May 28 in the Chapel of the Church Missions House the Rt. Rev. John B. Bentley, acting for the Presiding Bishop, will present commissioning certificates to Robert E. Smalling, St. George's, Flushing, L. I.; Jack T. Viggers, St. John's, Springfield, Mo., and Miss Daisy Kitchens, San Diego, Cal., students in the Church Army who have now completed their training.

The Rev. J. Wilson Sutton, D. D., will present the class for the warden, the Rev. F. J. Moore, D. D., and the members of the board of trustees of Church Army will be present as well as some officers of the National Council, as the pledge of service is made by the newly commissioned captains and sister.

This occasion will also mark the end of 20 years' service in Church Army by the national director, Captain Earl Estabrook, whose resignation takes place on June 1 in order that he may study for Holy Orders in the Diocese of Southern Ohio. In a letter to the Church Army staff, Mr. Samuel Thorne, president, has written: "After having served Church Army in several capacities for the past twenty years, Captain Earl Estabrook has felt a call to the ministry and has presented his resignation as national director, effective June 1. With regret the board accepted this resignation and immediately gave consideration as to his successor. Within a short time we hope to have this important announcement ready for you, but you will understand, I am sure, that although negotiations now are under way, it would be most unwise to say anything further until we are certain about the outcome. Therefore, I must call upon you to exercise Christian patience and continue to give the same fine loyalty to Church Army through this difficult period. I would like you to know that Captains Kast, Estabrook and Paddock, as well as some twelve board members, left the Rye Conference with high hopes for the future of Church Army."

JAPANESE BISHOPS ON WAY TO LAMBETH

New York, N. Y.—Three Japanese bishops en route to the Lambeth Conference arrived by plane in New York May 13, proceeding to England on May 21. The three are: The Rt. Rev. Michael Hinsuke Yashiro, Bishop of Kobe since 1941 and Presiding Bishop since August, 1947; the Rt. Rev. Timothy Makoto Makita, Bishop of Tokyo since January, 1947 (was bishop of North Tokyo, 1941-46); the Rt. Rev. Peter Sadajiro Yanagihara, Bishop of Osaka since May, 1947, formerly assistant in that diocese. At a press conference at Church headquarters, in answer to the question, "What do you in Japan want most from Church people in the United States?" Bishop Yashiro said emphatically, "Missionaries." Asked about the progress of Christianity in Japan since the war, he said, "It is amazing. The opportunities are very great."

STUDENT CHRISTIAN CONVOCATION

800 Delegates Assemble at Michigan State College

East Lansing, Mich.—"In spite of the enormous learning and the achievements of the modern university, there is a lack of order, something approaching chaos in much of modern education," declared the Rt. Rev. Richard S. Emrich, bishop of Michigan, before the 800 delegates to the Michigan Student Christian Convocation assembled at Michigan State College in East Lansing on May 1. The Bishop pointed out that "we are strong in technical knowledge, but weak in wisdom. We have so much on our campuses that is noble. If we could only order it!"

Earlier in the day the delegates, representing nearly every college and university in the state, heard Dr. Arnold Nash, chairman of the Religion Department at the University of North Carolina, and John Deschner, executive secretary of the United Student Christian Council, speak along similar lines as they discussed the theme of this great ecumenical gathering, "The Christian Concept of the University."

Dr. Nash charged that the universities and colleges "have become largely a series of technical schools" organized around the false ideologies of "objectivity, art for art's sake, and business is business." He challenged the delegates to face the problem of how we can conserve the values we hold dear in civilization, which really means "how we can become Christians in the realm of the mind."

Mr. Deschner paid tribute to the ecumenical witness of the meeting, the most significant in the last twenty years of Michigan's university life. He also described the history of the World Student Christian Movement from its early struggling years under John R. Mott down to present times as it embraces the world.

An unique feature of the one-day gathering were the afternoon functional meetings relating the Christian faith to varous vocations. Students contemplating as careers law, medicine, the ministry, business, teaching, etc., met in 20 different groups with Christian faculty members from appropriate departments in the various colleges as resource leaders. Matters of professional ethics, opportunities for Christian witness and influence in one's job, etc., were discussed.

Bishop Emrich summed up the conference in his evening address when he said, "The longer one looks at the American scene, honestly and with hard head, the more one is convinced of three things: (1) That this period of neutrality cannot last. We will move into a form of disorder in which secondary things in life like the state impose a tyranny upon us, or we will move back to a Christian view which will order us in the proper manner. (2) Since we have as a world, rejected the Christian understanding of ourselves, we have moved into an increasingly chaotic period. It took a long time to happen, but the great silent collapse slowly occurred. (3) The live alternatives, as I see them, are fascism, communism, an increasing decay of moral standards, superficial living, or Christianity. If there is some other great faith, some other great order, which will gladden our hearts and set us a great positive goal, I think we have the right to ask the universities where it is. Why don't they bring it forward?"

"Some tell us that 'the future of the world lies not in religion or morals but in education.' This means: We do not know what is good, but our children must have it! It would seem to say that the more education you have the better; but we are sobered by the fact that Germany at the rise of Hitler was one of the most educated nations in the world."

"Now, why won't education make men good? Because the curse of the world is self-will, selfishness, and all the knowledge of the college can build your self-will higher and higher. A selfish man enters college, receives his A. B., M. A., and even Ph. D., and he comes out still selfish. That is why an educated man, like Goebbels, can be a devil . . . self-will is broken and only when man has a loyalty, and gives himself to that which is higher than this world. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart."

As the conference adjourned, the delegates were urged to follow five suggestions:

1. Continue study of the faith.
2. Meet for fellowship and worship.
3. Meet to discuss what Christianity means in various departments in which students study.
4. Do daring things, not the old stuff, in awakening religious interest on the campus.
5. "Be precise in beliefs, loving in spirit."

General chairman of the conference was Lyle Chapman, student president of the Methodist Youth Fellowship in Michigan. Adult advisor was the Rev. William Clebsch, Episcopal chaplain at Michigan State College.

The Future of Israel

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

It now seems probable that the new state of Israel will be able to establish itself the hard way, by an armed defense of its existence against Arab attacks.

Careful observers are moderately optimistic about Israel's future because they assume it to be impossible for the various Arab states to overcome their jealous disunity and present a united front. Furthermore, if the arms embargo should be lifted, the Jews will be able to afford mechanized equipment and the Arabs will lack the wherewithal to buy it.

Whether the new Jewish State can establish a viable economy in a hostile world is another question, which cannot be answered so optimistically.

Whether these conclusions are justified or not, it is interesting to trace the emergance of a new historical force out of the welter of cross-purposes which have characterized the Palestinian problem. Every nation involved in the issue had different motives and objectives and no nation agreed with another.

Some nations, particularly our own, did not agree with themselves. Britain was primarily concerned to preserve her life-line through the Middle East. Russia wanted to sow as much discord as possible in that area, and above all, to embarrass the retreating British Empire. America was consistently inconsistent because she was worried on the one hand that we might lose Arabian oil and was concerned on the other hand to satisfy the Jewish community, the most powerful sector of which is in our own nation.

The Arabs were, of course, intent upon preventing this new political force from challenging their sovereignty, and also their pastoral-feudal social organization. A dynamic, technical and democratic civilization in the heart of this pastoral-feudal economy was bound to represent a very serious threat to the Arab "way of life."

In this confusion of conflicting desires, the United Nations became impotent, particularly after the reversal of our position on partition destroyed the momentary concurrence between Russian and American policy. The failure of the United Nations to achieve a common purpose, and the difficulty of Arab states to preserve unity gave the little new state of Israel a chance to establish itself.

Age old hopes and ambitions, invigorated by the tragic experience of world Jewry at the hands of modern Nazism, armed this little community with a fanatic zeal. The larger Jewish community, scattered throughout the world, had a sense of purpose almost as zealous. Furthermore, a considerable portion of the Christian community, driven by an uneasy conscience over its complicity in the plight of the modern Jew, also contributed moral support.

One cannot speak of this victory as a morally unambiguous one. No political victory can be so described. Christian supporters of Zionism are subject to the charge that they pushed the unsolved problem of the western world into the Middle East. Zionist Jews were involved in the dangerous procedure of uncritically compounding ultimate religious with immediate political objectives. The sublime religious insights of the Hebraic prophets were obscured in this procedure.

The great nations all played a pretty sorry game of politics. Yet, on the whole, the result is better than the moral ambiguities which made the result possible. Whatever scruples one may have about the methods which achieved the result and whatever fears one may have about the lasting character of the achievement, it is right that a homeless people should have a homeland.

DOORS OPENING

New York, N. Y.—The "Doors of Opportunity" are opening. One of the first checks received to replace some of the budget cuts that had to be made, was accompanied by a letter which said:

"I am shocked that any diocese would fail to accept its quota. . . .

Another letter enclosing a substantial check said: "I hope the pamphlet 'Doors of Opportunity' will help make up what is needed, but I still believe if the Bishops would send an order to all rectors urging full explanation of the situation to all their people, the response would be astonishing." The writer's gift was his entire pension for a month.

THE SECOND SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

The Collect

O Lord, who never failest to help and govern those whom Thou dost bring up in Thy stedfast fear and love; Keep us, we beseech Thee, under the protection of Thy good providence, and make us to have a perpetual fear and love of Thy holy Name; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Amsterdam 1948

DR. W. A. VISSER 'T HOOFT,

General Secretary, World Council of Churches, Geneva, Switzerland

New and unprecedented approaches to old questions are almost bound to meet with misunderstanding. The plan to form a World Council of Churches is no exception. The remarkable element in the situation is rather that the overwhelming majority of the church bodies have shown their willingness to enter together upon this pilgrimage into virtually unknown territory.

At the time of writing—six months before the Assembly—one hundred and thirty-six churches in forty countries have accepted the invitation to participate in the first constituent Assembly of the World Council of Churches to be held in Amsterdam in August. Other churches will certainly accept in the next few months. At the same time a number of churches which do not yet qualify for full membership will send unofficial delegates to the Assembly.

All of the main confessional traditions of Christendom—except the Roman Catholic which will send observers—will have their full share in the meeting. The Younger Churches from Asia, the ancient Orthodox Churches, as well as the churches from America and Europe, will be there. The main ecumenical streams—the "practical" of Stockholm, the "theological" of Lusanne, and the "missionary" of Edinburgh and Tambaram, and that flowing from the Youth Conference in Oslo all contribute in one way or another to the formation of this broader stream. Some churches will be missing for reasons beyond their control; others have not accepted the invitation. But even so there is reason for deep gratitude that in this tragic hour of history we may look forward to the convening of the most widely representative church-gathering that has yet been held.

The historical significance of this meeting does not, however, lie chiefly in its world-wide ecumenical character. "Amsterdam" will mean a new departure in the relationships of the churches to each other. What Archbishop Soderblom proposed first in 1919 and the Ecumenical Patriarch of Constantinople in 1920—namely that the churches should enter into real fellowship with each other—is now about to happen. Amsterdam will not only mean that another ecumenical conference is added to the series of such meetings. It stands for the beginning of a new process in church history.

These churches are not coming to Amsterdam with the thought of being absorbed in one single, unified World Church. They are not setting up a centralized organ to speak and act in their name. They are not planning to create an ecclesiastical parallel to the United Nations. What they intend to do is something much simpler, but no less important. They desire to enter into a continuing relationship to each other, so as to collaborate regularly in matters of common concern, to render a common witness whenever possible and to deal with the question of Christian unity in a Christian manner. They will meet in grateful recognition of the unity which already exists and will engage in frank discussion of their differences.

The emergence of a new historical development is never a smooth process—least of all in church history. Amsterdam will be the meeting place of churches—most of which have lived in isolation from each other. They differ from each other in all the ways in which institutions having grown up in different cultures and situations differ. They differ also in important points of faith, of church order, of their attitude to the world. They will only slowly learn to enter into a truly creative discussion with each other. The critical observer at Amsterdam will, therefore, not find it difficult to discover evidence of very real disharmony.

But the great thing about Amsterdam is that none of these barriers to fellowship will be final. These churches will not be meeting alone. They will meet under the eyes of the one Lord to whom they all owe allegiance and whom they acknowledge "as God and Saviour." They may hope that in spite of their formidable differences, in spite of the great confusion resulting from the divided state of Christendom, they will discover unity behind the disunity, and will receive from the Head of the Church their common marching orders.

What will these delegates do at Amsterdam? The Assembly is a constituent Assembly and will, necessarily, give considerable time to such questions as the constitution, the membership, the organization and the program of the World Council in the coming years. It is no small matter to set up an effective organ which is to serve churches in all parts of the world in such varied fields as reconstruction, youth work, ecumenical study, international relations, press, and many others. It is even more difficult to elaborate a form of organization which will ensure that the different areas and different traditions participate equally in the leadership of the Council.

Nevertheless the major emphasis of the Assembly will not be on these questions. An assembly of Churches of Christ—especially if it meets in the disrupted world of 1948—dare not content itself with matters of policy and organization. It must turn to the great pressing challenges which face the churches today. Those challenges are mainly four: Is the Church living up to its calling? Is it rendering a clear witness? Does it proclaim and exemplify the Lordship of Christ in society? Is it a force of justice and reconciliation in international life? These questions, to the study of which men and women in many countries have given much time and energy during the last two years, will be fully considered in the four sections of the Assembly and answered in the light of the insights given to the whole Christian family.

A fundamentally important part of the Assembly will be the common worship. In the hours of common listening to the Word of God and common intercession, in the hours also when delegates will participate in the Communion services of other confessions or simply attend these services in the fellowship of prayer, the deepest understanding will come to them of the gift of unity and the sorrow of disunity. We hope that in those hours many will learn to pray: "Lord, make me an instrument for the restoration of the unity of Thy Church."

can be seen at a glance the amazingly varied and richly diverse life of the world-wide Church. What other body can compare with the Church in the life of all nations, all races, all cultures! Amsterdam may be an occasion to hear the true voice of the Christian Church as a whole—as it speaks when it rises above national or even confessional limitations.

But also what a risk! Will the Assembly be sufficiently humble and sufficiently expectant: can God's creative power work through this Assembly? Are the churches really ready for this great adventure? Is not the real danger of this whole undertaking that it is carried by churches with their inveterate tendency to clericalism and officialdom? May it not be that this new beginning will end as so many promising new beginnings in the Church and the world have ended—in mere organization?

These questions are real questions. We have no guarantee that the new beginning to be made in Amsterdam will be new in the only meaning which Christians can accept: that it reflects the rebirth of the Church through the life-giving Spirit. It is indeed possible that Amsterdam will produce nothing but another piece of church machinery. But it is also possible that the Churches—and that means the churches as a whole with their local congregations and the members of these congregations—will turn anew to their Lord; that they will ask Him to re-make them and to gather His people together and thereby become ready for the new start which God in His grace offers to His children.

It is possible that Amsterdam will have to be described in the words of Ezekiel: "The bones came together . . . but there was not breath in them." But God may grant that other words in the same vision may become true once again: "The breath came into them and they lived, and stood upon their feet, an exceeding great army."

From Edinburgh 1910 to Amsterdam 1948

By DR. JOHN R. MOTT,

One of the Five Chairmen of the Provisional Committee of the World Council of Churches

The World Missionary Conference, held in Edinburgh in 1910, marks the beginning of one of the most important advances in the recent centuries of the drawing together of the Christian communions of the world. There had been other notable world gatherings of the World missionary forces, such as the one held in New York in 1854, in connection with the visit of Alexander Duff to America, the conference in Liverpool in 1860, the one in London in 1878, and the more significant one also in London in 1888, and, likewise, the great assembly in Carnegie Hall, New York, in the spring of 1900, attended by nearly 2,000 Christian workers from all over the world. There had also been occasional significant gatherings of the World's Evangelical Alliance and the series of international conferences of the Young Men's Christian Association. The great and representative assembly held in Edinburgh in the year 1910, however, was in a class by itself. In number of delegates and in wide geographical representation, this conference holds the leading position. More important still was its scope and the thoroughness of the preparatory processes. For the first time the membership was confined to officially appointed delegates from recognized organization determined on a principle of proportion. Closely associated with the basis of membership was the determination of the character of the conference. The earlier conferences had been chiefly great demonstrations fitted to inform, educate and impress. It was felt, however, that the time had now come for a more earnest study of the world-wide Christian enterprise, and, that without neglecting the popular demonstrational uses of such a gathering, the first aim should be to make the conference as far as possible a consultative assembly.

The decisions as to the constitution and character of the conference involved a new line of preparation. What was now in view was no longer a local demonstration but in reality an international school of study and counsel. To this end an international committee was appointed which, two years in advance of the conference, held a preparatory consultation of several days' duration. Eight subjects were selected for inquiry and study by representative commissions which reported to the conference. It was agreed that each commission consist of twenty members and that the chairman of each commission should guide its procedure and have the final decision on all questions which might arise. The membership of each commission was divided into two parts, one for the Christian forces of each side of the Atlantic. The personnel of each commission was made up of the outstanding leaders with reference to the subject under investigation.

The Edinburgh Conference performed but one legislative act and that was highly significant, namely the creation of what was known as the Continuation Committee, which at the end of the First World War evolved into what has become known as the International Missionary Council. Another notable development, traceable to the Edinburgh assembly and its outreach, was the evolution of two significant movements—one known as the Committee on Life and Work of the Churches, which held a great conference at Stockholm in 1925; and the other the World Conference on Faith and Order (Doctrine and Policy) of the Churches, which held its first conference in Lausanne, Switzerland, in 1927.

These two gatherings were attended by very representative and influential bodies of leaders of the various Protestant Communions. There were present also representatives of nearly all of the Eastern Orthodox Churches. Each of these two bodies brought together a large, widely representative and influential representation of leaders of the various Christian communions. Each of these gatherings proved to be truly creative, calling into being new agencies and issuing in fruitful and important processes of research and means of united, constructive action on the part of the Christian communions concerned. The wide ramification of the intitiatives and forward-looking measures of united Christian action were most impressive. In sharing these we are not unmindful of many an initiative traceable to these gatherings which, though lack of leadership and adequate financial backing, fell short of realizing the original plans and expectations.

Notwithstanding the inevitable reactions in the period following the First World War, these two consultations abounding in fresh ecumenical visions and truly creative energy. We have in mind not only such vital initiatives as the Stockholm and Lausanne meetings, but also the even greater and more creative gatherings of the World Missionary Council held on the Mount of Olives at Jerusalem in 1928, and at Tambaram, Madras, India, in 1938-39. It would be difficult to overstate the marvelous unifying power of the fellowship and sharing on the part of the many leaders of the Older and Younger Churches at these truly creative gatherings.

During this remarkable decade there took place a number of unofficial group meetings with leaders and members of the so-called Faith and Order, and Life and Work groups of the Churches, also joint conferences of the Older and Younger Churches. It was my priceless privilege to be a member of several of these informal conferences, and I recall vividly these intimate, unhurried consultations. These group meetings led up to the ever memorable gathering at Westfield College in London in 1937, attended by nearly one hundred representatives of the Faith and Order and the Life and Work Movements, also by representatives of the Older and Younger Churches. Archbishop Temple, as a rule, presided throughout these gatherings. This, in turn, led up to the two historic gatherings—the one on Life and Work of the Churches at Oxford University in July, 1937, followed by the one on Faith and Order (Doctrine and Policy) of the Churches at Edinburgh in August, 1937. Each of these never-to-be-forgotten conferences were attended by over 300 leaders, lay and clerical, of the Protestant communion the world over, and also by members of Eastern Orthodox Churches, and with some members of the Church of Rome as listeners.

These two conferences at Oxford and Edinburgh led to a practically unanimous conclusion to establish a World Council of Churches. Each of these bodies appointed seven members and seven alternates to a Committee of Fourteen. Then followed a brief meeting in London, of the members appointed at Oxford and Edinburgh, where it was decided to come together the following year, 1938, at Utrecht, Holland, together with counsellors from various Churches which had decided to organize a World Council of Churches, and also representatives of various ecumenical Christian movements, such as the International Missionary Council, the World's Student Christian Federation, the Young Men's Christian Association, the Young Women's Christian Association, and certain denominational alliances. This representative body spent the days at Utrecht in drafting a suggested Constitution for the proposed World Council of Churches. The hope and plan had been to bring the World Council into being within a year or two following the Utrecht meeting.

Very important and necessary meetings of the Committee of Fourteen and of various groups followed, but the oncoming of the Second World War inevitably deferred the official launching of the World Council. In the years that then elapsed, 1938 to 1946, many sectional meetings took place (the North American group alone, in this period, held upwards of twenty meetings, and the groups of British and Continental members, likewise, kept in close touch in frequent consultations). In the last two years meetings of the Provisional Committee have been held in Geneva and in Buck Hill Falls, Pennsylvania.

In the ten years which have elapsed since the Utrecht meeting, although this period has included the terrible and literally world-wide convulsion of the Second World War, and the like tragic post-war period, wonderful and almost unbelievable progress has been made toward the realization of the high purpose of the creation of the World Council of Churches. In this impossibly difficult and fateful period, over 130 different Protestant and Eastern Orthodox Churches have, after thorough consideration, voted in their ecclesiastical bodies to enter the proposed World Council of Churches. This number includes all but two or three of the largest Protestant communions in the world, practically all Anglican Churches, a number of Eastern Orthodox Churches, and many churches of Asia, Africa, Latin America and the Pacific island world. It should be emphasized that this remarkable development is due to the farsighted planning and diligent action of the officers of the Provisional Committee and the effective cooperation of various necessary groups of members of the Provisional Committee and of the Administrative Committee.

Equally remarkable have been the constructive services rendered by the Provisional Committee and its Executive programs of relief and reconstruction. It would be difficult to overstate the wide range and value of the Christ-like ministry on behalf of the millions of refugees and displaced multitudes in Europe and also of prisoners of war. Appreciative reference should also be made to the far reaching importance of the Study Department of the World Council and of the other constructive services in preparation for the Assembly at Amsterdam next autumn for the actual launching of the World Council.

One of the most reassuring facts is that even in the pathway of the unparalleled upheavals and suffering of the past decade, there has been such an unequalled overcoming of divisive forces and such a drawing together of the Christians of many names. The World Council of Churches in no sense seeks to dominate or control the Churches but to serve them and to bring their distinctive and united contributions and influence to bear upon the unsolved problems of the present fateful hour. The Amsterdam Assembly will concern itself with the major issues confronting the Churches and with the working out of the most effective organization, leadership and financial policy.

It is highly desirable that those responsible for the selection and appointment of the regular or voting delegates of each of the constituent Churches, which have voted to join the World Council, give this vital matter their best attention to the end that most highly qualified men and women be appointed for the carrying through to a successful issue of this most important work of Christian statesmanship in the modern centuries of the life of the Church.

LEE MEMORIAL WINDOW SERIOUSLY DAMAGED

Richmond, Va.—Shortly after midnight, May 1, St. Paul's Church suffered vandalism at the hands of a U. S. sailor on leave from his ship at Norfolk, Va.

The priceless Robert E. Lee memorial stained glass window, together with five other beautiful memorial windows, were seriously damaged. Injury to the Lee window was likened by Mr. Norman Graham, a stained glass expert of Tenafly, N. J., who was summoned for consultation, to the defacement of a Rembrandt painting. Mr. Graham was quoted as saying that this memorial, executed in England in 1892, was the work of the greatest stained glass expert of the last several centuries and had been one of the most outstanding examples of stained glass creative work in existence.

A conservative estimate of damage to the windows has been put at $8,000, with another $500 for repairs to the chairs and furnishings in the church and parish house.

Attention was first attracted by the sound of smashing glass. The police were summoned and arrived to find a sailor leaving St. Paul's Church building.

The young man, whose hands had been severely cut, was arrested and given first aid treatment. His destructive trail through the building was marked in blood. He is being held for observation, as he maintained that he had no recollection of the incident. It has not been determined whether he was dazed from drink or drugs, or from some other condition. His court hearing is scheduled for June 3.

The rector, the Rev. Robert R. Brown, asked the prayers of the congregation on Sunday morning for the unfortunate youth.

Many voluntary contributions of money began coming in from Richmonders, who hoped to help restore in a measure, the church to its former appearance.

Miss Annie C. Stewart, of Brook Hill, who, with her late sisters, gave the Lee window in 1892, has offered to bear the expense of restoring it. The window was designed and made by Henry Holliday in his English glass works.

Members of the Anderson family wish to bear the expense of restoring the window which is a memorial to the late General Joseph Reid Anderson.

The Lee and Blair windows have been removed from the church and shipped to the Lamb Studios, Tenafly, N. J., for the necessary repairs.

NEIGHBORS

Some years ago, we moved to a new parish with our family. It was a hot day in July. Anyone who has ever moved can understand that wrestling our furniture into a strange house was a hot, sweaty business. We hadn't gotten very far before we were just as hot and sweaty as the business was. Just when our nerves were getting a bit on edge, and our tempers frayed, a little old lady came across the street carrying a pitcher of iced lemon-aid and some glasses. "It is so hot", she said, "and you look so tired, that I thought this might help." It did. That night, we fell into bed completely exhausted and slept the sleep of the dead.

The next morning, we were awakened by a loud knocking on the back door. We yawned, put on our bath-robe and went down. The Methodist Parson, who lived just back of us, was at the door. In his hands, he carried a dish-pan full of radishes, lettuce, onions and string beans, dew-fresh from his own garden. We thought it was mighty nice of him to take such trouble for total strangers. Shortly after breakfast, the Doctor's wife came across the street carrying a pan of string beans. "I thought these might help with dinner", she said. We thanked her for her kindness, and wondered which beans we should cook first, hers or the Parson's. Finally, we dumped them both into the same pan and prepared half of both lots. We were just about to put them on the range when the door bell rang. There stood the neighbor from next-door with a steaming dish of potatoes—and string beans. She cheerfully remarked: "I know you have had so much to do this morning that I just thought I'd help with your dinner". We thanked her most profusely—and wondered if we would ever get all of those string beans eaten.

It was a long time before we could look string beans in the face with any degree of equanimity, but that attitude did not apply to our neighbors. The longer we lived with them, the better we liked them and the more we enjoyed them.

Life in that community was completely informal, friendly and kind. Nobody stood on ceremony, or computed obligations. Every one shared the life of everyone else, as well as his labor and his goods. Often we went out to work our garden and found our tools missing from the shed. That didn't bother us. We knew that a neighbor had borrowed them, so we just rambled around the neighborhood looking in tool sheds until we found them. If we found something better suited to our purpose, we didn't hesitate to take it. All of our neighbors did the same. If one of them happened to pass while we were working, he didn't hesitate to stop and offer advice, or to lend a hand with the job. The Doctor not only cured our ailments, but shot the skunks which got after our chickens. We patched the plaster on his ceiling and put new leathers on his water pump. The old lady across the street sent us hot biscuits and kittens. We changed her blown-out fuse plugs and let the air out of her radiators. During the warm weather we put the baby in her play pen out in the yard. As often as not, when we looked to see that she was all right, she wouldn't be there at all. That was no cause for alarm. It simply meant one of the neighbors had taken her home with them for a little visit and she would be returned in good condition. As long as we lived in that community the door of our house was never locked. Neither were the doors of our neighbors. It was a wonderful life. We felt very close to our neighbors—and very close to God.

There is nothing strange about that. The most of God we see and know is that which we find in the face and life, the friendly service, the kindness and love of those who live around us. It is just that sort of neighborliness, raised to its highest, which made Jesus such a wonderful person. It makes us very confident that we know what he meant when he said: "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father"; and "He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit".

Just take another look at your neighbor in the light of these things, and it won't be hard to "love him as yourself. It will be greatly to your advantage to do so too, for he is your closest contact with God.

SPIRITUAL CONFERENCE FOR SOCIAL WORKERS

Detroit, Mich.—The Department of Christian Social Relations in the Diocese of Michigan sponsored two events during the same week recently, both of which may have far-reaching results.

On May 11, ninety social workers from more than a score of public and private agencies attended a Spiritual Conference for Social Workers, held at Christ Church. The Rev. G. Paul Musselman, director of the Department, and the Rev. Wm. B. Sperry, rector of the host parish and chairman of the Department, had expected that this first conference would probably be attended by 20 or 30 persons, but the reservations came in so rapidly that latecomers were turned away. A service in Christ Church, a supper in the parish house, and the conference, at which Bishop Emrich spoke on "Social Work and the Nature of Man," made up the program.

A proposal by the social workers present was that these conferences be continued, probably on an area basis so that more could participate.

Later the same week, on Thursday, May 13, the Department held the second of a series of Town Meetings in St. Paul's Cathedral. The subject, partially inspired by the sermon of the Rt. Rev. Lewis B. Whittemore, of Western Michigan, at the time of Bishop Emrich's installation on April 8, was "Released Time for Religious Education." In this sermon Bishop Whittemore dealt with the recent Supreme Court decision, and its secular and pagan implications. A newly-elected member of the Department, Mr. Robert C. Waldron, Personnel Manager of the Hudson Motor Car Company, was mediator, the panel consisting of the following: G. Leslie Field, attorney, treasurer committee for Separation of Church and State; the Rev. G. Merrill Lenox, executive secretary of the Detroit Council of Churches; Miss Florence Sweeney, president of the Detroit Federation of Teachers; and Jay J. Sherman, Ph. D., head of the Department of Government of Wayne University. Arrangements for this meeting were made by the Rev. Wm. B. Spofford, Jr., rector of St. Thomas' Church, Detroit, also a member of the Department.

PRAYER AT THE STOP-LIGHT

A Richmonder . . . believes that the prayers of the righteous avail much. He has faith, also, in the effect of prayer on the mind of everyone who shapes a petition to Heaven. All of us will work more diligently for peace, he thinks, if we pray for it. He accordingly has formed the habit, he tells us, of making a prayer for peace every time he has to stop at a red light in his busy day's travel about the city. Little by little he is training himself to associate the red light on the city street with the warning signal on the road to war; and whenever that signal appears, he petitions the Almighty to incline the hearts of men to peace. It is a simple act of simple faith—but who can measure its potentialities? What might not happen to the mind and to the policy of Americans if even a few of the drivers of the country's 35 million motor cars prayed for peace every time they stopped at a red light?—Richmond, Va., News Leader.

Who Are Episcopalians?

The Department of Research and Education of the Federal Council of Churches has just completed a study relating to the economic status and the social outlook of the members of the various American Churches. The study was made by Dr. Wesley Allensmith of Princeton University at the Office of Public Opinion Research of Princeton's Department of Psychology. The basis of the study was a series of recent ballots on matters of public opinion on which religious affiliation was registered as a "control" item of information. Altogether six different ballots were used comprising a sample of more than eighteen thousand cases. Thus this study presents a factual picture of the membership of the Churches. The facts relating to our Episcopal Church are interesting and suggestive.

The first classification was an economic one. Our Church divides 24.1% in the "Upper Class"; 33.7% in the "Middle Class" and 42.2% in the "Lower Class." This was one of the highest percentages of any Church in the "Upper Class" and one of the lowest in the "Lower Class." It confirms the generally accepted opinion of the economic stratification of our Church.

Educational levels show we have an exceedingly high percentage of high school graduates or beyond in our Church. Our average is far above that of the population as a whole, and is among the highest of all Churches.

The occupational survey confirms these others. 17.1% of our membership is professional; 14.5% is in business, either as executives or as the owners of small businesses; 25.2% work in "white collar" jobs; 10.2% are employed in service classifications, and 23.3% are skilled or semi-skilled labor. Only 2.3% are unskilled labor, and only 7.4% are farmers or farm laborers. This is the lowest percentage of rural membership of any Church. It is even beneath the rural membership of the Roman Church.

The residential survey repeats these facts. Our strength is massed in the cities. 61% of our members live in cities above 10,000 in population. 38% live in cities of more than 100,000 population!

SOCIAL FACTS

No one will be astonished, we take it, to learn that more Episcopalians voted for Mr. Dewey in 1944 than for Mr. Roosevelt. Or that union membership in our Church is tiny, amounting only to 13.4% of our membership. As a matter of fact, no Church showed a very high union membership. The highest was that of the Roman Church, which has 28% union membership.

In the light of these facts, the answers to three social questions reveal a most encouraging liberalism of thought in our Church. In the first of these questions, people were asked whether labor should have more, the same, or less power than it has now. 73% of our membership voted to give labor the same or more power than it now has! Only 21.8% thought it should have less. (These social questions, incidentally, were asked in 1946.)

In a second question, respondents were handed a card with two statements printed on it and asked, "Which of these statements do you most agree with?" The statesments were, "(1) The most important job for the government is to make certain that there are good opportunities for each person to get ahead on his own. (2) The most important job for the government is to guarantee every person a decent and steady job and standard of living." 64.9% of our members voted for the first answer, that is, for individual enterprise. 33.1% voted for a government guaranteed security.

In a third question people were asked to state their reactions to Russia. They were again handed a card which had four statements printed on it. These were, "(1) It is very important to keep on friendly terms with Russia, and we should make every effort to do so. (2) It is important for the United States to be on friendly terms with Russia, but not so important that we should make too many concessions to her. (3) If Russia wants to keep on friendly terms with us, we shouldn't discourage her, but there is no reason why we should make any special effort to be friendly. (4) We shall be better off if we have just as little as possible to do with Russia."

10% of our members selected the first statement as their own. 63.6% chose the second; 19.2% the third, and only 5.6% the fourth. The attitude of our Church was more friendly to Russia than that of most other Churches. Incidentally, there was not the sharp contrast between the Protestant Churches and the Roman Church attitude one would have expected. It should be noted again that these social polls were taken in 1946, and changed conditions since then might radically change these opinions.

OUR BASIC STRATEGY

In summary, we are a middle and upper class Church, of better educational background than most of the Churches. We Episcopalians are generally employed in the professional, executive or white collar jobs. We live in the cities, particularly the larger ones. Our politics tend to be conservative, and yet we have a strong liberal streak in us.

In this picture we see the failures of our Church. We have no adequate ministry to the laboring man.

We can take no comfort from the fact that the other Churches have failed in this area also. Nor do we have an adequate rural work. We are abysmally weak here. These areas ought to receive strengthening.

But the survey also tells us where, from the point of strategy we should be capitalizing upon our strength. One of the greatest opportunities for our Church is in the suburban areas of our cities, to which the drift of population is pronounced in every urban center in America. If we do not follow our Church people into new residential neighborhoods, our great city Churches will slowly die and there will be no new Churches to replace them. This migration to the suburbs is of great importance to the Episcopal Church.

A second field in which we obviously hold an advantageous position is that of the colleges. Here we are already carrying on a substantial work, but it ought to have funds and men poured into it for this is fertile land for Episcopalians.

In the area of labor-management relations, our strength is on the side of management. We ought not to be scolded about this. Without neglecting labor, our mission may well be to develop a more Christian approach to economic problems by management. Labor relations is a two-way problem. Christians are needed on both sides of the arbitration table. Our Church might pioneer in conferences, missions and study groups among executives and managers of industry to search for a more Christian solution to our problems. If our membership strength lies here, let us use it!

In all these matters, this study suggests we have the latent financial resources that would be needed for any advance. We obviously need the development of a program of Christian stewardship that will channel the great power of our membership into the service of Christ.

Nunc Dimittis

"There was a man whose name was Simeon, and the same man was just and devout." What were some of the things contributing to that character? For certain there were three—the home, the synagogue, and the temple, and in each he found, or heard, those Scriptures which ultimately made him wise unto salvation.

Though our only glimpse of this man, upon whom rested the Holy Spirit, is in the temple precincts, yet Jerusalem may not have been the place of his upbringing. Ofttimes we find that the homes in which piety flourished, were in small towns. Small communities have a way of producing teachers, the quality of whose leadership is a constant source of surprise to know-all city dwellers, as in Acts 5:13. Zacharias ministered in the temple, but his home was in the hill-country of Judea. (Lk. 1:5, 23, 39, 40). Joseph and Mary belonged to the synagogue at Nazareth. (Lk. 1:26). Zebedee and Salome, parents of two apostles, lived in Galilee.

The people in that group were all related, and a glimpse of their characters is given in such passages as Mark 15:40; Matthew 27:56, and Luke 1:36. Their homes were places of piety and learning, supplemented by synagogue worship and the synagogue school. Of the children of those homes, one became the Herald of the Christ; two became disciples, first of the Herald, and later, of the Christ; one became the presiding officer of the Early Church, and, best of all, from such a home came the Saviour of mankind.

Those homes and synagogues were in Palestine, but any student of the Acts of the Apostles soon becomes aware that the synagogues of the dispersion, were likewise the seed plots of Christianity. See John 7:35; James 1:1; I Peter 1:1.

To the synagogues, more than to the temple, does the Church owe its Simeons, its Mnasons, and its women like Lois and Eunice. Even though the last named was party to a mixed marriage, yet to her child, there was given a home where piety was shown, and Timothy goes on into the Christian ministry. (Acts 21:16; 2 Tim. 1:5; Acts 16:1). At Corinth (Acts 18) the Synagogue had a mixed congregation, presenting a yet wider field to Paul, who, like his Master, when itinerating, went first to the synagogue, and there, opened up the Scriptures, that he might preach Jesus and the resurrection. Where there was no synagogue, he sought out the God-fearers and instructed them, as in Acts 16:14.

Excepting in Psalm 74:8, there is no mention in the Old Testament of any synagogue, but their beginnings would seem to be present in such passages as Nehemiah 8:7, 8, and in Ezekiel 8:1; 20:1-3; and the words of James, the Lord's brother, in Acts 15:21, certainly indicate that expository teaching had been known for a long time. What has all this to do with Nunc dimittis? "Bear with me a little in my folly," was Paul's request of certain people in Corinth, and similar forbearance is asked now, as the suggestion is offered that our man so just and so devout, was the product of a home not unlike those of Zacharias and Joseph and Zebedee; that in earlier life, Simeon had belonged to the congregation of a small synagogue in some town much smaller than Jerusalem.

It is all conjecture, but the fact remains, that in those days and in our day, humble homes and little parishes, produced men and women who really knew the Lord.

Those who are interested in this type of study, may like to turn to such passages as Genesis 18, verse 19; to Joshua 24:15; Judges 13:12, and to that picture of household religion given in 2 Samuel 6:12. There is a winsome word in Jeremiah 3:14, "I will take you, two of a family, and I will bring you to Zion"; that is to say, in little groups. Such is the Ecclesiola Dei, God's Little Church, the Church in the House, (Rom. 16:5; I Cor. 16:19; Ezek. 11:16).

Our Presiding Bishop has issued a Call to Evangelism. People who are determined to be modern in their evangelism, will find poor picking in this column. Through more than forty years in such work, this writer has not witnessed abiding results from mass evangelism, but he has seen results that remain through the years, the result of unhurried, steadily maintained, pastoral visitation; by giving Good News from the pulpit, in response to the pew saying, "Sir, we would see Jesus," and by feeding the flock through classes for devotional study of the Word.

True, this layman is a back-number; true he is one who constantly asks for the old paths, the good way, but he is not ashamed to be numbered with the Malachi three sixteen people. Simon was of that company; how else shall we account for Luke 2:25?

UNITED THANK OFFERING

Mrs. Lewis C. Williams, custodian of the United Thank Offering, has announced that the Spring offering of St. Stephen's Church, Richmond, Va., amounted to $672.32. The Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Virginia stands high in its support of this important missionary effort, and it is understood that it ranked third last year among the dioceses of the Church in the total contributed. The nation-wide report of the U. T. O. is made every three years, and for the Triennium ending in 1946 the amount was $1,651,576.21, a truly impressive total.

From the May issue of Churchways, we quote the following:

Your United Thank Offering Is You!

Do you know that the United Thank Offering belongs to every woman of the Church?

Do you know it is given in thanksgiving to God for His gifts so freely given us?

Do you know it helps send almost 200 women missionaries all over the world?

Do you know it provides tools and necessary equipment for their work, such as typewriters, mimeographs, gas for their cars, recreational equipment, refrigerators to keep their food safe, projectors to aid in their teaching, and furniture for their homes?

Do you know that a microscope and nurse's bag reached Miss Olive Brower, Nenana, Alaska, right in the midst of a typhoid fever epidemic when they were desperately needed?

Do you know the U. T. O. erects buildings on the mission field, repairs others, and provides special equipment such as motors, organs, stoves, or even a freezing unit?

Do you know that Holy Cross Church, St. Croix, Virgin Islands, was repaired by the U. T. O. after the chancel was split by an earthquake?

Do you know that in cooperation with other Communions, Women's Colleges are being supported in India and China?

Do you know what other mission projects are being aided through the U. T. O. in this country and overseas?

Do you know that the United Thank Offering takes your gifts where you cannot go yourself?

Do you know that your U. T. O. is yourself in action?

Your United Thank Offering is you!

WHAT DO WE DO?

Often one hears destructive criticism about what people do not do. We like to think in terms of this, instead of the things we might do. This is so true when we think about the leaders of the Church. We take for granted that they do not need our help.

When people in our Church are ill, do we notify the clergyman? Many times I have heard people say he never calls on the sick. Do you give him the chance to know about people's health, problems, and difficulties, as well as joys. As members of the Church it is our duty to see that they are administered to by our priest. We must let the Altar Guild know so that the flowers from the Altar can be sent to people. These mean much.

We must not think that our rectors are too busy to want to be concerned about our problems or that of a friend. If they are asked they will respond. This is their privilege.

One way to help them to be able to meet these needs is to take from them some of the details of their work. In this way they can have more time to be with people. If they have to spend time mimeographing your bulletin, collecting data and other details necessary to run the business of the Church, hold off your criticism of your rector's pastoral work.

Volunteers to do such a job would relieve his mind entirely. It should not be only a half way measure, so that he would have to check and recheck to see if it is properly done. This is both annoying and wasting energy. If people work in pairs, if one is away the other one can take hold.

This is the advantage in all organization. A Church School class should have two teachers or a parent and teacher for each grade. There is no eleventh hour Saturday distraction for the rector. There is no Sunday morning with more classes unshepherded than with leaders. He is responsible for the Christian Education in his parish or charge but he expects those to whom he has delegated authority to teach to do the task. These are ways to help the clergy in their work.

Working in the Church takes volunteers of all kinds. One woman, a shut-in, addressed envelopes for her church and wrote to other shut-ins in the parish and in the diocese. This was a great contribution, she was accurate and helpful. She volunteered to do what she was capable of doing. She used her talent even though not active outside of her own home.

Let us remind our clergymen of the sick, those in need, and let us offer to take from him some burdens, so that he may be free to do the work to which He was called.

CXXVIII

The great Thanksgiving which the Sursum Corda leads into is an abbreviation of a much longer hymn of praise originally used in the Eucharistic services of the early church, and especially in the east.

The fact that it emphasizes that we should "at all times and in all places" express our gratitude to God reminds us of his continual presence with us in everything that we do and that in leaving His house on Sunday we never leave Him in it. It might be mentioned here that the great reverential emphasis that is sometimes attached to the altar and the sanctuary is apt to be misleading by giving the impression that God is more especially present in this part of the church than He is at the front door, or even on the doorstep.

In the words "therefore with angels and archangels" we are reminded that from very early times Christians believed that the angelic host was always present at the Communion Service in an unusual way. This belief antidates even the Christian Church and goes back into the Old Testament where in Ecclesiastes 5:4-6 reference is made to the presence of an angel in the service to God, cautioning us to fulfill promptly any vow made to God, and warning us that it will not do to "say not before the angel, that it was an error: wherefore should God be angry at thy voice, and destroy the work of thine hands?"

Perhaps St. Paul had this passage in mind when he wrote to the Corinthians (1 Cor. 11:10) that in public worship a woman should ". . . have power on her head because of the angels."

This is merely another one of the many instances in which there is a Biblical background even for a phrase in our Prayer Book Liturgy. Our readers may grow weary of our continual reference to this intimate connection with the Bible, but we feel that it can not be stressed too often.

R. CARY MONTAGUE.

Diocesan Conventions

WESTERN MASSACHUSETTS

Christians Must Form "Colony Of Heaven" Bishop Lawrence Declared In Address

Springfield, Mass.—"The big job facing Christians today is to be 'colonizers of heaven upon earth' ", Bishop William Appleton Lawrence declared in his address before 300 delegates at the 47th annual convention of the Diocese of Western Massachusetts, held at Christ Church Cathedral, Springfield, on May 19. He took his text from the Moffatt translation of the 20th verse of the third chapter of Paul's letter to the Philippians. He said that in spite of the sad and sorrowful conditions which prevail in the world today, there are great colonies of heaven springing up here and there, citing especially the great ecumenical conference to be held this summer at Amsterdam, to form the World Council of Churches, and also the Lambeth Conference in England. He appealed for a multiplication of these colonies in the parish, the diocese, the nation and the world.

"Each of us must find some place to take hold, to get a grip as it were, if we are to help lift and be a part of or help form a potential colony of heaven," he said. "The needs of men have been met all through time not by everybody seeing them, but by a minority who have done something about them. Here is something definite you can do for the peace of the world and the salvation of mankind.

"If Jesus is right—and as Christians we believe that He is—it is by the multiplication of redeeming fellowships that civilization will be saved, and we can begin right where we are now. Here is a job that is matched to our size, but not dependent on our strength. No one can stop us from forming colonies of heaven in our own homes, in our own parishes and in the diocese; or from taking our part and place in the forming of colonizing communities at our new National Center, Seabury House, and the colonizing fellowships at Lambeth and Amsterdam."

In his report to the Convention, Bishop Lawrence noted a great increase in baptisms in the Diocese of Western Massachusetts during the past year, and called the situation "one of the most amazing features of the statistics" presented. The Bishop also reported a 10% increase in the enrollment in the Church Schools of the diocese, in contrast to the downward trend of the past few years. He gave credit for the increases to the work of the Christian Education Department and to a new system of supplying material to families with children of pre-school age.

Some Resolutions Passed

Whereas, peace is always dependent upon unity and cooperation, whether in family life, national life, or world affairs; and

Whereas, unity can never be fully realized unless the individuals or groups concerned are willing, freely and of their own accord, to limit sovereign independence, and,

Whereas, the League of Nations after World War I, and the United Nations Organization, up to the present time, have proved weak and ineffective in preventing mounting fear and tension and a costly race in armaments such as may lead to an atomic war; and

Whereas, this condition cannot be changed until individual nations are willing to limit their sovereign rights, and join in the formation of an Internationa World Government;

Be It Resolved, That this 47th Convention of the Episcopal Diocese of Western Massachusetts favors immediate action to alter the Charter of the United Nations Organization, by modifying the veto power of the members of the Security Council, by taking steps toward the formation of a World Government, and by maintaining law and order through an International Police Force of the World; and

Be It Further Resolved, That we urge the President and Congress of the United States of America to initiate such action at once through our delegates to the United Nations Organization, calling for federal union now of all nations which favor this action; and

Be It Further Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Congressmen representing the districts of this Diocese, the two Senators from Massachusetts, to the local newspapers, and to the Church Press.

Whereas, State and National Leaders have declared that "Education is the Bulwark of Democracy"; and

Whereas, The expenditures for Education by the National Government have never been in proportion to other governmental agencies; and

Whereas, The Taft Bill—S-472—has successfully passed in the U. S. Senate, but the HR-2953 version of the same bill still rests in the House Committee on Education and Labor;

Be It Resolved, by this 47th Convention, That we communicate with the Congressmen from our districts, and with the Senators from Massachusetts, urging that this legislation be brought forward for immediate action, and that proper steps be taken to allocate to Education much more adequate funds in accordance with the principles of the Taft Bill.

Whereas, The 46th Annual Convention adopted a suitable Resolution urging upon Congress appropriate action to further the admission of Displaced Persons; and

Whereas, No action as yet has been taken by the United States in furthering this program;

Be It Resolved, That this 47th Convention re-affirm its stand of the 1947 Convention, and that the representatives in our National Legislature be informed of the urgency of this program, with the request for their immediate action.

Recommendations

1. In view of the recent Supreme Court decision concerning Weekday Religious Education and the separation of Church and State,

That the Department of Christian Social Relations study this decision, and report to the Diocesan Council and the next Annual Convention.

2. Because of time needed for a thorough analysis of issues involved, the following problems be also referred to the Department of Christian Social Relations for study and report:

a. Study of Investments as concerns policies concerning Labor and Price;

b. The Mundt Bill, as well as the earlier recommendation concerning the abolition of the House Un-American Committee.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA

Norfolk, Va.—The 56th Annual Council of the Diocese of Southern Virginia, which met at Epiphany Church, Danville, Va., May 11-12, marked the completion of 10 years' service to the diocese by the Rt. Rev. Wm. A. Brown, D. D., LL. D., as bishop.

In his address to Council, Bishop

Brown presented statistics, setting forth the steady growth of the diocese during his term of office. He emphasized the fact that although there may be administrative guidance and direction from the National Church and the diocese, the real work of the Church is done in the parishes by the clergy and faithful lay workers. The Church is unique in its mission and has no competitor in the presentation of the Gospel, yet in many instances is competing with the world in devices to attract and entertain people, and is being thereby dragged down to the world's level. The Bishop condemned certain methods of raising money for the work of the Church as not being consistent with the teaching of sacrifice and generosity that we find in the Scriptures. Bishop Brown reported 638 confirmations since last Council.

Calling attention to the industrial changes that are taking place in Southern Virginia, Bishop Gunn outlined the conditions in the diocesan missionary points in the diocese, setting forth the opportunities and the need for men to take care of the growing demand. Since his Consecration on the Feast of the Epiphany this year, Bishop Gunn has confirmed 121 persons.

At the opening service of Council, Bishop Brown ordained to the diaconate Mr. Edward P. Bush, Jr. The Rev. George R. MacClintock, rector of Epiphany, Danville, presented the Candidate. The sermon was preached by the Very Rev. Norvell E. Wicker, dean of Christ Church Cathedral, Louisville, Ky. The Holy Communion was celebrated by Bishop Gunn.

After his graduation in June the Rev. Mr. Bush will be assigned to Emmanuel Church, Chatham, and Trinity, Gretna, in the Diocese of Southern Virginia.

The principal question before Council was the decision as to the qualifications of those who may vote in the annual congregational meeting, and those who may hold office as vestrymen. The Diocesan canons granted both privileges to "communicants". There are cases in which some persons have been enrolled as communicants, without confirmation. Council revised the canon by substituting, "confirmed persons" for "communicants".

A proposal to admit women as members of vestries was defeated.

A proposal to change the name of the Diocese to The Diocese of Jamestown, was defeated.

Council endorsed a campaign to raise $100,000.00 for buildings and endowment for the Virginia Seminary.

At the evening service addresses on Laymen's Work were made by the Rev. Frederick A. McDonald, associate director of the Presiding Bishop's Committee on Laymen's Work, and by Lt. Gen. John C. H. Lee.

The 57th Annual Council of Southern Virginia will meet in Galilee Church, Virginia Beach, Va., on the second Tuesday in May, 1949.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA

Roanoke, Va.—The Twenty-ninth Annual Council of the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia met May 18-19, in Emmanuel Church, Bristol, the Rev. Maurice H. Hopson, rector.

In the course of his address to the Council the Rt. Rev. Henry D. Phillips, D. D., bishop of the diocese, said in part:

"The men and women of this world today are living in a time of great uncertainty and anxiety. Whether we recognize it or not, we are in the midst of a great world revolution. The war has hastened and magnified many problems which have been developing and growing through the years. The once expanded world through the processes of science has been compressed, inasmuch as all peoples, nations, races and classes have been brought close together. This has made us conscious of great problems. Old relationships have been changed; adjustments have to be made. This has affected every department of our life.

"The Constitution of the United States enunciates the principles of freedom but the American way of life as pointed by our forefathers could not be written into a Constitution or in any document. The American way of life depends upon intangibes. These intangibles upon which our way of life depends came from the attributes and characteristics which grew out of a belief in God. So when our life becomes secularized—that is, lived apart from and independent of God—we have taken out of it its great motivating power. As a result of this we have the form of democracy but many of our institutions have become so skeletonized that they have lost their vitality and strength.

"What power, what force can we depend upon if it be not furnished by the Church? The Church will be impotent unless the spirit of God expresses through you and me, members of His Church, the flaming zeal for the sacredness and dignity of the individual and the freedom of man?

Another highlight of the Council was the sermon of the Rev. Dr. Robert A. Magill of St. John's Church, Lynchburg, at an impressive service on Tuesday evening.

One of the most important features of this Council was the adoption of a series in the diocesan canons relating to parochial classifications. Corresponding changes in the Constitution were adopted but these cannot take effect until they have been ratified by the Council of 1949.

The object of these revisions is the elimination of a number of traditional definitions etc., and especially the "geographical parish system", which, while they served an important purpose in years past, seem impractical in the present day of more efficient communications, transportation, etc.

Heretofore the Council has been divided into two Convocations, known as "James River" and "New River", but for some years the Convocations have not functioned. This Council revived the Convocation system and made four divisions instead of two and it is confidently expected that these will help in many ways in promoting the work of the diocese.

The Council adopted a missionary Program for 1949 to a total of $63,892.00, (which figure will be the goal of the Every Member Canvass in the Fall) and a schedule of suggested "quotas" for the various congregations.

Also the Council adopted for 1949 a Diocesan Expense Fund budget of $18,754.00 and a schedule of assessments for the churches to finance this budget.

Mr. C. Francis Cocke was reelected as Chancellor, the Rev. Dr. Devall L. Gwathmey as Historiographer, and Thos. A. Scott as Executive secretary-treasurer.

The Council accepted an invitation to hold its session of 1949 in St. John's Church, Roanoke; the Rev. Richard R. Beasley, rector.

Annual Convention

Des Moines, Iowa.—At the Annual Convention of the Diocese of Iowa, held in Cedar Rapids on May 11-12, the Convention voted to conduct this year a campaign for one million dolars for new Student Centers at Iowa City, Grinnell, Grinnell College and Cedar Falls, Iowa State Teachers' College, and capital expenditures to three diocesan Institutions, a missionary expansion program which contemplates ten new churches, improvements at the Negro Church in Keokuk and at the Diocesan Conference Center, assistance to men preparing for the ministry, and increasing of the revolving fund.

Authorization was given for the purchase of a new residence for the Bishop in Des Moines.

A new Cathedral agreement for Trinity Cathedral, Davenport, was approved and made part of the Canons.

Special speakers were Bishop Hunter of Wyoming, the Rev. Stanley M. Fullwood of the National Council, and Mrs. Theodore Weddell.

The Convention was the largest in the history of the diocese, numerically and in the number of Churches represented. Resolutions urging upon Congress the calling of a general conference of the United Nations for the purpose of making the United Nations capable of enacting, interpreting and enforcing world law to prevent war and the commemoration of the four hundredth anniversary of the Prayer Book at the next Diocesan Convention were adopted.

RADIO PROGRAM ENDORSED

Greenwich, Conn.—Diocesan Chairmen of Laymen's Work of the Dioceses of the First and Second Provinces have unanimously endorsed the National Council's proposed radio program. At a meeting at Seabury House, Robert D. Jordan told the lay leaders the nature of the program, the ideas underlying it, and finally had them hear an electrical transcription of one program. The reaction of the men was to adopt without a dissenting voice, this resolution:

"Whereas the Diocesan Chairmen of Laymen's Work, representing the Dioceses of the First and Second Provinces, in meeting at Seabury House, Greenwich, Conn., have had a presentation of the first National Council radio program which is to be broadcast starting October 1, on the Mutual network;

"Therefore be it Resolved, That we heartily endorse and approve the program and respectfully urge all bishops and other clergy to give unqualified support and cooperation to the successful establishment of the same on a permanent basis."

MRS. HENRY FORD GIVES LAND FOR NEW CHURCH

Dearborn, Mich.—Construction of a new church building has been started for Christ Church, Dearborn, on a five and one-half acre site donated by Mrs. Henry Ford and the late Mr. Ford.

The new site is about one-half mile from the present building, which has served the parish for the past seventy-eight years. The architecture of the new church will be Early American following the Southern form, with tower and steeple rising 103 feet from ground level at the entrance of the church. The interior and the furnishings will also follow the Early American tradition.

There will be two floor levels: the upper or main floor with narthex, baptismal font, nave, chancel and sanctuary in the main portion of the structure and the rector's study and church office in a north wing; and the lower or basement level, to be used for Church School classes and assembly. This part of the building, which will house a kitchen, will also be used as a Fellowship Hall. The heating plant will be located outside the church building, in a below-grade wing.

The tower provides space for stairways, coat room and a tower room at balcony level. The chancel will seat a choir of 32, and the church will have a seating capacity of 446; 396 in the nave and 50 in the balcony. The fellowship hall on the lower floor has a seating capacity of 400, or 235 at tables. The new building will leave ample space for parking facilities, recreation and future expansion.

It is expected that the entire project, costing approximately $260,000, will be completed by the late spring of 1949.

Ground was broken for the new church on Monday evening, May 3, the first shovel of sod being turned by Mrs. Henry Ford. The Rev. Hedley G. Stacey, rector of the parish, conducted a brief service and also turned a shovelful of sod.

PRAYERS FOR PEACE

The Southern Churchman has printed a selection of prayers in leaflet form for the use of prayer groups or for individuals. Copies may be had for the asking through the office, 101 N. DIOCESE OF OHIO PAYS TRIBUTE TO BISHOP TUCKER

Cleveland, Ohio—The general membership of clergy and laity of the Diocese of Ohio united on May 24 in honoring Bishop Beverley D. Tucker, on the tenth anniversary of his leadership of the diocese.

A program including a worship service, a recognition assembly and luncheon in Trinity Cathedral, was highlighted by presentation of a gift of $4,500 to Bishop Tucker by W. G. Mather, treasurer of the diocese, on behalf of the clergy and laity. The gift was made to the bishop and Mrs. Tucker to finance their trip to the Lambeth Conference this summer.

At the opening Communion Service, conducted by Dean Chester B. Emerson, the bishop was celebrant.

Among those paying tribute to Bishop Tucker in an informal gathering in the parish hall following the service were Dr. John R. Stalker, professor at Bexley Hall, and Dr. Walter F. Tunks, rector St. Paul's Church, Akron, who were members of the committee which ten years ago notified Bishop Tucker of his election as bishop co-adjutor of the Diocese of Ohio. The anniversary celebration closed with a luncheon attended by Mrs. Tucker.

TO COME BEFORE LAMBETH

New York, N. Y.—One of the many matters to come before the Lambeth Conference is a proposal to set up a Province of the English Church in West Africa. This was discussed at a meeting of bishops of that area held last January. Bishop Bravid W. Harris of Liberia attended, but our own Missionary District of Liberia is not involved in the proposed provincial organization.

The meeting was held in Accra, the program including Holy Communion, a Quiet Morning, other Church services, a Procession of Witness around the town, and much discussion. As related by Bishop D. B. Hall, assistant bishop on the Niger, the Procession was notable. "We shall not easily forget this, for it lasted two hours and we were not a little hot and tired at the end, especially as we each carried our Pastoral Staff!"

A Constitution for the proposed new Province of West Africa was drawn up; the bishops attended the "Swearing in" of the new Governor, Sir Gerald Creasy, K. C. M. G., O. B. E., and there was a Government reception with ten speeches.

ADOPT FAMILY IN EUROPE

Bartow, Fla.—In company with many parish groups throughout the Church, the Woman's Auxiliary of Holy Trinity Church adopted a family in Europe, with four children ranging in age from 6 to 13 years. For almost a year a box of food and clothing has been sent each month, and grateful letters have been received in reply. One letter told of the undernourishment of two of the children and thanked the donors of the recent box for the first rice they had had in three years. Bottles of vitamins are now being sent for the undernourished children, along with food and clothing.

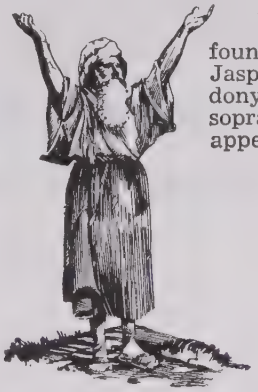
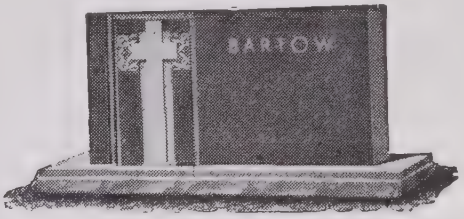
John, the beloved disciple . .

in Revelations 21: 19-20, endeavors to express in human language the most transcendent spiritual beauty and permanence of the heavenly city—the everlasting city. He selected, singularly enough, to describe the foundations thereof, beautiful crystalline gems: Jasper, Sapphire, Chalcedony, Emerald, Sardonyx, Sardius, Chrysolyte, Beryl, Topaz, Chrysoprasus, Jacinth, Amethyst, every one of which appears in the minute crystals of





WINNSBORO BLUE GRANITE

"The Silk of the Trade"

When the surface of this granite, which is a composite of these actual precious stone crystals is highly polished, all the scintillating beauty and color of these jewels become visible.

How peculiarly fitting that monuments to loved ones be erected of lasting granites, containing the very gems which the Apostle John mentioned in this metaphorical description of the foundations of the walls of the everlasting city, the city of our resurrection hope.

Be sure that monuments you buy are cut from genuine Winnsboro Blue Granite. Like other high quality materials there are many inferior substitutes which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its durable qualities and lasting beauty.

SEMINARY GRADUATIONS

In recent weeks about 150 men have graduated from the institutions listed below and been ordained to the Ministry of the Church.

The Seminaries have done thei rbest to train these men "to serve God for the promoting of His glory, and the edifying of His people." Sometimes it has seemed like the old story of having to make bricks without straw; for the Church's provision of funds for maintaining and operating efficient centers of theological education has fallen far behind the demands of the times.

THE SEMINARIES ALL DEPEND UPON CURRENT GIFTS FOR THE ESSENTIAL WORK THEY ARE DOING.

IN WHAT FORM?

Sir: To the question, Will a non-episcopal ministry receive recognition in a united Church, and, if so, in what form? contained in the Evangelical commentary on the Statement of Faith and Order of the Commission on Approaches to Unity, we might find an answer in the following statement of the late Bishop Hugh Miller Thompson, of Mississippi, as quoted in Bishop Brown's "The Church for Americans":

"It is well to understand that we have little, if any difference with the 'Denominations' about their ministry and ordinances. These are valid for all that is claimed for them. They say that their ministers are teachers of religion, duly appointed and authorized by a voluntary society. They are certainly this. They assert that their ministers are not Priests and have no Sacerdotal power or authority. To this assertion we assent. They profess not to have Apostolic Succession. We agree with them upon this point. They state that they administer an Ordinance in which the Body and Blood of Christ are not really present, and are not verily and indeed given, taken, and received; but that it is merely a mode of recalling to their minds our Lord's death. This statement is quite unobjectionable. About Baptism we differ somewhat from them, attributing to that Sacrament, as administered by them, a greater effect than their own faith ventures to hope for. Administered with water, in the name of the Holy Trinity, we believe it to regenerate the soul that duly receives it, and to graft it into the body of Christ's Church. So, we admit their ministry to be all that they claim it to be; and we admit their ordinances to be in no case less, and in one case more, than they, themselves, believe."

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

The General Seminary Baccalaureate Sermon

By THE RT. REV. JOHN BOYD BENTLEY, D. D,

Vice-President of The National Council

The people said, "John did no miracle." This was a keen disappointment to a generation of whom our Lord said, "Except ye see signs and wonders, ye will not believe." But Luke says, "Jesus began to say to the multitude concerning John, 'What went ye out into the wilderness for to see? A reed shaken with the wind? But what went ye out for to see? A man clothed in soft raiment? Behold, they that wear soft clothing are in kings' houses. But what went ye out for to see? A prophet? Yea, I say unto you, and more than a prophet. For this is he, of whom it is written, Behold I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee. Verily I say unto you, among them that are born of women there hath not arisen a greater than John the Baptist.' "

The world today, like the world of John's generation, will complain that we, who are ministers of God and priests of His Church, do no miracles; that at a time when the world looks for signs and wonders, no sign is given, no miracle done. But the Church, like her Lord, will judge us by other standards and will expect certain things of us. What things? What is it that we, who are ministers of His Church, are expected to do?

We are called to be prophets. If we protest that we are not prophets, nor are we the sons of prophets, our protests will be made in vain. Our position as ministers of God places upon us a responsibility we cannot shirk. Our people are hungry and eager to hear the word of God and the voice of His prophet.

It is not expected of us that we shall be able to see into the dim and distant future and to tell of events to come, but we are expected to declare with clarity and conviction that "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth," the sun and the moon and the stars and the whole vast universe. We are expected to believe and to preach that this same God, the Creator of the world, made man in his own image and breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life so that man became a living soul, the child and creature of God.

We are called to declare that as our earthly father is responsible for our being here, as he provides a home and food and clothing for his children, as he has hopes and plans for each of them, and as he loves them dearly, so God is our Heavenly Father who put us here, who provides us with our homes and firesides, our friends and loved ones, our food and clothing and every comfort and convenience of life, who has hopes and plans for each one of us, who is pleased when we are obedient and fulfill his hopes, who is disappointed and unhappy when we are disobedient and fail Him, but who loves us dearly and always.

This conception of God men have no great difficulty in accepting. Likewise the world readily accepts the fact that as God has revealed Himself to us as a loving father, so He has revealed Himself to us in the person of His Holy Spirit by whose power and light we are enabled to make a right judgment in all things, to know what things we ought to do, and by whose grace we are enabled to do those things. Each of us, on our road to Damascus, has been startled and disturbed by a flash of light and of conscience, by a wee, small voice and a realization of God's immediate presence and compelling purpose in our lives.

But the world is reluctant to accept Christ. He has been called the Good Physician, the Great Teacher, the Carpenter of Nazareth, the Way-shower, the Man Nobody Knows, for the world hesitates to accept Him as God. As prophets of God and ministers of His Church, we are called to do what the Church has ever done. We must use every word and phrase within our power to say, and to say again, to emphasize and to re-emphasize, to hammer home into the hearts and minds of men, the greatest, most important truth and fact in all history, that Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Mary, is also the Son of God; that He is indeed "God of God, Light of Light, Very God of Very God; Begotten, not made; Being of one substance with the Father; By whom all things were made; Who for us men and for our salvation came down from heaven, And was incarnate by the Holy Ghost of the Virgin Mary, And was made man."

Why? Because of the love in God's heart for wayward man. We complain that God permits sin and wickedness in the world, war and pestilence and famine, but at least God had the grace to come down from heaven and dwell among us in the world He had made. For, "God so loved the world, that He gave His only-begotten Son, to the end that all that believe in Him shall not perish, but have everlasting life."

He came to teach us the relationship of God to man, and of man to God, and of man's proper relationship to his fellow man. Man's scientific knowledge has increased by amazing and terrible strides. Continents are crossed in hours. The oceans and mountains are no longer barriers to travel. We fly through the air. We navigate under the sea. Our voices are carried around the earth in the space of a split second. We are able to gaze out beyond the stars, and now we stand in awe and terror before the discovery that we can tap and unleash natural forces of energy and power. Man now stands in the unenviable and awful position where he may blast himself into eternity.

But do we know any more about the nature of God than did the men who lived a thousand years ago? Have we concerned ourselves a great deal about our relationship to God? At a time when the world has shrunk in upon itself until it is a very small world; when what happens in Moscow is of immediate and terrible concern to men in Berlin, London, Washington and Tokyo, and of concern to generations yet unborn, do we know any more about man's proper relationship to his fellow man than did the men of the Middle Ages? It may be doubted that we do. We have learned to do everything under heaven but to take thought of heaven itself. We have learned to do everything on earth except to live at peace with our fellow men.

The world cries out for prophets of Christ, men of God, who can speak with authority and conviction concerning God and the things pertaining to God's Kingdom, men who know and believe and preach Christ the Saviour of the world, one who knows God because he is God, one who knows man because he is perfect man, one who knows all about our proper relationship to God and man, one who knows all about faith and hope and charity, about truth and righteousness, about life today and Life Eternal, because he lived and died and rose to live again and forever.

We are called to speak with conviction about the Church, to declare that in spite of our unhappy divisions, the Church is One, in that it has one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of us all.

We are called to declare that the Church is Holy, though men will challenge us by pointing out the Church's frailties and failures. It is holy because it is the handiwork, not of men, but of God, "I will build my Church", He said. And it is holy because God's Holy Spirit dwells in it and in the hearts and minds of its people, to guide it, to give it purpose, to enable it to fulfill its task on earth, that it may be a Kingdom of Righteousness here and a Kingdom of Triumphant Glory in the world to come. It is the Living Church of the Living God.

We are called to declare that the Church is Catholic, broad in its interests, in its charity and sympathy, universal, holding earnestly the Faith for all time, in all countries, and for all people; established by Christ Himself that it might carry His Gospel to all the world.

We are called to declare that the Church is Apostolic, continuing steadfastly in the Apostles' doctrine and fellowship, teaching, preaching and serving men under an authority granted us, not by men, but by the Son of God Himself.

We are prophets sent to call our people to rejoice in the communion of the Saints, to thank God that He has promised to forgive us our sins, to declare the resurrection of the body, and our belief in Life Everlasting.

Because He lives, we shall live also. We must use the age-old Easter message over and over again; that He has not gone away simply that He may escape the trials and difficulties of this world, but, as He said, "I go that I may prepare a place for you, and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." That is the promise and prophecy that will bring comfort to troubled hearts.

We cannot be reeds shaken by the wind, prophets unsure and unwise, preaching and teaching one thing today and strange doctrines tomorrow, to the confusion and despair of our people, but prophets who know what we believe, men who preach with conviction, no matter how poorly, the things we have seen and heard concerning God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Spirit, His Church, His love, the life we have in Him now, and our Life in Him which is Eternal.

Men will not expect us to do miracles, but they will expect us to be good and faithful priests. "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you and ordained you." Let us remember that. Let us remember that we stand before His altars as His priests, chosen and ordained to speak and to act in His name, to administer the sacraments and to perform the rites and services of His Church, the most holy and sacred of all vocations, carrying with it high privileges and solemn responsibilities.

As priests of His Church we are pledged to conform to the "doctrine, discipline and worship" of that branch of His Church in which it is our privilege to serve. Let us serve with loyalty. Let us administer the sacraments and read the services in strictest accordance with the Book of Common Prayer. No priest, no bishop, has the right to tamper with the Book of Common Prayer, to add to it, to take from it, to revise it, to enrich it, or to tamper with it in any way. It is not personal property; it belongs to the whole Church. We are not independent, freelance preachers but priests living under law and discipline. These sacraments and services and sacred rites are the heritage of us all, and all of us owe undivided loyalty to them as they are found in the Book of Common Prayer.

We are pledged to be diligent in prayers and in reading the Holy Scriptures, diligent to frame and fashion our own selves and our families according to the doctrine of Christ and to make both ourselves and them wholesome examples and patterns to the flock of Christ, to maintain and set forward quietness and peace and love among all Christian people and to obey our bishop.

God grant us strength and power to do these things, and that we may have clean hearts and hands as we stand before His altars to bring to His people the sacraments of His Church and to pronounce absolution and blessing in God's name.

We are not expected to do miracles, but we are expected to be pastors to our people. "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? Lord, thou knowest that I love thee. Feed my sheep." The measure of our love and loyalty to Christ and His Church is shown by the love we have for His people committed to our care. Few of us can expect to be great prophets and preachers. Few of us can expect to be great priests and saints, but it is within the reach and power of us all to be acceptable pastors to our people, if only we have the grace and virtues of love and compassion and humility.

When we shall have finished our ministry and stand at the point from which we may look back along the years, and see the way by which we have come, I am sure that the thing which will give us the greatest gladness and satisfaction will not be the memory of brilliant sermons we have preached, nor the times we have been privileged to administer the sacraments and to read the services of the Church in some great cathedral, nor will men remember and honor us for these things, but the thing in our ministry which will give us the greatest joy and fullest satisfaction will be the memory of the hours spent as a pastor to our people. What a wonderful opportunity and what a fearful responsibility it is to have men and women, boys and girls, come to us for counsel and advice on as many subjects as there are interests and needs in human hearts; to counsel a boy about his schooling, to talk with a girl about the young man she is to marry, to sit down with a couple whose home may be broken unless we can persuade and point out to them a better way, to serve on community committees of a hundred sorts, to sit at the bedside of one who will soon go to the Father's House, and to know what to say to him, and to the loved ones who must be left behind; these are but a few of the daily experiences in the life of any pastor. God grant us sympathy and compassion, rare wisdom and understanding and the love we so sorely need as we go about the task of feeding His flock.

John did no miracle. Neither are we called to do miracles. We ask not that we be great or glorified, but only that we be permitted to serve Christ and His Church. We are called to be prophets, priests and pastors. God grant that as His prophets we may not be as reeds shaken by the wind, tossed to and fro by every strange doctrine, but men of conviction, speaking boldly as He ought to speak, calling men to repent and to follow Him who died for us upon the Cross. Grant us not that we may wear soft clothing and be rectors in comfortable parishes, not that we may be pleased and proud to wear the rich robes and vestments as priests of God, but that we may have clean hearts and hands, that we may be fit to stand before His altars and minister to His people and pronounce absolution and blessing in His name; and, that He may give us the compassion and love of souls we shall need as shepherds of His flock, so many of whom wander and are lost in a troubled world.

Wordsworth and Freud, Or The Theology of the Unconscious

Commencement Address: May 26, 1948, General Theological Seminary

By FREDERICK ALBERT POTTLE, Ph. D., LL. D.,

Professor of English in Yale University and Member of Board of Trustees of the Seminary.

It is, I assume, expected of a Commencement speaker that he should admonish or counsel the class whose final exercise he prolongs; otherwise there seems little excuse for him. If I had given this address twenty years ago, I should have been at no loss for counsel or reproof. I had then not only some clearly defined notions as to what was wrong with the clerical profession, but I had also some equally clear notions as to remedial measures. Increasing age, though it has made me more callous, has not changed very much my impression that clergymen, by and large, are an inefficient lot. But when I ask myself the question, "Are they less efficient, by and large, than college teachers?" I cannot honestly say, "Yes, they are." If priests and college professors were to exchange roles tomorrow, I should not expect to see marked improvement on either side. The fact is that in some professions the limit of possible efficiency is low. The limit of efficiency in steam engines of the piston-cylinder type is low, and engineers are keenly aware of the fact. But they do not scold the piston-cylinder engine. They know that in that indispensable mechanism only a fraction of the heat can be converted into work. Education (and the priest's function is in large part educational) is, and will always remain, a very wasteful process. I long since came to the conclusion that though in education one must always be alert to the advisability of change, one should seldom and perhaps never assert that a proposed change will make the process better in any absolute sense. Rather, one should make changes in the process in order to keep it as good as it used to be. It is the part of charity to assume that, though the world is, and always has been, in a very bad way, priests by and large are doing in the circumstances about as well as any one except a prophet or an apostle has a right to expect. The things that are wrong with the clergy were wrong in the days of the New Testament, and were then authoritatively discussed.

Yet on such an occasion as this I should not like to make a purely secular address. If possible, I should like to find a topic that provides an opportunity for original speculation, a topic that is interesting to me and that might be interesting to you. I have the best chance of finding such a topic in that area in which our studies overlap—the area of theology. Professors of English seldom study theology systematically and thoroughly, but they cannot escape some knowledge of it, for English literature from Caedmon to Auden is pervaded with theology, some of it presented in a very explicit fashion. Teachers of literature generally feel that in the classroom they should develop theology only so far as it illuminates the literature under discussion, but a teacher of English who is also a Christian believer is likely to find himself outside the classroom occasionally pondering the poems he teaches as a sort of Scripture: that is, he finds himself exploring their theology not merely to see whether it is orthodox, but also in the hope of discovering there useful extensions of theological knowledge. I shall hand on to you a speculation of this sort that I had the other day in reading Wordsworth.

At the beginning of the last book of The Prelude Wordsworth introduces a majestic figure which he clearly intends to serve both as climax to and summary of his long account of the development of a poet's mind from infancy to maturity. The figure, as one would expect, is a recollection of a natural scene. He and a friend, accompanied by a guide, were ascending Mt. Snowdon one summer night so as to see the sunrise from the summit. The night was close, warm, and dripping—the clouds dense and low-hung, threatening rain. Wordsworth was panting up through the mist with his eyes bent downward, to brighten,

When at my feet the ground appear'd
And with a step or two seem'd brighter still;
Nor had I time to ask the cause of this,
For instantly a Light upon the turf
Fell like a flash: I looked about, and lo!
The Moon stood naked in the Heavens, at height Immense above my head, and on the shore
I found myself of a huge sea of mist,
Which, meek and silent, rested at my feet:
A hundred hills their dusky backs upheaved
All over this still Ocean, and beyond
Far, far beyond, the vapours shot themselves
In headlands, tongues, and promontory shapes
Into the Sea, the real Sea, that seem'd
To dwindle and give up its majesty,
Usurp'd upon as far as sight could reach.
Meanwhile, the Moon look'd down upon this show
In single glory, and we stood, the mist Touching our very feet; and from the shore
At distance not the third part of a mile
Was a blue chasm; a fracture in the vapour,
A deep and gloomy breathing-place through which Mounted the roar of waters, torrents, streams
Innumerable, roaring with one voice.
The universal spectacle throughout
Was shaped for admiration and delight,
Grand in itself alone, but in that breach Through which the homeless voice of waters rose,
That dark deep thoroughfare, had Nature lodg'd
The Soul, the Imagination of the whole.

A meditation rose in me that night
Upon the lonely mountain when the scene
Had pass'd away, and it appear'd to me
The perfect image of a mighty Mind,
Of one that feeds upon infinity,
That is exalted by an underpresence,
The sense of God, or whatso'er is dim
Or vast in its own being.

What was it in this impressive scene that made it seem to Wordsworth "the perfect image of a mighty mind"? Partly, as he goes on to say, because in its calmness, unity, and harmony it illustrated the power of mind to dominate and transform sense-experience. Fundamentally, however, because it furnished, as no other natural scene in his experience ever had, a symbol of the division of the mind into conscious and unconscious levels. All the expanse above the mist, all the area bathed in quiet moonlight, is the conscious mind; all the expanse below, and especially that part of it on which attention was fixed by the rift in the vapor—that "blue chasm," that "deep and gloomy breathing-place," "that dark deep thoroughfare"—is the unconscious mind.

It always surprises us when we find poets showing their awareness of facts which scientists did not get around to mention until long afterwards. It should cause no surprise. The facts on which such a theory as Freud's is based have always been observable; it is only the theory or hypothesis advanced to explain the facts which is novel. At any rate, we do not have to rely merely on this passage for evidence that Wordsworth recognized a conscious and an unconscious mind. The concept is implied over and over in the fragments of his unfinished magnum opus. One thinks of the lines in the first book of The Prelude:

1. The Prelude, XIII. 36-73, version of 1805.

The mind of man is fram'd even like the breath
And harmony of music. There is a dark
Invisible workmanship that reconciles
Discordant elements, and makes them move
In one society.

Or these in the fourth book of The Excursion:

If indeed there be
An all-pervading Spirit, upon whom
Our dark foundations rest . . .

"Dark", as used here and elsewhere by Wordsworth in connection with the mind, clearly means the same thing as Frued's "unconscious".

The really novel and important thing about his great symbol of the human mind is the joy and confidence with which the contemplation of the dark portion of it fills him. It is not generally so. The abyss, the deep, the pit are, and have been in all mythologies, recurring symbols of that part of our being which is not open to introspection. But in general man's visions of the abyss have been nightmares thronged with images of loathing and horror:

The very deep did rot: O Christ!
That ever this should be!
Yea, slimy things did crawl with legs
Upon the slimy sea.

It has been maintained of late that one reason for the overpowering effect which Coleridge's fantastic tale has upon us is that its images at certain points, though perfectly appropriate to the narrative, derive additional and special potency from the fact that they are universal and primordial symbols of our sense of guilt and shame and our yearning for a re-birth. Whether that is true or not—whether, that is, Coleridge's vision of the rotting deep is actually or only accidentally a symbol of the unconscious mind—that vision can be taken as the truest and most expressive figure for what most people feel when they force themselves to look deep down into themselves. It was not Freud who made the stuff of our buried experience seem like slime from the deep. Freud only insisted that it was sometimes important to turn up the slime, and invented a technique for doing it. At the bottom of the abyss in our popular mythology is slime. To drop the figure, the natural feelings of man toward the unconscious are generally those of fear, shame, and loathing. For most people the unconscious is the domain of immodesty and impurity; for religious people it is the domain of the Powers of Darkness, the flesh and the devil.

At the bottom of the Freudian abyss is slime, too, but it is very important to realize that the psycho-analyst's slime is a different thing from the slime of popular mythology. Underlying and shaping the popular symbolism are the emotions of fear and mistrust, of physical and moral revulsion. Slime is associated with reptiles; it is cold, clammy, unpleasant to the touch; it is unclean, filthy. Freudianism, being natural science, or at least being the invention of a well-trained scientist who strove to base his entire system on the naturalistic assumptions of modern physical science, contains (so far as it is consistent) no moral or theological judgments whatever, and admits no emotions of physical or moral revulsion. When you go from popular mythology to genuine Freudianism you step out of the jungle into the laboratory, from a world of extravagant emotion into an aseptic world where things are neither loved nor feared but merely identified and manipulated. Slime is at the bottom of the Freudian abyss, not because slime is to the Freudian scientist, as to the layman, unpleasant, but because slime is the ultimate symbol of what, though living, is shapeless and inchoate. The Freudian deep shows you not merely your bestial inheritance; if you scan it patiently, you will be pushed relentlessly back to that slimy margin where life is barely to be distinguished from inanimate matter. And in that deep you will never find God.

Freud can properly be blamed for the atheistical prejudice which he occasionally obtrudes, for his sometimes explicit assumption that his system exhausts truth and that theology has no more than subjective validity. He can properly be blamed because such attitudes are personal and not authorized by his method. But as Christian believers we have no right to object to his rigorous naturalism. The stage of human thinking which we have now reached is one of discontinuity, and I myself do not expect that the discontiunity is one which will be resolved in the future. Our scientific systems, no less than our theological systems, must be regarded as ways of apprehending truth. But history has amply demonstrated that to preserve their usefulness and integrity our scientific systems must exclude first causes. We should not expect in a naturalistic psychology to find God at the bottom of the abyss, or, for that matter, to find any bottom to the abyss. When you invoke mechanism and a rigorous chain of causation, you should not expect to escape from mechanism to a creator.

It may be that Freud's system will be discarded or violently revised. It has no established connection with physiology; its superstructure is almost too poetical or mythological to be convincing as science; it places an emphasis upon sex that seems fanatical and even obsessive. But let us be clear on two points. If Freud's system is displaced or revised, it will not be because of the sneers of theologians who have made no attempt to understand it. It will be because of the labor of other scientists. And the system which finally emerges, whether Freud's or another's, will not be a grain more comforting to the Christian believer than Freud's system as it now stands. If there is not already a coherent and practical naturalistic theory of the unconscious, there is going to be one.

I suggest that instead of patronizing and sneering at Freud, Christian theologians ought to be hard at work at this moment on an authoritative Christian theology of the unconscious. There is no tendency in the whole history of the Church more discouraging than its slowness and ungraciousness in coming to terms with great scientific advances: with the helio-centric cosmology of Copernicus, with the evolutionary theory of Darwin. By now it should be clear that the greatest shock to Christian faith in such conflicts comes not from the genuine difficulty of managing both naturalism and Christian dogma, but from the confident and ignorant pronouncements of Christian teachers which they, or their successors, have to retreat from later. A Christian theology of the unconscious would of course be derived primarily from the historic deposit of faith, but the insights of poets, and particularly of religious or prophetic poets, might well be considered where they did not clearly contradict that deposit. For that reason I point to Wordsworth.

The sense of serenity and confidence which the best poetry of Wordsworth never fails to transmit is of course not in itself proof that the theology which that poetry assumes is one that a Christian can seriously adopt. Most readers would consider such a caveat quaintly orthodox, for to them any poetry which mentions God frequently in a reverent manner is Christian. But one cannot overlook the fact that the Prelude, as originally written, did not contain a single specifically Christian reference:

no hint of the Trinitarian definition of the godhead, no hint of Christ as Savior, no hint of the Incarnation, no hint of the Atonement, no hint of any dogma that would give pause to a devout Jew. On the other hand there is no explicit denial of any Christian dogma; and heresy, as some one has well said, more often consists in denial than in affirmation. It is quite possible to advance a theology that is Christian without being specifically or exclusively Christian.

There appear in fact to be two reasons why the careful Christian should be a little wary of the theology of Wordsworth's earlier and better poetry. The first is that Wordsworth was then an active mystic, and that the mystics have always been inclined to emphasize the theological short-cuts which they have found but which simply are not on the map for ordinary people. Mystics of all faiths tend to melt dogma down into an undistinguishing pantheism. The second and probably more compelling reason for scanning his theology somewhat scrupulously is that at the time of writing The Prelude he appears to have been to a considerable extent a Rousseauist. Though he nowhere, I think, denies the dogma of Original Sin and in his later writings quite specifically asserts it, the temper of his earlier and better writing seems to derive from a firm conviction of the complete original goodness of human nature. It may be that that conviction underlies and is inseparable from his great consoling figure of the human mind. But it is possible that if the factor of Divine Grace is explicitly added, so that his mighty mind becomes a regenerated mind, it can still stand.

I do not know and shall have to leave the problem to you to decide. But if the Wordsworthian view can be adopted as it is or can endure the revision necessary to make it acceptable, I can see very great values in it. It gets God into the dark side of our being as well as into the light. It is perhaps an unfortunate consequence of the imagery of light in St. Paul's epistles and in the Fourth Gospel that we see only what is not God or what is opposed to God in that portion of our experience which is dark or unconscious. Look back at Wordsworth's figure. He does not for a moment think that the scene would be better if the mist were dispelled and the moonlight shone to the bottom of the abyss. Of the two halves of the vision he feels the illuminated area to be actually the less important. For him the most wonderful satisfactory portion of the scene is the dark chasm. Why? Because, as he said earlier in the poem,

Our destiny, our nature, and our home
Is with infinitude, and only there;
With hope it is, hope that can never die,
Effort, and expectation, and desire,
And something evermore about to be.

And the infinity upon which the mind feeds (here is the prime Wordsworthian touch) is not merely sought upwards in the starry heavens; it is sought even more eagerly and joyfully in the abyss, that is, in

Whatsoe'r is dim
Or vast in (the mind's) own being.

The value of this is that it parallels and supplants Freud just at the point where, as Christians, we wish to supplant him. A naturalistic science of the unconscious, combined with the records of cultural anthropology, shows us in a very persuasive way that, whatever our conscious minds may do in the way of formulating, refining, and testing our beliefs, our sense of God comes from no conscious and rational operation of the mind, but from the dark and instinctive areas of our mental experience. Quite true, says Wordsworth, and it is no illusion. God is there in the dark. We should not doubt the reality of that underpresence nor attempt to exercise it; we should allow ourselves to be exalted by it.

In short, I should hope that a sound Christian theology of the unconscious would lead to a more hopeful definition of the scope there both of chance and of the powers of evil than the ordinary pious person is likely to construct for himself on the basis of his own private mythology and what he has heard about Freudianism. His private mythology is no more to be accepted without revision than are the theologies of children and savages; it is, in fact, much the same sort of thing. Freud's mythology is a different matter. I hope you will not think I am trying to be facetious when I say that one of the most impressive things about it to the religious mind is its sober, patient, "scientific" discovery and documentation of the fact of universal perversity—what the theologian calls Original Sin. A proper recognition of human depravity is something no sound theology of the unconscious will deplore, but surely the whole point in the dogma of Original Sin is to know when to stop. It may be because the evidence from which the Freudian theory is derived is so completely pathological, it may be merely the shock to literary decorum caused by its monotonous sexual emphasis, but I get from the Freudian writings an impression of total depravity unmatched anywhere outside of the literature of Calvinism. The theology implied in Wordsworth's figure is no doubt too optimistic, too uncomplicated, but surely he must be right in his intuition that God dwells in the unconscious mind and that, unless we choose otherwise, it is His territory and not that of the Potentates of the dark Present. Does not any other view commit us to that Gnostic or Manichean dualism which Christianity firmly repudiated at its very beginning?

My speculation is now, I hope, clear. I am not competent to carry it further, but I hope that some of you are.

ST. MARK'S ENLARGING FACILITIES

Richmond, Va.—St. Mark's Church, the Rev. Frederick J. Warnecke, rector, has let the contract for rebuilding a portion of its parish hall. This is being done to modernize and enlarge its facilities. The cost will be about $25,000.

This is the first step in a program of advance designed particularly to care for St. Mark's Sunday School, the enrollment of which is now above 300.

Secretary Marshall And "The Churchman"

In a free land, it is the perogative of Secretary Marshall to refuse to accept the annual award of our New York contemporary, "The Churchman." Remembering, however, that President Franklin D. Roosevelt, Wendell Willkie, Mrs. Roosevelt and General Eisenhower have been among those who accepted this award in past years, and that it is given for the promotion of good will and understanding among people, we would expect that the reasons for Secretary Marshall's refusal would be deeply cogent. This is especially true since we are informed that he agreed to accept the award as long ago as last fall.

The reasons actually given are not only embarrassingly weak, but subject to serious consideration by all of us. The Secretary first of all said that he suddenly found out that "The Churchman" was not an official or even a semi-official magazine of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Since "The Churchman" in its long history of more than a hundred years has never claimed to be "official" this is no startling disclosure. Incidentally, we trust that our own readers fully understand that "The Southern Churchman" is entirely independent and unofficial also!

But the more serious reason given by the Secretary is that "The Churchman" has published editorials which "extend far into the realm of politics and international affairs." The implication is that such matters are not the province of Church magazines. Against any such attitude, we vigorously protest! Let us be clear on the point involved. The Secretary has the right of any gentleman to refuse to accept any award from anyone. Further, he has every right to differ with the editorial viewpoint expressed by "The Churchman." "The Southern Churchman" differs greatly with much of the viewpoint of "The Churchman". But we assert that any Christian must be concerned with "the realm of politics and international affairs." Any religious magazine of any denomination which does not consider such affairs has failed in its trust to the Lord Jesus Christ who taught us to pray that God's will should be done on earth as well as in heaven. Indeed, American democracy is founded upon the principle that all of us shall be concerned about our government and its attitudes! God save America from that day when Christians are not concerned about politics and international affairs!

Need For Advanced Theological Training

From Dean Lawrence Rose's Annual Report to the Trustees of the General Theological Seminary

Effectively as all our seminaries do their work of theological education and practical training for the normal parochial ministry, the Church's life cannot but be increasingly impoverished in relation to other institutions in our society so long as there is no center where considerable numbers of young men are stimulated to serious advanced study and research upon the basis of their broad theological foundation. I see three general areas in which the need for men who have engaged in such further scholarly pursuits can justly be described as critical.

The first is the Church's seminaries themselves. The number of men who have earned in course this Seminary's D. Th. in the past fifty years is ridiculously small. And one effect is to be seen in the lack of any reservoir of men from among whom our Seminaries can readily fill even the small number of teaching positions that open up from year to year. We are hard put to it to man our eleven divinity schools without robbing one another in a manner that works harm to the whole program of theological education. And the lack of resources to enable young men to continue or return to their studies, and to guide them in special fields, is the main reason for our default.

The second area is the general field of education in our country. Our educational system is dominated by no consistent purpose or philosophy. The Church has largely retreated from it and it is not to be wondered at in the least that it is so seriously weighted against Christian purposes and the maintenance of Christian convictions. College chaplains do good work, but they very seldom have academic standing and their influence must be exerted ab extra upon minds that are being formed in secular moulds generally inhospitable, to say the least, to Christian impressions. I firmly believe that there is no solution in sight, no redemption of our educational process, short of the qualification of men in Holy Orders with all that that means in personal commitment and theological training to join the teaching staffs of our colleges and universities and here and there to compete, in their own fields, with those who are teaching philosophy, the various sciences or history. Recognized competence in any of the "secular" intellectual disciplines on the part of those who are also theologians and priests of the Church always has gained for the Christian faith an attentive hearing which it cannot otherwise command. Here is a missionary area and responsibility which call for generous fellowship grants to able men who might be prepared to make the sacrifice.

The third sphere which calls insistently for post-graduate training of some few men in steady succession is that of technical specialization in the various social services whose functioning is so closely related to one side of the Church's task in the world. The clergy are often called upon to serve on executive boards, and sometimes as actual heads of agencies for family case-work, social welfare, education, and institutional care. By and large they do so as amateurs, and if they gain technical competence, they must do so without the advantages that the professional schools afford. There would be great gain to the Church and to society if the ranks of the clergy contained a certain number of experts, with the best training the country offers, in such techniques as those of education, social service, sociology and penology, to name only a few.

The Individual and The Modern World

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

A young actor, Garry Davis, who was a bomber-pilot during the war, has taken the unusual step of renouncing his American citizenship to become a "citizen of the world." He seeks the status of a stateless person and hopes to go to Germany to help rebuild some of the devastated areas.

"After all, I'm responsible for some of the damage there," he said.

The young man's father reacted as most fathers and most people of "common-sense" would. He cabled his son: "You are no doubt attempting to dramatize the world situation but I believe you will defeat your purposes and nullify whatever usefulness you may have for the attainment of your objectives."

The father is probably right. It is not likely that the son's Quixotic venture will change current trends in world history. Common sense is bound to condemn, or be indifferent to, such highly romantic efforts.

Yet one is bound to respond with a deep sense of sympathy and gratitude to this young man. He casts a vivid light upon the tragedy of our age. More particularly he illumines the plight of the individual of sensitive conscience, caught in the vast mechanisms of conflict and destruction in our day.

Many a young man quieted his uneasy conscience during the last war by the hope that the destruction, of which he was the agent, would somehow be the prelude of a better day. It cannot be a matter of moral unconcern to drop bombs upon the great cities of Europe. The experience must have left its mark upon the soul of many a young airman. The peaceful future which was to sanctify his action failed to materialize.

Mr. Davis' father is right of course in his belief that this kind of individual action will not bring peace to our world. Nations as nations and peoples as peoples will have to solve the destiny of our precarious common life. But individual action and opinion seem so impotent in the counsels of the nations, that one can quite understand the desire of a young veteran, with a burdened conscience, to strike out on his own.

Nor is there reason to suppose that such individual acts are futile. They help to raise the level of spiritual and moral awareness in a whole civilization. Quite possibly young Mr. Davis' venture may mitigate the hatreds and fears which corrupt the life of so many of our generation.

Individuals are enmeshed in vast common patterns of life. But we must not emphasize our common responsibilities and destinies too much. We remain individuals, finally responsible only to God. Only the divine mercy can eventually overcome the common guilt in which we are involved; and only the divine love can fully appreciate the individual stirrings of conscience.

Meditations In His Presence

"Inasmuch . . ." and "Offerings . . . Alms and Oblations." (From the Offertory Sentences and the Rubrics.)

One of the chief claims of the Christian religion is that every man is equal in God's sight, and that a Christian must respond equally to every call. Jesus illustrated this in the stories of the Good Samaritan, the Widow's Mite, the Publican praying in the Temple; He also kept it to the fore when He said, "suffer the little children to come unto Me" and "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of these least."

In this last saying Jesus made the claim that He was identified with every known need and person, no matter how insignificant or lowly. The lesson is clear. We show our love for Christ by the way we treat the unfortunate least in our society. "The gift without the giver is bare" indeed, and service to another without the Spirit of Christ behind it might as well be done by the professional social worker. All over the world, from Norway to China, these least have a claim upon Christians, whether they be pagan or heathen. What we would do for Him we must lovingly do for them—here or wherever they are.

It seems the word "Inasmuch" is all tied up with three words which appear in the rubrics following the long list of offertory sentences: offerings, alms and oblations. We often use the first two as synonyms, while the exact meaning of the third usually confuses or escapes us. A brief definition for each: 1. By "offerings" we mean gifts, presented to God as an act of worship, usually money at a service; either a tithe, a pledge, or an over and above gift. Through the centuries many other meanings have become attached to the word. Chief among them being something offered as an atonement for sin. Many gifts are still received by the Church which are actually a money token, significant as an attempt to atone for some sin in the past. 2. By "alms" is usually meant gifts to be used for the relief of the needy, whether of money, or of food and clothing. 3. By "oblations" may be meant any gift or offering, especially at the Holy Communion; but more specifically it means the full giving of self, soul and body, for His service.

What the Church reminds us of here is that everyone can make an offering which will be acceptable to God, provided it is given as a response to His prior love for us.

THE MAN WHO DID NOT GROW OLD

By the Very Rev. Corwin C. Roach,

Dean of Bexley Hall

Every one likes to feel young and look young. There are very few people, indeed, who will not regard it as a pleasant compliment to be told that they look as young as they did a year, or even ten years ago.

Many people, on the contrary, make a feverish effort to keep looking young and in the process enlist a host of artificial aids. The secret of youth, however, is elusive and tantalizing. Yet the Bible tells us about one man (Deut. 34:7) who lived to a ripe old age without benefit of these modern rejuvenators, and still managed to keep young. "His eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated."

The man was Moses, and he, certainly, had not led a pampered or cushioned life. As a young man he had fled as an outlaw to the desert of Midian and there lived the arduous life of a nomad and shepherd. On returning to Egypt, he had defied the Pharaoh and led the Hebrews for forty anxious years through the grim wilderness to the south and east of Palestine.

Moses had lived a hard, full life and still he died a young man. But that is the real secret of lasting youth. Its mysterious formula is not to be found in the waters of a magic fountain, or in the advertisements in our physical culture or beauty magazines, nor even in the lotions and compounds advertised on the radio.

To keep young, we must, like Moses, keep at the task which God has given us. As we forget ourselves in a great, engrossing work, God will remember us. He will give us the strength and vigor, the zeal and enthusiasm to carry on. We are as young as our interests.

The Isaian poet has given us this secret of continuing youth. "Even the youths shall faint and grow weary, and the young men shall fall completely but they that wait for the Lord shall renew their strength, they shall mount up with wings as eagles, they shall run and not be weary, they shall walk and not faint."—From The Episcopal Church Times.

To God belong the East and the West. Therefore whithersoever ye turn, is the face of God. Verily, God is all-pervading, all-knowing.—Koran 2.109.

I HAVE ARRIVED!

For a long time I was talked about, but one day I arrived. My parents did not realize that I understood them when they talked to me. When they fed me I felt their secure and loving arm around me. They seemed to know when I needed food and attention. Gradually other faces looked into mine. They seemed to be happy ones and to like me. I liked to look at them. Many times I would hear my mother singing to me as she fixed me comfortably. I liked this, too. Sometimes both mother and father would look at me in the crib and murmur prayers.

Then one day I remember being all dressed up. It was the longest dress I had ever had on. Everyone seemed to admire the dress more than me. Later I found out when my brother was baptized, it was one that several generations had used for a Baptismal Dress. Many friends, grandparents, and my mother and father, went to a large building with me. There was my friend, the Rev. Mr. Jones. I knew his face but not his name then. He had been to see me before.

There was a hush and we were around a strange object. I did not mind as I knew the person holding me and somehow I sensed something special was to happen. Sometimes adults do not realize that we small things sense their moods and tones of voice. Suddenly I was in Mr. Jones' arm and he looked so kindly and firm. Some water came on me and I felt something specially on my forehead. Later I learned this was when I received my Christian name; I became a member of a larger family; my name was written in Heaven.

That night my mother and father seemed very happy. They talked about trying harder than ever to teach me how to be a Christian.

As I grew each day I learned about love. I knew that they cared for me with tenderness and firmness.

People who came to our home seemed to enjoy themselves. I liked most of them. Those who tried too hard to fuss over me I found hard to like. I knew mother did not like it but she tried to be nice so I did. Somehow children know when their parents try and when they do not. They learn this early also.

It would be wonderful if all parents had prayers with their children, played with them and tried to help each other. I hope every child may have a Christian name, too.

And All the Company of Heaven

One might suppose that having named angels and archangels there would be no occasion to go further in the list of angelic beings. On the other hand why should we not feel that God may have a great corps of spiritual beings to carry out His wishes. Anyone who is big enough to operate solar systems with the precision of machine tools may surely be at the head of an organization that would include more than two ranks of workers.

In fact this thought comes to us through the beautiful words of Christ in the tenth verse of the eighteenth chapter of the Gospel according to St. Matthew when he warns the world against ill treatment of children, saying, "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of My Father which is in heaven." If each one of us has a guardian angel, as we surely must have, according to our Saviour's teaching it really would mean "a company of heaven."

One does not hear very much about the angels these days, and they would seem to have retired into the background of theological thought; but if we take the Bible at all seriously one is bound to believe as much in angels, as in God, for they appear in important places, and with very essential duties all the way from the book of Genesis to the book of the Revelation.

In early Christian writings we find that Dionysius the Areopagite divided the heavenly host into nine groups as follows: "Seraphim, Cherubim, Thrones, Dominations, Virtues, Powers, Principedoms, Archangels and Angels." He does not specify the duties of each, but we can assume that God's immense work would need the help of all these heavenly beings.

Furthermore we must remember that at one time all of us were "little ones," and there is no reason to suppose that our angels who "do always behold the face" will desert us just because we grow up.

R. CARY MONTAGUE.

Annual Convention

Harrisburg, Pa.—The forty-fourth annual convention of the Diocese of Harrisburg, meeting in St. Stephen's Cathedral, May 27 and 28, unanimously voted to petition General Convention next year, the 400th anniversary of our Book of Common Prayer, to restore the word "Holy" to the Nicene Creed and to print it in all subsequent editions of the Book of Common Prayer. This action was taken on motion of the Rev. Charles E. Berghaus.

The diocese plans an appropriate observance of the 400th anniversary of the Book of Common Prayer, in connection with the annual convention in 1949. The Bishop appointed a committee to make plans for this observance.

In his annual address, Bishop Heistand called for definite and positive affirmation of the Christian Faith in the present tense and confused condition of the world; a realistic and dynamic evangelism; unity and cooperation of all groups in the Church, and loyalty to the Book of Common Prayer.

Addressing a mass meeting in the Cathedral the first evening Dr. Clark G. Kuebler, president of Ripen College, stressed the need of a revitalized Church in which every member is an evangelist. He declared that the basic struggle in the world today is not economic or social, but moral and religious. He predicted that in the next two decades most of the western world will turn to one of two religions, either to the godless worship of the State as in Communism or to the religion of Christianity.

The work of the American Bible Society was described in a brief address by the Rev. Frank R. Wilson.

Mount Calvary Church, Camp Hill, was admitted into union as an incorporated parish.

A message of greeting was received by telegram from retired Bishop Hunter Wyatt-Brown.

Bishop Barnwell Will Attend Lambeth and Amsterdam

Savannah, Ga.—Bishop Barnwell will leave Savannah about June 1 for New York where he will be joined by his brother, the Rev. Carlton Barnwell, D. D., rector of St. Paul's Church, Lynchburg, Va., and together will sail direct for Rotterdam. For two weeks they will be traveling through Holland, Normandy, and over the battlefields. Dr. Barnwell will then return home and Bishop Barnwell will proceed to London to attend Lambeth Conference in London until the middle of August. From there he will go to Amsterdam, Holland, to attend the World Conference of Churches for ten days and then to London where he has been invited to be the principal speaker at the 250th anniversary of the founding of the Society for Christian Knowledge. This Society assisted General Oglethorpe, founder of the colony of Georgia, with missionary work in the colony and it is quite appropriate that the Bishop of Georgia has been selected to address the Anniversary Meeting of the Society. Bishop Barnwell will sail for home in September.

Chapel In St. Michael's Consecrated

Savannah, Ga.—A beautiful little chapel in St. Michael's Church was consecrated by Bishop Barnwell on Friday evening, May 21. The Chapel was built under the direction of the rector, the Rev. Theodore Patton. The grill work was done in Savannah. Memorials include the Altar Cross, given in memory of Mrs. Georgia Ferguson Seyle, wife of Frank W. Seyle, by the family; candlesticks, in memory of Howard Hicks, who was lost in the war, by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Hicks; the Missal-Stand, in memory of Bryant Cramer, lost in the war, by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Cramer; the wrought iron screen, in memory of William Belford, by his family, and the candlelighter for Wilkie C. Browne, Jr., by friends.

Church Schools Closing

Savannah, Ga.—All the Episcopal Church Schools are closing in the next week or two. Already the attendance is falling off as, with the hot weather on us, parents, particularly "Daddy," feels called to go somewhere for the day or for the weekend. Many, however, attend a service before leaving.

Christ Church will again this summer sponsor services every Sunday morning at Savannah Beach. The services will be conducted by lay readers at 9:30 in the Town Hall, which has been most generously given for this use on Sundays.

EXPLORATORY CONFERENCE

Episcopal Urban Workers Fellowship Organized

Seabury House.—Thirty-four clergy from seventeen dioceses, together with staff members of the National Council Department of Christian Social Relations, met at Seabury House May 25-27, for an exploratory conference on the Church in Urban America. The conference was planned by the Department of Christian Social Relations with the Rt. Rev. Norman B. Nash, bishop of Massachusetts, as chairman of a committee consisting of the Rev. Messrs. Howard P. Kellett, William B. Spofford, Jr., and Almon R. Pepper. All the clergy attending the conference were nominated by their bishops.

The program centered in formal presentations by the Rev. Joseph G. Moore, Jr., of the staff of Seabury-Western Theological Seminary, who spoke on the Episcopal Church in Urban America and Church Strategy in Urban Areas, and by the Rev. Dr. Ross W. Sanderson, of the Intercouncil Committee for Field Research, New York, who opened the conference with a discussion on what is happening in Urban American and urged the development of a more ecumenical urban strategy by presenting the findings of a study of all the churches in the metropolitan area of Bridgeport, Conn.

All the men present described their local parish situation and the methods they were using to meet the opportunities. Discussion pointed up the fact that hundreds of thousands of people in urban industrial communities are unchurched and presented a great missionary opportunity. Some of these industrial areas include all the moral, social, and racial problems in exaggerated form. The conference also recognized the fact that the vast new housing areas had developed with total lack of religious facilities. These too offer a missionary opportunity. The conference called on the Church to develop vision, strategy, and plans for a dynamc attack upon these problems and opportunities.

In specific terms the conference urged that surveys be made in every metropolitan area in the Church to determine the religious and social needs of the community and not merely to perpetuate the existing but obsolete plans. The Church was called upon to train clerical leaders for work in these areas and to provide salaries and living conditions for them that were adequate; and to call upon Churchmen who are trained sociologists, social workers, nurses, and recreational leaders to make these skills available for the healing of the community and the nation.

At the final session of the conference a steering committee, consisting of the Rev. Messrs. Howard P. Kellett, chairman; Joseph G. Moore, Leland B. Henry, William B. Spofford, Jr., and H. A. Berngen, led the discussions which eventuated in the organization of the Episcopal Urban Workers Fellowship, and made plans for a two-week conference in the summer of 1949 to be held at Seabury-Western Theological Seminary. Through Dr. Pepper, the director of the Department of Christian Social Relations, the National Council was asked to provide leadership for this new movement in the Church's work.

PREPARING LITERATURE ON CHRISTIAN MARRIAGE

New York, N. Y.—The Committee on Marriage Instruction of the National Council is now proceeding to prepare the literature on Christian marriage requested by the General Convention. The Committee has collected a number of pamphlets and bibliographies which have been prepared by individuals or groups in our Church. It is the belief of the Committee that there are undoubtedly other items that have not come to its attention. The Committee would be grateful to individuals or groups who could make available copies of bibliographies or other material that they have prepared. This material should be sent to the secretary of the Committee, the Rev. Arnold Purdie, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

DR. FREEMAN COMMENCEMENT SPEAKER

Sewanee, Tenn.—Douglas Southall Freeman will be Commencement speaker at the University of the South here on June 14, according to an announcement today by Dr. Alexander Guerry, vice-chancellor and president.

RED LETTER DAY IN TULSA

Tulsa, Okla.—Trinity Sunday, May 23, was a red letter day in the history of Trinity Parish, Tulsa. On that day Bishop Casady of Oklahoma consecrated Trinity Church in the morning and St. Luke's Chapel in the evening. The preacher at the morning service was Dr. Frederic S. Fleming, rector of Trinity Parish, New York, who was also the principal speaker at a Parish banquet held the previous evening and attended by more than three hundred people. Visiting clergy who participated in the consecration services included the Rev. Dr. Rolfe P. Crum, rector of Trinity Church 1920-25,, during which period the present beautiful Gothic edifice was built.

Consecration of these two edifices marks a high point in the rectorship of the Rev. E. H. Eckel, S. T. D., who has been rector for eighteen and one-half years. During this period the debt on the Parish Church was paid off, St. Luke's Chapel was organized, the Chapel and Chapel Hall erected, and the Parish has doubled in membership.

St. Luke's Chapel was completed in 1946. It is the gift of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Lorton in memory of their son, Robert Eugene. Mr. Lorton, publisher of the Tulsa Daily World, and Mrs. Lorton are long time communicants and generous supporters of Trinity Parish.

LIBERIA'S PRESIDENT VISITS CHURCH SCHOOLS

New York, N. Y.—The President of Liberia, His Excellency William V. S. Tubman, with his suite, visited Cape Mount, according to a letter from the Rev. Packard L. Okie to the National Council.

The President and his party paid an official visit to the Church schools at Cape Mont, inspected the trade departments and physical facilities of St. John's School, visited the new hospital, and inspected the House of Bethany girls' school. At the high school President Tubman was particularly interested in the operation of the new science laboratory. He shook hands with the entire membership of the high school student body.

On the following Sunday, President Tubman and his suite worshipped in St. John's Church, where the Rev. E. Bolling Robertson preached the sermon. On Monday the President and those accompanying him had luncheon at the Mission, and the High School Glee Club entertained with music.

After leaving Cape Mount, President Tubman planned to visit the Episcopal village schools.

Bishop Bravid W. Harris has just returned from his first visit to the Holy Cross Mission at Bolahun. He went by air to Freetown, Sierra Leone, then into the interior by train, truck and on foot.

CALIFORNIA WILL BE CHURCH'S BUSIEST CENTER

New York, N. Y.—A statement received by National Council from Bishop Karl M. Block, of California, indicates the tremendous opportunities facing the Church in that area at the present time. Said the Bishop: "The Diocese is 'bursting at its seams.' We have six men in residence where there has not been such hitherto. We have recently purchased a Diocesan Ranch Center which is costing some $65,000.

"We are about to undertake the completion of the True Sunshine Mission—chapel and vicarage. There are 10,000 ex-GI wives in California, and 800 to 1,000 in Oakland, where the Mission is located. There are 600 Chinese students at the University of California in the East Bay and they have at last located at True Sunshine. The Japanese Mission also has been enlarged, as the work is growing apace. We have bought a new vicarage for St. Augustine's Negro congregation and have refurnished St. Cyprian's, and that needs to be enlarged."

With the development required by the growing population in the diocese, and the entertainment of the General Convention in 1949, Bishop Block feels that California is to be just about the Church's busiest center for some time to come.

ANNUAL COMMEMORATION, ORDER OF JAMESTOWN

The Annual Pilgrimage of Churchmen to Williamsburg and Jamestown under auspices of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew will be held this year June 19 and 20.

E. Otto N. Williams, chairman, advises that William and Mary College will accommodate 150 men and that the Rev. John Keene, rector of Christ Church, Englewood, N. J., will conduct the preparatory service at Old Bruton Church Saturday evening. He will also celebrate, with the assistance of the rector of that church, the service of Holy Communion on Jamestown Island, at the Robert Hunt Shrine, Sunday morning.

There will be a short dedicatory service of a kneeling bench in the old church to be presented by the Brotherhood through a committee of which past President Peter Forest Williams is chairman.

Large numbers of men and boys from Washington, Baltimore, Richmond and other places will be at these services, and it is expected that the accommodations will be taxed to capacity. Early reservations should be made through Mr. Williams or any member of the Brotherhood.

A MESSAGE FROM JAMESTOWN

For me, the glitter and the glint of gold,
The spoil of nations, and imperial might,
For which the peoples of the world do fight,
For which oft their sordid selves have sold,
May not be named with values fairly told,
The wealth of truth, of beauty, and of right,
The Father's love that Jesus brought to light,
The Christian message from the days of old.
To Jamestown then where came the goodly seed.
Which on these shores was planted true and strong,
By martyr's blood, and hero's valiant deed,
In love of right and hatred of the wrong,
I'll give, upon this holy day, due meed
Of praise, and pay the tribute of a song.

DEATHS

REV. J. H. DRIVING HAWK

James Henry Driving Hawk, Indian priest, died at Yankton, S. D., May 22. The funeral was at Trinity Church there on May 26. He is survived by his parents, his wife and two children.

Mr. Driving Hawk was born near Rosebud in 1913. He was baptized by the Rev. Aaron B. Clark and confirmed by Bishop W. Blair Roberts in Trinity Church, Mission, in 1924. His education was in the public school at Mission, S. D., in the Hare School in its early days, and the Santee Normal Training School at Santee, Neb.

For several years he served the Church in various lay capacities at Trinity, then was transferred as catechist to All Saints' Chapel, Ponca Creek. During this time he was studying for Holy Orders under the direction of the Rev. Paul H. Barbour, D. D. In August, 1939, he was ordained deacon and in 1941, at the Niobrara Convocation, he was ordained to the priesthood. He was then transferred to Okreek, serving there until the end of 1945. The last two years of his life were given to the people of Yankton Reservation, serving also at St. Peter's, Lake Andes, the Mission at Wagner and St. Mary's School. His last sickness cut short his work at Christmastide, 1947.

"Of all the priests whom it has ever been my privilege to know," said Dr. Barbour, "none has been lovelier, more faithful, more devoted to his people, his Church and his Master, and more deeply spiritual, than he. May God grant him eternal peace and continual growth in His love and service."

The Spirit of Nationalism

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

In Palestine a tiny nation is being born in great travail.

In South Africa the liberal statesmenship of Marshal Smuts has been repudiated and racial nationalists are coming to the fore who will sow discord not only between white man and black man but between the English speaking and the Dutch speaking portion of the population.

In Scotland the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland has passed resolutions which give qualified endorsement to the rising Scottish nationalist movement. That movement was regarded as more or less of a joke only a decade ago. It is a joke no longer. The high degree of integration of the national economy under a labor government has made the Scottish people conscious of every unique aspect of their national tradition, which tends to be obscured or outraged by overall measures of a London government.

These various contemporary manifastations of the spirit of nationalism and particularism are mentioned in one breath without the suggestion that they are all on the same moral level. Perhaps the most ominous of them is the development in South Africa. It is analogous to the rising racial fanaticism in our own country, expressed in opposition to a program of equal civil rights for all races.

The spirit of nationalism is not always destructive nor yet always creative; nor is there an absolutely clear line between what is destructive and what is creative.

The developments mentioned above are considered together as a reminder that history does not move simply from particular and limited communities to universal community, as some of our wise men assumed. There is always a strong movement in the opposite direction. Insofar as human beings are free spirits they cannot accept a partial and particular community as their final loyalty.

They hear the words "if ye love them that love ye what thanks have ye." They dream of the establishment of a parliament of man and a federation of the world. Today they are in a situation in which they will have to do more than dream of such a culmination of historical development. They will have to make it real or perish.

But insofar as human beings are finite creatures they are bound together by a consciousness of kind. Kinship was the first cement of community in primitive society. All the ages of progress have not changed the power of kinship in community building.

We need larger communities than those of our own kind; but these larger communities can never completely supplant the more intimate communities based upon common language and experience and upon particular and unique inheritances of various kinds.

The spirit of loyalty to race and nation can become very fierce and destructive. In a sense it must be suppressed But one way of preventing it from becoming fierce is to do justice to what is right and inevitable in these partial loyalties.

It was, I think, Gilbert Chesterton who put the matter succinctly in the words:

"God gave all men all earth to love;
But since our hearts are small,
Ordained one spot should prove Beloved over all."

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

St. Paul's Cathedral, London

By the Dean,

THE VERY REV. DR. W. R. MATTHEWS, K. C. V. O.

St. Paul's Cathedral is not only the great architectural glory of the City of London: it is one of the most famous buildings in the world. I suppose, therefore, that many of you have a picture in your minds of its outline. Let me recall its most striking features.

It is built in the classical style of the Renaissance, quite unlike most of our English cathedrals, which are mediæval and "gothic". I think some people who see St. Paul's for the first time, after they have seen other cathedrals, have a little difficulty in adjusting their minds to its quite different style. When they succeed in doing this, they soon recognize that St. Paul's is a great masterpiece of that school of architecture which went back for its inspiration to ancient Greece and Rome and adapted its model to the purpose of Christian worship. Most of the old cathedrals are patchwork. I do not say this disparagingly, because much of their interest and beauty arises from the fact that they bear the mark of many generations and changing taste. St. Paul's has quite a different type of appeal. It is the work of one mind—that of Sir Christopher Wren. He conceived it as one whole and he lived to carry out his great design to its triumphant conclusion.

The dominant feature of St. Paul's is the great Dome, which, with the stone Lantern and Cross and Ball above it, rises 365 feet into the air. The construction of this Dome is a most ingenious piece of work. The Dome which we see when we look at the Cathedral from the outside is not the same as that which we see when we are inside. There is a considerable space between them, which is occupied by a cone of brickwork on which the outer Dome is supported. The visitor who enters the Cathedral by the great West door finds himself in a long nave and he can see, at a long distance, the Choir and the High Altar. He walks along the Nave and there bursts upon his view, quite suddenly, the marvellous Dome, which gives the feeling that one has come into another world. Round the Dome runs the well-known "whispering gallery" and on it are pictures from the life of St. Paul.

At the present day the Cathedral can be seen much better than ever before. The German air raids on London did so much damage to the surrounding buildings that there are now large open spaces on two sides and many Londoners have realized for the first time the glories of their great Cathedral. They had never seen it properly before. We hope and believe that, when London is rebuilt, the authorities will prevent building up round St. Paul's and the beauty now unveiled will never be covered up again. The Cathedral itself was badly damaged in the raids and we shall have to spend a lot of money and a lot of time in putting it right, but the wonderful thing is that it was not compleely destroyed. Two bombs hit it. If they had been a foot or two nearer the Dome they would have brought it down in ruins. Twice it looked as if the whole building must be burnt down in the tremendous conflagrations of December 1940 and May 1941, but on each occasion it was preserved by the heroic and skillful efforts of our Watch. We owe these men a great debt.

So long as there has been a city of London there has been a church on the site of St. Paul's. The present cathedral is the fourth. We do not know much about the first two, but we have a very good idea of what the third was like. Old St. Paul's was begun in the year 1087 and it lasted until it was burnt down in 1666 in the great fire of London. It was one of the largest churches in Christendom and its spire must have dominated the city even more than the Dome does today, for it was taller than the Dome and the buildings of old London were of course much smaller than they are now. St. Paul's has always been the center of the city and its connection with the life of London is symbolized today by the fact that the Lord Mayor of London has his own stall in the Choir and his own vestry. In this matter of the vestry he is better off than the Bishop.

But as you know, St. Paul's has an important place in the life of the nation and the British Commonwealth. In its Crypt are buried Nelson and Wellington and other great leaders in the wars of England. St. Paul's is the place where services of national significance are held. There in recent times we had the thanksgiving for the Silver Jubilee of George V, the thanksgiving after the Coronation of the present King and, during the war, many services on days of prayer when the King and the Cabinet attended. We shall never forget the Memorial Service for President Roosevelt, but there is one which is engraved on our minds even more deeply—the national thanksgiving for victory at the end of the war. If you could have a list of the State services which our Cathedral has seen you would have an outline of the history of England for the last three centuries.

But these magnificent national services do not constitute the regular work of St. Paul's. Like all other cathedrals, its main purpose is the regular worship of God and the daily services of the Church are celebrated with all the dignity and beauty we can command. Perhaps the music of the cathedral service is the most important contribution which cathedrals have made to the culture of the nation. St. Paul's has never been behind in this and today we can truly say that we have one of the best choirs in the world. One of the essentials to keep us this tradition is the supply of boys' voices, for women do not sing in cathedral choirs. The ancient school for the choir boys goes on and was never shut even in the worst days of the war, though we had to evacute it to the country.

The Cathedral is governed by five men—the Dean and four Canons. They have the responsibility of keeping the building in good order and seeing that its services are properly conducted. They too have to keep their minds alert to seize every opportunity of making St. Paul's the source of spiritual power and enlightenment for the city and the nation. As you may suppose, it costs a great deal of money to keep the Cathedral going and the endowments which were adequate in the past are far from sufficient now. The war, in more ways than one, has hit our finances hard. But we do not feel anxious. The response to our appeal for funds to help in the restoration of the Cathedral has been generous, and we know that men and women, not only in London, but all over the world, love St. Paul's and will come to its help in time of need.

I do not want to leave on your minds the impression that St. Paul's is just a magnificent building in which services are beautifully sung. It is that, but it is much more. It is the center of the religious life of the Church of England in London. The great societies, missionary, philanthropic, evangelistic, come there year by year for their festivals. The Bishop holds his ordinations there and forward movements in the diocese start in the Cathedral. When the Lambeth Conference assembles in 1948 we shall have an even wider vision; it will open with a service in St. Paul's at which bishops from every part of the world will be present to ask God's blessing on their consultations. We have tried too to serve the minds of the people of London. Very frequently there are lectures on some aspect of religion to which men and women come after their work in the city or in their lunch hour.

Perhaps you have read some English novels about cathedrals which lead you to think they are sleepy places where nothing but routine happens. I hope I have said enough to convince you that this is not true—it is certainly not true of St. Paul's. I hope too that I have left you with a desire to come and see it. I am sure, if you do, you will think it one of the wonders of the world.

(This article was originally broadcast over the British Broadcasting corporation network, and is published with their permission.)

English Evangelicals Affirm

The following statement of Affirmations was passed by the Congress of English Evangelicals which met in April and are being presented to the Lambeth Conference:

To our Right Reverend Fathers in God gathered in Conference at Lambeth.

We, Evangelical members of the Church of England, meeting in Congress in London, desire to assure our Fathers in God as they prepare to meet in the Lambeth Conference that we shall be in continuous prayer for them that the Holy Spirit of wisdom and understanding, of counsel and might, of knowledge and the fear of the Lord, may inspire their deliberations on the many weighty matters that will be their concern.

We are conscious that they meet at a dark moment in history when the forces of evil appear to be massing with increasing determination against our Lord and His Church. We note the very grave weakness of the Church in almost every country in the world and the threats to its freedom and even survival in some. We would record our conviction that at this time the whole energy of the Church should be directed towards a programme of expectant evangelism which shall call into play the initiative and devotion not only of the rank and file of the clergy, but of the faithful laity as well. We believe that this is a task which should take precedence of all others. But we are sensible of the fact that it will not be accorded this precedence, nor will it be undertaken at all unless there is widespread throughout the Church a far deeper conviction of the importance of evangelism and a far clearer understanding of what it involves than is at present the case.

This Congress has been arranged with the double objective of laying stress on the central importance of evangelism and of providing a careful presentation of its meaning in relation to the varied activities of the Church's life. This presentation is now available in print, and we commit it to the judgment of the bishops with the prayer that they will accord it attention, not for any merit in our own interpretation, but because of the intrinsic importance of this subject, and that they will also summon the Church to immediate action.

Believing that the activity of evangelism is the proper setting of the Church's life in history, we would record the following affirmations as being fundamental to any evangelism which is true to the New Testament:

(1) We affirm that Jesus Christ is Lord, over all persons and all causes supreme.

(2) We affirm that the deepest truth about God as Creator, Redeemer and King is to be found in Jesus Christ alone who is both God and Man.

(3) We affirm that in Jesus Christ and Him crucified God meets man and reconciles him to Himself.

(4) We affirm that conviction of sin, conversion to God, and growth in the life of holiness is the work of the Holy Spirit.

(5) We affirm that salvation is an experience and a state of which a man can be assured as he responds by faith to God's gracious offer of himself in Jesus Christ.

(6) We affirm the right of every believer to have direct access to God through Christ alone to obtain pardon and grace without dependence upon any other human being.

(7) We affirm that the Church of Jesus Christ on earth is the company of all faithful people, where the Word of God is preached and the sacraments administered, and that it is God's will that the Church should be one, that the world may believe.

(8) We affirm that the Church of Jesus Christ has been set in history to bear witness to the Gospel, so preparing the world for the coming of Christ as Judge and King; and that this supreme purpose must determine all its activities.

(9) We affirm that the Church stands under the Word of God as revealed in Holy Scripture, and that its Faith and Order, its worship and its way of life must be judged in accordance therewith.

We affirm our desire to work in fellowship together with all those who agree with these affirmations and to seek organic unity with them in one Church.

As a signal step to this end we welcome the inauguration of the United Church of South India as being at once the fruit of a Spirit-inspired evangelism, a direct response to the needs of those as yet unevangelized, and the earnest of a still greater unity amongst Christians throughout the world. We would pray our Fathers in God to lead us at the earliest possible moment into full communion with this Church.

Likewise we would pray that, in taking measures for the better ordering of our own Communion, both at home and abroad, our Fathers in God may so set forth Christ's Gospel as being a religion to serve God in the freedom of the Spirit, being content only with such rules and ceremonies as be apt to a decent order and a godly discipline.

Realism Plus Faith Plus Grace

By THE REV. FREDERICK WARD KATES, A. M., B. D.

"In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world."—St. John 16:33.

Many people nowadays appear to believe that life is split down the middle. On the one side are the ideal things of life—the appreciation and service of art and goodness; right conduct, kindness, and charity; love of home and family; religious hope and faith and trust. On the other side of the dividing-line are the practical things of life, the things that really matter—earning one's living, paying one's bills, washing the dishes and getting the laundry done, smart business deals and fat bank-accounts, getting on in the world and achieving success.

Religion, you notice, is classified by these people among the ideal or idealistic things of life. It's not considered to be one of the real, practical, everyday things that go to make up our lives.

Now we believe that regarding religion so, at least the Christian religion, is a grievous error. Christianity deals with the ideal things of life, to be sure, but it also concerns itself vitally and immediately with those everyday realities that go to make up your life and mine —work, money, sickness, loneliness, tragedy, pleasure, love, marriage, children, education, politics, death.

I, for one, do not know how people have formed the notion that Christianity isn't a thoroughly practical thing that can be of concrete and tangible help to people as they face the stern facts and realities of life; for Christianity is marked by one characteristic, if no other—its realistic facing of the great problems and issues of human life.

Authentic Christianity calls a spade a spade. It does not dodge facts however stern, realities however harsh, or situations however unpleasant; nor does it deny them. Denying a fact, it knows, does not make it any the less real.

Christianity is fearless, utter realism, first of all. It appraises the hard facts of life for exactly what they are. It doesn't look upon life with rose-colored glasses. But it goes a step further: it sees beyond the sharp realities of life and through them, interpreting them with the eyes of faith and in the light of faith. Then it takes still one step more: it supplies men with the grace of God, the freely-giving help of God, God's own life and strength, to enable them to understand and to deal triumphantly with the facts as faith interprets them. As we undersand Christianity, it is realism plus faith plus grace.

Consider Christianity's estimate of man. Because Jesus loved people, all kinds and types of people, and believed that even the most low-fallen could be transformed into nobler and finer human beings, does Christianity hold an unwarrantedly optimistic view of human nature, maintaining that human nature is naturally noble, fine, and good? Not for one minute! On the contrary, Christianity asserts that man is far from being naturally good and loving and kind and pure. It even goes so far as to say that unredeemed man is a sinner, selfish, greedy, proud, lustful, often viciously brutal and cruel.

But here is where Christianity adds to its seemingly harsh and pessimistic yet entirely realistic appraisal of man the element of faith. As we are, it says, we are not especially praiseworthy or estimable, but as we may become, we are infinitely wonderful and worthwhile. Christianity is unique among the world's religions in holding at one and the same time the lowest and also the highest opinion of man. It declares that, while man is a sinner, he may become a saint!

But all this may come about only through God's aid and help, through His grace. Combining cold, utter realism with regard to human nature with majestic faith in man, Christianity assures us that, while we may now be sinners, we may become, but only with the assistance of God and by the strengthening of His Holy Spirit, nothing less than saints and in very truth the sons of God!

Take this matter of moral evil. Did Jesus ever tell Mary Magalene, the slave of her lustful passions until the day when she came under the Master's life-transfiguring spell, that temptation to carnal sin is not terrifyingly strong? I do not think so. Instead, in the prayer He prayed and taught His disciples to pray, He petitions God: "Lead us not into temptation, But deliver us from evil."

Forcibly aware of the power of evil, Jesus Himself prayed that He Himself and His disciples might be delivered from its tenacious grasp. He faced the problem honestly and recognized the power of burning lust and passion to be alarming and dangerous. But He also knew that faith fortified by grace from God would enable a man or woman victoriously to over master its lures and fierce might.

How about pain? Did Jesus walk through this world of ours with a Pollyanna-like smile on His face, saying to men and women wracked and torn by pain that pain isn't real, that it doesn't exist? I hardly think so.

While He offers no philosophical explanation for the evil of pain, He does offer something to men which is vastly preferable and practically more useful—grace to bear it and the faith that enables us to transfigure it.

How about frustration, disappointment, and defeat? He who died on Calvary's Cross knew from first-hand experience all about these common factors of human life. Jesus and Christianity admit that these are bitter and cruel things, but they endow us with the faith and grace to start afresh, like the man who, beholding his whole world crashed in ruins at his feet, wrote a friend: "My place of dreams has collapsed, but I'm building a cathedral out of the ruins."

With candid and complete realism Christianity bids us face up squarely to life. It embraces all the hard things of life in its warm embrace, acknowledging them to be what frankly they are. Then it imparts to us, if we are seekers, through sacrament and Scripture and prayer, the grace and the strength, the vision and the power, not just to bear them with stoic nobility and a soldier's fortitude, but even more wonderfully to make them different through the Supernatural operation of faith and grace.

With undeniable realism Jesus said, "In this world ye shall have tribulation." And then He said with faith that marvelously empowers life, "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." Finally, before His physical departure from our midst, He assured His disciples, even ourselves, that He would not leave us comfortless, that is, without strength, bereft of guidance and aid. He promised to His own God's Holy Spirit and God's own grace. His promised gift received enables Christians to accept life's hard facts with entire realism, to view them in the light of faith, and to overmaster them by grace.

THAT MISSIONS MIGHT BE REOPENED

New York, N. Y.—Another instance of Doors of Opportunity being reopened, after being closed by the budget cuts made by the National Council last February.

A retired clergyman, deriving his income from the Church Pension Fund, sent the Council his entire pension check for May, expressing the hope that it would help restore some of the cuts.

A second check reached the Council early in June. Again he had given his entire pension check . . . that missions might be reopened . . . and missionaries continue their work for God.

Nunc Dimittis

To continue in the company of Simeon and Anna, and with the Lord of their lives, is to experience something of the reviving referred to in Habakkuk 3:2.

Devoted as they were to the temple, and much as they valued the fellowship of others who had looked for the consolation of Israel, there came a period in their lives, even as in ours, when Anna and Simeon could no longer respond to the invitation of Psalm 122. With the shadows of the evening stretched out, those old folk of Luke 2 would doubtless recall the request made by Solomon at the dedication of the first temple, that if any Jews, unable to visit the temple, in person, prayed toward that place of worship, that such remembrance might be counted unto them for good. (I. Kings 8:29, 30, 35). Thus did Daniel, in Babylon, 500 miles away from the temple. So, methinks, Anna and Simeon also continued to worship toward the holy place. In effect, they would say, "Though I walk in the eventide of my years, yet Thou wilt revive me, and perfect that which concerneth me, putting the finishing touches to the works of Thy hands". (Ps. 138).

One of the blessings of life's eventide, is that time is provided for further submitting ourselves to the Master-craftsman, that He may perfect His work in our souls, for we are confident that He Who inaugurated the good work will evermore put His finishing touches to it. (Phil. 1:6).

Next to the home, the Church, that to which the temple points, has been our greatest friend. Before we were born, it gave to our parents, ideals of life and love that made home a place of strength and beauty. To the Church we were taken in infancy, and in baptism given a place in the flock of Christ. In childhood, it cooperated with our parents, in weaving the lessons of life into our souls. In adolescent years, dedicating hands confirmed our earlier beginnings; and when the time came for us to take our place in the work-a-day world, and when we married, it was the Church which sanctified our union, and blessed our home. As with Isaac in Genesis 26:25, before ever we built our home, or dug our wells, we builded our altar, and called upon the Name of the Lord. In the sorrows and chastenings that have come into our lot, even when we have slipped away in foolishness and sin —in all these things, the Ministers, and the Services of the Church, have been at hand, warning, wooing, winning, until we found ourselves once more living in the high places.

Is it any wonder that present-day Annas and Simeons are heard to hum, and to mean, such words as are found, for instance, in Number 465 of the Hymnal, or maybe it would be Number 237.

Now, physically unable to trudge to the House of Prayer, they make the place of their residence a trysting spot with the Lover of their souls, as they recall what He said of Himself, that in the home, or in places where two or three gather in His Name, in such places is One greater than the temple, greater even than the Church of His love. (Matt. 18:20; Matt. 12:6; Eph. 5:25-27.)

And, if these lines are being read by younger folk, permit us to urge you to be regular in your worship and in your prayers. If the business of life takes you into Babylon, as it did Daniel, let not Babylon crowd out all that Jerusalem, and the temple, and the Church stand for. Do yourself the favour of reading that old story in the sixth of Daniel. We only find God everywhere, if we find Him somewhere, that is, in some definite place by prayer. Such as know of His Presence in the moil of business, are people who first found Him waiting for them at the window of daily prayer and of weekly worship. Many years elapsed between the period of Solomon, and the adventures of Daniel, and the discovery by Simeon, but for each, one word was emphasized, and that word was TOWARD. Read it again in First Kings 8:30, in Daniel 6:10, and in Psalm 25:15—Toward. It is to be our attitude too, all the time, begetting in us a love, a loyalty, a worship that is ever Christ-ward.

Meditations In His Presence

"All Christian Rulers . . ." (From the prayer for the Whole State of Christ's Church.)

That phrase has given me much food for thought. Each time it comes along something within takes it out of its setting and holds onto it, questioning. "But why only Christian rulers? They should need our prayers less than the pagan rulers. Why not leave the word 'Christian' out?" A few answers have come. You will probably find others.

Certainly the non-Christian rulers of the earth need our prayers, but how can our prayers reach them? If intercessory prayer holds us as ready instruments for God's answering of that intercession in part, how can God affect the hearts of un-Christian rulers? Did very many pray for Hitler, to change his heart? If so, what good came of it? As far as I can see, the chief good of such praying was not so much to do anything for Hitler but to give us an understanding heart and make us work to keep such a twisted personality from becoming a leader anywhere. The changed attitude will keep us from hate and bitterness, and will help us to understand the endless misery and trouble proceeding from life lived without Christ.

But, on the other side is the Christian ruler, whose aims coincide with our praying. The fellowship of prayer thus becomes a fertile field for our growing loyalty and backing of all the Christian actions of such a person, whether it be the President of the United States or the Christian actions of the United Nations.

Real Christian rulers are few and far between, and it is a difficult role for a great portion of the world to play, since its concepts of life are often far removed from the Christian concept.

Our prayer is that the hearts of Christian rulers may be so directed and disposed as to administer justice impartially and to maintain true religion. A just ruler will help to make a just nation. Democracy is also dedicated to religious freedom, but again true religion—discernible in the fruits of it—can be maintained only as more and more of us live it privately and corporately.

The burden of the prayer rests pretty largely upon those who really pray it.

Do We Need A New Type of Church Building?

Many Churches at the end of the war anticipated early construction of new buildings, or additions to their present structures. The high cost of all building, plus continued shortages in certain lines has held up much of this construction. Perhaps this is a good thing. The whole subject of Church buildings needs to be rethought in the light of modern conditions.

A thousand years ago, the great cathedrals in Europe were erected as the expression of the faith of their communities. These were settled communities, and the building of the cathedral Church was a satisfying religious experience for the whole community. In the course of time, these Gothic structures became the ideal of every congregation, to greater or lesser degree. So in the past one hundred years we have seen in America the erection of many vast fanes, impressive in size and mass. Then a generation or two ago, we began to add large Parish Houses to these Church buildings. These were erected to take care of our Sunday Schools, and to minister to our communities. In the case of some "institutional" Churches, these Parish Houses included bowling alleys, gymnasiums, and meeting rooms of all descriptions.

These buildings have bequeathed to their present congregations two serious problems. The first is that of maintainence. The high Gothic nave towering up into space is hard to heat. Repairs in Parish House and Church mount alarmingly as the buildings age. Maintainence assumes a disproportionately large part of income.

Along with this, there is frequently a dwindling congregation. For such large Church plants are likely to be in the older parts of our cities. Some of them certainly should stay in their present locations. There is a continuing need for the "down-town Church." It can carry on a specialized ministry in such areas. Perhaps too in many dioceses there is need for a diocesan Church, be it called a cathedral, or simply a Church used as a center of diocesan worship and life. But these uses care for only a few of our larger Church plants set in the midst of our cities.

The migration of population is away from such central areas to the suburbs. For a time loyalty to the old parish Church impels people to make the long journey to it, but gradually this comes to an end as the older generation dies. Losses in communicant strength cannot be replaced easily by such a Church, for the old homes in the center of the city are now replaced by business and office buildings.

Thus the second problem of the large inherited Church building becomes pressing. It is time to move to a new location, but the congregation is loath to do so because of the very size of its building! The vestry will not vote to "lose," as they always phrase it, the old beloved building. They will not face the financial responsibility involved in a change of location. Rather than lose an old building, they will lose their congregation. This is particularly true when an endowment cushions the shock of a decreasing annual income.

The results are pitiful. The congregation dwindles in size, until there is a handful in the great Church. Rectors frantically advertise "special music" and famous preachers. But it is not always recognized that the results are also tragic in a larger way. Missionary giving is cut year by year in that parish. The whole Church thus begins to suffer. It may be too easy a generalization, but it is said that one reason why some of our large metropolitan dioceses give so poorly to missions is that the strength of their parishes is being sapped to maintain large buildings.

Meanwhile the suburban areas into which this Church ought to move are left without ministration, until another denomination not so bound down by the weight of buildings as we are, enters into the new area and speedily gathers a fine congregation there.

But that Church then proceeds to fall into the old error! For though it generally starts with a modest building, it soons begins to yearn for an impressive, large structure. A great Church is planned "for the ages!" A large Parish House is projected "to care for our children and young people." Thus the cycle starts anew.

Needed: A New Type Building.

Should not the Church begin to consider whether it needs these expensive buildings, built "for the ages?" We live in an age of transient populations. We are mobile. There is a new restlessness, emphasized by the poor man's magic carpet, the automobile. The old settled communities are gone. Is it wise to build vast buildings that presumably will last for hundreds of years in communities that may be gone in twenty-five years?

It may be that we ought to call upon our architects to design a new kind of Church building, planned for a generation only. Then if changed conditions in twenty-five years indicate that the Church ought to move to a new location the better to serve its membership, it could do so without being encumbered by expensive but basicly useless buildings. The cost of such buildings too would be amortized by the generation that used them. No business would build a structure that could not be depreciated in a reasonable time. Further, such semi-temporary buildings would enable the Church to take advantage of new technical improvements and advances. Even if a Church remained in the same location, the new generation could afford to rebuild according to its needs, and according to new conceptions of the use of the buildings.

We think that the high present day building costs may drive some Churches to such a solution. It should be understood that this is not a question of types of architecture—of modernism or functionalism as against traditional forms. It is a question of whether the primary task of the Church is to build buildings or Christian lives, to maintain vast structures or to uphold the great Christian ideals bequeathed to us by our Lord.

BOOK NOTES

By the Faculty of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific. Edited by Randolph Crump Miller.

MIRACLES. By C. S. Lewis. Macmillan, 1947.

To the growing number of C. S. Lewis' fans the announcement of a new book from his versatile pen is always good news, and this volume is equal in quality to his best.

Dr. Lewis has attempted to deal with one of the most vexing problems of Christianity, that of the miraculous claims of the New Testament. He does well to remind us that miracles are essential features of Christianity, "a naturalistic Christianity leaves out all that is specifically Christian," and to deny them is to deny our faith. Such a denial is, to Dr. Lewis, one of the features of the current naturalistic "religion" which is only one form of pantheism which is "the permanent natural bent of the human mind."

The study begins with a definition: a miracle is "an interference with nature by a supernatural power." This is not, perhaps, a definition which would satisfy all theologians, but certainly what usually comes to mind when the subject is mentioned. After a plea to the reader to examine the evidence with an open mind, the author proceeds through a series of arguments expressed in simple and non-technical terms, re-enforced with the vivid and clear illustrations and analogies which are so characteristic of his style.

To begin he asks the question, "Are miracles possible, if so, how probable are they?" This requires a study of nature, the supernatural (God), and the possibility of God ever acting upon nature. If God ever acts on nature then it may be considered reasonable that He can in specific times and manners act to produce results which men call miracles. Dr. Lewis is convinced that God can and does.

Of particular interest are the studies of the distinctive miracles of Christianity: The signs and wonders of our Lord and especially the great miracles of His birth, resurrection and ascension.

While some of the reasoning and conclusions of the author will be unacceptable to many who profess the Christian faith, it would be well for everyone to read this book. If you believe in the miracles, it will be interesting to see how Dr. Lewis can use the best of modern science to re-enforce our faith. For those who have doubts concerning the miracles this book will throw new light upon the subject and will open new avenues of thought which will make much of Christianity more understandable and acceptable.

IN THE SECRET PLACE OF THE MOST HIGH. By Arthur John Gossip. Scribners. $2.75. .. ..

The book carries a sub-title—Some Studies in Prayer. Here is a book which can be unqualifiedly recommended to every one who desires to learn more concerning praying, both clergy and laity alike. It is written in simple language, and abounds in illustrations that carry home the points the author seeks to make. This might well serve as a text book for adult classes in prayer. It would make an excellent book for clergy to take to their people on their visitations to them, to leave for them to read.

CHARLES F. WHISTON.

THE NATURE AND PURPOSE OF THE GOSPELS. By R. V. G. Tasker. New York and London, Harper, 1944. 137pp.

This is a brief, readable, and quite up-to-date summary of the modern critical approach to the canonical gospels. It is written for laymen, especially for those engaged in religious education, so that scholars will of course find little that is new. The parish minister, however, and the seminary student are here provided with a convenient means for refreshing their knowledge of these subjects.

Besides succinct summaries of Formgeschichte, and Synoptic and Fourth Gospel criticism, the author devotes about a quarter of the book to a study of Jesus' teaching about the Kingdom. As throughout the volume, so here especially the author's allegiance to neo-supernaturalism is evident.

To those who regard the knowledge of Greek as superfluous, the reviewer recommends careful consideration of Professor Tasker's argument in Appendix II, on the indispensability of that discipline for an adequate understanding of our religion.

WHAT DOES THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH STAND FOR? By W. Norman Pittenger. Morehouse-Gorham. Paper, 15c.

The Rev. Mr. Pittenger is probably the smoothest and most prolific writer in the Episcopal Church today. He writes as a "liberal Catholic" and most of what he says is acceptable in the average congregation. This little pamphlet is a good 20-page introduction to the beliefs and practices of the Church. Some readers will be doubtful about the "sacrament" of Absolution, and of course "Protestant" means more than "non-Roman." It is a good pamphlet, and is an example of how tracts should be written for lay people.

THE GOD WE WORSHIP. By Roger Hazelton. Macmillan. $2.00.

No definition of God is worth anything unless it is of a deity we can worship. Worship is worth nothing unless we are sure we will meet God when we attend church. "Protestant worship is still a trumpet which gives forth a feeble and uncertain sound." This penetrating and incisive book by Professor Hazelton deals with the witness to our worship: God Himself. Worship is indelibly associated with truth, and no worship is valid which is not grounded in a solid theology (just as no theology is revelant which does not grow out of a devotional situation). God's holiness, goodness, power, and love are thus related to worship, as is the Christ and the Holy Spirit. We know God "as life knows other life, and friend knows friend. God is a spirit and must be known spiritually in order to be known at all. We know God best only when He knows us. . . . Worship is the supreme moment of human life." (P. 158).

CONVERSATIONS WITH AN UNREPENTANT LIBERAL. By Julius Seelye Bixler. Yale University Press. $2.00.

Those who like Plato, New England, sound liberalism, and straight thinking will be delighted by President Bixler's Terry lectures at Yale. Simmias and Cebes, the old friends of Plato, meet in a railroad station in Boston and carry on their conversation (as in Plato's dialogues) as they travel together to New Haven. Cebes is an unrepentant liberal and Simmias is the penetrating but inconsistent critic. The first chapter examines the presuppositions of liberalism and its faith in reason, the second dialogue turns to the problems of religion and Cebes shows how the liberal attitude toward Christianity leads to a dynamic religion, the third discussion turns to the problems of education where the liberal is surprisingly opposed to Dewey's progressive educational philosophy. "To give the student the idea that education centers in him instead of in the truth seems to me to adopt the best possible means of blocking his insight from the start. A liberally educated man is one who has seen what truth demands and adjusted his life to it." These brilliantly written dialogues are in the best philosophic tradition, and they will serve to correct the apprehensions of those who fear liberalism because they misunderstand it. Liberalism, with its demand for truth through reason, supports Christianity at its best and uses the tools which God gave man to know the truth. "The Word became flesh, not stone."

SUMMERTIME

By the Rt. Rev. Sumner Walters,

S. T. D., Bishop of San Joaquin

As Lent and Eastertide are times of spiritual revival and elevation, summer and the season of Trinity are the year's great opportunity for continuance.

Think of the values and skills of life which are made to be permanently valuable or not, according to whether there has been continuance or not: musical performance, stenography, physical training and athletics, by way of a few examples.

Discontinuance, letting-down, makes for loss. In religious worship and reading we are missing spiritual and moral power when we become careless. We deprive ourselves of the help from God which we need.

Many of us are just as faithful in summer as in winter. If away from home we seek out the nearest church. If an Episcopal church is inaccessible, we go to another. God is pleased, wherever we go!

With a relaxation of the organizational and social duties of the rest of the year, most of us can find time also to do some religious reading, including the Bible, along with many other matters which attract our eye.

This is written in the hope that others will likewise think well of maintaining and continuing their more active and helpful Christian habits, in summer as well as in Lent!—From The Episcopal Church Times.

BACK HOME IN BRITAIN

By the Rev. Canon J. Douglas

Paterson, Toronto.

The Countryside After the War.

Coming back to Britain after a long absence one wonders what the place will really look like. We have heard of the war damage, destruction by bombs, fire, and people have kept writing to tell us it is not like it used to be. What do we really find?

Most visitors go to see London, the Cathedral cities but the best places of special interest are the old world towns and villages. Its group of two or three cottages with lovely flower gardens, the winding lanes, the "right of way paths" which lead over commons and through the woods and along quiet running streams with primroses, and blue hyacinth smothered banks.

One word describes exactly this wonderful land in 1948. It is getting "tidy" again. If you do not see the destruction, say, round St. Paul's Cathedral, within the next two years you will never know what people were talking about. Block after block of 6-8 buildings were utterly demolished—but where is the stone and the brick and rubbish? All tidied up. They carted some away, dumped the rest into the basement and levelled it.

And put a few flowers into the dirt to grow. It is all so tidy and one does get a much better view of St. Pauls.

The roads are narrow and winding and have a perfect surface for all weathers. Probably you will meet a hundred cyclists to each car. In the lake district the cyclists I meet are not teen agers but more often in the twenty-five and thirty-five year group; frequently man and wife are accompanied by son or daughter. I saw a lot of fathers and sons. A very healthy sign.

The English hedges grew wild in the war years, and in the last year or so they have been severly pruned so that this year they are getting back to what they use to be. And an unusually early spring has smothered them with Hawthorn flowers. Add to this the masses of spring flowers which have rarely bloomed so profusely owing to a very mild winter. This helps you to see the glory of an English Spring time.

The gardens round the cottages are tended as lovingly as ever and even if the woodwork does need a new coat of paint and the walls would be the better with some white-wash, the brass is always shining and the stone threshold always scrubbed. It rather hurts in some places to see the total destruction of the woods. Timber must be got and where cutting has been started nothing is left. In some districts there is no sign of cutting yet.

There is an old expression, well known here fifty or sixty years ago, "Shabby genteel". It has a meaning today. This poor old country has stood the ravages of war, more hurt has been caused by what was left undone than by the evil that was done in 1948, when so much is lacking, even the countryside is making a brave show. The visitors will not be told what is wrong. All he will see is a smiling land. Yes—everything is tidy.

CXXIX

Proper Prefaces

The Communion Service especially follows the Christian year, in its use of the Collect, Epistle, and Gospel for each Sunday and its emphasis on the great festivals and seasons in these Prefaces before the "Ter Sanctus", which leads into the prayer of consecration.

In the ancient missals there were ten of these Prefaces, but at the Reformation they were reduced to five.

The ones eliminated referred mostly to the Virgin Mary, and to Saints and Apostles: the purpose being to get away from the practice of adoration for the Saints and especially for the Virgin.

The Prefaces vary in date from 1549 to the time of Gregory and Gelasius, in the fifth and sixth centuries.

The Prayer Book revision of 1928 added three Prefaces, one for Epiphany, one to be used for the Purification of the Virgin Mary, or the Annuciation, or the Festival of the Transfiguration; and one for All Saints Day.

It is difficult to see why the reformers in 1549 should have omitted the Epiphany Preface, since that Festival antedates Christmas, and it was natural that the 1928 revision should have restored it.

The two Prefaces for the Purification and All Saints Day represent a modern trend in the Protestant Episcopal Church that is also shown in prayers for the dead, and an increasing emphasis upon the importance of the Virgin Mary in the Church of today.

We heartily sympathize with this renewed attitude toward "the Communion of Saints" and feel that it is a good thing to use every possible means of emphasizing the fact that our loved ones who have gone before, are not dead, but are even more alive in a larger life, the life of the spirit.

Canon Wedel Makes Principal Address

Alexandria, Va.—"Never again after your ordination will you be as other men are," said the Rev. Theodore O. Wedel, Canon of the Washington Cathedral of St. Peter and St. Paul, in making the principal address to the 125th graduating class of the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Alexandria, "the Bishop's hands will leave a mark upon you which nothing can ever erase, a mark almost visible to the observer's eyes." Canon Wedel warned the young men that upon leaving the academic life of the Seminary for active priesthood in the present day world, their faith would be severely tested. Calling upon them to surrender the guidance of their careers to God, the Canon illustrated the meaning of such surrender with a Latin quatrain chiselled during the troubled seventeenth century upon a cell wall in the Tower of London by some unknown prisoner's hand. The words still visible are, in translation, "to serve God, to obey fate, to undergo repentance, is to reign."

At the commencement exercises held in the Seminary chapel June 2-4, the Virginia Seminary graduated 31 students of whom 26 received the degree of Bachelor of Divinity. The Seminary also awarded one degree of Master of Sacred Theology, and four honorary degrees of Doctor of Divinity. The three days of commencement services were climaxed on June 4 when 9 members of the graduating class were ordained to the office of deacon.

Participating in the ordination were the Rt. Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin, bishop of the diocese of Virginia; the Rt. Rev. Angus Dun, bishop of Washington, and the Rt. Rev. William Ambrose Brown, bishop of Southern Virginia. The Rt. Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, bishop of Ohio, and father of one of the ordinands, delivered the ordination sermon.

The Virginia Theological Seminary is the largest Protestant Episcopal Seminary in the United States, having been founded 125 years ago in Alexandria. It numbers among its founders Francis Scott Key, author of the Star Spangled Banner. It has given to the Church a total of 82 bishops and 160 foreign missionaries. PROF. WILD SPEAKER AT BERKELEY DIVINITY

New Haven, Conn.—Professor John Daniel Wild of Harvard was the speaker at the ninety-second annual commencement of the Berkeley Divinity School held in Chapel Hill on Friday, June 4. Henry deWolf deMauriac (Trinity 1906-Berkeley 1909), editor of The Witness and rector of Christ Church, Middletown, N. J., and the Rev. Samuel M. Shoemaker, of Calvary Church, New York. Degrees of S. T. M., awarded by Berkeley for the first time this year, were given to the Rev. John Philip McCarvey, of Collingdale, Pa., and Panayiotis Christou, of Jannina, Greece. The graduating class includes Orlando S. Barr, Jr., John R. Edler, Norman Hall, Charles H. Kaulfuss, G. A. Miller, C. A. Park, John Spear, James L. Stilwell, and John DeLancey Sweigart, who received the degree of S. T. B., and Waldron L. Coon and Prescott L. Laundrie, who received certificates; the Rev. Lewis N. the Literature and Interpretation of the New Testament; the Rev. A. Gabriel Hobert, M. A. (Oxon), of the Society of the Sacred Mission, Visiting English Lecturer for 1948-9 in Biblical and Pastoral Theology; Dr. Wilbur M. Urban, Ph. D., L. H. Lemuel J. Winterbottom (Berkeley 1944), Supervisor of Religious Education.

Professor Wild said in his address on "Liberty, Human and Divine": The chief source of human slavery is the identification of the end with instruments such as money, power, or the state. Men can be freed by the correction of justice and by liberal education. Religion is the greatest of liberating forces. God is a liberator, not a despot.

GREEK CHURCH REPORTS ON CLOTHING DISTRIBUTION

New York, N. Y.—Prof. Hamilcar S. Alivisatos has sent to Church World Service a meticulous statement of the distribution made of clothing, shoes, sewing materials, and other supplies sent to the Greek Church at Athens. He said that he "and those of the Greek Church who received the precious assistance" desire to thank the Churches in America, and that several of the bishops had requested him to convey "their deepest gratitude and thanks for the great help you gave to their folk."

The aid sent to Greece, part of which was made possible by the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief and the various material aid projects, was distributed in no less than 65 dioceses.

Five cases of New Testaments were included in the shipments, and these were given to the Sanatorium of Voulas and the Seminary Vellas. Other books were distributed among the libraries of the theological schools of the Universities of Athens and Salonica, the Holy Synod and the library of the Committee for Reconstruction of Relationship with Foreign Churches. Four cases of candles were given to the orphanages of the district of the Archbishopric, and various theological articles were distributed to the orphanages and needy students of the theological school.

The material accounted for totalled 291 bales of clothing, 443 sacks of shoes, 71 cases containing various sewing materials, 18 cases of food, four cases of candles, and five of miscellaneous theological articles.

The delegation includes five American nominees to the Council's Youth Department Committee of 35 world youth leaders, which will be officially constituted at the Amsterdam Assembly. 1948-1949 PLAN

New York, N. Y.—The 1948-1949 PLAN! issued by the Division of Youth of the National Council emphasizes that the theme of work and study is to be Evangelism. Presiding Bishop Sherrill stated that he had learned this with gratification, as "No subject could be more vital, for Evangelism includes the central work of the Church: education and missions.

"To be true messengers of Christ," said Bishop Sherrill's statement, "we must have a deep understanding of the Gospel and of the Church. With this knowledge we must reach out to tell this Good News to others. This is a task for every Christian, clerical and lay. I hope that this will be more than a theme; a definite course of determined action."

PLAN! is produced by the National Youth Commission, so that it is a program for and by the young people of the Church. Three young people and one adult from each Province make up the Commission, and it works with members of the Division of Youth and a representative of the Division of College Work. PLAN! contains a Calendar of Study Topics and Possible Activities for the whole year, with complete topic outlines and resource suggestions for study and discussion groups.

THE LAYMEN'S LEAGUE MEETS

Martinsville.—The Laymen's League of the diocese held ias annual meeting on Friday, May 7, at Christ Church, the Rev. Charles C. Fishburne, Jr., rector.

Reports of activities and election of officers for the coming year featured the afternoon session and this was followed by a dinner.

Speakers in the afternoon and evening were: the Rev. Stanley Romaine Hopper, Ph. D., professor of Christian Ethics at Drew Theological Seminary, Madison, N. J., on "The Midnight Hour," the Rt. Rev. Henry D. Phillips, D. D., bishop of the diocese on "Personal Evangelism," the Rev. Paul Scherer, D. D., LL. D., Litt. D., professor of Homiletics at Union Theological Seminary, New York, on "God's Weakness and Man's Might."

Elections for the coming year were followed.

Although promoted by the Laymen's League of Christ Episcopal Church, the "Evangelistic Convocation" was by no means confined to Episcopalians. Dr. Sparkman is an Episcopalian, Dr. Hopper is a Methodist, Dr. Scherer is a Lutheran, and the ministers of all the denominations in Martinsville were especially invited guests and numbers of them participated in various ways in the series of services.

The Laymen's League at Martinsville is one of the most active in the diocese and, although in a comparatively small but very live and growing town, secures as the speakers for its monthly dinners some of the most outstanding men in the East.

Woman's Auxiliary Meets

Roanoke, Va.—The Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia held its annual session May 11 and 12 at Christ Church, the Rev. Vn Francis Garrett, rector.

Mrs. H. Powell Chapman, of Roanoke, president, was in the chair.

At the opening session the Rev. Edgar T. Ferrell, Jr., of Marion, spoke on Evangelism. Other speakers during the sessions were Mrs. B. A. Chappell, president of the Auxiliary in the host church, Mrs. Quintus Hutter of Lynchburg, Mr. B. F. Parrott of Roanoke, chairman of the Executive Committee of the Trustees of Boys' Home, who told of the work and needs of that institution, and Miss Hazel King, secretary for College

Work in the Province of Washington.

In her talk Miss King said college students are much more interested in the Church in these days than they were a few years ago. Now they want lectures and discussions on the beliefs and functions of the Church.

MINNESOTA WOMEN ASSUME RESPONSIBILITY

Duluth, Minn.—The Woman's Auxiliary in the Diocese of Minnesota has just taken an important forward step in assuming responsibility for assistance to the Indian missions in the northern part of the state, formerly the Diocese of Duluth. For many years those missions have received an annual supply of clothing provided by Woman's Auxiliary groups elsewhere in cooperation with the national program of supply work. This year the women of Minnesota have agreed to relieve the national program of this responsibility.

Under the guidance of the Archdeacon for Indian work, the Ven. George H. Goodreid, of Park Rapids, plans for an experimental period of one year were developed by the diocesan president of the Woman's Auxiliary, Mrs. Robert M. Adams, and the supply secretary, Mrs. W. C. Vince, both of Duluth. The plans were accepted by the women in their annual meeting held last month, and backed up by an appropriation in their budget. Warm clothing, especially for school children, will be purchased at wholesale, and similar used clothing for adults will be sought through the cooperation of Church groups in the diocese. Instead of trying to guess in advance what may be needed so that goods are sent to the various missions, Archdeacon Goodreid plans to request from a central supply to meet individual needs, with which he will be familiar.

From time to time other diocesan branches of the Woman's Auxiliary have also acted to relieve the national program of need for aid to a mission or institution in their diocese. Southern Virginia has done so over a period of several years. However, this is the first move of the kind involving at one time so extensive a diocesan mission field. If the experiment proves successful, it may point the way for other similar plans, thus enabling the national program to be increasingly used for support of work in missionary districts at home and overseas.

RULES FOR SHIPPING OVERSEAS

New York, N. Y.—Recent letters to the National Council and the Woman's Auxiliary from mission workers in the Far East indicates that well-wishers at home are subjecting the missions to expense that can ill be afforded. This arises from the shipment of goods such as clothing and linens, without proper regard for import regulations of foreign countries.

In China, packages addressed to individuals, rather than to a mission institution, are subject to import duty which is hard to pay in present inflationary conditions in that country.

In the Philippine Republic, there is also an import duty even on goods consigned to a mission, if the package is valued at $10 or more. There is no use in valuing packages high for insurance purposes, as little is lost, and parcels post cannot be insured any way. At the same time freight shipments are costly and express shipments prohibitive, especially to a mission located on one of the islands which require transshipment by sea from Manila.

Unless a gift has been requested recently by someone in the missions, or is part of a request which has been made through some department of work at the National Council, it would be well to hold it up until it can be made certain that it is really needed. If sent, these rules should be followed.

1. Use parcel post except for very bulky objects; if necessary break up into several lots to conform to parcel post regulations.

2. If shipment cannot go by parcel post and instructions as to freight shipment are lacking, write to the Shipping Department of the National Council, 281 Fourth Ave., New York 10, N. Y.

3. Place only a nominal value on packages sent by parcel post and do not try to insure.

4. Address to name of mission, in care of individual, followed by post office address in foreign country.

SOUTH DAKOTA'S BISHOP ROBERTS COMMENDS THE "TRAILBLAZERS"

Cowboy Organization For Episcopal Younger Boys Has "Real Possibilities" To Link Boy Interest With Western Missions

South Dakota's Bishop Blair Roberts slit open a letter postmarked "Grand Rapids, Mich.", the other day, and out fell a check for twenty dollars. With it was a covering letter from Canon Pink—canon residentiary of St. Mark's Cathedral, Grand Rapids—stating that this was the first contribution towards Western missionary work from a new-style organization for 8--10-year-old Episcopal boys, called "The Trailblazers," begun at the Grand Rapids Cathedral last November. Something new has been added to the youth program of the Episcopal Church, and it is a long time overdue!

Questioned as to his "Trailblazers," Canon Pink explains: "For some years past I have wanted to link the intense interest which all small boys have in cowboys, indians, and Western lore generally, with the work of our own Western missionaries. Last November the opportunity came my way. I invited younger Episcopal boys at the Grand Rapids Cathedral to join a "cowboy club" offering a vigorous Western program, with weekly meetings, and to pledge themselves to give a dime a week to our Church's Western mission work. There was a rush to get in. We've been booming ever since."

An important part of the weekly program is the leader's instruction period, when definite teaching is given the boys regarding the history, development and present state of Episcopal Church work in the West. "I use articles and pictures from 'Forth,' and cull constantly from the memories of Western Bishops," says Canon Pink. In this way the "missionary spirit" is fostered, and the boys are becoming knowledgeable in the problems and difficulties facing Western bishops and priests in the White and Indian fields.

The well-rounded program includes roping and rope-spinning, target-shooting (rubber-tipped safety darts), cowboy and Indian games, stockship-cracking, and cowboy movies. All the boys wear cowboy kit, and so does their leader, for in the years before ordination Canon Pink, as a journalist publicizing western cowboy contests, spent much time behind the scenes in bronk-busting outfits and rodeo arenas. A friend of the late Tom Mix, cowboy star of silent motion picture, in 1937 he wrote—among many western novels and short stories—the fiction version of Mix's last aerial-film "Miracle Rider."

It is Canon Pink's hope that the "Trailblazer" idea will spread. "My Trailblazers, by direct giving, turn in between a dollar and a dollar-fifty every week. One hundred such Trailblazer crews would mean anywhere from four to six hundred dollars a month—ask a missionary bishop in the West what that would mean to him in manpower! The Trailblazer idea, taken up in a thousand Episcopal parishes, ought to bring a minimum of $4,000 a month for Western work, plus a life-long interest in that work, plus eventual recruits for the prairie and mountain mission field. If it can be done in Grand Rapids, it can be done elsewhere."

Bishop Roberts of South Dakota thinks the idea has great possibilities. In his reply he states, "I am most interested in this group of boys that you have. I have never heard of an organization like that, and I think you have an idea which, if it could become known, might start something real in the way not only of missionary giving but above all of missionary interest, education, and enthusiasm among our young people. I hope very much the idea will spread and become known—not only for its local interest, but for the sake of the Church."

Rectors interested in further details are invited to write to the Rev. Canon H. Leigh Pink, St. Mark's Cathedral, 134 Division N., Grand Rapids 2, Mich.

MOST URGENT REPAIRS MADE IN CHINA'S COLLEGES

New York, N. Y.—Despite the hardships and dislocations caused by civil war and skyrocketing inflation, the thirteen mission-supported colleges in China have made substantial progress in rehabilitation since V-J Day, according to a report just released here by the United Board for Christian Colleges in China. The total spent on restoration of the colleges through March 31 was more than US 3,300,000.

Although much work remains to be done, the most urgent repairs have now been made, the report states. During 1947, more than a half million dollars worth of supplies and equipment was sent to the thirteen colleges. This equipment included such items as: beds, blankets, laboratory instruments, chemicals, books, magazines, projectors and films for visual education work, medical drugs, hospital, engineering, and machine shop equipment, veterinary supplies, garden seeds and horticultural supplies.

ON AIR

Richmond, Va.—St. Mark's Church will originate the Sunday morning worship services for WRVA during June. For over three quarters of a century the activities of the church have constituted a most interesting chronicle. Organization of the church was first planned in 1860 but was postponed until 1866 because of the War Between the States. A frame building was completed and opened for worship on Leigh Street. In 1868 the congregation moved to a building on 4th Street and in 1872 a new church was erected at First and Clay Streets. Under the ministry of the late Rev. William D. Smith in 1922 a beautiful structure on the Boulevard was completed. In addition to religious worship and education, a modern recreational program makes a definite contribution to the community which it serves.

The Rev. Frederick J. Warnecke, S. T. M., rector of St. Mark's Church is a native of New York City where he was educated at Columbia University and the General Seminary. He also attended Virginia Theological Seminary. He was called to Richmond to succeed the Rev. Henry G. Lane as tenth rector of St. Mark's Church. The Rev. Mr. Warnecke is an outstanding leader of the Episcopal Church at home and abroad. He is editor of "The Southern Churchman", chairman of The Field Board and Commission on Evangelism of the Diocese of Virginia; Dean, The Sweet Briar Conference of the Province of Washington; member of the Commission on Urban Church, Federal Council of Churches in New York City and member of the General Convention Joint Committee on Structure and Organization of the General Convention.

Musical portions of the Sunday morning services will be under the direction of Robert C. Hyde, well-known Richmond organist and choir director.

WISER TO GIVE THROUGH BISHOP'S FUND

New York, N. Y.—Recently the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief called attention to something closely resembling a "racket," . . . the writing of appeal letters by people in Germany, asking for relief packages to be sent directly to them.

Adding point to this warning, an Associated Press dispatch tells of Heinrich Czerwinski, scheduled to face a Military Government court on charges involving fraud and misrepresentation. It appears that since October, 1946, this man has sent nearly 800 letters to the United States and a dozen other countries requesting CARE packages. A check disclosed that he has received "about ninety" food packages from Americans alone. A raid on his office caught his full-time secretary with a bulging briefcase of his correspondence. Each letter was written in the language of the country to which it was directed. He had set up a translation office capable of handling 65 languages.

The Presiding Bishop's Fund has received a considerable number of letters forwarded by people receiving them. Such cases are investigated through Church World Service, and, if need is found, relief is provided. It is all right to send CARE and other food parcels to known relatives and friends overseas, but for relief for unknown people, it is wise to make gifts through the Presiding Bishop's Fund only.

GREATEST NEED IN DISTRICT

Salina, Kan.—The "building of a clergy staff fitting and numerous enough to fulfill the needs of our congregations and to move out to new places" was listed by Bishop Nichols as the greatest need in the District of Salina at the 44th Convocation of the Distrist held at Christ Church, Kingman, April 11th and 12th. The District now has two candidates in seminaries and two men in colleges looking forward to candidacies.

The report of the district treasurer showed that a new high record of $3,635.49 was contributed last year to forward the program of the church. The Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief totals $2,100 to date, 15 per cent more than the quota for the District. The quota of the Episcopal Endowment Fund is $7,672. In addition the District is covering a portion of the salary of the Missionary Bishop.

Mrs. Hugh Link of Hutchinson was chosen to be the new president of the Woman's Auxiliary; Mrs. J. H. Shahan, Dodge City, vice-president; Mrs. George Barkley, Garden City, secretary; Mrs. Victor Wilson, Hutchinson, treasurer.

The delegates to represent the District of Salina at the meeting of the Province: clergymen, the Very Rev. Fred Litchman, Salina; Rev. Joseph Young, Garden City; Rev. William Brown, Hays; Laymen: Jess Scott, Jr., Garden City; E. A. Williams, Salina; J. H. Shahan, Dodge City.

Members of the Council of Advice: Clergy, R. H. Mize, Jr., Ellsworth; William Brown, Hays; Peter Francis, Norton; Donald Robinson, Ellsworth; Laymen: Earl Woodward, Salina; Sam Jackman, Minneapolis, and John J. Barker, Hays.

The Rev. Hugh C. White, assistant minister of St. Luke's Church, Ypsilanti, has accepted the call as rector of the parish, succeeding the Rev. Robert L. D., present rector of that parish, into work in the industrial sphere.

Mr. White was born in Detroit in 1921, and attended the Detroit Public Schools and Cranbrook School, Bloomfield Hills, where he remained for a year following his graduation as special assistant to the Headmaster. He entered the University of Virginia, where he was a member of the Alpha Tau Omega Fraternity, and active in the student religious program. During the war he served in the American Field Service with the British Eighth Army, in Syria, North Africa, Sicily and Italy.

Following his release from the service, he entered upon his theological work at the Virginia Theological Seminary, during which time he was chaplain at the Episcopal High School at Alexandria.

Upon completing his theological studies, he served as a Field Representative for the Church Society for College Work, coming to St. Luke's Church, Ypsilanti, in July, 1947, where he has since been assistant minister and chaplain to Episcopal Students at the Michigan State Normal College. Mr. White will begin his duties as rector of St. Luke's on September 1.

Zeboim Charles Patten, 73, leading Episcopal layman of the Diocese of Tennessee, died June 7 at his home on Lookout Mountain, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Mr. Patten was a member of the National Council for twelve years, his first term beginning in 1925.

He was chairman of the executive committee of the American Trust and Banking Company; chairman of the Chattanooga Medicine Co.; president of O. B. Andrews (paper mill); director, Alabama Great Southern Railway; chairman of the War Savings Committee of Hamilton County; chairman of a campaign which raised $850,00 for the University of Chattanooga in 1922; trustee of the University of Chattanooga; and member and former president of the Chattanooga Manufacturers' Association.

A daughter, Miss Dorothy Patten, of New York City, survives.

MR. LEON A. KEHR

The Missionary District of Arizona has suffered a distinct loss in the death of Mr. Leon A. Kehr, Assistant Treasurer and Executive Secretary of the District. Mr. Kehr's death occurred May 17 at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., where he had only recently gone for treatment. Prior to his appointment to the District Offices, he had been associated with the late James S. Douglas, father of Ambassador Douglas, in mining and was controller of the United Verde Extension Mine at Jerome, Arizona, for many years. With this background Mr. Kehr brought a valuable business acumen to the work of the Church in Arizona.

The funeral was held at Trinity Cathedral, Phoenix, May 22, with Bishop Kinsolving officiating, assisted by Dean Carman and retired Archdeacon Jenkins.

Surviving Mr. Kehr are his widow, a son, and a daughter, who share the sympathy of a wide circle of friends.

Look To This Day

Look to this day,
For it is Life, the very Life of Life,
In its brief course lie all
  The Varieties and Realties of Existence:
    The Bliss of Growth,
    The Glory of Action,
    The Splendor of Beauty,
For Yesterday is but a Dream,
And Tomorrow is only a Vision—
But Today, well lived
    Makes every Yesterday a Dream of Happiness,
    And every Tomorrow a Vision of Hope.
Look Well, therefore, to this Day.

"CHRISTIAN UNION OF PALESTINE"

Sir:

In your April 24th issue of The Southern Churchman you printed the statement of the "Christian Union of Palestine" in which they called for the revocation of the partition decision. I wonder whether you were aware that the Anglican Bishop of Jerusalem announced that although they were listed as members of the Union and as supporters of the statement, they were neither members nor had they been consulted about the statement.

This "Christian Union", made up largely of Arab churchmen, has completely identified itself with the purposes of the Arab League and is being useful as a propaganda agency to confuse—even prejudice—American Christians. Its statements, therefore, regarding Jewish attacks upon Christian institutions, must be seen and judged in that light.

"True and lively Word. . . ." (From the prayer for the Whole State of Christ's Church, page 74.)

God's word is true and living. We are thankful the language of the Bible is not that of a dead tongue speaking to a past long since turned to dust. No, God speaks in the language of today to every man who will hear. And part of the minister's task is to set forth this word in all of its truth and power for living the abundant life. This portion of the Prayer for the whole state of Christ's Church is to get the entire Christian fellowship and its needs behind the minister so that he will not neglect this appointed job. That is one reason why there are often brief meditations at the early service, and classes and forums on the Bible and the Christian religion are conducted in many parishes. "That they (all of us) may know and grow more and more."

But when we mention the word of God we usually refer to the Bible. We have read two passages from the New Testament in this service—the Epistle and Gospel. All who come to a service of the Church are exposed to some part of God's Word. The opportunity for bringing that word to life for a life is constantly at hand. Why, then, are there so few weekly and daily transformations? We do not read or hear, and then mark, learn and inwardly digest. This is done best daily in the quiet of our homes. The Church has provided a guide in the Lectionary. The very minimum contact with God's word daily is to snatch at least a phrase read or repeated from memory and to ask two questions: "What truth is here for me?" and "What way can it be used today in my life to better it?"

We are both responsible for setting forth in our beliefs and in our lives the full import of God's "true and lively word."

J. W. KENNEDY.

QUALIFICATIONS NEEDED

Boise, Idaho—In a plea for more missionaries in the domestic field, Bishop Frank A. Rhea, of Idaho, defines with much aptitude the qualifications needed. Said he:

"We need men of outstanding ability, men of humility and patience, eager to make big plans, content to put up with small returns. Anything that can be done to recruit such men for the mission field will bring valuable returns to the Church in the long run, for the quality of the man will determine the quality of the work. He has to provide imagination, inspiration, and no little perspiration."

Jamestown---1607-1948

Address at Jamestown, Virginia, on the 341st Anniversary of the Founding of the Colony

By The REV. ROBERT R. BROWN

Rector, St. Paul's Church, Richmond, Virginia

Text: "I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision"—Acts 26:16.

On December the nineteenth, sixteen hundred and six, three small vessels sailed out from Blackwall, England. They were "The Discovery" of twenty tons, "The Goodspeed" of forty tons, and "The Sarah Constant" of one hundred tons. Aboard these ships were one hundred and six colonists armed with a royal charter and a land grant extending from the 35th degree to the 45th degree North latitude, territory which, incidentally, was claimed by the crown of Castile.

Back there behind these colonists lay the world of King James, the world of Shakespeare and Bacon, the world of spiritual reformation and political rivalry with Spain. Back there was home, loved ones, friends, all that they had known of life. Still it did not occur to them to look back because there lay before them a fresh new world, a clean sheet on the page of life. Here was progress. Here was adventure. Most of all, here was the challenge to build a civilization and to erect a monument to the living this time and not to the dead. It is little wonder that these people were fascinated and that they looked with eager eyes to what lay across the seas from them.

So they sailed on, and five months later, lacking three days, they had entered Chesapeake Bay and navigated up this river to the point on which we now stand. Yes, they had missed their destination between the Bay of Fundy and South Carolina, nevertheless they disembarked on May 13th, 1607, and established their colony in the name of their King, christening it "Jamestown". Being the kind of people which they were, their first act on landing was to kneel and hear Chaplain Robert Hunt read the prayers and thanksgiving for a safe voyage.

Now there is no one who will deny that commerce and politics played a great part in the establishment of this colony. That fact is self-evident. But there is still another side to the venture, a side which to my mind overshadows all others. This was a Spiritual Crusade, a crusade best described by St. Paul's words to King Agrippa as found in the Book of Acts, the 19th verse and 26th chapter, "I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision". You doubt this? Well, let me defend my thesis in three ways.

I.

First of all the founding of the Jamestown Colony was a journey into Faith. I wonder if in these peaceful surroundings this afternoon we realize just how much faith was necessary. Think back a minute. In 1585 Sir Walter Raleigh gathered a company of one hundred and fifty people, largely composed of gentlemen of the sword, and found a land at Roanoke Island which he named "Virginia". Discouraged and defeated, almost half of these people preferred to return to England on a man-of-war in a very short period of time. The eighty who chose to remain were never heard of again. In 1605 another company landed at the mouth of the Kennebec, but it, too, was soon reduced to starvation and despair, so returned hungry to its homeland. The Jamestown colonists knew of these failures. They were well aware of the stern realities of the new world. They knew that it would demand all of their mental, moral, and physical resources before it was conquered. Yet they paused not a moment. They literally put their hands into the hands of God and stepped out into the darkness. Surely this was a venture envolving far more than mere physical courage.

I cannot recall who made this distinction, but he wrote that there are many ways in which Faith shines. There is saving Faith; there is seeing Faith; there is suffering Faith; and there is Serving Faith. He went on further to define Serving Faith as the courage to start to do the Will of God; the perseverence to keep doing the Will of God; and the willingness to make the supreme sacrifice, according to the Will of God. It was, I maintain, that sort of Serving Faith which moved the Jamestown colonists. Their march was like unto the march of Abraham to Canaan. Their trek was similar to the exodus of Moses from Egypt. Their adventure was comparable to the travels of St. Paul in the Mediterranean. How did Paul, himself, put it? "In perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea. In weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness". Yes, his experiences were also theirs, but so was his Christian Faith, Faith which built monuments in a wilderness.

This is not a sermon. Yet, one cannot but point out that here indeed is a virtue which needs to be preserved among us in our own day. Nor can one help but wonder whether the softness of our comfortable living has not in some measure eased us into a position where we no longer feel challenged by our spiritual opportunities or moved to make similar ventures of faith.

II.

However, the founding of Jamestown was something more than merely a journey into Faith, for it was Faith with a purpose. This was a venture in Evangelism. These people sincerely and literally had as a prime objective the conversion of the savage and the extension of the Church. Let me read the third paragraph of the preamble of their first charter: "We greatly commending and graciously accepting of their desires for so noble a work, which may be the Providence of Almighty God, hereafter tend to the glory of His divine Majesty, in propagating of Christian religion to such people as yet live in darkness and miserable ignorance of the true knowledge and worship of God, and may in time bring the infidels and savages living in these parts to human civility and to a settled and quiet government." A second charter in 1609 was even more specific: "That the true word and service of God and Christian Faith be preached, planted and used, not only in the said several colonies, and plantations, but also as much as they may amongst the salvadge people which doe or shall adjoine unto them or border upon them." Spain was conscious, too, of this purpose, for the Spanish ambassador to England in describing the plans of the Virginia Company pointed to the political dangers and added: "This all the more so if they should establish their religion and liberty of conscience they profess".

No, I doubt if there was ever a similar company to set sail with so exact a purpose and so intense a zeal to spread light to those who sat in darkness. Paul in his missionary journeys was no more enthusiastic than they; nor John Wesley riding his horse through the length and breadth of England; nor William Carey in India; nor Dr. Grenfell in Labrador. It is well to remember, too, that as they set sail from Blackwall they were financed in no small part by the Church and they sailed with the prayers and special benedictions of the Christian people at home. They knew what they were about, these Jamestown colonists, and they faced up to it manfully as the ambassadors of Christ fulfilling the divine commission of their Savior that "they go into all the world and preach the gospel to every nation".

Today? Well, I am told that there are approximately seventy-seven million people who have no religious affiliation of any sort in these United States of America. Here is a greater missionary field than was ever offered to our Jamestown fathers. So we might well pause and consider how we can best be true to their trust and to the spirit of evangelism which moved them into the wilderness for their Lord's sake.

III.

A journey into Faith without doubt; a venture in Evangelism it most certainly was, and then, perhaps most important of all, this was an adventure in Christian living. "Adventurers", these people were called, and so they were, but not in the modern sense of the word. These colonists were adventurers for God. They organized their life with God in its center. They created out of this dense wilderness a typical little English parish. And while no one will pretend that a relationship between Church and State, such as existed in their day is desirable now; still all will recognize that the philosophy which undergirded that relationship is indeed worthy to be praised. The Church was made the center of life. Their religion was supported by their taxes. They held their public assemblies within their Church walls. At times even their courts were conducted there. The Church constituted the whole population. When, therefore, Chaplain Robert Hunt caused as he described, "a pen of poles with a sail for a roof, and for a pulpit a bar lashed between convenient trees" to be erected; and when he called the people together on June the 21st 1607 for the first celebration of the Holy Communion according to the liturgy of our Church; this was not considered by these people as a traditional sop to the Lord. It was a very exhaling of thankful worship to Almighty God, and an inhaling of all the great powers of His Holy Spirit.

Here then is the initial impulse from which this nation has taken its direction. These colonists, as a matter of fact, most of the early colonists, came to North America for God. In thirty-two years four Churches were built here in Jamestown. Wherever Christian people settled, God was given the first allegiance. So much so that many, many years later the Declaration of Independence could contain in its first paragraph a reference to the station "to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitled Them", and the second paragraph could include a declaration of the rights to which men "are endowed by their Creator", and the conclusion could state that "for the support of this declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor".

Yes, the colonists came to North America for God and for those things which the Spirit of God provides. They came as adventurers in Christian living as a tiny colony of heaven. It is, however, an interesting fact of history that men came first to South America for gold and for all those which the spirit of materialism provides. They were adventurers too, but in the modern sense of the word and in all that the word implies. As we look at ourselves today, we might well ask "what and to whom are we giving our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor? Are we giving them to the God of the North American colonists or to the gold of the South American Colonists?

Now then why do we concern ourselves with all this today? Why have we bothered to come here at some cost to our time and energy merely in order to preside over a few ruins and hold this service of commemoration for a group of people long dead? It is because, as someone has said: "History is a voice forever sounding across the centuries the laws of right and wrong. Opinions alter, manners change, creeds rise and fall, but the moral law is written on the tablets of eternity". Yes, so we come in order to see, and in seeing to understand, and in understanding to follow.

It was Dr. Lyman Abbot who said that "A country is made great, not by its fruitful acres, but by the men who cultivate them; not by its great forests, but by the men who use them; not by its railroads, but by the men who build and run them. America was a great land when Columbus discovered it, Americans have made it a great nation". That of course is the whole point.

So if by coming here today we have reminded ourselves of something of the spiritual faith and evangelism and daily living of our Jamestown forefathers, then our visit has not been in vain. Truly these people were "not disobedient to the heavenly vision". And recognizing the fundamental virtues which were theirs and which have become the strength of our nations; we cannot but be encouraged to build our lives on like foundations and to go forward with an extention of that spiritual crusade which they began.

Christianity and the Scientist

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

In the annual Northern Baptist Convention sermon the preacher declared that the church must seek to make modern scientists into disciples of Christ.

"We must find a way," he said, "by which the ideals of Christ will become the ideals of the scientists and the statesmen of our generation, so that the new atomic power which the scientists have discovered will be a benediction and not a curse to humanity."

This statement assumes that if the scientists were only Christian they would be able to use this new power for beneficial, and not for destructive, purposes. Actually the scientists are caught just like the rest of us. Until the atom bomb came along they had imagined that all technical progress would automatically make for human welfare. They discovered that this was not the case.

In seeking a way out of the dilemma in which they found themselves, some scientists actually played with the idea that science should establish its own universal standards and refuse to allow its discoveries to be used for destructive purposes. They were reminded of the fact that they had already been thus used in the bombing of Hiroshima. While many scientists abhorred the possibility of such destruction, they had nevertheless engaged in atomic research for precisely the purpose of winning the race against Nazi research in atomic energy.

This is a nice symbol of the fact that our choices, particularly in the field of political and international relations, are never between a simple good and a simple evil. We have to tread our way through many ambiguous choices. We have to become guilty in order to pur-

Let The Laymen Speak

By The REV. H. LEIGH PINK

Canon Residentiary of St. Mark's Cathedral, Grand Rapids, Mich.

WHY did the Christian Church extend so rapidly, root itself so deeply, in the First Century? Because its members were so much on fire with the Good News of Christ that they could not keep silent, and consequently every one of them was an active propagandist of the Gospel. Laymen, obedient to the Master's command, empowered by the Holy Spirit, seized every opportunity—in the home, in other's homes, at the street-corner, in the market-square—to tell the story of the Crucified and Risen Lord. And would to God it were true of the laymen of the Church today!

The greatest need in the world today is for soul-winners, people eager and able to "speak a good word for Jesus." Only three Americans out of every thirteen attend divine worship in Christian church buildings on Sunday, we are told. Overworked rectors, however zealous, cannot hope to touch more than the fringe of the great unchurched masses. What is the answer to the problem? A consecrated and articulate laity.

But what has happened in the past, what is happening now, whenever rectors ask their laymen to go out and engage in evangelism? Let's be honest. Up stands Sam Somebody-or-other, who is a good scout, a vestryman, an usher, and a typical Episcopal layman, and blurts out, "Aw now, Rector, you know that's not for us! That's your job! We fellers—why we wouldn't even know how to start! You leave the money-raising to us, and we'll leave the spiritual side to you!" And with a hearty chorus of "You bet!" "That's right!" the other laymen present heave a sigh of relief; and that is that.

But it is not good enough. It just won't do. It leaves the problem right where it was. Speaking recently about the February Evangelistic Campaign, the Presiding Bishop tagged as "roadblocks" those rectors who sidetracked the campaign in their parishes; possibly those were rectors who from past experience knew what reply they would receive from their laymen when approached to "go forth" as evengelists, knew how untrained even their willing laymen were for such work.

Let us be clear what we mean by Evangelism. Assembling laymen for the Men's Advent Corporate Communion is not evangelism, it is worship; sending laymen out on the Every Member Canvass is not evangelism, but rather (to quote a recent diocesan news-sheet) "a time to sell the communicants on the Church's program as well as subscribe a budget"; parish visitation by pairs of laymen on newcomers, the sick, and the inactive, in an attempt to encourage more active Church participation, while it offers magnificent opportunities for evangelism, as usually carried out is nothing more than "contact-making."

By Evangelism, we mean preaching the Gospel. That's what it meant to Philip, who converted thousands in Samaria, and in obedience to a sudden call hurried off under sealed orders to a lonely road in another region, to tell the story of the Saviour to an isolated seeker after truth. That's what it meant to Paul, who almost single-handed tackled the pagan countries of the Near East and Southern Europe—a world which in his day was being borne to its grave in spite of all that Art, Literature, Philosophy and Legislation could do to arrest its moral decay.

Christ's command to all His followers is very clear. "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." Paul saw himself as a Christian soldier, under obedience, ordered into a fight against sin and the Evil One. What a fighter he was! And what a world he tackled! Big, busy, beautiful cities, with parks and flower gardens, theatres and sports arenas, public baths and street-lighting, crammed with citizens, jockeys, traders of all nationalities, professional athletes, soldiers in uniforms of brass and leather, sailors of the important Roman Navy, scholars, priests, women of loose morality—all that motley medley of teeming life in such cities as Rome, Ephesus, Corinth, Athens, Antioch, and sin rampant everywhere! Extortion, organized slavery, legalized vice, unwanted girl babies put out on doorsteps to die, strange mystery cults meeting in secret for the performance of rites too obscene to be mentioned—a black picture of sinful materialism shot through with constant robbery and murder.

In the thick of it was Paul, telling the "old, old story" to tent-makers with whom he worked, addressing Athenian scholars, counselling runaway slaves, witnessing before fellow-prisoners in jails (and converting his jailer), exhorting Caesar's guardsmen, seizing every opportunity possible to do the work of an evangelist. Twenty years after he began his labors, the seeds of life and salvation had been planted deeply, rooted firmly. Within three centuries Christianity was to sweep heathenism from the face of Europe, largely through the work of this man and his friends.

We may well ask ourselves, as Christian workers, "How did he do it?" He did it through sources which are within the reach of every layman in the Church.

He never forgot the mercy which God had shown to him. He saw himself always as one redeemed to help bring others to knowledge of salvation—saved, to engage in soul-saving! Laymen, are you listening? Is not this your call, also?

He never forgot what Jesus, the Christ of God, had done for him,and his thoughts were constantly of the Crucified and Risen Lord. "I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified," he told the congregation in Corinth, revealing the spearhead of his evangelistic attack. Laymen, how often, daily, do you turn from the rush and rattle of business life, from profit and loss, to think of Christ on His Cross? Is it nothing to you?

He never forgot that his life had one great aim—to glorify the Lord Jesus. As Christ's aim was to glorify God the Father, Paul's was to glorify God the Son. Laymen, what is your aim in life? One matchless aim, such as that, would greatly simplify your life; and you yourself will be the first to admit that your life needs simplification, in an age of multifarious confusion.

He never forgot, that his commission from Christ was to "seek and save the lost," and he never forgot that in order to deal with the very worst he must needs keep looking at the very best. Once Paul had Christ focussed correctly, everything else fell into its right perspective. Lost to Christ! Suppose it was yourself, laymen? God forbid! But what of the many who are lost to the Master—the man in the street, the man in the restaurant, the man in the jail. . . .?

And above all, Paul never forgot that in his efforts to evangelize he was not "making a go of it alone." In fact, to Paul, it was not Paul who was working at all, but Christ working through him. Paul? Just a channel for the Holy Spirit, and he took at its face value, as we all should, the firm promise of the Risen Jesus that "Ye shall have power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you!" And so he purified himself to be fit for the Master's use, and that is the first and the last lesson for every Christian worker. Layman, be clean, simple in motive, pure in heart. What you are will always count for so much more than what you say.

Every Episcopal layman can do those things which Paul did, can be an active evangelist, if he will only set his heart, his mind, his soul, his strength to it.

But one thing more is needed. And what a need it is! Bible study! The Holy Bible is a closed book in the vast majority of American homes, in far too many homes of Episcopalian families. How many of our Men's Clubs in the parishes do any real, serious, down-to-business Bible study regularly every week? You know the answer.

Evangelism? Yes, our greatest need —but you cannot fight a battle, my brother, unless you know how to handle your weapons, and the sword of the Spirit, in its warfare against evil, is the Word of God.

There is not a rector in the country who would not throw up his hat, if only a group of his laymen would come to him and say, "Look here, we want you to lead us in a Bible study group for two hours every Wednesday night. We want to take these books of the Bible to bits and find out just what makes them tick."

If only we could get a Layman's Bible Study Group started in every parish from coast to coast, and continued faithfully under skilled direction week by week, throughout the year, the eventual cumulative result would be surprising, for the Holy Scriptures touch the conscience and stir the heart as nothing else can.

Let the laymen organize for Evangelism as crisply and efficiently as they organize their own businesses.

Let the laymen train for Evangelism under direction of their rector, as men obedient to command.

Let the laymen speak out boldly the mightiest message the world has ever heard. Evangelize!

Radio and Rural Church Extension

By The REV. CHARLES G. HAMILTON

Each Sunday two thousand attend the sixty-seven white churches in Monroe county, Mississippi. There are twenty thousand people in this Bible Belt area who could go to church. This is probably also true in Scarsdale, Hull's Cove, Mills Neck, Lothian, Larchmont, Lodi and Logan.

I used to try to reach people by holding services. At one time I had fourteen places where I held church services regularly—seven services each first Sunday—and week day services for two or three church members in many little towns.

Then came the war, with gas and and tires rationed, which cut down my travel, and the travel of members. The young left, war workers came in, and the old didn't walk. How could I reach the people?

I tried one Sunday a month a service over WCBI, a station just opened in a nearby town. It was announced to churches and members. It didn't reach all my field but it did reach more than I had been contacting. Then WELO opened in a town which reached a larger section, and I began on it the first Sunday they broadcasted. I added WCMA later. One of my churches pays part of one broadcast. I used my teacher's salary to pay for the rest. There are few contributors—no one gets rich from contributions to radio services.

8:30 is too early an hour. 11:45 is good only in places where it comes between morning services and news. 5:30 is good. 2:00 is the best, especially when your only competition is symphony orchestras. At present I am between a hillbilly program and a Holiness Baptist preacher. 11:00 Sunday morning does not reach church goers. Most of the religious programs on the radio beg for money and preach an extra brand of religion. National church-broadcasts have frequently been on the wrong hours, with sectional accents, irrelevance and highbrow language.

Mine is the only religious program most listeners in the section hear. How many hear it? WELO covers four counties in Mississippi, one in Alabama and four in Tennessee. The minimum daytime audience on WELO—Saturday morning—is six thousand. The minimum normal audience by commercial tests is thirty thousand on Sunday afternoons, and gets up to a hundred thousand on rainy days. Commercial tests of the preceding program show that ninety-four out of a hundred listeners are tuned to it, and sometimes ninety-seven out of a hundred radios in the surrounding counties are tuned to WELO. Rural radios stay on all day long. Low income groups listen more. There is not much religious fan mail on any program. But I hear of the services in every town I go and school children recognize my voice. One Sunday when the needle stuck on a transcription I really found out how many were listening.

The radio reaches the Negro half of the population, which is ignored by most radio programs and has none of its own. Some Negro pastors ask their congregations to listen. I could not visit churches to preach to them—this is the only inter-racial medium.

After fifteen years of serving one church, the community just discovered the church since it went on the air. This is not a reading age. Sermons in county papers do well to reach fifteen thousand people at the most. There are eight thousand members of our church in the state, of whom about two thousannd are at church on any given Sunday. This compares with a minimum of thirty thousand listeners to the radio service. Thirty thousand is more than all the people at all the churches in all that section on any Sunday.

We usually use transcribed hymns. The prayers are brief. The sermons are short, clear, simple, pointed, uncontroversial. There is no time to filibuster. Some are read, some are from notes, some are without notes. Usually there is no audience reaction, though a few people come in most Sundays. Three sylable words are avoided, as well as long sentences. Bible studies are especially good for week day broadcasts. They are not critical. Meditations with conservative theological backgrounds, social messages, transcribed "classic" sermons and monthly news in the light of the gospel are features. The last has the most listeners, is the only such program on the local radios and is carefully written. On Sundays in Lent last year the Seven Words were used. Different messages are given over the two stations, even on Easter, for some listen to both.

The purpose is to make Christians, not members of our church. It does win favorable sentiment in a section in which there has never been a church of ours with a hundred members. Fourteen of the twenty counties do not have one of our churches. People are largely pagan, especially those under sixty years.

The radio is the best approach to rural people today. It is not stopped by weather nor hurt by illiteracy. It over reaches denominationalism and prejudice. It knows no color line. It does not involve as much travel as going to many places. It does not demand the dollars nor the technical skill of movies. People do not go to meetings as they used to, not even to lodges and political speakings and pep rallies. Radio reaches most homes, and most people get much of their information and ideas from radio. Literature can follow it up. Many people hear without listening, but this is also true of school and sermons in churches and even of conferences like this. This is not a final solution but it is a way to get to the people.

A certain man went out to sow seed. And some of it fell on the wayside and was trodden under foot—some fell on stony ground—some among thorns—but other fell on good ground and brought forth good fruit, some thirty, some sixty, some a hundredfold. The seed is the Word of God. — —

The Strength Of A Parish

One often hears a church described as "an important church," "an influential church," "a large church," "an active church," etc. These are terms ordinarily used to judge the position of a church in a community. Sometimes certain individuals refer to a church as "a social church"—indicating that if you want to mingle with the "right people" you can easily do so by affiliating with such a church!

It is rather unfortunate that in this country the Episcopal Church is considered the "leading social church," meaning that most of the "society" people are members of it. A glance at the wedding announcements in the eastern newspapers, and especially in the New York Times, would show that the majority of social weddings are in Episcopal Churches. How tragic it becomes when members of other Christian denominations desire to be married in the Episcopal Church merely because, in their immature minds, it may seem to give them social distinction. This feeble attempt at "social climbing" is obvious to anyone, and should have no part in one's religious life. The teachings of Christ would seem to indicate that those in the social register probably will not get to Heaven more quickly than the beggars at the gates of the cities! Those who choose a church for social distinction reveal pitifully the shallowness of their spiritual life, and are to be pitied!

Furthermore, the fact that a church has a large income, or has organizations capable of raising large sums of money, or operate a dozen or more parish organizations of varied and sundry kinds, does not necessarily make it a strong church. It cannot be said that a church is strong even when every pew is filled at the eleven o'clock service if the chief attraction for the church service is a noted choir, or a brilliant orator preacher. This kind of demonstration smacks too much of Warner Brothers entertainment!

The strength of a parish probably lies in something quite different from the standards commonly accepted. In the Episcopal Church, the percentage of the congregation present at the Communion Service would be indicative of spiritual life. Empty pews at these services, and at the various Communion Services observing the Saints' days throughout the year would indicate spiritual weakness, and an open confession that the congregation is putting secondary secular things ahead of the fundamental spiritual things. How often do we see in many parishes many persons working in bazaars, etc., but who ignore the religious services of the church!

A congregation which makes God center in its life, which uses all the opportunities provided by the church to stimulate private and corporate worship of God, and which places frequent communion with Him far above any other parochial activity is really the only kind of a strong parish. A Christian congregation is not merely a social group, or a club, or a place wherein to meet the "right people," but spends more time on its knees than sitting down listening to chairmen of meetings or even writing checks for the support of the church's program—important as these acts may be. Each congregation may well ask itself whether or not the church and its services of worship is at the center of its life, or is on the outer periphery of its activities. Indeed, each individual may well ask whether or not God and the things of religion have top priority over everything else, or merely represent a consideration secondary to other things. One should not be misled. It is God who judges the strength of a church, and only His standards count! —G. C. A.

Bishop Gordon and The "D. D."

Sometimes "things done in secret" become known—and rightly so! It has become rather generally known that the Virginia Theological Seminary recently offered the Rt. Rev. William Gordon, newly consecrated Bishop of Alaska, the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity which customarily is given by many of our seminaries to any of their graduates elected to the episcopate. Then the unusual happened! Bishop Gordon declined the degree! He is reported to have said that he saw no reason at all for giving honorary doctorates automatically to bishops! This attitude redounds enormously to his credit and judgment.

At a seminary commencement some years ago, the President of the Board of Trustees was reading the citation for a newly elected bishop who was to be given an honorary doctorate. He had some difficulty in making a series of committee assignments, minor civic honors and club memberships sound scholastically impressive. An irreverent member of the convocation said in a stage whisper, "Why doesn't he simply say, 'He was elected a bishop!' "

Let us not be too hard on the episcopate. Some colleges award an honorary degree to whatever clergyman is chaplain of the institution. The difficulty is not with those to whom the degrees are offered, but with the institutions who reward them carelessly. The honorary D. D. has been cheapened by such practices. This humble action of Bishop Gordon may restore a bit of luster to this tarnished degree and lead to more careful consideration in awarding it.

BACK HOME IN BRITAIN

The People We Meet

Let the overseas visitor beware. After two weeks in Britain in 1948, it is very easy to tell the world what is wrong and what ought to be done. But after a longer stay and after talking to all sorts of people a parson is not quite so sure of himself. I have talked to parsons and members of the Congregations. Being from a farming family I have been given the country viewpoint. Living in London I have met there the business men and the city and suburban dwellers. I have met ex-officers in their club, and nearly every young man I have met gives me the ex-service man's point of view. Of course in the homes and in the "Q" where I live with my sister-in-law, most days we hear the woman's angle; as long as a parson is from overseas people will talk—want to talk with you.

The result is I like them all. They are the bravest and the most patient people on earth. The more I hear and learn the more certain I am that I do not know enough to form any opinion; but must always remember that these are the people who fought the Battle of Britain alone. They went to bed at night not knowing if the invaders would land on those shores before morning. They took all the destruction Hitler could inflict and they had the humble experience of flying bombs; they saw the children taken from school and put into uniform. These girls and boys went away gaily to tackle mountains to the very ends of the earth; some in the far east are not home yet and many, alas, will never come back.

In the war years food was desperately short, and even today Britain is the worst fed family except the defeated nations. Let us never forget that the people are tired and a man needs rest and food. And after nine years it seems long. It is by doing without that Britain is helping to feed the Germans.

The social upheaval is a tremendous thing but again, too complicated for any one to pass a quiet judgment. Things which were slowly coming to pass over long periods of years have become realities over night. It is illustrated by the cockney who surveyed all the destruction by bombs of the slum area of East London. For years the district was a disgrace.

The church and universities established missions and clubs to help make life tolerable and some day it would all be pulled down and new houses would give a fine people a chance to live a decent life. Looking over the total demolition in the morning after, the cockney sagely observed:

"Blimy, old 'itler's dare what our Guv'ments being going to do for an 'undred years and 'e's done it in one night, and who is going to start building?"

A lot of social reforms which have been talked about in many Parliaments all have been put through in one year. Many people don't like it, and many people have been hurt. Much of it is class legislation of the worst sort, but is it not always that way? In the old days the upper classes rested and the working classes had to take it. Now labor governs and the Unions control the representatives in Parliament, and today they call the time, and the former working class pays, and pays and pays again. For millions life is now bearable and physically comfortable; but I am not sure they are any more happy. For others the old lovely things of gracious living and a godly heritage have been taken away. It is all too complicated for me. But these are wonderful people.

CXXX

Page 79—The Ter Sanctus—Here, once more, a few words point us down the long vista of time, and bring to our attention the antiquity of our religious worship. The threefold repetition of the word Holy carries us back to the third verse of the sixth chapter of Isaiah in the Scripture, and in time it spans a period of about twenty-five centuries. As we hear Isaiah's record of his hearing the angels exclaim, "And one cried unto another, and said, Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of His glory." It gives us a sense of the infinity of worship.

It is highly fitting that the choir and congregation should join with the clergy in this reverent tribute to God, and to the thought of His presence with us in the Communion Service.

This solemn hymn of adoration is found in all Christian liturgies from the very earliest times. As now there was a variety in the Preface, but the Sanctus itself was as we have it except that at one time it included, "Hosanna in the highest, Blessed is He that cometh in the Name of the Lord". These words were used in the first English Prayer Book of 1549, but were omitted in the revision of 1552, and they have never been restored.

Although the threefold repetition implies the Trinity, yet it was used according to Isaiah centuries before it had appeared as a doctrine in the Church. This is one of those striking instances where a Christian teaching has its origin in a symbolic phrase or sign in ancient times.

In the same way the flame in the burning bush that burned but did not consume in the desert before the eyes of Moses was a forerunner of the tongues of fire that sat upon the heads of the disciples on the day of Pentecost. They also burned with the fire of Holy enthusiasm, but did not consume.

R. CARY MONTAGUE.

NOW I AM TWO

Since I last talked to you I have had another birthday. I am now two. I have learned a good deal now. I have learned to talk and to walk. I had many bruises and cuts but they helped me to "take it". Everytime I cried I have found that my parents try to find out why and treat that reason. Sometimes I do not know myself why I do it. They seem to know and have helped me to think of others than myself.

Now that I am older I have been experiencing letting others use my things. This is hard to do but I notice they share their things. Sometimes I feel that I am the only one sharing.

When we go for a walk sometimes we go to the Church. I like to go there. We walk in. We say a Prayer. I now can "thank God for many things". I have learned to say "I am sorry also". We listen to the organ music. I like to sing. We look at the pictures in the windows. We visit the font where I got my Christian name. I know my whole name now.

When it rains mother looks at books with me. At Christmas time my god-mother gave me a lovely book on the Christmas story. Here are some lovely pictures of the Baby Jesus, Mary and Joseph. We sing "Away in the Manger". We got some figures of Jesus, Mary and Joseph and had a little manger scene. We had a Christmas tree also with a star on it.

Every night when I go to bed mother and daddy say prayers with me. Another god-mother sent me a Prayer Book. Sometimes mother reads from this also. I like to have a Prayer Book like my mother and daddy. It is nice when we all kneel beside each other. If I am sick I kneel in bed and look at the picture over it.

During the day mother and daddy talk to me about God. They point out some of the flowers, trees, stones and rain and sun. We talk about Him a good deal and His creation and how we help Him.

GIRLS FRIENDLY SOCIETY SENDS MISSIONARY TO CHINA

Estes Park, Col.—Wishing a "bon voyage" in person to their own missionary to China will be the usual opportunity for members and leaders to the Girls' Friendly Society National Council, meeting in Estes Park, Colorado, June 26th to July 4th.

Violet Phinney, former GFS member and leader from Massachusetts, will sail to China immediately following the Estes Park Council, as a GFS-sponsored missionary teacher. She will teach English in one of the universities located in the western province of Yun-Kwei, where the Rt. Rev. Quentin K. Y. Huang is Bishop.

When national GFS leaders heard of Bishop Huang's need for a teacher of English in the university, where hundreds of young Chinese are flocking, they agreed to designate the Society's 1948 Mission Object to meet the need. And, further, among their own membership, they found in Violet Phinney, a well-qualified person, ready and willing to serve. Although she is an approved appointee of the National Council's Overseas Department, Violet Phinney will be supported entirely by GFS members.

In addition to the exciting experience of enjoying a first-hand acquaintance with their own missionary on the eve of her departure, leaders and members will participate in a full program of intensive leadership training and legislative meetings during the week at Estes Park.

Headliners responsible for workshop sessions include Miss Margaret Forsyth, National YWCA Foreign Division Director, who will come to Estes almost directly from Europe; Dr. Rudolph Wittenbery, group-work expert from the New York City School for Social Research; Mrs. Isabel Burger, Director of the Children's Experimental Theatre of Baltimore; and Miss Mary Pyburn, Cleveland Director of Religious Education.

The Rt. Rev. Elwood L. Haines, Bishop of Iowa, will be National Council Chaplain. Mrs. Haines is chairman of GFS National Council.

Recreational activities in program planning will be stressed during the leadership training course with the facilities and experts of the Estes Park Camp serving as resource.

MR. A. R. HOXTON HONORED

Alexandria, Va.—The highlight of the Commencement Exercises of the Episcopal High School, Alexandria, Va., June 2, 1948, was the announcement by Bishop Frederick D. Goodwin, President of the Board of Trustees of the School, of the endowment of a Mastership in Mathematics in honor of Mr. A. R. Hoxton, the Principal Emeritus. The endowment was made possible through the generosity of a group of Mr. Hoxton's devoted friends and former students.

Mr. Hoxton retired last year after forty-six years of continuous service at the Episcopal High School, thirty-seven of which he was principal, during which time his inspired leadership has enriched the fine tradition of the school and left an indelible mark on the character and minds of thousands of men who were once his boys.

Mr. Hoxton graduated from the University of Virginia with the B. A. degree in 1901. While there he excelled as both a player and coach of football and baseball. Honorary degrees were conferred upon him by the University of the South and Princeton University. Mr. Hoxton now resides in Alexandria, Va.

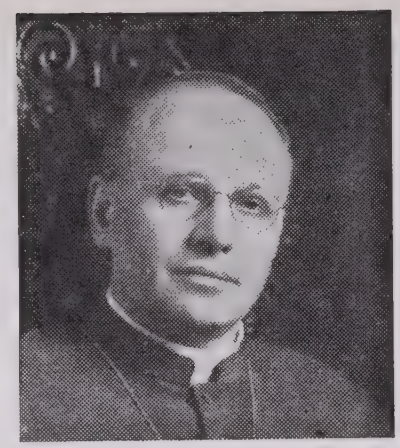
Scores of former students have written in gratitude for the practical help received. An attractive folder giving full particulars is available by writing the director.



BISHOP BRINKER STRESSES WIDER USE OF PRAYER BOOK SERVICES

Omaha, Nebraska.—Speaking on the forthcoming observance of the 400th anniversary of the publication of the Book of Common Prayer, the Rt. Rev. Howard R. Brinker, Bishop of Nebraska, urged a wider use of the prayer book and its rites. In speaking before the Diocese Bishop "Brinker" said:

"The 400th anniversary of the first book of Edward VI in 1549 will be celebrated next year and our liturgical commission is making plans that we may observe it properly and adequately.

"I believe this anniversary comes at a time of crisis in the life and history of our Church when confusion in rites and ceremonies should cause us to look back at our own liturgical beginnings and take stock of our own precious heritage. Here only will we find the true basis of unity which we so desire and pray for in our own Church. Let us hope that this 400th anniversary will take us all back to the Prayer Book and its doctrines, discipline and worship.

"The best way to prepare for this is to USE the book of Common Prayer in our homes, at our tables, before our hearthsides, at our bedsides, in our hearts and on our altars. Perhaps we might need additional prayers and litanies and some services, including the Eucharist, might need "enrichment," but certainly the Book of Common Prayer should have the first and primary place of honor on our Altars and in our services, and in our own personal loyalty as priests and laymen.

"The Book of Common Prayer with its traditional Prayer Book Use" inspires and encourages a ceremonial which is indigenous with our own soil and makes us feel "at home" with God and with our fellow worshippers. May we loyally develop this Rite rather than try to copy or imitate and foreign usage which at best will always be artificial and unreal to Anglicans anywhere and everywhere."

CHRISTIAN YOUTH CONFERENCE

New York, N. Y.—Episcopal Church members will have a share in the Third Quadrennial Christian Youth Conference of North America to be held August 31-September 5 at Grand Rapids, Mich. The sponsoring agency the United Christian Youth Movement, in which our United Movement of the Church's Youth (UMYC) holds membership, expects to bring together 5,000 young people to witness for Christ and to discuss the problems of interchurch cooperation. There will be group discussions, worship services, Bible study, pageants, recreation, and separate denominational meetings.

John Booty, of Detroit, recently elected chairman of the National Youth Commission, is serving on the Planning Committtee of the Conference. One member of the NYC from each Province has been appointed to serve on a general committee. Robert Taylor, of Brockton, Mass., is chairman. The work of this committee will be to assist in developing a program for Episcopal Church participation in the Conference and to provide information about the Conference to the various provincial youth organizations.

Each afternoon of the Conference there will be a meeting of Episcopal Church delegates with John Booty as general chairman. These sessions will present the facts about interchurch youth work, techniques involved, and areas of cooperation. The Canadian Anglicans have been asked to take part in certain of our sessions. There will be a daily celebration of the Holy Communion, using alternately the service from the Canadian and the American Prayer Books.

Any young person, age sixteen to twenty-five, is eligible to attend as an Episcopal Church delegate, provided the endorsement of the bishop of the diocese or the diocesan youth leader is secured. The Episcopal Church has accepted a quota of 100 delegates and ten leaders. Expenses must be borne by the diocese or the individual delegates. Endorsed delegates must register in two places: with the Division of Youth of the National Council, on forms provided upon request (sent to 281 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.), and the Christian Youth Conference of North America, 203 North Wabash Avenue, Chicago 1, Ill. Circular telling of fees and exuenses obtainable by request to either of the above addresses.

THE GROTON CONFERENCE

Groton, Mass.—The Conference and Retreat for Faculty and College Workers of the Episcopal Church will be held this year Monday afternoon, September 13 through Thursday morning, September 16, and will again be held at the Groton School, Groton, Mass. Leaders will be Professor Albert T. Mollegen, D. D., Professor of Christian Ethics at the Virginia Seminary, and the Rev. Daniel Corrigan, S. T. M., rector of Grace and St. Peter's Church, Baltimore.

Monday evening and Tuesday will be devoted to Professor Mollegen's addresses and our discussion of the topic, "The Place of Theology in Education." Tuesday night a retreat, led by Mr. Corrian, which will continue until breakfast Thursday morning. The two leaders are planning an integrated conference and retreat which will be of intense interest and help to all who are concerned with education in relation to the Christian faith.

The Conference is designed to nourish the faith of college and school faculty and church workers. It is not devoted to methods of student work. There will be ample opportunity for personal discussion with church workers who are engaged in excellent programs on their own campuses, but these will be side shows.

The cost is kept at a bare minimum in order to encourage everyone to attend. We look forward to the pleasure of your company at the Conference at Groton, September 13 to 16th. As accommodations are limited, registration should be made as soon as possible.

KENYON GRADUATES SIXTY-FOUR

Gambier, O.—Sixty-four young men were graduated in the traditional Latin ceremony at the One Hundred Twentieth Commencement of Kenyon College, Gambier, on June 14, before an audience of families, friends and alumni. Four of them were theological students at Bexley Hall, the Divinity School.

Thornton Wilder, playwright and novelist, thrice winner of the Pulitizer Prize, spoke on the subject: "The Middle of the Twentieth Century." He said the fluid quality of our times gives the individual a chance to participate, to help re-define the great fundamental issues which are in question.

"You don't know what you believe until you try your belief with experience," he told the graduates. "Many people live and die thinking they believe in democratic principles or in Christianity. But they have never tasted their beliefs in battle."

The Rt. Rev. Norman B. Nash, Bishop of Massachusetts, preached the baccalaureate sermon on the two roads to greatness, contrasting ambition and the life of devotion.

It was announced at the Alumni luncheon that the Kenyon Development Program has started on its second million dollars. Late gifts brought the Commencement tally to $1,003,070. Total gifts to the College this year were $279,707, not all of which is allocated to the Kenyon Development Program objectives: the new Wertheimer Field House, the library, dormitory, and endowment for faculty salaries.

At the close of the Commencement exercises, President Gordon K. Chalmers announced that over 40 per cent of the graduating class had already been accepted in the leading graduate schools of the country.

WORLD LEADERS PARTICIPATE IN CONFERENCE ON UNITED NATIONS

New York, N. Y.—Representatives of eight of the major religions of the world, together with representatives of seven of the numerically smaller religious groups, gathered in New York City June 16-18, under the sponsorship of the Church Peace Union, to discuss the moral and spiritual support of the United Nations.

Meeting at Town Hall, men and women from India, China, Lebanon, Great Britain, France, Turkey, Canada and other nations of the world, gathered under the auspices of the Church Peace Union in cooperation with the American Association for the United Nations, the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches, and forty-eight national and international cooperating organizations, to consider how the forces of religion in all nations can be mobilized into concerted action to support the United Nations and its efforts for the establishment of a peaceful, free world.

Ambassador Carlos P. Romulo, chief of the Philippine Mission to the United Nations, opened the conference, and Sir Carl A. Berendsen, New Zealand delegate to the United Nations, addressed the closing session of the meeting. More than a thousand delegates attended. "The United Nations and Its Task," "The Moral and Spiritual Resources of Mankind," "Religion and Human Rights" and "A Practical Program of Action" were among the subjects discussed.

The speakers were: General the Honorable A. G. L. McNaughton, chief of the Canadian Mission to the United Nations; Professor Lewis Mumford, philosopher and author; Mr. James P. Warburg, economist and author; Dr. W. E. B. DuBois, of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Mrs. Helen Gahagan Douglas, Congresswoman from California; Mr. Henry James Forman, author and editor; Dr. Jal Pavry, Parsee representative from India; Mr. Enrique Losada, United Nations delegate from Bolivia; Dr. Edmund Sinnot, President of the American Association for the Advancement of Science; Dr. C. L. Hsia, Minister Plenipotentiary, Chinese Delegation to the United Nations; Mr. Martin Hill, British member of United Nations Secretariat; Miss Freda Kirchwey, Editor of The Nation; His Excellency M. Hamdullah Suphi Tanriover, Depute d'Istamboul, Grande National Assembly, Turkey, and Dr. William Pierson Merrill, pastor emeritus, the Brick Presbyterian Church in New York City.

Among the religious represented at the conference were Buddhism, Judaism, Christianity, Zoroastrianism, Hinduism, Jainism, Confucianism, Islam, and Sikhism, as well as Christian Science, Ethical Culture, Theosophy, Baha'ism, Mormonism, New Thought, Vedantism, and Brahmu Samaj.

NEED IN YUGOSLOVIA

New York, N. Y.—"Not all is roses in Yugoslavia; there have always been thorns," wrote Robert Tobias of the World Council of Churches, in a special article for Church World Service. CWS had been able to get relief supplies into the country following a recent agreement with the Yugoslav Government, so that Episcopal Church contributions to the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief are helping in this needy country, aiding especially the students and faculty at the Orthodox Seminary in Belgrade as well as Protestant and Orthodox pastors and Church people throughout the county.

In spite of thorns, Mr. Tobias said, "Many people believe they are on the right road, and that many undesired political necessities today will be unnecessary, and, therefore, cast aside, tomorrow."

Yugoslavia has been influenced by two changing factors. First, the war, and within the German war, the civil war. Probably more destruction and more deaths came about because of the civil war than the German war. In many instances one cannot separate one from the other. "Entire villages and towns have been levelled as in Germany by Serbs, Croats, Germans and Italians, as well as by Allies. Fields are still torn and strewn with debris left from battles, cities are a strange motley of modern structures, beside bombed or shelled ruins. Two million people died or fled. It will be 20 years before the wounds have healed, and then there will be disfiguring scars.

"The churches are today in no better material position than the hour the noise of battle subsided," Mr. Tobian continued. "Half their leadership is lost. Much of their property is gone as a result of war destruction and looting. Some larger holdings have been broken up and distributed among the peasants. The Church was once supported by taxes. Now it is penniless. When Church and State were separated, the people were unprepared to carry on their responsibility to the Church through consecrated stewardship. There is no possibility of discussing rebuilding, or of launching out in new areas of Christian work for another two years, until a central core of the Church can be pulled back together. At the moment the very existence of the Church, the Church Militant, hangs in the balance.

"The Church is utterly prostrate, but that may mean the salvation of the Church as a new Church. Much of the institutional work of the Church is done by the State. But the Church is increasingly freed from the hindrances of thinking in institutional categories and is able to speak a vital message in time of crisis as a spiritual force. Many priests gain their livelihood as day laborers. Consequently, they have a new appreciation for the people. There is evidence of new life coming up from the roots.

"While the Government maintains a rigid policy of separation of Church and State, it is not hostile in administering its policy, described as 'interested concern.' In the realm of spiritual affairs, the government hopes that Church leaders, particularly in the villages, will play an increasingly prominent role in the education of illiterates, in cultural activities, organizing cooperatives and in humanitarian works.

"This is the day of opportunity and responsibility for the Western Churches and the Churches of other lands. The demonstration which the Western Churches make as to what a Church is and does in an environment of political freedom, but which has not achieved social and economic perfection will, to a great extent, determine the relationship of the Yugoslavian Churches to their State, to their people, and to Churches of other lands. If Western Churches bear positive witness to the universal message of the Carpenter of Nazareth, they will have demonstrated man's oneness, and God's concern for all."

COUNTRY PASTOR HONORED

The Rev. Edwin Shepard Ford, rector of St. Mary's Church, Sparta, N. J., was singled out by his Princeton University classmates, members of the Class of 1913 at their thirty-fifth reunion, for "completely unselfish service to his fellow-men and to his Church."

The Rev. Mr. Ford, who for the past three decades has served as a country pastor in a parish covering some five hundred square miles, was named as the recipient of the Class of 1931's annual award for distinguished service that in the past has gone to such prominent persons as the late John G. Winant, wartime ambassador to England, and Robert McLean, Philadelphia publisher and president of the Associated Press.

FLOOD DAMAGE IN ALASKA

New York, N. Y.—St. Mark's Mission, Nenana, Alaska, experienced a flood, due to the spring breakup on the Tanana River. Mrs. Lois Cox wrote to Bishop Bentley saying that the only dry ground in Nenana was the railroad track and a few feet in front of the Mission dwelling. The Bishop's lawn flooded first, making the water rise in the Bishop's Lodge and then the office and shop. When Mrs. Cox wrote, May 20, there was no water in the church or Mission dwelling, but the basements were full and there was no indication of recession.

It is not yet possible to estimate damage. Grounds are badly washed, Fishcamp is wrecked and "we have lost much bank and many trees." The water system was put out of order, but the pump motors were removed and put in a place of safety. Many people in the town have had to abandon their homes. Some of them were living at the Mission, others in the Pioneer Hall and the Roman church.

Belongings of the new Bishop, Dr. Gordon, are piled as high as possible, so it is hoped they will not be damaged.

At the office typewriters and filing cabinets had to be placed on tables, and some of the records were taken to Mrs. Cox's room.

"All has been done that can be done. All that we can do is watch and wait and do such things as are necessary. All are fine—the children are enjoying the boating made necessary by the chores about the place—the staff is fine and each is doing what is at hand and Fred has been little short of a genius," Mrs. Cox concluded.

New York, N. Y.—Another major advance in the use of the motion picture for church work was revealed by the Protestant Film Commission with the announcement of the completion of the commission's second film, "My Name Is Han." The picture, which follows the significant success of the first production, "Beyond Our Own," had a simultaneous world premiere in one hundred cities on June 15.

"My Name Is Han," filmed in China, was produced to coincide with the 1948-49 emphasis on study of the missionary movement in that country. An intriguing combination of documentary and dramatic techniques to emphasize the broad nature of missionary work is employed. No Occidental is seen in the picture. The camera follows the Chinese reliving events of the post-war period in the places where they occurred.

The story of Han, his family and their long trek home, has a universal quality true to the fundamentals of human nature wherever it has been touched by the hand of Christ.

Few non-theatrical films won the universal acclaim from professional movie critics and editorial writers which "Beyond Our Own" achieved. A well-organized publicity campaign is again under way for "My Name Is Han." The production, which is released through the Religious Film Association, is now available to churches, as well as other religious, educational and civic groups.

TRAINED DIRECTOR REMAKES CHURCH SCHOOL

New York, N. Y.—A Church school teacher with nine years' experience in two parishes, has become so enthusiastic over the remaking of a Church school by a trained director of Christian education, that she writes the story of the transformation for the benefit of other Church school workers.

"Our director came, to find a fairly typical Church school. A devout but overworked rector was unable to give much supervision; a group of well-meaning but completely untrained teachers assembled on Sunday mornings to give such instruction as had been given them as children. There were some grammar and high school teachers in the group, but no medium existed whereby any technique could be passed on to those of us who were completely untrained. Occasional teachers' meetings discussed disciplinary problems, without any particular conclusions being drawn.

"A course of study simply did not exist in any coherent sense. Everyone taught the course he had 'always taught' without any consideration of the overall problem or task.

"The new director did not come in and wave a wand, then watch all the problems fall neatly into place forever solved. Apparently she set herself first to develop esprit de corps. Monthly supper meetings were held with discussions afterwards, led by the director.

"I remember expecting her to tell us what to do. She discussed educational theories, what other people had done, and then we found ourselves applying theory and practice to our own situations and discussing what would apply to us. She threw a bombshell in one of these first meetings by asking us what the purpose of Christian education is, exactly. Something as basic as that was foreign territory, and we spent the whole evening talking about it.

"From there we attacked the Course of Study. We went through the Christian Education Chart step by step. Some of it we changed, some we adopted as suggested in the outline, but finally we came out with a specific and organized course. In the process our pet subjects were reshuffled and we found ourselves teaching new subjects. I had clung to Church History as my subject, but I was neatly maneuvered into a course on the Old Testament Prophets. This meant considerably more study, but also it meant a new approach and new enthusiasm.

"The Lenten Offering had always been a headache. The keynote of Lent was bitter competition between classes for the largest offering. This has been changed to a cooperative endeavor in which all classes share. Exhibits make the Lenten projects real.

"The director has given us new tools by introducing the use of film strips and colored slides, and she has encouraged the use of the Church school library which she has stocked with attractive and relevant books. She has made us aware of tools already existing in the public library and current magazines and related secular literature.

"Here leadership is not that of a dynamic extrovert, but rather is demonstrated in her ability to help others fit themselvese into their proper niches, and when they are ready, to move forward to others."

NATIONAL GUARD NEEDS CHAPLAINS

New York, N. Y.—Word has just been received by the Army and Navy Division of the National Council that there is a shortage of chaplains for the National Guard.

The National Guard is an integral part of national defense. It is a civilian military organization which believes that a strong and lasting peace can be assured by a well prepared America, and that such preparation would discourage the designs of would-be and Godless aggressors.

The Rev. Dr. Percy G. Hall, executive secretary of the Army and Navy Division, pointed out that "men who were members of the National Guard before and during World War II realize the important part that organization played in furnishing cadres for leaders in the training of new divisions. America, then, must depend upon her civilian Army, the National Guard, to furnish the backbone of her defense.

"The Church must never let the men feel that it is not conscious of the spiritual and moral need of those who are giving themselves in the National Guard. The Church played an important role during World War II and must continue to do so, in order to keep religion in the Army.

"All through the history of our Armed Forces, the chaplains have made a good record. Commanders realize now, more than ever before, the need of spiritual men to guide our young men in goodness and pure living.

"In the National Guard at the present time there should be 570 chaplains, but it has only 150 to administer to the moral and spiritual welfare of approximately 300,000 young men in the forty-eight states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and Hawaii. It is hoped that some of the chaplains who were on active duty during World War II will avail themselves of this opportunity for service to the young men, who realize the importance of this phase of national defense."

You may ask local National Guard Commanders about vacancies."

"FAIR OF OLD PHILADELPHIA"

Philadelphia, Pa.—The "Fair of Old Philadelphia," held on Wednesday, June 9, for the first time in seven years, was a great success. This success was due to the enthusiasm, cooperation and hard work of a large proportion of the members of Christ Church. The "Fair" realized $574.00, which will be used in the maintenance of the Church building.

ORDINATIONS

Baltimore, Md.—One priest and three deacons were ordained this morning by the Rt. Rev. Noble C. Powell, Bishop of Maryland in a beautiful and impressive service at the Pro-Cathedral. Ordinarily such ordinations take place in the separate parish churches of the ordinands, but because of pressure upon him in preparation for his departure for London and the Lambeth Conference, Bishop Powell held this composite ordination before a congregation which filled the church. The ordinands were as follows:

To the Priesthood:

The Rev. Charles Carroll Eads, to be Assistant at the Church of the Ascension and Prince of Peace, Walbrook.

To be Deacons:

The Rev. Hunter Wyatt-Brown, Jr., son of the Right Reverend Hunter Wyatt-Brown, D. D., Retired Bishop of Harrisburg, and at one time Rector of St. Michael and All Angels Church, from which parish Mr. Wyatt-Brown was presented.

The Rev. John Evan Owens, Jr., who will become Chaplain of St. James' School for Boys, Washington County.

The Rev. Henry Albert Zinser who will become assistant at Trinity Church, Towson.

The various candidates were presented: Mr. Eads by the Rev. Joseph C. Wood; Mr. Wyatt-Brown by the Rev. Dr. Don Frank Fenn; Mr. Owens by the Rev. Brinley R. Madge; Mr. Zinser by the Rev. Henry Nelson O'Connor. The preacher was the Rev. Dr. W. Norman Pittenger, Instructor in the Department of Christian Apologetics, the General Theological Seminary, New York.

Bishop Powell officiated at both services of ordination and was celebrant in the Holy Communion which followed. The Epistle was read by the Rev. Joseph C. Wood, Rector of the Church of the Ascension and Prince of Peace, and the Gospel by the Rev. Dr. Don Frank Fenn, Rector of the Church of St. Michael and All Angels.

There was one variation which deeply moved the great congregation. When the Rev. Hunter Wyatt-Brown, Jr., was ordained, Bishop Powell gave way to Bishop Wyatt-Brown who uttered the words of ordination for his son. Present in the congregation was an older son of the Bishop, the Rev. Charles Wyatt-Brown for whom also he had fulfilled a simiar office. Bishop Wyatt-Brown was accompanied by Mrs. Wyatt-Brown who participated as a worshipper in the service

The Master of Ceremonies was the Rev. Canon Harold N. Arrowsmith, in charge of the Pro-Cathedral. A choir of boys led the singing and contributed a beautiful treble anthem at the offertory under the direction of Mr. Donald McDorman, organist and choirmaster.

David Loegler and Shelbert C. Harris, Jr., were ordered Deacons by Bishop Tucker in Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland, on June 15. The Rev. Almon R. Pepper, D. D., preached the sermon. The Rev. David Loegler will be Director of the Department of Christian Social Relations and a member of the Cleveland City Missions staff. The Rev. Shelbert C. Harris will be minister-in-charge of St. Mark's Mission, Shelby, Ohio.

RESOLUTIONS

Mrs. Anna McBryde Davidson

Whereas, Anna McBryde Davidson, daughter of a distinguished family and tradition, widow of a beloved and honored member of the faculty of the Virginia Polytechnic Institute, died March 2, 1948, and was buried from the church which held undisputed primacy in her life; and

Whereas, we, the members of the Auxiliary, deeply lament the loss of one whose interest and efforts antedate our present organization and buildings; whose vision for our work was so inclusive as never to disparage the worth of those endeavors which lay outside her immediate interest; whose faith, so deeply rooted in sound learning, was endearing in its charity of judgment and understanding, and yet was devoid of all sentimentality; whose sharing of her rich personal gifts of intellectuality and gaiety was a source of joy to her friends, and whose sharing of her home was a delight both to her friends and to countless acquaintances whose unquestioned claim upon her hospitality was their common faith; whose endless and often anonymous giving of her material resources appears in the increased material beauty and expanded service of our church; and whose presence evoked our affectionate regard because she had become a symbol of the best in intelligent and loyal churchmanship; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we voice our realization that a gentle, wise, ennobling spirit has worked and loved among us; and be it

Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions be included in the minutes of our meeting, be sent to The Southwestern Episcopalian and The Southern Churchman, and, as evidence of our esteem and sympathy, that a copy be sent to members of her immediate family.

RESOLUTION

In the death of Professor Conrad T. Logan, the Church and community have suffered a great loss.

Mr. Logan was for many years a faithful member of Emmanuel Church, Harrisonburg, Virginia. He served on the vestry for several years, frequently heading important committees, which accomplished their work due to his skill and tact. He also served as junior warden before he retired from the vestry.

He was interested in the community as well as the Church, taking an active part in civic clubs and other worthy projects for a better community. He was much beloved at Madison College, where his years on the faculty had a wonderful influence on those with whom he came in contact.

His outstanding community service was the constructive work he did as president of the Rockingham Library Association, in which he succeeded the Rev. Walter Williams, former rector of this church.

His pleasing personality endeared him to all with whom he came in contact, and this vestry and the whole community will miss him greatly.

Respectfully submitted by your committee.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE SCIENTISTS

sue the limited good of the moment, in this case the defense of a civilization against barbarism.

It is a serious misapprehension among Christians to imagine that secularism believes in everyone seeking his own ends, while Christians believe in the "ideals of Christ." Actually many secularists are consistent idealists. They ceased to be Christian not because they ceased to believe in ideals but because they ceased to believe in the Christian diagnosis of the human situation and the Christian answer to that situation.

That diagnosis had a much more tragic view of the conflict between the "good that we would do" and the "evil that we would not, which we do" than modern secularism. The Christian faith recognized our tragic involvement in collective guilt, while secularism assumed that we could do the right thing in every situation if only we tried hard enough.

Modern scientists will not be won to Christianity by our effort to make "idealists" out of them. They are idealists already. But they have had an experience which has shocked them out of their moral complacency. They found that while they were trying to do good, they did evil. This discovery has given them a very uneasy conscience. They don't quite know what to do about it.

It is upon the point of that uneasy conscience that the Christian faith must speak to them. If it merely tells them that they could use modern atomic energy for beneficial rather than de-

My mother and my daddy let me help with the dishes, set the table and use my little lawn mower. It is fun being with them.

One of the hardest things I had to learn was to obey. It was hard to learn to share, as it still is, but to obey every time is hard work. When I do not, everyone is unhappy including myself. There is just so much to learn.

Sometimes I have to sit on the "thinking chair" and other times I am put in my room. Once I was so mad I went in there myself and shut the door. It surprised me as well as my mother.

A Call to the Churches

For the Observance of Independence Day 1948

In this year of our Lord 1948, the anniversary of the birth of our nation falls on a Sunday. It is fitting that on such an occasion recognition be given to those spiritual realities which have sustained our national life during these one hundred and seventy-two years. Accordingly the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America urges the churches, either at their regular services or in united community gatherings

To Remember

Our Christian heritage which has been the foundation of our national life during the years, which has shaped our individual and civic ideals, and which has influenced our policies both private and public through many generations.

To Give Thanks to Almighty God for His beneficent Providence which has preserved us a nation in which liberty prevails despite the pressure of many adverse forces;

To Make Confession

before God of our shortcomings where we have failed to embody in thought and practice the ideals of our national life and the tenets of our Christian faith;

To Pray

That freedom and justice may be so accepted and practiced in our personal and social relationships as to make evident our sincerity and the worth of our democracy;

That our association with other nations may be so marked by wisdom and goodwill as to establish confidence in our purposes and hope for the future of the world;

That those things which make for peace may so prevail among the nations that men may learn to live together in understanding and brotherhood;

That God's holy and redeeming purpose in Christ may be so proclaimed that men shall be drawn to Him, and find their way into that divine Kingdom which alone is the hope of mankind and the ground of lasting peace.

Meditations In His Presence

"They may hear, and receive Thy holy Word . . ." (From the prayer for the Whole State of Christ's Church, page 74.)

One of the reasons why men go to church is to hear God's word. But hearing and receiving are two different operations. When we sit in the Episcopal Church we do so in order to be comfortable and to give our full attention to the learning of the moment—whether instruction, reading or preaching.

Quite naturally we hear if we listen at all. But frequently our minds are far away on worries or distractions, and we hear the words merely as sound droning from some distant place. Only as we listen and hear and receive, that is take in, will the intent of this prayer phrase be accomplished.

In order to fully receive God's word we must understand it. Is that not the point and purpose of these meditations in His presence—to snatch out a word or a phrase and to pour its full meaning into our lives?

A few suggestions for hearing and receiving God's holy word:

Expect some personal direction from it.

Seek an answer to the need uppermost at the moment in it.

Hold as sacred commitment the revelation which comes from it.

Repeat the meaning over until fixed.

Keep it as the focus of intention as you commune with Him.

Carry it away as the divine command for a next step.

Only by your cooperation and effort can the prayer be made more than words.

J. W. KENNEDY.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

Inside West Point

By COLONEL GEORGE R. STEPHENS, U. S. A., West Point

After every war in our history there has been a sudden and marked revulsion from things military. The desire of the people in general to forget the days of doubt, tenseness, and sacrifice becomes evident abruptly, almost from the moment the firing ceases. This reaction—with most people—is not unnatural. The period of strain and shortages, willingly endured during the national emergency, is logically followed by a period of relief and freedom of action, a period in which one irresistible determination manifests itself on all sides, the determination to return at once to normal American ways of life. There are some groups, however, whose reactions are less natural and venial. These elements see in the moment of surfeit felt by the majority an opportunity to capitalize upon our removal of our mental guard. And some groups, with the inconsistency noted by Kipling in his poem on the British soldier, turn sharply upon the very agents of their victory and with almost sadistic intent cry aloud for the immediate dissolution of the forces which have accounted in large measure for their peace and safety.

Many attacks have been made upon the Army in general and upon every phase of the Army in particular. West Point, of course, has received its share of the cannonading and the sniping. It is not my purpose here to answer these charges, unjust as I feel them to be. My purpose is merely to state a few facts about West Point which I am convinced should be more widely disseminated. Perhaps it is as well to have the facts presented by someone other than a West Pointer, one less likely to be considered prejudiced. The facts, at all events, should be brought to light, for I fear that West Point is completely misunderstood outside the immediate vicinity.

The much quoted objective of all training at the U. S. Military Academy is "to instruct and train the Corps of Cadets to the end that each graduate shall have the qualities and attributes essential to his progressive and continued development throughout a lifetime career as an officer of the Regular Army." But what are the qualities and attributes which are essential? Much seems to be implied here which escapes the average observer. More important than any set of facts or skills is the man. Character and leadership are considered of greater importance than professional knowledge in the training of an officer at West Point. The authorities are striving unceasingly to improve the type of man graduated from the Academy. They, therefore, have to consider all phases of the cadet's life and development: the spiritual, the intellectual, the physical, and the social. It is their aim to give each cadet certain plus values or quantities in each of the foregoing phases of life: enough for the officer-to-be, himself, and enough to enable him to help others who may be lacking in one or more ways. The Academy is peculiarly fortunate at present in having as its Superintendent Major General Maxwell D. Taylor. General Taylor's war experiences, for instance his parachute jumps in Normandy, in Holland, and in Belgium, are too well known to require detailed review here. It will be sufficient perhaps to call attention to the fact that he is not only a brilliant soldier, but an inspiring leader and a sound educator as well, just the right man to guide West Point at this time. General Taylor himself is, and expects every officer on duty at West Point to be, an example worthy of emulation by the cadets.

Character building may well be considered the number one aim of the U. S. Military Academy. It may surprise some readers to be told that a great influence here is the religious one. The beautiful chapel crowning the hillside and dominating the landscape symbolizes the important place of religion in the life of the cadet. Although Catholic cadets may attend Mass at Holy Trinity Chapel, on the Post, and Jewish cadets may attend services each Sunday in the old Cadet Chapel, the great majority of the cadets attend the Cadet Chapel where there is a soul-stirring service. Many a cadet and many a visitor, I am sure, finds in this service the central inspiration of West Point; for the music of the unique organ, the processional, the singing of the large choir, and the brief but direct spoken word have an impact which few cadets can ignore. Consider for a moment the effect of hearing the Corps repeat in unison the words of the Cadet Prayer, written by Colonel Clayton E. Wheat, former chaplain of cadets:

O God, our Father, Thou Searcher of men's hearts, help us to draw near to Thee in sincerity and truth. May our religion be filled with gladness and may our worship of Thee be natural.

Strengthen and increase our admiration for honest dealing and clean thinking, and suffer not our hatred of hypocrisy and pretense ever to diminish. Encourage us in our endeavor to live above the common level of life. Make us to choose the harder right instead of the easier wrong, and never to be content with a half truth when the whole can be won. Endow us with courage that is born of loyalty to all that is noble and worthy, that scorns to compromise with vice and injustice and knows no fear when truth and right are in jeopardy. Guard us against flippancy and irreverence in the sacred things of life. Grant us new ties of friendship and new opportunities of service. Kindle our hearts in fellowship with those of a cheerful countenance, and soften our hearts with sympathy for those who sorrow and suffer. Help us to maintain the honor of the Corps untarnished and unsullied and to show forth in our lives the ideals of West Point in doing our duty to Thee and to our Country. All of which we ask in the name of the Great Friend and Master of Men. Amen.

This prayer is not a mere formula. It is the epitome of West Point's religious attitude. Constant repetition serves only to emphasize its precepts.

Religious interest is very much alive at West Point. Every week day morning a small group meets voluntarily for a few minutes in the chaplain's office. The Chaplain, the Rev. Frank E. Pulley, is a popular figure on the Post. He is friendly, kindly, and wise. The cadets naturally seek him out as a friend with whom they can discuss their wide variety of problems.

Regular religious training, however, is only part of the character building process. The highest ideals are kept before the cadets throughout his stay at the Point. And for this phase of the cadet's life the Commandant of cadets takes his place beside the Superintendent and the Chaplain. This responsibility of the Commandant has long obtained. As early as 1829 we find references in the Regulations to the part of the Tactics Department in the character training of cadets. In 1863 the character of the ideal commandant was sketched by Professor Peter S. Michie (The Life and Letters of Emory Upton, 1885, p. 251, quoted by S. Forman in The Educational Objectives of the U. S. Military Academy, 1946, p. 35) as follows:

His example should be that of the ideal soldier, officer, and gentleman. He should cultivate soldierly honor among the cadets until it attains vigorous growth. He should rebuke with severity the first tendency to prevarication or dishonesty in word or act. With a system of divided responsibility, which ultimately rests on one or two comrades, he should control all of strict and increasing exactions.

To make his government successful he should be endowed with the highest soldierly qualities in personal bearing at drill, and even in every act while subject to the vision of his corps.

The present Commandant, Brigadier-General Gerald J. Higgins, of the class of 1934, is a good example of the ideal leader described above. Like General Taylor he jumped with his men into Normandy and Holland. Under General Taylor he was second-in-command of the famous 101st Airborne Division in its epic fight at Bastogne. Young, popular, brilliant, and battle-tested, he, together with his tactical officers, illustrates for cadets the finest type of American Army officer.

Responsibility for good conduct on the part of cadets was early felt by the cadets themselves. Pride in the Corps had given rise to the handling of honor cases by the cadets through representative committees as early as the '70's. The modern Honor Committee developed after the First World War. During that war, because cadets were at West Point for a shorter period, it was felt that possibly the high standards of character would suffer. The Academic Board, however, after study of the question, expressed the view that tradition was strong and that high standards were being handed down from class to class and being nourished as well by the officers of the Post. (See Forman, op. cit., p. 38.)

When he was superintendent of the Academy in 1922, General MacArthur spoke of the traditions as follows:

In this century-old democracy of the cadet body, tradition has developed a group pride for the Honor of the Corps which is responsible for the maintenance of the high standards of individual conduct. Under its inspiration each cadet not only models his own conduct along high standards, but is jealous of the actions of every other member insofar as those actions relate to the reputation or well being of the whole. An unwritten code imposes an obligation on the part of each member of the Corps to report voluntarily, even to the disregard of personal friendship, any deception or falsehood. The code, with its rigid high standards, has developed spontaneously from the experience of generations of cadets, so that the Corps painstakingly models its own life and conduct. It is not the result of a disciplinary system imposed from above but of the better discipline emanating from within the student body itself. Without this pride in the Honor of the Corps, and its omnipresent influence upon every thought and act of the cadet, the authorities could shape but crudely and ineffectively that character so necessary to the graduate. (Quoted by Forman, op. cit., p. 38.)

Today the Honor System continues to work. It is customary for a cadet to report himself for a breach of the Code, even if his dereliction were unintentional. Each cadet acts on the theory that he must not take an unfair advantage of any of his square-shooting classmates. It is the cadets themselves, rather than the officers, who keep this tradition alive. And it is not the breaking of a rule that is considered a heinous offense; it is the lie or the definite attempt to take advantage of one's fellow cadets which is not tolerated. The worst punishment that can be meted out to a cadet is not dismissal for an offense against a rule or regulation, but the silencing act on the part of his own associates who thus stigmatize him as mean and dishonest. If a cadet is "silenced," he generally leaves the Corps of his own volition.

From what has been said, it is clear that the graduate of West Point has had inculcated several desirable traits of personality; faith in God and in humanity; honesty in all his dealings; and loyalty to his fellows, to his organization, and to his country. Certainly from among such men we can safely select leaders for government positions as well as for army positions, "Duty, Honor, Country" is the motto of West Point. Is it likely that a man with a West Point background and ideals would have his country's interests less at heart than the average youth of our cities or farmlands? Is it likely that the caliber of West Pointers has changed for the worse in the fifty years since Theodore Roosevelt paid them tribute? In 1902 he said, "This institutions has completed its first hundred years of life. During that century no other educational institution in the land has contributed so many names as West Point has contributed to the honor roll of the nation's citizens." (Extract from his address at the Centennial Exercises, U. S. Military Academy, June 11, 1902.) If my judgment, based upon my experience of more than twenty-five years of teaching in civilian institutions as well as in the two Academies, carries any weight, I should like to say that there is no evidence that West Point's record is changing for the worse at the present time. In fact, it is probably improving. In my experience, if we are to judge men by character (alone), as well as by knowledge, I have never seen a better product than the present West Point one. But let us look further at the intellectual side of a cadet's training.

The desire of everyone at West Point is to keep the institution one on the college level and to add military instruction of a general nature during the summers. Within limits this attempt has been successful. Careful studies have been made of the curricula in colleges and universities and the modern trends noted. Whether one considers the Academy essentially or partially an engineering college, the charge of narrowness, sometimes made, will hardly stand if the facts be investigated. In fact, educational ideas which are now called experimental or revolutionary, have long obtained at West Point. Comparison of the West Point System with other programs shows that the Academy program is well integrated and abreast of the times. One example must suffice here. A comparison of the West Point Program with Yale University's Standard Program shows the following advantages in the West Point Program:

1. More time allotted to courses (about 20% more).
2. More courses (22 for West Point, 20 for Yale).
3. More basic courses (the name basic studies are prescribed, but West Point builds upon these basic courses in the second year. Yale has not done this, but plans to do so in 1947-1948).
4. More distribution courses (10 for West Point, 6 for Yale).
5. More coordination in the concentration courses during the two years. (Coordination was the main objective of the new program at Yale.)
6. More integration courses (2 or more for West Point, 1 for Yale).
7. Less electives (the elective is no longer considered a desideratum. Yale still allows 6 electives, more than in other universities. The figures used above are taken from an estimate made by Brigadier-General Roger G. Alexander, the first Dean of the Academic Board. Anyone interested in details about the curriculum should also see the many statements on the subject made by Major-General Maxwell D. Taylor, especially The West Point Curriculum, comments made to the Secretaries of War and Navy on the occasion of their visit to West Point, May 18, 1946).

In addition to giving a normal college course as has been suggested, West Point has the added task of instilling character and the personal attributes essential to an officer. A broad basic military education is provided rather than individual proficiency in the technical duties of junior officers of the various arms. Specialization is postponed until the newly commissioned officer reaches his branch school.

The quality and the method of instruction at West Point are noteworthy, for they have both been subjects of controversy. Formerly, the instructors were usually West Point graduates who had been called back because of their high standings in their special subjects and their generally recognized officer-like qualities. Now, though the selections are still made with these same points in mind, prospective instructors, before beginning a tour of three years of teaching, are given a year in a graduate school which they may select from a list of civilian colleges and universities issued by the Office of the Adjutant-General. Furthermore, since the war when many civilians and reserves replaced regular army officers called away from the Academy for field duty, non-graduates who are professional teachers have been frequently commissioned for longer periods of time. Thus the quality of the teaching is being improved. There are now several officer-instructors who hold postgraduate degrees. Now, this development is all to the good. But it should be more generally recognized that the average instructor has had much education not awarded the academic degree. Indeed, the degree is hardly a suitable measuring stick for the education of the army officer. The Superintendent, the Commandant, the dean, and the heads of departments have often had as much schooling and as much teaching experience as the average Doctor of Philosophy in civilian institutions. These facts are too often entirely overlooked.

The methods of instruction at the Military Academy differs somewhat from that in most civilian colleges. The most striking difference, already noted, is that there are virtually no elective courses at West Point. With the exception of a partial choice in the department of modern languages, all cadets take the same course. All instruction is based upon small sections of 10-14 cadets who recite daily and receive a daily mark. By and large the classroom methods advocated by Colonel Sylvanus Thayer have remained in force. Although modifications have crept into some courses with the passing of time, it is still felt that "every cadet should exercise his own faculties to the utmost, to the end that his mind and character might attain their maximum development." (Cp. U. S. Military Academy, Catalogue of Information, 1946, p. 2.) General Taylor commening upon these features of the West Point training remarked:

These deviations from college practice arise from the inherent differences existing between cadet and civilian student bodies. The former group has a single professional goal, that of becoming an army officer. The justification for the prescribed curriculum rests on the assumption that there is some optimum combination of undergraduate studies for developing the capacities and aptitudes required for the military profession. We believe that the experience of nearly 150 years warrants that assumption. Furthermore, it is possible at West Point to have a curriculum based upon strictly cultural and military considerations, apart from any need for presentation of attractive courses to induce students to attend and remain in college. (See General Taylor, op. cit., pp. 2-3.)

There is no feeling among the authorities at West Point, however, that the new curriculum is the final word in educational development. General Taylor is always eager to receive the objective criticism of leading educators and military figures. In September, 1945, the Secretary of War invited a Board of Consultants, headed by Dr. Karl Compton, president of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, to visit West Point and to criticize the program. In November the Board submitted its report to the Secretary of War. In this report the Consultants commented most favorably upon the composition of the postwar curriculum, the modern equipment of the academic departments, and the methods of instruction in use. The Academy, however, is far from smug about praise of this kind. A permanent committee was at once appointed to study curricula. Investigations are under way regarding the best methods of screening candidates for the Military Academy and of estimating their aptitudes for the service once they have been admitted. The best methods of teaching languages are always under consideration, and courses in military psychology and leadership are under experimentation. With the present direction of the Academy, it is unlikely that the steady progress of the educational program will be checked.

Physical training naturally plays a very important part in the West Point Program. This training is based upon the principle that the best trained mind is of little value to the professional soldier unles it is housed in a healthy body.

The whole plan for physical training really falls into two parts: athletics and physical education. The intercollegiate athletic program, including some 18 sports, is operated without cost to the government and independently of the remainder of the athletic program, with which it is, however, closely linked. As usual football, the greatest source of income, supports itself and many of the minor sports as well. The Army Athletic Association, which administers this part of the program, also presented the Academy with a fine skating rink which is popular for recreation of cadets during the winter months. The Association is at present building an eighteen-hole golf course on the reservation for the use of all personnel at West Point, again at no expense to the government.

The Department of Physical Education is interested, not only in the present fitness of each cadet, but also in the preparation of cadets for a lifetime of enjoyment of physical activities. The Fourth Classmen receive instruction in heavy apparatus, swimming, wrestling, boxing, tumbling, calesthenics, posture, voice and command, and outdor track and field. The upper classes receive instruction in athletic coaching in one sport, training in functional swimming, and unarmed combat, and advanced instruction in various sports. Weather permitting several attendances in skiing are substituted for other sports.

Finally, the social life of the cadet is considered a part of his preparation for a military career. Social diversions are encouraged during week-ends and other free time. Under the supervision of the cadet hostess and her assistant hostess, cadets can meet and entertain friends in the reception room in Grant Hall. Dances and teas, both formal and informal, are scheduled every Saturday during the academic year. Informal hops at Camp Buckner are part of the summer program. Furthermore, there are many picnics, concerts, plays, and lectures open to the friends and relatives of cadets.

The cadet seems to value especially an invitation to visit an officer in his home. Here he not only has a taste of human atmosphere and cooking, but also gets an idea of what the future may hold for him. Many cadets are now entertained by officers, but a new plan is being considered. Since it is felt that some cadets are overlooked in the invitations to visit in officers' homes, an officer-advisor system may be adopted so that each officer will entertain at least three Fourth Classmen during the year. This system will assure each new cadet of at least one visit in an officer's quarters.

The general interest of the authorities in the social manners of the cadets results in high standards of behavior in all situations. The principle of neatness, polish and poise, so desirable in an army officer, are partially developed in the cadet's social activities here at West Point.

From time to time the suggestion is made that West Point has outlived its usefulness. The minority who would discard the Military Academy harp on two points: the so-called 'caste system" and the growth of military units in widely scattered colleges and universities. Now, anyone familiar with West Point knows that the "caste system" argument is a man of straw. Of course, there are a few disgruntled individuals who did not find the discipline of a great military force easy to undergo. These have said harsh things about officers without considering how small a percentage of officers were West Point graduates. We should not be surprised at fulminations of this kind. We can hardly expect any large organization to function under pressure without some friction. Nor do we contend that the army was unique or perfect. Officers were remiss on occasions and West Pointers made mistakes. But enough has been written on the small number of officers who were West Point graduates to convince reasonable and open-minded thinkers that the charges are insidiously conceived.

The acceptance of the statement that the military units in the various colleges could put out a better product than the U. S. Military Academy is rash to the point of suicidal intent. My foregoing remarks have implied what West Point aims to give its graduates beyond the mere professional knowledge which can be instilled elsewhere. I have also tried to hint what the product is like. Graduates have proved that they have qualities of leadership, the outgrowth of the traditional ideals of West Point: strong character, the result of the emphasis upon integrity rather than knowledge; and trained minds, the result of the willing acceptance of rigid military discipline during their educational training. These qualities cannot be easily duplicated just anywhere. West Point is a high tension center in the newly planned military training program. What Massachusetts Institute of Technology and California Institute of Technology have been for engineers throughout the country and what Harvard under James, Royce and McDougall has been for psychologists, the service Academies must be for the numerous naval and military units scattered throughout the nation and its territories. As the influence of the Naval Academy is felt on the smallest ship in the fleet, so the influence of West Point is necessary in each school giving military instruction. The abandonment of the Military Academy would leave the different military units free to follow whims. Without the model of West Point to guide them, these units would develop arbitrary rules, independent and varying leadership, and vagaries destructive of the team spirit and cohesion desired. Furthermore, abolition of our greatest school for character-building would be simple retrogression.

Again, it is suggested from time to time that the Academy should be made into a postgraduate institution. Such a move would be fatal to the Military Academy and would remove the influence in the army which it has exercised in the past. As General Taylor has said, 'The character training at West Point is its crowning glory and can be effective only if the cadets enter young, in the malleable period of their lives."

West Point, in keeping its instruction on the undergraduate level, is in harmony with the times. The trend in modern education is away from specialization in the early years. More and more the colleges are placing the accent upon a broad general education at the collegiate level, upon which the superstructure of specialization can be firmly based. Dr. Karl Compton has spoken strongly in favor of this trend away from specialization at the U. S. Military Academy. In a foreword to General Taylor's "West Point Looks Ahead," he made this statement:

Year by year the subject matter with which the profession must deal becomes more highly technical and complicated. Year by year the four-year college course becomes less adequate to produce specialists. All engineering educators agree that this situation calls for specialized training at the postgraduate level or in the practical school of postgraduate experience, and that the four years of college can but be devoted to education in the general fundamentals, enlargement of social vision, and development of cultural appreciation. Because of the variety of duties and of leadership which fall to the lot of an army officer, to provide a foundation of this type of liberal education becomes increasingly the essential mission of the Academy.

In these brief paragraphs I have tried to show that West Point is more than just another institution at the college level. The country at large should know that West Point is continuing to turn out men of integrity to provide leadership for the nation in peace or in war. Gradually the people will look to men of honor and high ideals to fulfill the tasks which call for character as well as intelligence. Already the nation is losing its age-old fear of military dictatorship and calling from the army men capable of carrying the greatest responsibilities. It is unnecessary to mention names of individuals. Witness the newspaper headlines of the present moment.

And if the future is to bring another war, what insurance can the country take for its safety and, indeed, its very existence? The obvious answer is a strong, trained, and ready military force, equipped to meet land, sea, and air threats to our national life. To cut out the core or nerve center from the army or from any other component of our defense system in a moment of hasty retrenchment and reaction to all things military would be comparable to a man's deliberate destruction of records pertaining to his paid-up insurance policies. The termination of West Point as an undergraduate institution would seriously jeopardize the security of our proved national defense system. It would also dry up an important source of the stream of our nation's leaders and men of character. However, no one who knows the true mission and the true function of West Point would advocate these changes.

The Morality of Nations

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

Several incidents of recent weeks give us nice proof of the morality of nations and show how difficult it is for them to achieve the standard of ethics which a world community requires.

One incident was the effort of the House of Representatives to cut over a billion dollars from the European Recovery Program. This action, happily rescinded by the Senate, brought confusion to all of our friends in Europe and caused the Communist press all over the world to burst out in a song of hate.

Did not this prove, the Communists asked, that Americans were unreliable friends? Would not the nations learn from this experience that we are not to be trusted?

The E. R. P. represents a solemn commitment. The House sought to discredit this commitment. Its action reduced our prestige throughout the world.

We have done rather better than might have been expected in moving from isolationism to world leadership. But this incident proves that there will be more than one stumble before we will walk securely and uprightly under the burden of our vast responsibilities.

Ethical considerations are also involved in the efforts of France to prevent the economic unification of Germany into the trade of western Europe because she still fears German power.

To quiet her fears Britain and America agreed to the internationalization of the Ruhr, though there are some disadvantages in that procedure. Also we have provided for only a federal unification of the German states so that no strong central power would emerge. We have taken every possible precaution against the reestablishment of German military power. But we must have German industrial power for the rebuilding

Report of the Committee on Church Unity

To The Council of The Diocese of Virginia

Since the last meeting of Council the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity, in obedience to its instructions from General Convention, has prepared a Statement on Faith and Order in harmony with the Lambeth Quadrilateral on the basis of which the Episcopal Church might proceed to intercommunion and organic federation with the Presbyterian or any interested Church. This Statement, to which considerable publicity has been given, is to be referred to the Lambeth Council this summer for its advice. Undoubtedly Lambeth's view will carry great weight with General Convention.

The Commission was also directed to draw up a proposal as to how intercommunion might be put into effect. Unable to agree on any one scheme, the Commission is referring several alternative proposals to Lambeth Conference for its advice.

This Statement on Faith and Order has amplified the original Lambeth Quadrilateral; clarified some points; strengthened the section dealing with the Bible and the Church; but has not added anything of significance to the section dealing with the Historic Episcopate and the Ministry. This is because the Commission is as divided as the Church on that matter.

Your Committee wishes to make it plain that here is the crux of all attempts for reunion or intercommunion between the Episcopal Church as a whole and the great Protestant Churches. We say "the Episcopal Church as a whole," because in certain sections of our Church intercommunion is practiced already. Some of our clergy invite members of other Churches to our services of Holy Communion, and some of our members receive the Sacrament if they are at a celebration in a parish of another denomination. But our Church as a whole is not officially in communion with any non-Episcopal Church. We must remember that the issue blocking official intercommunion is the same that blocks unity.

The issue is this, put bluntly: Are ministers of non-Episcopal Churches really ministers at all? One distinguished theologian of our Church stated recently that all ministers who have not been ordained by a Bishop of the Apostolic Succession must be regarded and treated as laymen, however godly or learned they may be, or however edifying preachers. He thinks that the Apostles appointed as their successors, with the power and authority to ordain ministers, a group of men called bishops; that only bishops, and those who have been consecrated by bishops in this line of descent, can make priests whose sacraments can be relied on as means of grace; that, therefore, no non-Episcopal minister can be regarded as a minister of Christ's sacraments but must be treated as a layman. This is a strong statement of the rigid doctrine of Apostolic Succession.

No Protestant Church will agree to this view. They see no basis for it in Scripture. They think history proves conclusively that God has used their ministers and their sacraments as means of grace; and that therefore to acquiesce in the doctrine of Apostolic Succession would be to lie against God's acts in history.

On the other hand, the Episcopal Church will never jettison the Episcopate. Because of its value as a tie across the centuries and as a bond uniting the great majority of Christians today, because of the value of a Pastor Pastorum in a diocese, because of the value of a principal liturgical figure who represents the general Church to the diocese and vice versa, and for other reasons, the Episcopal Church is convinced that the Episcopacy is something of very great importance which it holds in trust for the United Church that is to be.

Therefore, the problem of unity centers on the preservation of bishops as the ordainers and the diocesan chief pastors, while at the same time recognizing that ministers of non-Episcopal Churches are real ministers of Christ and His Church, and that their sacraments are genuine means of grace. The problem of intercommunion is the same.

The Joint Commission's statement helps us not at all at this point.

Lambeth Conference will have before it several proposals for recognizing as true ministers of God's Word and Sacraments ministers who have already been ordained in non-Episcopal Churches; authorizing them to function in Episcopal Churches; and at the same time stipulating that all future ministers shall be episcopally ordained, so that after thirty or fifty years all the ministers of the uniting or inter-communing Churches will be beyond cavil. There are also proposals that Churches negotiating for intercommunion should each reordain the ministers of the other.

By the end of the summer we should have before us the judgment of whatever bishops meet at Lambeth on this crucial question of Orders. That declaration will be of momentous importance. It will have a vast influence on any further negotiations we may have with the Presbyterians, Methodists or Lutherans. It ought to be widely studied. To promote such study in this diocese, your diocesan Unity Commission should be continued.

This summer there will meet in Amsterdam the first session of the World Council of Churches, which has been in formation since 1937, and which was supposed to have its first session in 1940. Its provisional committee did important work during the war. This meeting in Amsterdam may be the most important event in Christendom since the Reformation. It may succeed in coordinating much of the work of the non-Roman Churches, forward unity and begin to secure for non-Roman Christianity a united front that will enable it to combat paganism and secularism with a power incomparably greater than is possible for the separated denominations.

The reports of this meeting also should be read as widely as possible throughout the Christian world, including this diocese. And also we ought to pray that the representatives assembled at Lambeth and Amsterdam will put themselves so fully into God's hands that He may be able to guide them to views and actions in accord with His will.

On behalf of the Committee I move the following resolution:

Be it resolved, that the Committee on Unity be continued with such changes in personnel as the Bishop may determine, that it be charged to study matters bearing upon Church unity, and to promote the study throughout the diocese of such matters concerning Church unity as are of most importance.

The Council passed this resolution unanimously.

PRAYER FOR MEN OF GOOD WILL

From the point of light within the mind of God, let light stream into the minds of men; let light descend on earth.

From the point of love within the heart of God, let love stream into the hearts of men; let Christ return to earth.

From the center where the will of God is known, let purpose guide the little wills of men, that purpose which the Master knows and serves.

From the center which we call the race of men, may the plan of love and light work out, and may it seal the door where evil dwells.

May love and light and power re-

The Lambeth Conference

The inaugural service of the Lambeth Conference will be held in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, on Sunday, July 4th. Conference sessions will begin on July 5th. Nearly three hundred and fifty bishops will attend the conference. Approximately seventy of these will be from our own Protestant Episcopal Church.

It is now widely understood that the Lambeth Conference has no legislative power, nor any authority over the Churches from which these bishops come. As invited guests of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the bishops come together for mutual consultation. Our Episcopal Church is under no compulsion whatsoever to heed any decisions made at Lambeth.

But it is nonetheless true that Lambeth decisions rightly carry great weight. Patterns are set at Lambeth for the whole Anglican Communion. The discussions concerning the new united Church of South India, and the world-wide Ecumenical Movement will have import far beyond the bounds of our own communion. In the face of unprecedented world collapse, the Christian world fellowship is hopefully looking to the bishops at Lambeth for courageous leadership.

Prayers should be said in every parish this Sunday for the Lambeth Conference. Such prayers should continue throughout the weeks of the conference. May God the Holy Spirit bless and guide this Conference to the glory of God and the blessing of His Church throughout the world.

Equality to Discover Inequalities

Before we forget about Independence Day—which most of us do for the rest of the year—it might be well to ask what we really mean by that declaration that we regard as a fundamental of American democracy and of Christianity—that "all men are created equal."

It has long been the habit of the sophisticated to remind us that the one thing we do know is that all men are not created equal. We differ in inherited gifts, in abilities, in character, all the way from the moron to the genius, from the felon to the saint. We are told frequently that if all the wealth, all the educational and economic opportunities, were equally divided, before long we should find mankind divided into groups of the rich and the poor, the successes and the failures, very much as at present.

Recently in the Saturday Review of Literature, Mr. T. V. Smith explained how, as an instructor in a camp of German war prisoners, he had explained to them the real significance of our ideal of democratic equality. His explanation is so obviously true that it is surprising that so far as we know no one has ever put it just as he has: "Democracy treats all men as equal to begin with, so as to find out, to end with, in what way men are really unequal, and to discover how the abilities of each may be used for the good of all. Men do not complain of inequality after each has had free opportunity to develop and make effective his own powers."

Of course the difficulty has been that so many of our inequalities have been based upon race, ancestry, economic or social status. We cannot know the economic abilities of any group till they have had an equal opportunity with every other group to prove them. We cannot test the intellectual capacity of any group or race till we can provide equal educational opportunities for all. Neither our economic nor our educational system will be truly democratic till we can discover some means of providing equality of opportunity.

The tennis or baseball player cannot complain if he is defeated by the superior skill of his opponents. He can complain if he is ruled out of the game because of his poverty, his race, his social status. The American—and the Christian—ideal is to devise rules of the game that will test ability and character, and will be free of any pre-conceived notions regarding the qualifications of the players. The fact that we have not yet reached that ideal, even that it may be impossible in this wicked world ever fully to attain it, is no valid excuse for abandoning it as an ideal. If we aim at the church steeple, even though we cannot hit it, our arrows will fly higher than if we aim at the cellar door. And in these days, our democracy must prove its value if it is to survive.

The Draft and the Ministry

Congress has passed the draft and has apparently shelved universal military training. The passage of the draft has immediate implications for the Church. We will undoubtedly be called upon to supply our proportionate share of clergymen to serve as chaplains in the enlarged army and navy. Thus the already serious shortage of clergymen in our Church will be further emphasized.

The draft will also affect enrollment in our theological seminaries and thus concern our supply of clergymen in a second way. There seems to be no provision in the draft to defer theological students, unless they register as conscientious objectors, or fail physical tests. Of course, the number to be drafted in no way approaches the calls of the war years, and it may be that boards will be generous to pre-professional students. But the simple fact is that many of our young men will be called into military service for a period of twenty-one months.

We obviously need an immediate and concrete national plan of recruiting for the ministry of our Church. While the plan might well have long-range objectives, it should have specific plans for parishes this very year. It might well be coordinated with the Advent Corporate Communion of the Presiding Bishop's committee for Laymen's Work. This could be a most appropriate follow-up to that service during the Advent season. Our laymen would welcome a call that would take the Advent Communion out of its present status as an isolated event and make it part of a great evangelistic effort to recruit men for the Army of God.

BOOK NOTES

By the Faculty of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific. Edited by Randolph Crump Miller.

THE FAITH OF THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH. By Frank Damrosch, Jr. Morehouse-Gorham. $1.50.

This volume is simply and clearly written, and gives the point of view of a moderate Anglo-Catholicism. There are seven sacraments and the Holy Communion is called the "mass." The chapters are short and the full implications of the statements are not indicated; but it is a helpful introduction to a certain type of churchmanship. For the most part, the author deals with fundamental questions; and he never gets lost in trivialities. He makes it clear that the genius of the Church is found in the Book of Common Prayer, but that does not keep him from being critical of what seem to him to be weak points. There is an argument on historical grounds for replacing Morning Prayer with the "Mass." He recommends fasting before all communions for everyone.

TRUTHS MEN LIVE BY. By John A. O'Brien. Macmillan. $2.75.

Here is a well-trained philosophic mind in action, representing Catholic philosophy at its best. Dr. O'Brien of Notre Dame is not afraid of the advances of natural science, and in this volume he lucidly presents the relation of Catholic philosophy of religion to the modern scene. Here is no apologia for a supreme church, and there is no unnecessary deprecation of non-Roman opinions. Such men as Joseph Fort Newton and Harry Fosdick are quoted in support of various conclusions. Naturally he follows Catholic scholarship on the authenticity of the four Gospels, but his evidence is well presented. This is a good book for all non-Catholics who are at all philosophically inclined, and of course it is excellent for the author's own communion.

THE CHALLENGE OF NEW TESTAMENT ETHICS. By L. H. Marshall. Macmillan. $4.50.

A new treatment of Christian ethics which avoids the extreme theological positions of a Niebuhr or a Brunner has been long over due. For some readers who have grown up in the tradition of liberal New Testament scholarship, this extensive and non-technical treatment by a tutor at Rawdon College will supply this need. It is a volume which relies on the scholarship of such great men as Deissmann, Harnack, Henson, Herrmann, Inge, Klausner, T. W. Manson, Anderson Scott, and E. F. Scott. The difficulty for this reviewer is that the book might well have been written before Barth, Brunner, Niebuhr, and Tillich challenged the older standards, and the positions of these men are ignored rather than evaluated. This is unfortunate, because Marshall's thesis has much in its favor and it is supported by a thorough knowledge of the New Testament. There are six chapters on Jesus' ethical teachings, three on Paul's teachings, and one on "the ethics of social relations." A final note deals with "the ethical approach to Christology." Labels are dangerous, but it might be said that the perspective of Marshall is to see ethical teachings through the reports of the synoptic tradition, and that Paul and the Fourth Gospel are to be understood in that light. This insight is fundamentally sound, and explains why Marshall does not deal extensively with Pauline theologians who look at the Gospels through the letters of Paul.

ON BEING FIT TO LIVE WITH. By Harry Emerson Fosdick. Harpers. $2.00.

This volume of sermons is a selection from the best sermons of Dr. Fosdick's last two and a half years at the Riverside Church. He is retired now, and his voice will not be heard so often. Only in America, with its freedom of religion and its Protestant heritage, could the voice of the preacher carry as far as Dr. Fosdick's. His has been a great ministry, and the reason is found in his fundamental insights into the needs of individuals. His great sermons have not been in the tradition of the prophets, and he has not preached social redemption; but he has preached redemption through Christ to those who find themselves living in this 20th century civilization with its crazy-quilt patterns. "On Being Fit to Live With" is the title of one sermon and one volume, but it might well be taken as the title of any selection from Dr. Fosdick's great preaching. This is not the place to analyze these 25 sermons, but there is the maturity of an "elder" in this volume which at the same time never loses contact with the hearer. Every one is worth reading, for God speaks through the preacher.

TOP OF THE MOUNT. By Vincent C. Franks. Morehouse-Gorham. $2.00.

These sermons by a foremost Virginia preacher are geared to the Christian year. It is thus that a balanced view of the Gospel of Christ becomes mandatory for the preacher. Here are thoughts on the Bible, the nativity, missions, crowd psychology, immortality, mysticism, and the nature of God. These are good, simple, readable sermons, full of Biblical references and illustrations, and giving insights for living.

THE CHRISTIAN FUTURE: THE MODERN MIND OUTRUN. By Eugen Rosenstock-Huessy. Scribners. $2.50.

This is a brilliant, difficult, and surprising book. It is the product of another exile from Europe, who now teaches social philosophy at Dartmouth and who attempts here a religious interpretation of Western culture. The brilliant epigrams and startling comparisons are worth the price of the book, even though the main thesis is hazy. For example: "Confucius was as light-hearted as Dewey. And we can renounce Dewey to no greater degree than China can abandon Confucius. But Confucius had to be made innocuous. If we wish to survive the state of helplessness created by pragmatism—helplessness against war, anarchy, decay—we need an antidote by which Interim America may be integrated into the real world of our black hearts and real deserts." The solution lies in a reinterpretation of the Cross which is unique and which must be left to the reader of the book to puzzle over.

By The Rev. Canon J. Douglas Paterson, Toronto

The Church and the People.

If it is difficult to understand the social outcasts of Britain today it is not less difficult to get a clear picture of the Church Life. Attendance at most Churches is very disappointing. But members don't really mean so much inside the Church. Some Churches are very well attended. In one Edinburgh Church on a Sunday evening it was with great difficulty that people were seated. To stand outside, say Westminister Abbey, on a Sunday morning and see the tens of thousands to whom the sound of the bells meant nothing, and the call to worship finds no response, is sad indeed. It would surprise most visitors to see the number of worshippers who attend "Matins" but rush out before the sermon (and collection). It looks rather like respectability saying its prayers.

Church attendance does not show the religious state of England either in the established nor the free Churches. There is a virility among the Christian people which is stimulating and it gives strength to the life today and great hope for the future.

Four pictures may help to illustrate this:

1. The royal silver wedding was not only a pageant but it was worship and thanksgiving in the truest sense. It did not belong only to the King and Queen but it was a nation's recognition of all that is worthy and wise in the home life of the people. The coronation service of ten years ago was called the coronation of the King and the consecration of the nation." In the same way the people and the royal house showed their religion on this great occasion.

2. The voice of the leaders, unitedly and as individuals is heard and respected today. The Lambeth Conference is going to mean something and is going to do something. The united voice of all the Christian leaders is not unheeded and this is an acute evaluation of the quality of any pronouncement or speech, eg. the Bishop's contributions to the debate in the House of Lords on the abolition of hanging bill.

3. In the ruined churches among the wreckage as well as in the old city churches noon-day services are making a real contribution. What but the consciousness of need could bring a large congregation each day at 1:15 to a prayer service in the ruins of St. Mary-le-Bow (Bow bells). Outside for blocks everything is levelled, only St. Pauls, scarred but splendid, stands out with its golden Cross above all the destruction. The famous old bells are so destroyed that the largest fragment is only about the size of a page of the Southern Churchman; but inside is peace which is felt and comes from the fellowship of men and women and God.

4. Outside the regularly organized church life there is a vast number of societies and groups, and to attend one of these meetings gives an experience so often lacking in our churches of gaiety, fellowship, and faith. At no place has religion seemed so vital as among a group of officers and wives of the services. Most of them looked old because of their war experiences, when in reality they were still in their twenties. To them Christ was the Good Companion who had shared battles and seen them through. It is splendid to see how many men and women holding the absolutely top positions in the national life, both civil and military, are out and out Christians and working at it every day, and very definitely leading men to Christ. We, from across the Atlantic, can learn a lot from a visit to post-war Britain, and it is possible that the finest lesson they have to teach us is in the realm of religion and maybe they will be showing us the way back to God.

CXXXI

Page 80. THE PRAYER OF CONSECRATION.—It is highly fitting that the Ter Sanctus should lead us right into the Prayer of Consecration, although in our Prayer Books up to the last revision in 1928 the "Prayer of Humble Access" had been interposed here. These last revisors have wisely placed this prayer after the Consecration and before the Administration.

The origin of the Prayer of Consecration is so ancient that it is extremely difficult definitely to fix it. It would seem to have come more directly from Eastern than from Western liturgies, and some commentators carry it back even to a service known as the liturgy of Saint James, which refers to James, "the brother of our Lord" and first Bishop of Jerusalem.

In any case there can be no doubt but what this prayer, or one very similar to it has been used by Christians since very early times, and possibly since the organization of the church itself.

At first its wording sounds a little over burdened with repetition, and it might seem unnecessary to say that our Saviour's sacrifice for us was "a full, perfect, and sufficient sacrifice, oblation, and satisfaction, for the sins of the whole world" but this is a reminder of the way in which all ancient religions including the Jewish felt it necessary to continue to propitiate their deities with repeated sacrifices. This practice is especially referred to in the tenth chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrews, and there also in the tenth verse we find the Biblical background for the completeness of our Saviour's sacrifice, for the author says, "By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all.

Here again we find that Biblical background for our Prayer Book wording that is like the cloth on which a beautiful tapestry has been embroidered, holding the picture all together and making it of one part with the cloth that sustains the figures embroidered thereon.

OUR PLACE IN GOD'S PLAN

That "a purely materialistic philosophy is the height of unintelligence,'" was the summation of a recent address by Dr. Robert A. Millikan, one of the world's most famous scientists, before a gathering of scientists in Washington. Often described as "the dean of American scientists," Dr. Millikan is the oldest living American winner of a Nobel prize, the first to determine the charge and mass of the electron, and the first American to study cosmic rays. For more than a generation, whenever he has spoken he has been listened to with respect, not only by scientists but by scholars in every field of learning.

Emphasizing his belief that men as human agents somehow "fit into the plans of the Great Architect," Dr. Millikan in his address, as quoted by the New York Times, used the following striking illustration:

There were numbers of situations in both World Wars in which something other than any demonstrable superiority of the Allied performance tipped the scales in our favor. Witness Dunkerque; the Battle of Britain, Hitler's attack on Russia; Pearl Harbor; Midway; El Alamein; Stalingrad; D-Day. Almost a turn of a hair in some, if not most, of these events and civilization might have been doomed. But it was saved.

Shall I say by human agents? Yes, in part, for we are certainly a part of the great evolutionary scheme. Just how we fit into the plans of the Great Architect and how much He has assigned us to do we do not know, but if we fail on our assignment it is pretty certain that part of the job will be left

CLERGY-ADULT CONFERENCE OF EAST CAROLINA

Washington, N. C.—Canon T. O. Wedel, of the College of Preachers at the National Cathedral, Washington, D. C., led a most interesting and successful Conference for the Clergy and Lay-leaders of the Diocese of East Carolina during the week of June 13th. Dr. Wedel gave two lectures a day and opened his series of lectures with the interesting observation that civilization was now going through what is gradually being known as the "Post-Christian era." He went on to say in the course of his lectures that man is trying to live in a "one-story Universe," where he fails to recognize any power higher than the human intellect. He added that this state of existence inevitably brings about such conditions as the concentration camps in Germany prior to World War II and present day tendency to Communism. The burden of his message to the Conference contained the note of an immediate need for loyalty to the Christian ethics and ideals, and more particularly the Christian conception of Man and the Universe, by all professing Christians today.

The Conference, entitled the Clergy-Adult Conference, was designed particularly for the Lay-leaders of the Diocese as well as the Clergy. Special invitations were sent to the officers of the Woman's Auxiliary, to the presidents and officers of all other organizations, for men and women in the parishes, together with a special invitation to the wardens of each parish. The response filled the Conference to the limits of the facilities of Camp Leach, the Diocesan Conference grounds near Washington, N. C.

In addition to Dr. Wedel, the faculty consisted of the Rev. John G. Magee, Minister to Episcopal Students at Yale University and formerly missionary to China for twenty-eight years, and the Rev. Mortimer Glover, Rector of St. James, Church, Wilmington, N. C. Satisfaction was expressed relative to all of the lectures.

NOTES ON THE LAMBETH CONFERENCE

It so happens that the Lambeth Conference is meeting this year for the first time since 1930. It would have been held in 1940, but the Second World War prevented this. It regularly is called every ten years.

In 1930 308 Bishops from all parts of the world attended and discussed such topics as the Christian Doctrine of God, the Anglican Communion, Youth and Its Vocation. They adopted certain resolutions and sent out an Encyclical Letter addressed to the Faithful in Christ Jesus. The complete report of the proceedings was published by the S. P. C. K.

The conference of 1948 will follow simflar lines with subjects of vital import to the life of today on the agenda. According to one report, one of the subjects considered will be the question: "Is it the duty of a Christian to condemn Communism?"

Background

The first Lambeth Conference was held in Lambeth Palace in 1867 during the regime of Archbishop Longley. They have been held every ten years until 1930. The idea of these meetings was first suggested in 1851 in a letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury by American Bishop Hopkins of Vermont. The request to call these meetings first came from the Canadian Church with the result that one hundred and forty-four Bishops from all over the world came together. Some Bishops felt that such a meeting was unwise and refused to attend, such as the Archbishop of York. Dean Stanley declined to allow Westminster Abbey to be used for the closing service, as he felt uncertain of the effect of its measures. All such doubts have long since disappeared.

Lambeth Conference is not a legislative body, nor is it a general synod of all Anglican Churches. It merely "discusses matters of practical interest and pronounces what is deemed expedient in resolutions which may serve as safe guides to future action." While the resolutions of the conferences are not synodical decrees, they have always had great weight. It is fair to say that the group of Bishops gathered at Lambeth Conferences have no superiors anywhere its wisdom and understanding of the times, for the sincere desire to promote human welfare, and for pointing the way to God through our Lord and His Church.

COLLEGE SENIORS HEAR CHALLENGE TO SERVE

Geneva, N. Y.—This modern generation is more concerned about the welfare of individuals and the welfare of society than any previous one, the Rt. Rev. Horace W. B. Donegan, D. D., Suffragan Bishop of the Diocese of New York, said in the Baccalaureate sermon to the 220 members of the senior classes of Hobart and William Smith Colleges in historic Trinity Church here June 13.

"The cause closest to the heart of young people today is bettering the conditions of the world," Bishop Donegan declared. He warned, however, that it will take more than supermen or a utopian social system to bring a better world. "That will come," he said, "through goodness, idealism of ordinary individuals who choose to live their lives on a high plane of putting service before self, and God above all."

The baccalaureate service preceded the formal Commencement of the Geneva Colleges, which was held June 14. It was the 123rd Commencement for Hobart, and the 37th for William Smith College. Degrees in course were conferred on 220 young men and women, and three received master's degrees.

Bishop Donegan, who received the honorary degree, Doctor of Sacred Theology (S. T. D.), took as the theme of his baccalaureate sermon, "Choose the Highest." He pointed out that the creed of young people is sincerity and fairness in all things.

"Thinking young people are searching for a virile, triumphant faith that will give them a sense of direction and purpose. They want something to believe in, to live for, to look up to. They are looking for a leader who can give them moral courage and spiritual strength.

"If youth only knew it, what they seek can be found in fellowship with Christ. Those who follow Him are released from pessimism and frustration and inspired to live on the highest level of which the human spirit is capable. With confidence, young people can turn to Christ for guidance and courage in these turbulent times."

We will forward copies of THE SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN via air mail to bishops attending the Lambeth Conference if sent their address abroad.

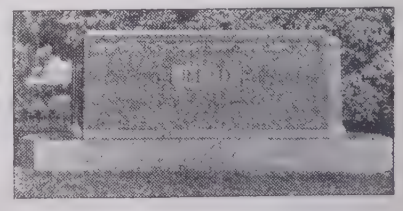
A Masterpiece of Beauty and Color

The beautiful rose window of the Cathedral of Notre Dame, a work of infinite beauty and splendor, is perhaps the masterpiece of all art glass windows. Built in the Thirteenth Century, it stands today unsurpassed in beauty and excellence of workmanship. If a world-wide search were made for a monumental material approaching the beauty of the assembled colors of the famous Rose Window, such material would be found in

WINNSBORO BLUE GRANITE

"The Silk of the Trade"

It is found, also, that the beautiful colors of Winnsboro Blue Granite come from the various crystals it contains, which are identical in substance to many of the finest of precious stones and jewels of the order of the amethyst and moonstone. When the surface of this granite—which is a composite of these actual precious stone crystals—is highly polished, all the scintillating beauty and color of these jewels become visible.



Winnsboro Blue Granite is most lasting because it is composed of the most durable minerals known.

Like other high quality materials there are many inferior substitutes which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its durable qualities and lasting beauty.

NEW TYPE OF CHURCH SCHOOL PLANNED BY ST. JAMES', RICHMOND, VA.

Richmond, Va.—St. James' Church will pioneer here this Fall in an entirely new type of Sunday school.

Described as "a project for character research," the new instructional plan was originated by Dr. Ernest M. Ligon, associate professor of psychology at Union College, Schenectady, N. Y.

Last year fourteen churches throughout the nation took part in the project with remarkable results, it is reported.

The Rev. Alexander D. Juhan, assistant rector of St. James' Church and director of religious education, said that the Legion plan answers the great problem of securing parents' cooperation in Christian education through the church schools.

The most important part of the plan, he said, is that it places responsibility for development of the character of children squarely up to their parents.

Family Service

Under the project parents bring their children to the church for a short family service each Sunday morning. Then the parents attend a special class in which they study and discuss attitudes of Christian character. At the same time the child is working on the same theme in his own class.

"Results of the project in churches that have used it have been astounding," Mr. Juhan said.

"Christ Church in the Georgetown section of Washington, for instance, has increased its Sunday School attendance from between 60 and 70 per cent to around 90 per cent.

"Both this church and Christ Church, Lexington, Ky., have waiting lists of pupils. Classes are of necessity limited to ten pupils as individual instruction is a vital part of the method.

"The Dundee Presbyterian Church, in Omaha, Neb., entered the project two years ago with thirty teachers and workers on its school staff. It now has three hundred.

Religion In Home

Under the Ligon plan the Sunday school aids parents and children to make their home a place where religious attitudes are guided in order that moral and spiritual fibre may become strong enough to cope with today's confused world, Mr. Juhan said.

"Without the enlistment and direction of the parents, the results of Sunday school education have proven negligible," he stated. "In addition, no matter how much Bible content is taught and learned it will not be of much value unless it can be applied in the personal life of the student. Religious education will not solve the problems of our age unless the fruits of that education are shown in the high moral character of the persons subjected to it."

The number of churches participating in the project is limited because the plan is still in the experimental stage. It is hoped, however, that the curriculum will be ready for general consumption by 1951.

The Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Juhan, the Misses Katherine and Lilla Hancock, Miss Corbin Harwood, Mr. and Mrs. Reid Modlin, the Misses Louise Powers and Mary Ribble, and Mr. and Mrs. Guyton Williams, of St. James' Church, attended a workshop and conference at Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., last week in order to learn more about the theory and operation of the Ligon character research project.

A BIG BACKLOG FOR THE SEMINARIES

Last year's reports showed a record total (898) of Postulants* for the Ministry—more than twice the number reported in 1938 (427). It looks as thoug hthe Seminaries will be crowded for some years to cmoe.

The Seminaries, however, have no such back-log of financial resources; and if they are to do justice to these men in preparing them for an effective ministry, constant and increased support from the Church is essential.

undone. But fit in we certainly do somehow.

Dr. Millikan speaks as a scientist, not as a theologian. His field of study is the material universe, not the revealed Word of God. Yet in his own field he has reached the same conclusion that has been held by Christians through the centuries—that God is, and that He is in control; that each of us has a place in the divine plan; and that if we seek to fit in with His eternal purposes, He can use us to greater ends than we can now foresee. To put it in the phraseology of the Apostle Paul, "We are laborers together with God."

of Europe. Otherwise the task will not be accomplished at all and will also become much too great a burden for us.

The French fears are understandable enough. A nation twice overrun in a generation cannot take as detached a view of the current issues as we do. But the fears almost approach the dimensions of the pathological. If they prevailed Germany would remain a morass of economic misery, while the rest of Europe remained in corresponding poverty because of the failure to harness the German productive capacity.

Ultimately nations will have to learn some better way of making a foe harmless than by maiming him. Already we have spent billions upon billions of dollars to preserve living standards in Germany, slightly above the hunger level, because it took us three years to learn that a large industrial nation could not feed itself if it were not allowed to produce industrial goods for export.

Fear and vindictiveness are among the most destructive of human emotions. They are more powerful in the behavior of nations than in the lives of individuals. But they must be mastered if we are to have a minimal degree of mutual security and mutual trust.

AN ARTICLE OF SURPASSING MERIT

Sir: An article of surpassing merit moves me to write my first letter to the open column in any publication. I refer to Dr. Frederick A. Pottle's "Wordsworth and Freud, or The Theology of the Unconscious," which appeared in your issue of June 12, 1948.

To this wayfarer's mind it is the "Article of the Decade." I am happy that you had the foresight to publish it and hope that the clergy will "read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest it." Dr. Pottle got God into the dark side of our being as well as the light, and intelligently interpreted in terms of overall knowledge Wordsworth's penetrating lines:

The very deep did rot: O Christ!
That even this should be!
Yea, slimy things did crawl with legs
Upon the slimy sea.

A NOTE ON EVANGELISM

Sir: Many years ago, when I was a youth in my teens, I had a very revered uncle my marriage, who was one of the finest characters I ever knew. He was honorable, benevolent and widely beloved and esteemed in his community. In the communion in which he was brought up great stress was laid upon conversion, and my father, who was a great Christian teacher with deep convictions about the two sacraments necessary to salvation, had much difficulty persuading this fine man of his need to become a communicant and receive the strengthening influence flowing from the Holy Communion, faithfully prepared for and received. When this good man accepted this teaching, was confirmed and knelt with two lovely daughters from time to time at the Lord's able, he realized the great helpfulness that our dear Saviour had so definitely provided for our strengthening and growth.

When I was a young minister in charge of a large congregation in the city of Brooklyn, I had a very able Scotchman in my flock who had never been baptized. For months I labored with this man without success. One Monday morning, after having listened to a very earnest sermon, the subject being our Lord's teaching about Holy Baptism, he came to my study, expressing his desire to be baptized. If I ever witnessed the Holy Spirit's action in the heart of a humble, obedient Christian man, I felt that I did so that day. Soon afterwards I baptized this man, who was more than seventy years old, in the presence of more than thirty children and grandchildren, all of whom had been communicants for some years. For the rest of his life he seemed to try to make up in devotion to Christ the years he had lost, and until his death was one of the most conscientious and devoted Christian men I ever knew.

These two pastoral experiences give point to our Lord's great saying, which doubtles has baffled some readers, recorded by St. Matthew, 'The Kingdom of Heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force." Of course, His meaning was that men must go about seeking the Kingdom in a dead in earnest way, and not in a half-hearted manner.

In one of Robert Browning's great poems, "Johannes Agricola," occur words which have haunted me for years. They teach the same great truth.

"For I intend to get to God,
For 'tis to God that I must go.
On God's own breast, my true abode,
Those shoals of shining glory past,
I lay my spirit down at last."

I met these words in a noble sermon of Winnington-Ingram, Bishop of London, one of the most earnest preachers the Church of England ever produced, and they have nestled in my memory ever since.

I venture to send the two incidents and these great lines of the Christian poet for the benefit of my brethren who will soon be entering upon the active work of evangelists in the effort to reach that large number of people in our land who are living away from Christ and His Church.

Faith and the Future

The Commencement Address at the Virginia Seminary

By The REV. DR. THEODORE O. WEDEL

A commencement hour in a Christian gathering can call to mind more than one graduation scene in the Bible—the calling of Moses or of Isaiah, or the commissioning of the twelve, or that moving scene on the lake shore when Peter received his final apostolic diploma at the hands of his risen Lord. I call to your attention this morning, however, another Biblical graduation story, less obvious, perhaps, as symbolizing a commencement experience, but also rich in meaning. It is that expisite little gem of Old Testament narrative art—the story of Samuel in the temple, of his midnight vision, and his sudden translation from youth to maturity. As commentators tell us, the designation of Samuel as "the child Samuel" may well be a diminutive exaggeration. He was probably a youth ready for entrance upon his adult vocation. His graduation story can typify the commencement experience for any age.

Samuel's midnight vision was, indeed, an awesome graduation drama. In childhood and youth the word of the Lord is mediated to all of us through our elders. Loyalty to the faith of our fathers means for us trust in parents or teachers or prophets out of the past. Our profession of a faith comes to us by way of imitation as we sit at the feet of officially appointed "professors". Thus it was with Samuel. He hears a voice in the night. The voice must, of course, be that of Eli. Is not Eli for him his earthly Father-in-God, his revered Master and Prophet of the Lord? Only slowly, with a terrifying shock, and at the prompting of Eli himself, there comes to him the realization that God is speaking no longer through the mediation of his beloved teacher, but directly, person to person. He, Samuel, is now burdened with the prophetic word of the Lord. He, Samuel, must utter, though probably with heart-rending reluctance, judgment upon the house of his Father-in-God. Samuel's days of trusting dependence are over. To voice judgment on the generation of our fathers, may be our vocation as we assume the mantle of maturity. But woe to us if we speak other than in the Lord's name and assume escape from that same judgment as it applies to ourselves. "Judge not that ye be not judged." Insight into that humbling law must have come to Samuel when he, too, arrived at old age. There is a scene in that ancient chronicle of the days of Eli and Samuel that should tempt the pen of a novelist. The ascetic narrative art of the Old Testament writer gives it to us merely in severe outline. As a youth Samuel had voiced doom on Eli "because his sons made themselves vile." But Samuel, in his turn grows old. And then we read: "And (Samuel's) sons walked not in his ways, but turned aside after lucre, and took bribes, and perverted judgment. Then all the elders of Israel gathered themselves together. . . . And said unto him, Behold thou art old, and thy sons walk not in thy ways." The drama of judgment had repeated itself—as, alas, it wil have to repeat itself from generation to generation to the end of earth-born time.

During this brief review of our ancient story, applications to our graduation scene today will already have taken unvoiced form in your imagination. I shall refrain from underscoring them at the moment. I venture, however, to express the hope that you will not put one obvious application into practice too promptly—at least not on this happy commencement day. The time will come, and we of an older generation should expect it, when you of your generation will pronounce judgment upon your elders. You will see things that we did not see, and hear voices that we did not hear. Youthful eyes can always detect, sometimes with ungenerous cruelty, the pharisaic pretence in the virtues of their elders. And when such judgment is voiced, may grace be given to us of the older generations to listen and to repent, and to say with Eli, as he once heard Samuel's voicing of God's judgment: "It is the Lord; let him do what seemeth him good." But be gentle with us as long as you can. On this day at least let gratitude assume first place. I hesitate even to envisage the possibility of the seminary class of 1948 gathering on the steps of Aspinwall and literalizing the Samual graduation story. You could, no doubt, catalog the shortcomings of the elders of the school, but I trust that you will defer such a scene. In fact, your danger for some time to come may be the reverse of asserted independence. Statistics are not at hand as to the length of time during which seminary notebooks serve, in the average young minister's study, for homiletic inspiration. But I would be willing to predict that sermons a la Zabriskie—Mollegen—Stanley—Trotter—Brown - Serman—Howe or Heim will be heard in many a parish for some years to come. Nor need you be ashamed of such homage to your teachers. There are far worse models which you could choose. Indeed, few events could be of greater promise for the good of the Episcopal Church than the missionary outreach of the insight into the gospel which has been your heritage here. It would mean, I veritably believe, a new outpouring of the power of the Holy Ghost. For this is, indeed, a place blessed of the Lord.

But no Christian teacher with an ounce of humility ever dreams of pointing to himself as a model of virtue or even of faith. He, too, is a sinner standing under the judgment and the grace of God, preparing himself, indeed, as well as those whom he instructs, for the great day of the Lord. Age has only one gift to impart to youth—the gift of wisdom. Your elders in the household of faith have travelled farther along the road. They can furnish you with a map of life's course. They can warn and can prepare. They can witness to the truth of a saying of the philosopher, Whitehead: "It is the business of the future to be dangerous." Many a teacher of mature years could echo the words of the psalmist: "O God, Thou hast taught me from my youth: and hitherto have I declared Thy wondrous works. Now also when I am old and grayheaded, O God, forsake me not; until I have showed Thy strength unto this generation and Thy power to every one that is to come."

Presuming boldly on the privilege of age, I venture, to set before you three testings of your faith which you will unquestionably encounter in your ministry. The portrayal is accompanied by a prayer that in these testings you will experience the strength and the power of the Lord.

"The Burden of Fate"

The first testing is one not peculiar to the ministry, though it assumes in the ministry distinctive forms. It can be called the burden of fate—the enduring of the changes and chances of this mortal life. I am thinking of fate, for example, in the form of what you yourself are—you, as God has made you, as history., with its load of guilt, has made you, as your own past will have made you at any future moment in your walk through life. Will you accept, or will you run away? A wise colleague in the ministry once said in my hearing: "The trouble with my people is that they refuse to forgive God the things He has done to them." Yes, God, the Creator and Ruler of history does things to us. We, as actors in history do things to ourselves. And we frequently do not like the end product. You may be a man with limited endowments, like the one-talent man in the New Testament parable. Can you receive yourself as a gift from God as He fashioned you? Any psychiatrist can testify to the enormous resistance on the part of his patients to even a small amount of self-knowledge. Only faith in a God of grace can give us the courage to look into a fully truthful mirror. "Know thyself," said Socrates. It is not easy. And the Christian must add: "Forgive thyself." This is even harder. It is, in some ways, the climax of trust and faith in God. To stand in the pulpit on a Sunday morning knowing full well that you are not an overly gifted preacher; knowing full well again that your sermon would be a far better one had the sin of sloth not overtaken you during the week, and yet to speak the word of God with a fire burning in your bones. To live under the gospel of forgiveness means just that.

And if fate will test your faith as you confront yourself, it will test you also as you encounter outward circumstance. I pass over the obvious chances of our earthly existence—death, and sickness, tragedy and pain—and shall refer only to one demand upon your trust that is peculiarly the burden of the ministry. I have in mind your station in the professional hierarchy of the Church's life. Most of you will begin your careers as mission priests or as curates. How long will you be content with your lot? You may see classmates receiving preferment, or clerical colleagues with half your zeal for the Lord rewarded with calls to posts at twice your salary. Will you be able to endure the sight without envy? Will you try to play God and manipulate your fate, writing letters to vestries or bishops or deans with eloquent proof that you have received an inner calling of the Spirit to a larger sphere of service at a higher salary? I have read many such letters and they move me to pity and fear. Or will your faith in God itself break under the strain of supposed or even real neglect? There are, in some of our dioceses, not a few ministerial derelicts who have foundered upon the shoals of professional jealousy and self-pity. A worse end can scarcely befall you. Yet the danger had best be bravely faced. No doubt the Church itself is at fault in nurturing wrong standards of success. Clerical brotherhoods are often guilty, God forgive us, of the sin of snobbery, rating the servants of the gospel by scales of parochial size or monthly pay checks. But realization of the sins of others will not solve your problem. Only a deeply anchored faith in God will preserve you.

I vividly remember the wise counsel once spoken by an aged man of God to a group of younger clergy, of which I was privileged to be one. His had been a blessed ministry. We asked him for the secret of his power. He replied, in part, by sharing with us a treasured incident in his personal life. When he and his fledgling bride were on their way to their first parish—a humble rural mission—they stopped at a wayside chapel. Kneeling at the altar rail, they shared a vow. They would, so they solemnly pledged themselves before God, build their home and their life together as if they expected to spend the rest of their lives in the village which they were approaching. This would mean curtains and furniture in a real, and not a dream, rectory, a poverty budget adjusted even for a family with children, a parish program looking to a ten year and not a two year, evangelistic effort. As a matter of fact, that first rectory was not the last in that minister's career, though the turning down of calls became a habit. But it was a career of few wanderings, and with no half-founded parishes left stranded in its wake.

To obey fate. Few things will test your faith as will this call to surrender your outward career to the God of history. But the reward can be serenity and a peace passing understanding. The glory of such surrender has rarely been better expressed than in a little Latin quatrain coming out of the troubled England of the seventeenth century. The quatrain, chiselled into stone by some unknown prisoner's hand, can be seen to this day on a cell wall in the Tower of London. The quatrain consists of only eight words:

Deo servire
Fato obedire
Poenitentiam inire
Regnare est.

To serve God
To obey fate
To undergo repentance
Is to reign (like a king).

I venture to share this little jewel of Christian faith with you. It has been for me a treasured guide through many a dark hour.

Vocation as Men of God

I turn now to the consideration of a second testing of your faith which awaits you in life beyond these academic walls—the peculiar burden of your vocation as men of God. The topic is a large one, and I shall limit myself to only a few observations.

We speak of a minister as one "set apart." It is an accurately descriptive phrase. Set apart you will be. Never again, after your ordination, will you be as other men are—not even your best friends in secular walks of life. The bishop's hands in ordination will leave a mark upon you, a mark almost visible to an observer's eye, which nothing, not even subsequent apostasy, can ever erase.

At first half-innocent pride will disguise the burden of this mark of holiness on your brow. It is pleasant to wear a stole in the sanctuary, and to be seen of men when you pray, or to receive compliments at the church door, or to sit in the honor seat at dinner parties. But it will not be very long before you will discover, as you read your New Testament, that your portrait stands out stark and bare in the discourses of the gospels. And it is the portrait of the pharisee. The reading of the Sermon on the Mount will become for you painful business. You stand condemned. You will, let us suppose, preach the gospel of repentance and justification by faith. But your outward life will apparently give the lie to your sermons and your teaching. Every reward that comes your way will bring stings of conscience. You may try to ease your conscience by protesting that your salary is lower than you could earn in the business world and that, after all, you are living a sacficial life. But that is sheer bluff, and may turn into blasphemy. We of the clergy had better repeat daily the publican's prayer, "God be merciful to me a sinner."

Nor can your dilemma of conscience be solved by becoming outwardly the publican that you know yourself to be in your heart. That way madness lies. The attempt has ruined many a ministry. We ought to follow St. Paul's precept to be "all things to all men." But the precept had better be sharply limited in practice. There are smoking room stories to which you may have listened without puritanic protest but which ought never to cross your own lips. It is fatal for a clergyman to become known as a glutton and a winebibber, or as one who does not pay his bills. In your relations with members of the opposite sex, the etiquette of circumspection cannot be too carefully observed. It might well take on the character of taboo. On this delicate, but important, topic I have never met a wiser bit of advice than the words of a mother to a son going off to college: "Watch your hands." You will become the custodian of intimacies and closet-hidden secrets in the lives of members of your flock. Guard them sacredly. They will have been laid on your heart and memory as on holy ground.

Is there a solution to the paradox of the ministerial life? Yes, but not an easy one. The only solution I know is acceptance of the tension, as you are asked to accept the burden of fate, but acceptance under the good news of the Cross. Outwardly a pharisee, rewarded as a model of good works. Inwardly a publican, conscious of being the chief of sinners. Acceptance of a paradox always implies bold emphasis on both extremes. Since you will be outwardly a pharisee, living under the law, as well as under grace, be a good pharisee. We of the clergy could take with some literalness the words of our Lord: "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the Kingdom of Heaven." We might listen with profit also to St. Paul when he says of the law: "Wherefore the law is holy, and the commandment holy, and just and good." Be a model citizen of your community, paying your taxes, reading good books, dancing with wall flowers at a party, impeccable in tact and etiquette to the point where even Emily Post could not find much against you, answering letters promptly—at least as promptly as you expect your senior warden to answer his—decorous in your speech. Do all this, even when your faith grows weak and when you have to acknowledge to yourself that you are living under the law, your motive that of the old covenant—namely, dread of God's judgments. You, too, like your parishioners, will not have outgrown the need of the Law as your schoolmaster. But the other half of the paradox of Christian faith is even more important —the majestic "therefore" of the good news of forgiveness. Be a law-abiding pharisee. But be, at the same time, a repentant pharisee, a forgiven sinner, "created in Christ Jesus unto good works." We are asked to fulfill the Law. But we are not going to achieve salvation by it. As a matter of fact, the Law kills, as St. Paul so clearly saw. Hence as ministers we probably cannot avoid being pharisees. But we can be, under the gospel, pharisees who have died with Christ and risen again. "If ye then be risen with Christ," says St. Paul to the Colossian Christians, "seek those things which are above." And when St. Paul gives us his lists of Christian virtues which belong to such risen life, not even an Old Testament Doctor of the Law could easily have cataloged a loftier roster. The outsider may not see the inherent difference. But they are in motive poles apart. Nor need we as clergy, if we live as repentant pharisees, fear that our people will not detect the difference also. They will want to see in you a pattern of conduct, a master of the law, and that will be a burden hard to bear. But even more they will look to you as the one who mediates the compassion and love of Christ; as the one who is ready to dine with publicans and sinners, and who does not despise the broken and contrite heart. And the two vocations blend into each other. You will be to your people, both a brother in repentance, and, at the same time, a shepherd who leads them into the way of righteousness. Yours will be a burden, but if rightly borne, the burden will grow light and you will rejoice in the Lord.

The Fellowship of the Holy Spirit

I come to a third testing which awaits you in your ministry. You will be asked to accept the Church of Christ as the fellowship of the Holy Spirit. This looks obvious and even easy. Think of the Church as the perfect Church of faith, or as the "Jerusalem which is above . . . which is the mother of us all," and trust in the Church is not too difficult. Nor need we belittle such hope in a vision of perfection. But in our historical life the Church is far from perfection. It resembles in most of our parishes far rather the picture which St. Paul has left us of the ecclesia in Corinth—a squabbling gathering of ordinary, and even extraordinary, sinners. And it is in just such disillusioning flocks today that we are expected to see the fellowship of the Holy Spirit. We are to see Christ there. The New Testament is quite definite on this point. We cannot return to the Galilee of the first century and have converse with the Jesus of history. As Second Person of the Trinity, Christ is now with the Father in heaven. His next appearance will be as Judge of the quick and the dead. Much modern Christianity has hopelessly tried to turn this clock of history back. The early church knew better. The contemporary historical Christ today is the Comforter, the Holy Spirit in His Church. The only clear promise of Christ's personal presence that we have is "when two or three are gathered together in His name." And that again means the visible historical church. Nor can we limit the two or three of Christ's promise to the wholly sanctified—if indeed any such exist! Three prodigal sons or three publicans, baptized into the death and resurrection of Christ, and repentant before the Cross, constitute a fellowship of the Holy Spirit.

Will your faith be equal to the test of accepting the reality of Christ's presence in the Church as you will meet it in your parish? I know of few greater testings of our belief in the trinitarian God. So severe is it that the historical church herself, down through the centuries, has shirked the full import of this climax of New Testament faith. You, too, will be tempted to escape it.

Two forms of escape will entice you. The first is one that has beset the Protestant tradition. It is to limit the confines of the Church to the adult and truly elect, to make of the Church, in fact, a sect. Sanctification and not repentance is to be the test of entrance and membership. Sectarian Christianity has lessons for us. But I present it only briefly, since the Church to which you and I belong, is, on the whole, in little danger of its lure.

The opposite form of escape, however, will be for you a constant temptation. It has lodged itself in the catholic half of the Christian tradition. It consists in escaping the realism of the Church in the pews and seeing the Church instead in a hierarchy and in a sacramental system. This deflection of New Testament faith deserves careful examination. Much of your success in the ministry of this Church will depend upon how you resolve this tension.

Let it be said at the outset that to sunder ministry and sacrament and Church ought, of course, to be impossible. Yet something approaching this has nevertheless happened. To cite a concrete example. We use the words "body of Christ" in two senses—to define the corporate church and to designate the sacrament on the altar. Which is primary? Turn to the New Testament, and clearly the first usage is normative. Turn to the tradition of historic Catholicism and the second has taken precedence. The corporate church has, in Roman Catholicism, even received a new name. It is now the mystical body of Christ. You will not find this definition in Holy Scripture.

What has happened? Clearly, the corporate Church as historical locus of the presence of Christ has proved to be too difficult to accept. His presence has been moved into the sanctuary. His presence in the body as people is now derivative. How enticing this is! The remark is sometimes heard that in a Roman Catholic Mass, the congregation is little more than an embarrassment. This is exaggeration, of course, but it is true that the body of Christ as a people-fellowship and as corporately endowed with the gift of the Holy Spirit is easily belittled. Adornment of the sanctuary, scrupulous observance of the legalisms of the sacristy, and elaborations of ceremonial are definitely a lighter task than the edifying of the body of Christ in the pews. A sacramental system is impersonal and can be controlled. A gosiping Altar Guild, or a stingy vestry, or a lot of barbarians in the Church School present far more difficult problems. St. Paul would have sighed with relief if he could have solved the tangles of the Corinthian church by changing a few liturgical rubrics or by handing out a few extra penances at a confession hour. Elaborations of sacramental and liturgical practices are not in themselves wrong. Almost any so-called high church practice becomes evangelical the moment it becomes low church—in other words, when it becomes functional of our common life in the body of Christ, serving the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. I know a so-called low church parish in which a sanctus bell was recently installed. Children at a noisy parish communion could be notified that at a few places in the service it was a token of respect to God to keep still. You will nevertheless face the decision as to what you will make primary—the fellowship of the Holy Spirit itself or an ecclesiastical system—the Church personal or the Church impersonal, the Church in history, or the Church as a mystical escape from history. If your decision is made under the true New Testament Gospel, it can, as I see it, point only one way.

Faith and Courage

But the decision will involve grave, and sometimes desperate, ventures of faith. To see the Kingdom of God "at hand" in the sinning fellowship which constitutes your parish! This is not easy. And yet, if your eyes are opened, you will see the kingdom there, hidden like a treasure in a field or small as a mustard seed, but there. You will see it in a troubled conscience, in the excuses which a worldling presents for not coming to Church, in the despair of a struggling soul overwhelmed by fate, in the courage of a wife true to her marriage vow despite the unbearable burden of a drunken husband, in every pathetic courtesy shown you as a man of God, in the unvoiced prayers of contrition which, if you listen for them in faith, you will hear uttered in the broken hearts of publicans and harlots, in the unconscious acts of love and forgiveness which your maturer saints perform "they know not how," above all, in the veritable ocean of subconscious fear of God and faith in God which, like a submerged reservoir, is left as a legacy from the generations of our fathers. Christ can still say to us ministers of His: "O ye of little faith." God the Holy Ghost has not abdicated His Lordship of the Church. He is there. The root of sin in ourselves and in our people is precisely lack of faith. We make a mistake in wrestling so desperately with the problem of sin, berating our people because of their many imperfections, particularly their neglect of church attendance. We ought, instead, to be wrestling with the problem of our people's faith. It is only in faith that a man can take the daring leap of calling himself a sinner in the first place. It takes the courage of faith to repent. True repentance is a dying to self, a kind of suicide of the rival god in our own self-will. And where shall he secure this courage except in the fellowship of the Holy Spirit, in the company of other repentant and forgiven fellow-sinners? Hence the great drama of faith may have to begin with trust in the fellowship. The fellowship takes us into its forgiving arms. Then, and only then, can we dare to leap out into the dark, to die with Christ and to rise again into the new life of the Spirit.

I sometimes think that we shall be compelled in our modern world to teach the creed—or at least to experience the credal drama in ourselves—in reverse. First a faith in God the Holy Spirit. First the experience of the living Christ in the fellowship of repentance and forgiveness. First Christ in the Church. Then, and perhaps only then, can come the great credal confession of Christ as Lord. How indeed can a man say that Jesus is Lord, except by the Holy Spirit? Finally, in the fellowship of the Spirit and through Christ's sacrifice on the Cross we can come boldly into the presence of God the Father, Judge of all men.

The author of the Epistle to the Ephesians exults in the "work of ministry," the "building up of the body of Christ . . . to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." It is a glorious vocation. But first you must believe in the Church yourselves. Faith in the Third Person of the Trinity is the climax of our credal confession. It is also the most testing. It means Faith in a God of contemporary history. It means accepting the people of God as the living temple of the Holy Spirit. It means answering telephone calls at midnight in a sweet temper. It means listening to boring conversations. It means weaving strands of repentance and forgiveness between husbands and wives, between laboring man and factory manager. It means slow and painful preparation of the body of Christ for presentation on the sacramental altar as well as the altar ceremonial itself. It means adorning the bride of Christ by nurturing love and charity among Christian neighbors.

Such are, briefly sketched, three testings that will come to you in your vocation as men of God. There are, of course, many more. But do not let them frighten you. Our ministry is a ministry in weakness. But it can, if we walk humbly with the Lord, fulfill daily the promise voided by St. Paul: "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty. And base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath he chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to naught things that are. . . . But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption. That, according as it is written, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord."

TWO MEN MEET

The two men had knelt together in prayer on the floor of the rector's study in the parish house many times. It would have seemed that they were far apart in faith and doctrine, but they had studied the Scriptures together and had come to realize that the doctrines of the Christian Church were based on the foundation of the New Testament and among the practices which they had in common was the anointing with oil for Christian healing. The older man was the rector of a small Episcopal church in an eastern state. The other was the pastor of the local Church of the Nazarene. Both of their congregations were overshadowed by a large Protestant denomination in the community. The very proximity of these two men had made for their friendship as their homes were close together and they often had neighborly chats over the back fence.

After three years the Nazarene pastor was called to a larger work in another state. The priest reached the age of retirement and became very ill. When his friend and brother in Christ heard that he had been stricken with a lingering illness, he hastened to his side. The Nazarene kneeling by the bed after reading from his Bible drew from his pocket a bottle of holy oil, praying and anointing his Christian brother.

We leave to all who read to draw their own conclusions but the rector says, "It was a bit of heaven."

MAGNA CARTA DAY OBSERVED

New York, N. Y.—Magna Carta Day was observed at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine at both morning and afternoon services June 21. A special prayer, authorized by the Right Rev. Charles Kendall Gilbert was offered at both services.

The Rev. Charles E. B. Neate, rector and chaplain of St. George's English Church, Paris, France, was special preacher at the morning Holy Communion service. The Rev. George William Evans, chaplain-superintendent of the Mersey-side Mission to Seamen, delivered the sermon at afternoon service.

The Cathedral has three relics of Caen stone, forming the shaft of the stone credence table in the sanctuary on the south side of the altar. They were given to the cathedral in 1922 and came from the abbey of Bury St. Edmunds, England. It was there that the barons met on November 20, 1214, and swore before the altar to demand from King John the liberties embodied in the Magna Carta.

Nunc Dimittis

Lord, now lettest Thou Thy servant depart in peace . . . for mine eyes have seen Thy salvation. So sang one who had steadily regulated all his conduct by the law of his God, and who to his righteous conduct had added a pious heart. Having seen the Lord's Messiah, having received Him in his arms and in his heart, Simeon is ready to depart whenever Death should beckon.

This is the final paper in the present Nunc dimittis series, and thought is to be directed to our own translation to that large Upper Room, furnished and prepared by One Who is all the glory of Immanuel's land. Elderly churchpeople welcome the quiet evening of their days, as a God-given opportunity for deepening fellowship with that Lord in whose company eternity is to be spent.

Dying is a business we do but once, and any contemplation of that removal, causes contradictory emotions with most people. We dislike the thought of separation from the only kind of life we have known; we are somewhat uncertain as to what "the judgment" will bring; and yet, as Christians, we know that Earth is not our home, and our growing experience of the riches of Christ, made ours through grace, and through our life hid in Him, and His indwelling of our hearts, these things, and our kin over there, make us long for that far better thing of which the Apostle told. (Ezekiel 12:3; Heb. 9:27; Phil. 1:23.) Let such as dread the experience of death, read their New Testament again, noting what our Lord said and what the Evangelists wrote concerning that final thing. Beautiful as is the twenty-third Psalm, yet the expression, "the valley of the shadow of death," has no counterpart in the New Testament. The story is told of a child tripping lightheartedly through a graveyard (horrible term!) at dusk. Someone enquired, "Are you not afraid?" and the ready answer was, "Oh, no, I only cross it to go home." And to Simeon, to Paul, and to others, death meant just that. Of course there are things antecedent to such mental state. Perfect love casts out fear, even fear of death. Is Pilgrim's Progress read today? That old book can still teach many things, and we turn thought to it now. When Pilgrim reached The Palace Beautiful, and told the occupants of that place of the things that had befallen him since leaving the City of Destruction, Prudence, a member of the Palace household, enquired, "Do you not sometimes think of the country from which you came? Are you not at times perplexed? By what means do you find your annoyances vanquished?" And Pilgrim replied, "When I think of what I saw at the Cross; and when I look at my Broidered Coat; when I look into the Roll that I carry in my bosom; and when my thoughts wax warm about whither I am going, that will do it." That which John Bunyan relates of his Pilgrim is just a bit of our own story, if we have personally entered into God's remedy for sin. "First of all . . . Christ died for our sins." (1 Cor. 15:3; Gal. 2:20.) "On that Hill stood a Cross, and a little below, a sepulchure. Just as Pilgrim came up with the Cross, his burden was loosed from off his shoulders, and fell from off his back, and began to tumble, and so continued to do, until it came to the mouth of the sepulchure, when it fell in, and I saw it no more." And one happy day, perhaps long ago, we, too, stood as penitents on Calvary, and the burden of our hearts rolled away. At the Cross, Pilgrim was told of sins forgiven; he was stripped of his rags and clothed with a change of raiment, which included the Broidered Coat. And that Broidered Coat, or the things it represents, figures in Scripture from Genesis to Revelation. To Adam in Genesis 3:21; to Joshua in Zechariah 3:4; the Prodigal Son in Luke 15:22, and in Revelation 3:5; and in 7:9, 13, 14, a change of raiment was provided. Rags of self-righteousness gave place to garments of salvation, and to the Robe of Christ's righteousness. When Isaiah 61:10 tells of being clothed and covered, and when Paul writes in Romans 13, verse 14, and in Galatians 3:27, and in Philippinas 3:9, about putting on Christ, and being found in Him, and when Pilgrim tells of his Broidered Coat, they are all really saying the same thing. And we have the same great experience in mind when we sing—"Look, Father, look on His anointed face, and only look on us as found in Him." Said someone to an elderly Christian, "And what if Christ should fail you at the last?" "He can't," came the reply, "I've been wrapped up in Him so long, I am part of Him." It is all of grace, and because of present grace we make bold to say, "Jesus, Thy blood and righteousness, my beauty are, my glorious dress. This spotless robe, the same appears, when failing nature sinks in years; no age can change its glorious hue, its glory is for ever new." In that Broidered Coat we need not fear going in to see the Giver.

Pilgrim also found help from the Roll, the Scriptures. Prepared are those people who have the Word of God writ deep in heart and experience. (Ps. 119:11; Jn. 5:39; 2 Tim. 2:15; 3:15; Jas. 1:21; Acts 20:32.) All these things, the Cross, the Coat, the Covenant, combined to make Pilgrim desire to reach the City, where he hoped "to see Him alive, that did hang upon the Cross. I love Him because He eased me of my burden."

Just before going to the Cross, Jesus asked that His pardoned ones be permitted to see Him in His glory, and that is heaven. Where Jesus has found a throne, His people shall find a home. To such as have wisely used life's schooling, grand response is given to that request of the Master in John 17:24. Such a word assures the believer that his joy will be perfectly secured by being with Him. But what of judgment? As the Gospels are carefully read, the great impression made by the life of Jesus Christ is not one of judgment, but of love so strong and true, that life was not sufficient to disclose it. Yet, wherever He was, there was an element of judgment. Sometimes it was His deeds that carried judgment; sometimes His words, or even a look. (Mk. 10:21; Lk. 22:61.)

Would it be claiming too much, if it was asserted that Jesus, to whom the Father has committed the judgment (Jno. 5:22), gives us our acquittal now? Over against such statements as that in Hebrews 9:27, may we set such words as John 17:24 or the first Epistle of John, Chapter 3, Verse 1 to 3, inclusive, or Chapter 4, Verses 17, 18? Shall not we who have committed our stained souls to the Saviour for cleansing and keeping, shall we not confidently rest in the mighty assurance with which the eighth of Romans opens? May we not have the confidence voiced in 2 Timothy 1:12? What of Romans 15:4? It is but a working layman who dares so to write, but I cannot think it presumptuous to accept the wonderful article in that last will and testament of our great Intercessor, to be Executor of which He rose from the dead—"Father, I will that they also, whom Thou hast given Me, be with Me where I am."

To the Editor I am deeply grateful for providing this avenue of simple witness. These eleven messages, have been written chiefly for people who have entered life's Vesper Hour, the Elderly, awaiting their translation to glory. Until that call comes, they continue to live in the environs of heaven, ready, like Jacob, to gather their feet up into their bed, ere they gather to their Lord, and to their kin! ready, like Paul at Troas, "to depart on the morrow" (Gen. 49:33; Acts 20:7); ready through grace and grace alone, to dwell in the House of the Lord for ever.

Meanwhile, we make constant use of such a prayer as this:

Almighty God and Father, who didst reveal Thy blessed Son to aged Simeon and Anna, as in the Temple they worshipped Thee, look graciously upon me, and as my own Eventide approaches, grant that I, too, may behold the glory

The Morality of Nations

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

This summer at the end of August a momentous meeting will take place in Amsterdam, Holland. At this time final steps will be taken to organize a World Council of Churches. The Council will include all non-Roman Catholic Christian churches in its membership. Thus culminates a movement toward the unity of churches which began after the First World War and for which various conferences in Lausanne and Stockholm, in Oxford and Edinburgh, laid the foundations.

The impulse toward unity among the free churches of the world was originally embodied in two organizations. One was usually called "Life and Work," and the other "Faith and Order".

The one sought to encourage cooperation among the churches along practical lines and upon the basis of their common interest in social and ethical problems. The other, called "Faith and Order," sought to explore the possibilities of achieving a greater degree of organic unity among the churches upon the basis of a common faith and a common order of their life.

The "Life and Work" movement reached its culmination in the Oxford Conference on Church Community and State which was held in 1937. At the Faith and Order Conference, held in Edinburgh in the same year, it was decided to merge the two movements in one World Council of Churches."

This new World Council will not create a world church. It will federate the churches of the world somewhat after the fashion of the Federal Council of Churches, which seeks to bring order out of chaos on our own national scene. It will not seek to determine a common polity for all churches; but it has been able to state a common faith in which all the churches share.

The theme of the Amsterdam Conference—"God's Design and the World's Disorder"—suggests that the main emphasis will be on seeking to define the common witness of the church in a day of social and international crisis. It will seek, in other words, to draw the churches together into a more intimate fellowship upon the basis of common responsibilities and a shared faith. It will not seek to solve the problem of all the differences which will divide the church, particularly in the area of polity, which is to say, on the question of the right organization for the church.

The Amsterdam Conference is a fresh and bold venture to increase the area of unity and order under conditions of freedom. It is easy to have freedom without order and unity. And it is easy to have order and unity without freedom. Democracy is an effort to solve the question of freedom and order in the realm of politics.

Protestantism, having dispensed with unity and order maintained by absolute authority, has tended to live in anarchy and chaos. Religious democracy has been more imperiled by chaos than political democracy. Political democracy is a going concern, though it must be admitted that chaos and anarchy dog its steps. But religious democracy has produced a wide variety of Protestant sects with little unity and order in their common life.

The Amsterdam Conference may become historic because it is the first worldwide effort since the Reformation to arrest the movement toward anarchy among the free churches and to create unity within the framework of freedom.

"Comfort and succor all . . . ." (From the prayer for the Whole State of Christ's Church, page 74.)

Comfort means literally "to strengthen much, to make strong" enough to endure. Succour, of course, means "to run to the aid of, to run under" in order to support when danger of collapse seems imminent. When "trouble, sorrow, need, sickness, or any other adversity" come we are rarely strong enough to take them by ourselves alone, unless our inner life has been shored up by long dependence upon God at such times of need. Almost instinctively man turns to God when life proves too much for him to handle.

This petition comes toward the end of the Prayer for "the Whole State of Christ's Church," but its significance is apparent when we pause to think of the immensity of our needs and the limitations of our staying power. Man was made incomplete, so that without his divine nature fulfilling itself in obedience to God he would not be completely whole.

In a formal sense we pray for aid and help and the everlasting arms of God underneath us to support us. But whenever dire need strikes sharp and swift our cry comes on the instant, "Lord, make haste to help us."

As we pray this portion of the long prayer which begins the communion service proper, we are really acknowledging our faith in God who can and will help us in every time of need—"more ready to help than we are to pray"—without whom we are lone and lost and but frail chips in a stormy sea.

When we learn to lean upon His strength within us, and to call out our utmost for His highest whenever a challenge comes, we shall have learned to pray this prayer.

J. W. KENNEDY.

MRS. HARPER SIBLEY TO SERVE U. S. MILITARY GOVERNMENT IN GERMANY

New York, N. Y.—Mrs. Harper Sibley, noted church laywoman and president of the United Council of Church Women, has been appointed by the War Department to serve for ninety days as an advisor to the U. S. Military Government in Germany.

While in Germany Mrs. Sibley will consult with church groups, prominent churchwomen, and government officials with a view to developing discussion groups and religious and social activities in churches.

One of Mrs. Sibley's main assignments will be to help set up machinery through which German women can learn more about activities of American churchwomen, and American institutions.

While in Europe Mrs. Sibley will attend the first Assembly of the World Council of Churches in Amsterdam, Holland, in August, as an official observer for the United Council of Church Women.

In discussing her assignment by the War Department, Mrs. Sibley said: "There is growing recognition on the part of government officials that the major task of reconstruction in Germany must be borne by women."

Declaring that women represent the most vital and important segment of the German population, Mrs. Sibley pointed out that there are 168 women in Germany to 107 men. "When you consider that the great percentage of men are found in old and young age groups, it is plain to see that women will play the decisive role in molding the new Germany."

Mrs. Sibley is former chairman of the executive board of the Women's Auxiliary of the Episcopal Church. She was one of four women elected to the National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church in 1946. She is a member of the Departments of Pastoral Services and Race Relations of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

Adelaide Teague Case

Adelaide Teague Case was teacher, counsellor, friend, to hosts of people, not only in our own Church but outside the Church. She was an outstanding leader in the field of Christian Education. Nearly everyone now at work in that field came under her influence at one time or another. She did much to raise the standards of training and to improve the status of women workers, both volunteer and professional, in the Church.

At Teachers College, Columbia University, her classes included people from all kinds of religious backgrounds, yet she always managed to create a unity among the students. She had the ability to make each person in her class want to do his very best and his most creative work. When she was appointed the first woman professor in a theological seminary in our Church her many friends rejoiced that those in training for the ministry would have a chance to study with her.

But her contribution to the Church was not limited to her teaching. She served on the National Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary, and at the time of her death was one of the four women members of the National Council. To these important posts she brought her vision, her clear thinking, her firm convictions.

Her own life was an example to many. Her deep religious insight, her Christian faith, her ability to interpret that faith to others, her real joy in living, her sensitivity to the needs of others, her humility, her courage, her ability to rise above physical pain and suffering, her warm friendship—all these will be greatly missed by those who knew and loved her. She was one of those rare individuals who made those with her feel both humble and worthwhile. The Holy Spirit did indeed give her power from on high. May light perpetual shine upon her, and may she rest in peace.

Summer Holy Days

We believe that the English seldom use the frightful word vacation, but usually speak of their holidays, and of course holidays are holy days. Vacation means emptiness, nothingness, and a human soul should never "vacate" his life.

Of course all of us need a temporary escape from the routine of our ordinary duties. There should be periods when the clergyman, the lawyer, the physician, the merchant, the housekeeper can—not exactly forget what they are, and lose their identity—but enjoy recreation and play and rest, and be excused from the performance of the duties of their profession.

But there is really only one reason for taking a holiday. It is the joy of coming home again. If we do not want to come back home, refreshed and invigorated for our task, why not try to move away from our home and into a more interesting job? For our two weeks or month of holiday we usually greatly enjoy ourselves, and sometimes wish it could be continued permanently. But of course in that case it would lose all its joy. "Roughing it," hiking over the mountains with a pack and sleeping in caves, or spending a week fishing with our male friends and sleeping in a cabin of which our wives would not approve, is all very well for a short holiday. But if it became permanent, we should be tramps. A perpetual or protracted holiday would be intolerable.

So recreation loses its significance unless it is just that—re-creation, the making over of ourselves, better to fit us to fill our rightful places. Dean Suter has suggested the addition to the Prayer Book of a moveable feast, a sort of Rally Sunday in the autumn to signalize our return from our holiday and a re-dedication to the work and worship of our church and community.

We wish you all a happy holy-day, but warn you that it cannot be truly holy if you make it a vacation from church worship. For then the word will correctly describe it, and it will leave you empty, your soul vacant of the support and inspiration it requires.

SWEET HOUR OF PRAYER!

Sweet hour of prayer! sweet hour of prayer!
That calls me from a world of care,
And bids me at my Father's throne,
Make all my wants and wishes known:
In seasons of distress and grief,
My soul has often found relief;
And oft escaped the tempter's snare,
By thy return, sweet hour of prayer.
—Wm. W. Walford.

There are many old saints in our family today who can recall how the early Church workers use to gather early in the morning at their places of Worship for Praise and Prayer; and how they sang the grand old hymn quoted above. It usually began the service and was very popular. If you talk it over with any of them today they will tell you how inspiring and stimulating it was to them. How it strengthened and encouraged and helped them for the hours of trial to follow. Do we not need such help today?

When the strife is fierce, the warfare long,
Steals on the ear the distant triumph song,
And hearts are brave again, and arms are strong. Alleluia.

Sweet Hour of Prayer. May I Thy Consolation share?

SOCIETY NEEDS THE CHURCH

For any society to be healthy and sane it must be independent of the world as far as its sense of values is concerned, and yet very much concerned with all the misery and problems of the world. And for society to have proper values and proper concerns it needs the Church in the community as a center of faith in God through Jesus Christ, as a center of moral discipline, and as a center of the "changed life" of the followers of Christ where self-sacrifice and concern for others is not talked about so much as practiced.

Society is not healthy and sane today. It needs what the Church has to give. The Light of Salvation must be alowed to shine through our lives to dispel the darkness hanging over society; that "through the Church the manifold wisdom of God might now be made known." This is our task in Christ Church, as part of the great Christian family.—E. F. K.

HOW ONE G. I. HELPED

G. I. Dave Stratton believes that Bibles not bombs will convey the real message of Christian Democracy. Dave walked into the Kansas City field office of the Bible Society and asked how he could get Scriptures to the Japanese people whom he met when he was with the Armed Forces. "When I was in Japan," he replied when questioned about his interest, "I felt I ought not to forget that I was a Christian and accustomed to talking to folks about Jesus and the Christian way of life. But they had no Bibles and I want to know how I can get some to Japanese Christians whom I know."

Dave learned that thousands of Scriptures are being sent to Japan by the Bible Society, as a part of its World Recovery program, but he wanted to do something personal. The Bible Society mapped out a plan which he took back to his home in Tucumcari, New Mexico. Results—a money order for $134.16, representing contributions from the people of the First Baptist Church, Tucumcari, New Mexico, to be used in the purchase of Scriptures for Konomu Itagaki, Sapporo, Hokkido, Japan. Instructions have gone from the New York office of the Bible Society to the secretary at the Bible House in Tokyo that these Bibles be delivered to Mr. Itagaki.

To evangelize is so to present Christ Jesus in the power of the Holy Spirit, that men shall come to put their trust in God through Him, to accept Him as their Saviour, and to serve Him as their king in the fellowship of His Church.

CXXXII

Page 80—THE PRAYER OF CONSECRATION—In these days, and probably throughout the ages there is a good deal of discussion about he whole subject of atonement. People, including the clergy, are getting further and further away from the conception of a God that required the sacrifice of His Son to placate Him for the sins of mankind; and the more we think of it the more difficult it is for a loving father to require such an offering from his children no matter what their sin may have been.

This, however, is no place for a theological argument along these lines, but it is an extraordinary fact that animal sacrifices, and in very ancient times human sacrifices, were an important part of all religious systems before the time of Christ; and that today this type of worship has completely disappeared, and that now only a small group around the modern town of Nablus, which is near the ancient site of Samaria, still practice animal sacrifice.

This little group, consisting of only a few hundred persons, still observe the ancient Jewish Passover in exactly the same way in which it was originally prescribed. Every year they ascend the Holy Mountain about which the Samaritan woman asked our Saviour at Jacob's well, and there they go through the ancient ceremony in all its bloody details. But, so far as the writer knows this sect is the only relic of the universal practice of animal sacrifice in divine worship.

So that, whatever may be our views about the atonement, "the one oblation of Himself once offered" by our Saviour Christ has put an end forever to other animal sacrifices in the religious world. This, too, is a fact and not mere theory just as it is a fact that the birth of Jesus in a stable has become the dead center of all human history, from which every data is fixed, either as B. C., before Christ, or A. D., Annoe Domini, in the year of our Lord.

Leaders have been troubled by the huge enrollment of Rikkyo (St. Paul's University), Tokyo. It has seemed necessary to admit great numbers of students, more than 5,000 last year, in order to have even the minimum income for operation. When the school was rebuilt after the earthquake of 1923, 1,000 was expected to be the limit. Some limitation of enrollment is believed to have taken place when the Spring term opened recently.

News of the Church

THE LAMBETH CONFERENCE

News of some of our bishops who went abroad early for the Lambeth Conference is filtering back to America. The Bishop of Indianapolis lost his cassock and borrowed one from the Bishop of Edinburgh. "Fortunately our correspondent writes, he was not of the stature of Bishop Seabury, or he would not have been so comfortably arrayed." Perhaps a bit wistfully, our Scottish correspondent remarks that the Bishop did not lose the ham and eggs he was conveying as a present from the United States to Lambeth Palace.

Preaching in Dundee, Bishop Kirchoffer said that the Church is growing in America and that its influence is out of all proportion to its size. He appealed for a greater witness by the laity. There was lack of policy in our religious education, said the bishop. "Every diocese in America is a missionary diocese in that it is placed among people shot through by secularism and materialism and has much missionary work to do." The Bishop used the illustration of the flying red horse used by an advertiser in America: "We can teach a man many things and much skill, but, if at 45 or 50 he cracks up, breaks up his home and family relationships, what use is he as a citizen? We must teach him that there is another part of him which he must use; something, which like the wings of the flying horse, will not only lift him over barriers but which will lift him above the materialism of the earth."

Speaking in Maidstone Parish Church, the Bishop of Idaho spoke to a large congregation which included the mayor and aldermen. He described his diocese as a rural area where farming, mining and sheep raising were carried on. The Bishop of Kobe and the Bishop of Grahamstown, South Africa, also spoke at this service.

ST. GEORGE'S CATHEDRAL, JERUSALEM, DAMAGED

New York, N. Y.—In a recent report to London, the Anglican Bishop in Jerusalem, the Rt. Rev. Weston H. Stewart, said that the American chaplain, the Rev. Walter C. Klein, has escaped injury, though his apartment has been fired upon twice. The bishop reports in detail on damage done by shelling to St. George's Cathedral. This includes: Wooden roof of the nave is wrecked. Some carved bosses from the choir and sanctuary roof have fallen, but they are undamaged and can be replaced.

The pulpit has been completely demolished.

About twenty of the stained glass windows have been partially or completely wrecked, among them the great west window, and smaller windows of St. Michael's Chapel. All the plain glass is gone.

Archbishop Frederic Temple's litany desk is damaged, but still usuable.

Choir stalls, but not Canons' stalls, and Glastonbury chairs, damaged or destroyed.

Damage to stone work, and much damage to plaster, in the nave and the central crossing.

Two brass lions at the foot of the lectern are badly damaged. There are holes in the marble flooring, and a lock was wrenched off the vestry door.

Concluding the bishop wrote: "In general, the nave is a wreck, and the crossing and transept damaged, but the choir and sanctuary are little the worse except for dust and dirt. We rigged up a temporary church in my drawing room for today, and shall continue to use it for some days, but as we had been using only the choir for the last month, I think, when we have got it cleaned up, we can return to it. Except for their widows, both St. Michael's and St. John's Chapels are virtually undamaged."

PLEA FOR JUSTICE

New York, N. Y.—Mr. Norman Armour, Assistant Secretary of State for Political Affairs, received recently a deputation of the American Church Committee for Armenia, consisting of the Rev. Robert W. Searle, Chairman of the Committee; the Rt. Rev. Bishop Tiron, of the Armenian Church in North America; Mr. Wilbur La Roe, Moderator of the Presbyterian Church in U. S. A.; the Rev. Seth R. Brooks, Minister of the Universalist National Memorial Church, and the Rev. Edward L. R. Elson, Minister of The National Presbyterian Church.

The purpose of the meeting was the presentation to the State Department of a petition signed by over 20,000 Protestant clergymen in America on behalf of the Armenian people and their cause —seeking the good offices of the American Government "to place the cause of the Armenians before the United Nations Assembly; to plead for the restoration of the land within the Woodrow Wilson award to the Armenian people, and to seek that these people, by their own self-determination, be given the right to decide the political future of their restored land."

The American Church Committee for Armenia was organized in the spring of 1947 with the guidance and direction of such distinguished church leaders as the Rt. Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, Honorary Chairman of the Committee; Mrs. Harper Sibley, the Rev. Henry Smith Leiper, the Rev. Walter Van Kirk, the Rev. Roswell P. Barnes, the Rev. Frederick L. Fagley, and the other officers of the Committee. Soon their number increased, so that by the fall of the same year three hundred and thirty-three nationally and denominationally known church leaders from all parts of the country had associated themselves with it as members—among them forty-two bishops, many official heads and executives of denominations, councils of churches, and other interchurch bodies, and pastors and preachers of national repute. It is generally believed that the American Church Committee for Armenia, as now constituted, is denominationally and geographically the most representative body of religious leaders in America today.

The deputation appealed to the Secretary of State, and through him "to the Christian political conscience of America, to place and keep on the agenda of the Departments of State, for consideration and action in due time, the problem of the neglected justice and continued violence done to the lives, the property, the lands, and destiny of a fellow Christian people.

CLERGY PENSIONS INCREASED

New York, N. Y.—The pensions of a large group of retired clergy have been increased effective May 1, 1948, according to a statement just issued by the Rt. Rev. Cameron J. Davis, D. D., President of The Church Pension Fund. The increase has brought this group of pensions up to a level of 23 per cent higher on the average than the amount guaranteed in the Rules.

The clergy affected by this step are those who had a period of ministry before the Fund started in 1947, who have reached the age of sixty-eight after May, 1942, and whose pensions as guaranteed by the Rules are under $1,000 a year. The Board of Trustees at its recent annual meeting, at which twenty of the twenty-three members were present, felt this forward step was justified in the light of the financial status of the Fund and the outlook for the future. The pensions of those who reached the age of sixty-eight prior to May, 1942, had already been placed on the correspondingly higher basis as they retired. The Trustees authorized the setting up of the necessary reserves to guarantee the increased pensions so long as the beneficiaries live.

The step contemplates also that clergy in this same category who have not yet retired will benefit by the same higher pension bases when they do retire.

Pensions which figure under the guaranteed Rules to more than $1,000 a year are not affected by this step. The funds available have been used entirely for the benefit of those whose ecclesiastical income during active ministry has been in the lower brackets.

It was reported also that the ninety new age allowances granted in 1947 averaged $1,027 a year, as compared with $958 for the new grants in 1946 and $849 in 1945. It is expected that the average for new grants will successively increase year by year for a great many years.

"The cost of living continues to increase," said Bishop Davis, "and our pensions consequently fall shorter of being adequate. This is especially the fact in the case of clergy ordained prior to 1917. Their pensions are in many cases lower than they would be had the Fund been in operation throughout the whole period of their ministry. Some of this disadvantage has been compensated for by the "extra benefits" granted over the years. But to do away with all the disadvantage they are under calls for $1,925,000. Of this total, $515,000 would be needed to adjust the retirement pensions at present in force, $675,000 to adjust the eventual pensions of those now over the age of sixty-eight but still active, and $735,000 to adjust the eventual pensions of those who have not yet reached the age of sixty-eight. An additional $165,000 would make possible a similar adjustment in disability pensions; and an additional $1,220,000 or thereabouts would make the adjustment in widows' and orphans' pensions. The total of all these is $3,310,000. This is a large sum."

BISHOPS FROM MANY LANDS MEET AT LAMBETH

(Special Correspondence from London)

London—Bishops of the Anglican Communion from all over the world are gathering in London for the first Lambeth Conference since 1930. They are coming from many lands and will number approximately 400. Many bishops from the United States have already arrived. While they are staying in many places, the Goring Hotel has become a sort of unofficial headquarters. Bishop Henry W. Hobson, of Southern Ohio; Bishop Karl M. Block, of California; Bishop Henry D. Phillips, of Southwestern Virginia, and others are located there.

Before the Conference, most of the bishops were preaching in various parts of the British Isles. Of special interest was the dedication of a new sanctuary at St. Andrew's Cathedral, Aberdeen, Scotland. This was made possible by the gifts of American Episcopalians in appreciation of the action of the Scottish bishops who, in the eighteenth century, consecrated Dr. Samuel Seabury as the first American bishop, and first Bishop of Connecticut. The dedication was made by the Bishop of Aberdeen and the preachers at the two services were Bishop Frederick G. Budlong, of Connecticut, and Bishop Walter H. Gray, Coadjutor of Connecticut. Bishop Block, of California, spoke at Pusey House, Oxford.

The Lambeth Conference began with a service in the Cathedral at Canterbury, July 1, with the Archbishop of Canterbury as the preacher, and all the other bishops participating. Immediately afterwards the regular sessions of the Conference began.

On Sunday, July 4, a great service was held in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, with the Presiding Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, as the preacher.

War-torn London is planning many events of great interest in honor of the visitors, including a reception by the King and Queen, and Prime Minister and the Lord Mayor, but the working schedule of the Conference does not permit many events of a social nature.

HOSPITALITY COMMITEE ORGANIZED

San Francisco, Calif.—At the suggestion of Bishop John B. Bentley, vice-president of the National Council and director of the Overseas Department, a Hospitality Committee has been set up here to meet missionaries and nationals arriving in this country and departing for the Far East through the port of San Francisco.

The Committee was organized by the Rev. A. Ronald Merrix, National Council Field Officer in the Eighth Province. Colonel J. I. Sloat is chairman and Miss Sigrid Anderson is secretary-treasurer. Members include two Chinese priests, two retired colonels, one major, one hotel manager, and four leaders of the Woman's Auxiliary. Mr. Merrix said that "each member of the committee has expressed his eagerness to participate in its activities and has shown a deep concern for the missionary cause of the Church and the opportunities which this work affords."

THE CHURCH AND ECONOMIC LIFE

New York, N. Y.—Stating that "vast numbers of church people are confused and hesitant about what is required of them as Christians in economic life," the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has called for an annual church-wide educational emphasis on the church and economic life, to take place each year during the week of the third Sunday in January. The first observance, in 1949, will be held the week of Sunday, January 16.

In presenting the recommendation to the Executive Committee, Arthur S. Flemming, Chairman of the Council's Department of the Church and Economic Life, said: "The members of the department fully recognize the importance of Labor Sunday because of its connection with the observance of Labor Day by the nation and in communities. But because it comes in a holiday weekend, Labor Sunday itself affords a limited opportunity for a program in local church groups and among church people. It is this program which the department has in view in recommending an annual church-wide educational emphasis on the church and economic life in January."

The department stated, in its recommendation, that the purpose of the annual emphasis will be to help church people:

"(1) to understand how they are all a part of economic life, daily making decisions that affect what happens to other people;

"(2) to recognize that ultimately they are responsible under God for what they do as buyers and sellers, consumers and producers;

"(3) to come to know through study more about such matters as the relevance of their Christian faith for their economic relations, economic conditions and issues in their community, nation, and the world, and ways by which they as Christians, individually and colectively, may build Christian principles into economic life."

For the observance in January, 1949, the Department of the Church and Economic Life will have avilable appropriate materials for use by the churches, including worship services, resource materials, study guides, program suggestions and action projects.

DR. ALLEN APPOINTED CO-SECRETARY OF DEPARTMENT OF RACE RELATIONS

New York, N. Y.—The Rev. Dr. Thomas C. Allen, of Richmond, Virginia, for many years prominent in interracial work in the South, has been appointed co-secretary of the Department of Race Relations of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

He will be associated with the Rev. Dr. J Oscar Lee, executive secretary of the department. As co-secretary, Dr. Allen will direct the work of the department with local church councils. One of his major responsibilities will be the promotion of interracial clinics in critical areas of racial tension throughout the country. These clinics, which have been held in twenty-four cities during the past three years, have aided local church and civic groups in building programs of interracial understanding in the community.

In 1943 Dr. Allen became the first full-time director of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation in Virginia. When the Virginia Council of Churches was formed in 1945 and the Commission became the Council's Department of Interracial Cooperation, Dr. Allen remained its director. Under his leadership many new interracial committees were set up in local Virginia communities and state-wide interracial institutes were held with church and veterans' groups.

ANNIVERSARY OF AN OUTSTANDING MISSIONARY

Los Angeles, Calif.—St. Mary's Church, its Board, members and friends honored the Rev. John M. Yamazaki, S. T. D., upon the thirty-fifth anniversary of his ordination to the sacred ministry at the morning service, Sunday, June 27, 1948, in St. Mary's Church.

The Rt. Rev. Robert B. Gooden, D. D., close friend and staunch supporter of Dr. Yamazaki was the preacher and the Rt. Rev. Charles S. Reifsnider, D. D., also a long time friend, read the prayers.

Dr. Yamazaki was born in Matsumoto City, Japan, on July 23, 1884, and came to the United States on May 12, 1904. He was active as a layman in the Episcopal missions for the Japanese in San Francisco and Los Angeles founded by Mary Louise Patterson. Later he studied for the ministry at the Berkeley Divinity School in Connecticut, where he graduated and received his degree in 1913. He was ordained deacon in 1913 and priest in 1914, by the Rt. Rev. Horsefall Johnson, first bishop of Los Angeles.

Since 1913 Dr. Yamazaki has served continuously at St. Mary's as its priest and missionary, developing a flourishing congregation, church school and young people's organizations. For his community he has served and helped organize many institutions. He was one of the original founders of the Southern California Japanese Children's Home, and presently will serve as one of its directors. He has been many times and is now the president of the Japanese Church Federation of Southern California. He has labored unceasingly for Americanization of his people and has been one of the best mediums to interpret American ideals to Issei and Nisei generations. The work of his untiring efforts during wartime evacuation, resettlement, and the return home to the Pacific coast were deeply appreciated and the results proved his forthright leadership throughout the periods of stress and dislocation. It was during this period that his Alma Mater conferred upon him the degree of the Doctor of Sacred Theology.

Though close to his retirement age, he continues his work vigorously as a general missionary and community leader in the tasks of integration of his people to the community life. St. Mary's Church, a beautiful edifice, will remain as a living monument to his work of the past and will stand as a symbol to long view foresight for the development of future generations.

Working together faithfully with him these years has been his wife, Mary Tsune Yamzaki. He has four children: The Rev. John H. M. Yamzaki, who is vicar of St. Mary's and who is serving as chaplain in the Army Reserve; Dr. James N. Yamazaki, resident doctor at Cincinnati's Children's Hospital, who during the war was a captain in the Army, serving as battalion surgeon and who was taken prisoner of war in the Belgian Bulge; Peter T. Yamazaki, who served as an officer in the Military Intelligence during the war and continues to serve as a War Department civilian with the Occupational Forces in Japan; also a daughter, Louise H. Yamazaki, social case worker with Los Angeles County.

EPISCOPAL STUDENT CENTER FOR TULANE UNIVERSITY

New Orleans, La.—An Episcopal student center for Tulane University is planned at Zimple and Broadway by the Diocese of Louisiana.

The one and two-story brick building is estimated to cost $125,000, according to the Rev. Girault M. Jones, rector of St. Andrew's Church, who is chairman of the building committee and the advisory committee for student work.

It will have permanent quarters for a chaplain and his family who will direct Episcopal work at the university starting September 15. There will also be quarters for a full-time matron who will act as hostess. The center will be open to both men and women students.

The center will also contain a small chapel, library, recreation rooms, lounge and kitchen. All activities will be strictly supervised.

The project will be dedicated to World War II dead of all faiths from Tulane, and all Tulane gold star families are being notified of the dedication, the chairman said.

A campaign to raise funds has been started under chairmanship of W. J. Amoss.

The site, which has already been purchased, measures about 150 by 135 feet, and the building will be L-shaped, measuring about 100 by 65 feet.

YOUNG PEOPLE ACTIVE IN SUMMER CHURCH WORK

Detroit, Mich.—Thirty young man and women arrived in the Diocese of Michigan July 1 to begin summer work in the various parishes and missions of the Diocese which have requested their assistance. Through the financial support of the Bishop Page Foundation, set up recently, these young people will have the opportunity to obtain practical experience in Church work, and the parishes in which they serve will profit by their endeavors.

This summer program was instituted last year by the Rt. Rev. Richard S. Emrich, S. T. D., Bishop of the Diocese. Bishop Emrich realized that the clergy often become submerged in extensive parish work and cannot find time to expand into fields which should be explored. Also he felt that young people need the opportunity to learn first-hand about the life of the Church. He, therefore, tried the plan as an experiment, sending twenty-seven young people into various fields in the Diolese last summer.

The result of their work was amazing. Many parishes in Michigan's vacation areas reported that their attendance at services were doubled because of the intensified calling done by these summer helpers. New church signs were made and painted, lawns were improved and buildings were redecorated. In one parish the summer helper had been an electrician in the Navy, and the antiquated wiring of the church was reinstalled with modern equipment. In addition to all this, there were progressive steps in youth activities and Church School programs. Vacation Schools were conducted by the helpers. The mutual gains were tremendous.

Of the thirty young men and women going into the summer work this year, twenty will serve in out-State churches and ten will be in the city of Detroit or its immediate suburbs. Eight of the workers are students in theological schools, thirteen served in the armed forces of the country during the war. Five are young women, two of these being wives of theological students. Five of the workers are to supervise the work in parishes, conducting services and doing all other parish work, during the absence of the clergy.

The workers will give much the same type of service as that given by the group of helpers last year. The emphasis in the rural areas will be on calling, and on serving the vacationers in the vicinity, who often find no Church home while on holiday.

The Rev. Charles D. Braidwood, of Grace Church, Lapeer, and St. John's Church, Otter Lake, and Deaconess Olive M. Robinson, Field Worker for the Diocesan Department of Missions, are in charge of the program this year.

IN MEMORIUM

MILTON DARLING

The Church in Nebraska has lost one of its most distinguished Churchmen. Looking at himself from the standpoint of the world, Milton Darling would give an incredulous smile and may be others with the same point of view would smile with him. Yet in considering the saints of the dear Lord, very clearly the standard the Lord himself set up should be the measure rather than that of the world. "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world". This is true today, will always be true. It does not follow that those who succeed in the world and receive the world's applause are to be despised—not at all. We are simply trying to say that those who have labored in the Master's vineyard should be measured by the Master's standard. This standard would be the choice of Milton Darling.

From the world's viewpoint he would be classed as a failure. In the ears of the world there is no sound so unpleasant as that of failure. The world is slow to forgive those who grow old and die poor. The poverty of Milton Darling is not hard to account for.

First of all his main concern was not to make a success and to lay up the treasures of this world but to live a life. This is what the dear Lord would have all of His disciples do. In this Milton Darling was a sublime success. A failure as the world saw him, from the divine point of view a grand success. It is of small moment to fail in worldly affairs; it is of eternal and divine concern to succeed in the Kingdom of righteousness. And if the hurried, unthinking, unobserving world failed to pay due tribute to Milton Darling, we may be assured of his honored place among the saints in God's great Paradise. This assurance comes from God's holy Word.

There is another explanation of his poverty. "Milt" was a giver, a giver to charity and a giver to the extension of the Lord's Kingdom. Milton Darling gave and gave and gave again, and always more than he was able. His gifts, had they been wisely invested would have made him a financial success. But "Milt" preferred to be poor that others might be rich. Poverty in things temporal troubled him little if he could see others rich in things eternal. Thus he laid up great treasures where moth and rust do not corrupt and where thieves do not break through and steal. And so we are not far wrong when Milton Darling is spoken of as one of Nebraska's most distinguished Churchmen.

It was indeed a long life he lived, eighty-seven years. Coming from Maryland to Omaha when he was young and Omaha was young, his long life was an example and an inspiration in holy living both to young and old. The young men were his chief interest. There are many men in the prime of life today, true servants of their divine Lord, who look back and thank God for "Uncle Milt", who in their young years kept their feet in the narrow path that leadeth unto life eternal.

A FRIEND.

THE REV. C. W. SHEERIN, D. D.

When the Rev. Charles W. Sheerin, D. D., was called to that higher life, Christianity here lost a vibrant force, the Episcopal Church a strong and faithful leader; those who knew him personally, a loyal and helpful friend. There is a halo around his memory wherever he served. A knight in shining armor who gave so wholeheartedly his youth, his strength and great ability to the Church work. Such a life should be kept in remembrance.

We hope in the renovation and reconstruction of the Virginia Episcopal Seminary, his Alma Mater in theology, something helpful and permanent will be incorporated, reminding those who follow his profession, that highest and most important of all work, "preaching the Gospel and shepherding a flock," two things that are or should be synonomous, that in this calling, quality of work as well as length of years will win those most gracious words of commendation, "well done good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of thy God." We could almost hear those loving words as he entered into the presence chamber of the God he loved and served. His body rests in the quiet "God's Acre" of his loved Seminary with the fathers of the Virginia Church, his spirit will ever be in and about the place he loved.

In the words of a great English author in reference to a brother writer, for the Rev. Charles W. Sheerin, D. D., "Nil nisi bunum".

THE REV. S. S. MARQUIS, D. D.

The Rev. Samuel S. Marquis, D. D., rector emeritus of Christ Church Cranbrook, Bloomfield Hills, Mich., and former Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, died on June 21 at his home in Birmingham after a long illness. He was eighty-two years of age.

Born June 8, 1866, at Sharon, Ohio, Dr. Marquis was graduated with honors from Allegheny College in Pennsylvania. As a boy he was a Methodist, and was widely known as the "boy preacher". Later he became interested in Presbyterianism, but finally embraced the faith which he served throughout his adult life.

Dr. Marquis was ordained to the Diaconate in 1891 and to the Priesthood in 1893, holding his first charge the same year at Woburn, Mass. Four years later he moved to Trinity Church, Bridgewater, Mass.

He was called to St. Joseph's Church, Detroit, in 1899, and when St. Paul's and St. Joseph's merged in 1906, he was made dean. In 1915 he left St. Paul's to organize a sociological department for the Ford Motor Company.

In 1925, Dr. Marquis became the first rector of Christ Church Cranbrook, Bloomfield Hills, where he remained until his retirement in 1939.

Dr. Marquis is survived by his son,

APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION AND THE ECUMENICAL MOVEMENT

Sir: Two recent books, "Apostolic Succession: Is It True?" by the Rev. Dr. Cirlot and "The Apostolic Ministry," by Bishop Kirk of Oxford, Dom Gregory Dix and others, should be read by all who are seriously interested in the present Ecumenical Movement, and certainly by all the Bishops and Clergy of the Episcopal Church. They are works of first-rate scholarship which deal honestly and fully with the great and crucial fact of Apostolic Succession.

Every Christian who is a realist and is fully informed, no matter what his own beliefs as to the Christian Ministry, must recognize that this matter is vital to any real advance towards world-wide Christian Reunion, because at least three-fourths of all Christians in the world today still hold that Apostolic Succession is a fact of history and believe that it is essential not only to the external organization but to the faith and life and historic reality of the Divinely Instituted Christian Church. The Lausanne World Conference on Faith and Order, in 1927, with representatives of all the major Protestant Communions present and participating, agreed that the only form of Ministry which can conceivably be accepted by the whole Reunited Christian Church is the Historic Ministry of Bishops, Priests and Deacons which has come down through all the centuries from the Apostles' time.

Manifestly, a real ecumenicity must include the three-fourths of Christendom which holds to the Historic Fact and the Catholic Doctrine of Apostolic Succession. And the two books above named show clearly, and in the full light of modern scholarship, the foundations upon which the Doctrine of Apostolic Succession rests. Most certainly they should be read by those who are taking any responsible part in the leadership of the Ecumenical Movement, and particularly they should be read by any who still imagine that the views and "scientific guesses" of Dr. Streeter on this subject are to be regarded as having great weight.

These books put entirely out of court the frequently used "of course no modern scholar believes it" type of argument against the fact of Apostolic Succession. Unfortunately, it is to be feared that many of those who most need to read these important volumes will not do so. We are all of us, of all schools of thought, too likely to read only those books which re-enforce our own views and predilections. It was the inimitable Sydney Smith who said that he never liked to read a book before reviewing it because he felt that this might bias his judgment. I believe that anyone who reads carefully these two books will find that they do influence his judgment. It is significant that two such remarkable volumes should have appeared at this time, each maintaining that the Episcopate is the direct successor of the Apostolate. In many lesser matters these books differ but, all the more, they supplement and confirm each other. For they are both written in the spirit of true scholarship—which is also the spirit of true religion—the spirit of complete loyalty to fact and truth.

400TH ANNIVERSARY, BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

Sir: The Anglican Society desires to have the great commemoration of 1549 worthily celebrated in 1949. Could you, through your pages, inquire for us what cathedrals, churches, missions, schools are arranging to celebrate the event? The actual date when the First Book of Edward VI was authorized was June 9. That falls on a Thursday next year, an excellent day (in Whitsuntide) for the commemoration.

Doubtless the Lambeth Fathers will put forth some manifesto about it. Doubtless also our General Convention in San Francisco will celebrate with special thanksgiving. I know that the Washington Cathedral plans a worthy commemoration, as also, doubtless, the New York, Boston and Baltimore Cathedrals and Trinity Church, New York.

If all who are planning to commemorate 1549 will write me, as Secretary of the Anglican Society I will be glad to suggest ways and speakers. And the Society will be glad to issue a leaflet about the commemoration, listing the Cathedrals, Churches, Schools, Mission Chapels where the event will be thankfully noted, with the dates.

Hon. Canon, Cathedral of All Saints.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

A Parish Today In Japan

By The REV. JOHN J. LLOYD

Rector of St. Mary's Church, Kyoto, Japan

"Colonel and Mrs. S. Tuff Shirt, who used to be in your church, are now stationed here in Kyoto, Japan, with the occupation forces, and with their daughter, Suzy, and son Flannel, have been members of our American congregation of St. Mary's Church. Col. Shirt has been instrumental in organizing our Episcopal club and in getting sufficient cigars to keep it functioning smoothly. Mrs. Shirt always joins eagerly in the bridge activities of our women, and both of the children sing loudly if not well in our remarkable choir (and I mean remarkable! uncanny! should I say weird!) They have asked me to write and tell you something about our church here, and what we are doing."

This is the form if not the style of the letters sent out to the home churches of the American members of St. Mary's!

I got out here last October to find this American congregation already organized, with Holy Communion each Sunday, read in English by a Japanese priest. Since I arrived to work with the Kyoto Diocese and to take charge of St. Mary's Church, they have thrown themselves wholeheartedly into getting ready what was needed for their services, and into helping me and the Japanese congregation get what was needed for the church. Their good support has been no little help to my work, and more important, to the work of the Episcopal Church of Japan in this diocese.

Even though I was out here until I was seventeen, and my father was a priest in this diocese, neither my language nor my knowledge of the church here have even approached what is needed for the work. Street lingo picked up by us easily as children is not the same thing as the command of the language needed for missionary work. Then again, the Church here today is a different thing from the one I saw a little of as a boy. As everyone knows, this is a Church purified but damaged by the war. And now, it is no longer a missionary district dependent on us and other home churches, but a self-running Church whose ability to run itself must be stimulated but by no means usurped (despite obvious problems on every hand that are not being handled very well by the Japanese.) The help they must get now is very different from that in the period before the war. All in all, the work seems impossibly difficult, and is frustrating as well as inspiring. Frequently enough, it makes one feel desperately inadequate. You can guess how the hospitality and sympathy of our people here with the Army, and the little practical things they've done to help has been an immense boon to Miss Williams, Miss Skiles, and myself.

Our Church in Japan came through the war heroically as you have probably heard. In spite of the pressure of police, and no little persecution, most of the Church stayed out of the Union of Churches the government tried to organize for security purposes. This Union had no health during the war and as yet has a long way to go. At the time of its birth, the leaders of our Church realized that above all else this was not a union of faith but of political expediency. The two former presiding Bishops both died as a result of the hardships of imprisonment. The present presiding Bishop was himself drafted and sent overseas. One of the clergy in Kyoto was drafted into the navy to serve as a mess-boy, later thrown into prison for not yielding his faith, and earned severe beatings.

Where parts of the Church went into the Union, another deep wound was dealt the Church—one only partly healed today. Our Japanese congregation at St. Mary's illustrate the depth of this wound. During the war, the minister and congregation of this, one of the large churches of the Diocese, joined the Union Church, because of very heavy government pressure. The result was that two years ago, with the war over and the Union no longer a government-enforced proposition, a good part of the congregation wanted to come back into the Episcopal Church of Japan. As you know, loss of face is quite something to these people. Many thought they would look ridiculous if they returned, and they stayed away. So a very small nucleus, with a young lay-reader, started holding Prayer Book services once more in St. Mary's. Since then the Bishop and one of the clergy who teaches at St. Agnes' Girls School have helped the church, and are continuing to do so until I am able to take over completely. The result of the split has been that as yet few old members have returned, so the bulk of our congregation consists of people under thirty years of age. There is a large group of college students, a larger still group of high-school boys and girls, many of whom went through St. Mary's Kindergarten before they went to public schools. There is also a large group of young people who have finished school and are working. The vestry has now been expanded from the three we had when I came to eleven, all of whom are intensely interested and working hard to make St. Mary's a strong, effective church. But that we are a new church, with few of the old members back, still badly inexperienced and disorganized, and without the habits and smooth functioning of a well-trained, sturdy church who know their business is the clearest thing about us.

One of the scars of the war shows in the thinking and attitudes of the clergy and Church as a whole. After the years of persecution and general maltreatment, the Church is settling down in a wonderful way to re-organize and move forward. But the fifteen years of distorted news and thinking, and above all of steady and relentless persecution, have left a deep scar upon them. Today they are desperately poor and it is a rare clergyman who does not feel that he has to get some outside income to take care of his family. There is not one minister whose monthly salary would buy the cheapest bicycle. The average salary would buy about ten cakes of soap, or one very inferior Japanese sweater, or perhaps one carton of American cigarettes. You can see how impossible it is for the clergy to be effective under conditions like these. Perhaps you can imagine how their thinking and vision as a whole is affected. An ill-fed person cannot think clearly for himself, let alone be the pastor and missionary he must be to his people.

Our American group of thirty or forty are doing what they can to help in the rebirth of the Episcopal Church in Japan. The irony of this statement is deeper and more unhappy than might be apparent. A generous gift of prayerbooks, badly needed (now so well used!) has come. Bishop Sasaki gets something from the budget of the National Council —what amounts to an entirely inadequate salary and travel allowance. But by and large the answers to the unbelievable needs of this desperately poor, discouraged to the point of lethargy (except for a noble few), hopeful yet pessimistic Church, come from the devoted few who send out packages of clothes and food, some books, and some money. And that is our situation in this place where the thousands are groping for God, and the ministers who should be there to lead them must spend much of the week in outside jobs to keep their wives and children alive.

The American congregation has done much, and promises to be a help all out of proportion to the numbers in this little group. One of the immediate aims of the Japanese Church is to get some of the able men among the clergy to American seminaries for rest and study, where they can do so without the unrelenting preoccupation of the needs of their children. Ladies of our newly organized Women's Auxiliary are giving time to preparing some of these by coaching them in English, one man in particular—a young clergyman—the sturdiest scholar, the most active pastor with the most active church, and in many ways the outstanding clergyman of the diocese. He gets two hours a week from one of the ladies and an hour a week from one of the civilians working at I Corps Headquarters. The results of the help to him, the Diocese, and the Church as a whole in Japan will be all out of proportion to the time spent in coaching.

The poverty of the clergy and their consequent poor health and lack of initiative has started a second project. The Women's Auxiliary are trying to get food and clothing for these families. All but one of the 25 Japanese clergy of this diocese are married, most have two or more children. Members of the Auxiliary are collecting food and clothing, and writing for help from friends. One of our active members, Mrs. Rittgers, told the Auxiliary at their first meeting about an experience she had. Sometime ago she wrote to a friend telling her what she has seen of the needs and work of the church here. Her letter was printed in some church paper and not long afterwards packages began to arrive with clothing of all kinds and shoes. She had some Japanese merchant make a conservative estimate of the value each of the items would have on the Japanese open market. The result, either in terms of dollars at the present rate of exchange, or in terms of the incomes of the clergy, was incredible. Last Thanksgiving Mrs. Rittgers sat by the Bishop's daughter through a Thanksgiving service at St. Agnes' Girls School. They sang hymns of thanksgiving while the young woman shivered in a light cotton dress, blue with cold. You can see how much it meant to Mrs. Rittgers, let alone the Bishop's daughter, when from the things in the packages Mrs. Rittgers was able to give her a warm and attractive wool coat. A heavy wool sweater went to a clergyman who has been threatened with consumption. Thirty cakes of soap went to a private kindergarten run by a devoted Episcopalian family. Here is part of their very touching letter of thanks:

"In our 'Mother's Home' and 'Day Nursery' some widows and many children, orphans, surviving children, many victims of the war are living. They are so pathetic. They have no houses, clothing or anything else. Such people are increasing more and more. Especially as one of the Christian social workers I have to protect and comfort them. I think necessary to their relief not only material assistance, but spiritual nourishment. Your kind calling was so glad and gave us strength. Last week when I visited Miss Williams, I was given many soaps as your presents. I am thankful for your kindness. The government has never given any soap for nursery since the war begun, and so we received those with many thanks. At once we laundered sheets, aprons and curtains and clothings. Every day we are thanking you and washing children's dirty faces and hands. So now they are very clean and lovely."

They have been invaluable in helping get St. Mary's organized again and functioning well. The Japanese congregation has a treasury that is practically nil —and not yet much of an income. You will remember that it is mostly young people, and few of the former members who might have fairly decent jobs, have returned. Even if they had a good income for a Japanese church, soap, brooms, mops, and rags are outrageously high. The American people have lent them these, and have helped get the church neat and clean. An American altar committee, headed by Mrs. Wilson with some experience on one, and herself the daughter of a clergyman, work with two or three of the young Japanese kindergarten teachers to keep the altar scrubbed and the decorations neat and clean. Our services have been in a relatively comfortable church all winter because the army folk could get stoves and fuel for their own services. This is the only heated church in the diocese, and this area is notoriously damp. Some of the service boys used to walk a mile through rain or snow to sit in a damp, cold church through the services last winter. So this is no small accomplishment. American women have helped keep the choir linen clean. The wife of General Woodruff, former commanding general of I Corps, took the first bundle of laundry home herself.

All of this activity is in addition to getting the American services organized themselves. In this American congregation, we have a small acting vestry and under them various committees. One takes care of the needs of the building; has gotten the stoves and fuel, mops, brooms, etc. Another is in charge of music, has organized a struggling choir, and had some hymnals and some cloth sent out. There is an Altar Guild, mentioned before, that has done splendid work in getting what we need for Holy Communion and preparing the church for services. There is a committee whose business it is to let Episcopalians know where we are and welcome any who are interested in coming. The newest venture is the Women's Auxiliary which has overnight blossomed into an active group. They have just finished the choir cottas. They are planning to visit as a group some of the church work in this very active area of our church. They are also making preparations for an Easter egg hunt for the children of our American church community. Right now I am writing this letter through the help of the president of the Women's Auxiliary who has volunteered to do some secretarial work for me. Besides our regular eight o'clock Communion service and Morning Prayer and sermon at nine thirty each Sunday, we have been able to have Christmas Eve midnight Holy Communion, Christmas and New Year's Day services, and mid-week services throughout Lent, in addition to the full complement of Japanese services.

It has been a tremendous help to me, coming here completely inexperienced in this work, and aghast at the monumental task ahead of the church here to find the friendship and hospitality of the American people in this church community. The help of them and their friends back in America is at least a healty start in getting the Japanese church on its feet.

The Electoral Campaign

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

Elections are the pride of democracy. It is a great achievement to keep all political power under the scrutiny of the citizens and give the men who organize political life only a short lease of power, which must be periodically renewed. This achievement separates democracy from all forms of authoritarianism, which falsely trusts some elite group to wield power without control.

It must be admitted, however, that democracy presents certain flaws which are particularly apparent in an election year. Listening to the speeches of a political convention, Walter Lippman came to the conclusion that they were filled with self-righteousness and that not a one of them gave even the slightest indication that the party of the speaker had ever made a mistake.

This note of pretension and self-righteousness will be with us for the next months of the presidential election campaign. The Republicans will speak of their great achievements; but they will not admit that their party harbors an isolationist wing which several times came within an ace of wrecking the American leadership in the western world. They almost defeated the selective service act years ago on the very eve of the second world war. They also came very close to defeating the European Recovery Program a few months ago.

The Democrats, on the other hand, will be equally intent upon covering up the fact that the liberalism of their party is subject to confusion because a wing of the party is more conservative than the Republicans. Particularly on the issue of civil rights, it is reactionary.

But the embarrassing part of the record of each party will be obscured with greater or less success. This element of dishonesty is so much a part of political campaigns that the general electorate accepts it with a kind of cynical resignation.

Since most people are not fooled by the pretensions of the campaign, one wonders what would happen if the candidates tried for a higher standard of honesty and said something like this: "I am sorry that our party made mistakes in the past years on the following issues . . . I promise to rectify these errors by the following program."

It is not likely that anyone will venture out upon such a experiment inl honesty. It is supposed not to be safe. It is assumed that a considerable proportion of the electorate not only can be fooled but likes to be fooled. But since democratic peoples have long since developed their own antitoxin for the poison of dishonesty, the pretension of politicians is on the whole futile. Some one ought to make a try of honesty. It might even pay.

"Grant them continual growth . . ." (From the prayer for the Whole State of Christ's Church, page 75.)

We know little about the after life. Actually we know nothing from first hand experience. It seems a bit dangerous, then, to speak at length about what the life beyond bodily existence is like. We simply do not know. Why, then, proclaim belief in immortality, a continuing existence of some kind after death?

The answer is obviously because of Jesus Christ. He taught that there is no death of the soul save through the refusal to obey God; that there would be a place prepared in the hereafter for all those who love God; that any man keeping God's word would never die; that all who live and believe in Him would never die.

"Believest thou this?" (John 11:26). Yes, we believe that death is swallowed up in victory because of Jesus' resurrection, and that all those who die in faith will find abundant life in whatever state it shall please God to place us.

If life goes on it must go on growing, drawing closer and closer to oneness with God. That is why we pray our belief in this petition from the prayer for the whole state of Christ's Church. Each time we pray it a bit more of loving remembrance accrues for all who have left us for awhile, and we cling to the hope and trust that they are in the hands of God, happy and growing, busy until the time we can join them and go on growing together.

One fruit of our praying thus is that our earth life keeps on growing, too.

J. W. KENNEDY.

ST. JOHN'S UNIVERSITY GRADUATE TO WORK AMONG LEPERS

New York, N. Y.—Dr. N. Chang, of St. Luke's Hospital, Shanghai, a graduate of St. John's Middle School and St. John's University and an active member of the St. John's Pro-Cathedral Parish in Shanghai was first to respond to a recent appeal made to China's doctors and nurses to devote their lives to the nation's million leprosy victims.

The appeal was made by Dr. A. Donald Miller, of the Mission to Lepers of London, and Dr. E. R. Kellersberger, of the American Mission to Lepers, who spent two months visiting leprosy missions throughout China and addressed hospital staffs, medical schools, and nurses training institutions in the interest of winning recruits to a field of Christian service sadly lacking in professional leadership.

Dr. Chang's response to the appeal carried the endorsement of Rev. Edmund Hsu, priest of the Pro-Cathedral; Dr. P. S. Nyi, dean of the School of Medicine of St. John's University, and Dr. M. S. Hwang, acting superintendent of St. Luke's Hospital, Shanghai.

The need for doctors and nurses in the mission program of leprosy control was described by Dr. Kellersberger on his return from the Orient as "absolutely paramount." Leprosy specialists are needed particularly for the development of provincial village communities for leprosy victims and for the establishment of leprosy training centers for doctors, nurses, public health, church, and community workers.

Before beginning service in the career of his choice, Dr. Chang will spend 18 months in observation and study at Christian leprosy colonies in Hangchow and Changtu, at the School of Tropical Medicine in Calcutta, and at Vellore Medical College, India, under the eminent leprologist, Dr. Robert C. Cochrane.

IMPORTANT EXTRA

Dr. Almon R. Pepper, executive of the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief, has written to all the Bishops regarding a possible misunderstanding in connection with the fund-raising drive for American Overseas Aid-United Nations Appeal for Children.

Dr. Pepper said that the campaign is for critical needs and should commend itself to the people of the country. Inasmuch as Church World Service will administer the program, and the Presiding Bishop's Fund is administered through Church World Service, this AOA-UNAC appeal places no special responsibility upon our own Church members, and they are not being asked to contribute twice to the same program. "CWS" participation in AOA is an important extra in a total appeal which is worthy of general community support. In this sense our clergy and laity may well give their support to the general community appeals."

Whatever opinions we hold on other matters, I know you will agree with me that be we Armenians, Calvinists, Premillenial, Postmillenial, Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, or non-denominational, what this world needs most of all, what it may have, what it can have, what we must offer to it, is Christ and Him crucified. We can unite all on this one transcendant, tremendous proposition—Hyman J. Appleman, in Christ Is Our Strength (Revell).

"The Widely Loving Society"

By The RT. REV. H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, D. D.

Retired Presiding Bishop, President The Southern Churchman

Among the many contributions made by our Church in Japan in the application of Christian love to the practical needs of human society two have always been of special interest to me, both because of the quality of the work done and because they were begun and carried on by the Japanese themselves. These two are the Widely Loving Society in Osaka and the Home for Feeble minded children in Tokyo.

The Widely Loving Society is an industrial orphanage. Many years ago two brothers named Kobashi were baptized by Bishop Williams. In order to show their appreciation of what baptism meant to them, they decided to give their lives and their property to the work of caring for and training orphaned and destitute children. Their attention had been called to this need by a severe earthquake in northeastern Japan which resulted in a large loss of life among the farming class and left a large number of small children entirely unprovided for.

The results are an illustration of the truth of our Lord's saying, "Wisdom is justified of her children." All over Japan one can find self-respecting useful Christian men and women who but for the fostering care of the Widely Loving Society would have become social problems and a burden upon the community. Not long before leaving Japan I visited a number of churches in a remote mountain district which owed their existence to the "earthquake orphans" who had been educated and trained in farming by the Widely Loving Society and then sent back to their former homes. Many of these children have become Christian workers. Some of them have entered the ministry. The work was begun fifty-seven years ago and during that time some 7,000 children have been cared for.

A recent letter from the Rev. John Lloyd indicates that the war increased the need for this kind of work. The bombing of Osaka flooded the city with orphans. The Widely Loving Society as usual responded to the call for help, with the result that it is now caring for some three hundred and fifty children. The Japanese are doing what they can to help the Society meet this emergency, but if this greatly increased number of children are to be properly cared for, they must have the cooperation of Christian friends in this country. Mr. Lloyd's letter describes the kind of help that is needed.

He says: "They badly need a small hospital or infirmary. Their funds are exhausted in meeting running expenses so that contributions towards this building will be greatly welcomed. Their quilts are worn out. They need money to secure new ones. Old blankets will be a real help. The roofs are leaking and money is needed for this and other repairs. Just at present their available funds are inadequate to meet running expenses, so that they are really dependent upon outside aid to meet these emergency needs.

The outside activities of the children are mainly baseball and some other sports, gardening and sewing. Old baseball equipment would help them a great deal. Seed for their gardens would be much appreciated. Much needed also are materials for their sewing classes, old clothes to be altered and repaired, needles and thread, and sewing machines."

Money contributions can be sent through Dr. Lewis B. Franklin, the Treas., 281 Fourth Ave., New York 10, N. Y. They should be designated "Special for the Widely Loving Society". Packages of materials, small enough to be sent by mail can be addressed to: and marked "For the Widely Loving Society."

The Rev. John J. Lloyd,
Karasumaru Dori
Shimotachi Uri Agaru
Kyoto Shi, Japan

Mr. Lloyd explains that mail sent to him is quicker and more certain than that addressed to Japanese.

I recommend this work unreservedly and hope that Mr. Lloyd's appeal will meet with a generous response.

I might add that the Home for Feeble Minded Children is equally in need of help and equally deserving. If anyone is interested in this fine work, founded and until his death superintended by that splendid Japanese Christian, Mr. Ishii. I shall be glad to furnish any information that may be desired either as to the work or as to the sending of contributions.

RELIEF FUNDS REACH REFUGEES

New York, N. Y.—Some time ago the Armenian Patriarch in Jerusalem made an appeal for aid in caring for refugees, sheltered in a convent. An appropriation of $4,000 was authorized from the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief. Then the war in the Holy Land closed banks and disrupted communications, so that it seemed impossible to transmit the money. Meantime, through the Anglican Bishop in Jerusalem it was learned that "The Armenian Patriarch and his refugees have had a very bad time. He told me a few days ago that he had lost three hundred injured, and his medical provision is quite inadequate. I hope now that for them at any rate the worst is over, and I am sure that your loan, when it comes, will be invaluable, as they are by no means out of the wood."

With the present armistice, the $4,000 and some other much-needed funds have been sent to Barclay's Bank, and it is believed that there will be no difficulty about their delivery. Amounts sent included the $4,000 for relief to the Armenian Patriarch; $500, a gift designated for the American Colony for the Children's Hospital, and $3,500 to be used at the Bishop's discretion for relief, including needs of Babies' Hospital of the American Colony.

CLERGYMEN TO TAKE SOCIAL WORK TRAINING

New York, N. Y.—The scholarship committee of the Department of Christian Social Relations has awarded a scholarship to the Rev. William B. Spofford, Jr., executive secretary of the Episcopal League for Social Action. Mr. Spofford plans to enter the Institute of Social Work of the University of Michigan this fall to commence two years' study of social work, leading to a master's degree. This is the first scholarship granted by the department to a clergyman.

Accompanying the announcement is a statement from the department office which reads: "The complexities of American community life call for some 'specialists' among the clergy. Provisions were made for the scholarship in response to this need. Wherever the Church is dealing with the exaggerated problems of individuals, families, or communities it can benefit by the competence and insight of leaders trained in social work.

"Some dioceses are seeking trained clergy for their departments of Christian social relations, their homes for children and the aged, their city missions and chaplaincy services. Some parishes are seeking clergy with special training in pastoral counseling. In diversified fields the demands for such priests is greater than the supply.

"It is hoped that it will be possible for the department to have sufficient funds next year to award an additional scholarship for a priest desiring to undertake social work training, commencing in the fall of 1949."

Summer Paragraphs

The 1948-1949 issue of "Parish Helps" is hardly worth the effort and considerable cost of issuing it. There is very little that is new in it. Some of the brave listings are nearly ten years old. It painfully emphasizes how few tools we have available in our Church in many areas of parish life and strategy. The pamphlets of the Department of Social Service of the Diocese of Massachusetts, the best in the Church, might well have received better commendation than simply listing among "Other Resources." They are superior to many of the items featured. "281" might look again at the section under "Evangelism" in "Parish Helps" and ponder the decision that we don't need a national department of evangelism because "evangelism is the work of all our departments." The old proverb, "What is everybody's business is nobody's" is perfectly illustrated by this weak section.

By contrast, the promotion and planning for the new national radio program of the Church is tops. So is the first program, previewed, if that be the word for an audio experience, some time ago. But vestrymen and clergymen receiving information about the program should keep in mind Bishop Sherrill's statement, "In this country there are millions of men and women who have no connection with any communion of the Christian Church. If this is to be a truly Christian nation, they must be reached and interested and this must be done where they are and in a language at the initial approach they can understand. The radio gives us such a medium."

People accustomed to the usual religious radio program of preaching and sacred singing will be startled and perhaps shocked at first by the approach of our new program. Let them remember that such religious programs as they know have the lowest listening audience of any programs on the air. They never reach those towards whom our new program is shrewdly directed. Sensibly planned to build a listening audience, "Great Scenes from Great Plays" may well be a vital new approach to reaching the unchurched of America. Some will bemoan its cost, and compare it with our missionary expenditures. True, radio is costly. The answer is that we ought to be spending and giving twice or three times as much as we are for direct missionary work, not less on radio!

The Church Pension Fund announces an increase in minimum pensions for the clergy ordained before 1917. This is a fine step, though actually the increases are quite modest. The Fund comments on the 25 per cent increase in assessments which was approved by the General Convention in 1946. In asking for that increase, the Fund stated that lowered yield on its investments made the increase necessary. Now, within a year, "there seems to be a halt in the decline in interest yield and perhaps a slight turn for the better." The Fund plans to use this advantageous situation to restore some of the "extra benefits" curtailed in 1942. We hope this will be possible, but equally important is the need to increase widows and orphan's pensions. Here the Fund sees only "hope." The Episcopal Church tends to be pretty smug about its pension Fund. We ought to realize that it offers to retired clergy only the barest minimum of living, and to the widows and orphans of clergy, not even that!

The Church of England is revising its canon law. It is a long, slow process, in which convocation scrutinizes each sentence and debates every line. At a recent meeting of convocation, Canon XXI, "Of the Holy Communion" was considered. The second part of this canon is almost the same, word for word, as the rubric at the end of the confirmation service in our American Book of Common Prayer. The English canon reads, "No person shall be admitted to the Holy Communion until such time as he shall be confirmed, or be ready and desirous to be confirmed." In recent years, there have been some who would interpret our rubric to forbid the Lord's Supper to communicants of other Churches who attend a service of the Holy Communion in our Church. Such an interpretation is clearly against the historical context of this rubric, as the late Dr. James Muller of Massachusetts so clearly showed. Now apparently the Church of England would side with history and charity, for the following words were added to the canon, "Except under permission of the Bishop of the diocese and subject to any regulations of the convocation of the province relating thereto." Thus the way is provided for a Bishop to interpret this canon in the liberal spirit of Christian brotherhood.

It is with reluctance that we comment upon the divorce suit filed at Reno by Mrs. Isabelle Wilson Morill O'Ferrall. Less than a year ago, the Rev. Kirk B. O'Ferrall, then dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, Michigan, sought permission under the new marriage canon to marry the present Mrs. O'Ferrall, who was a divocee. At about the same time, a similar case was presented to the Bishop of Lexington for his judgment. In both cases, the bishop granted permission to remarry. We said at that time that though there can be only one marriage law in the Church, and though that law must apply to clergy and laity alike, yet the plain, practical fact is that a clergyman involved in such remarriage, though permitted by canon, seriously injures his usefulness to the Church. The present suit for divorce, based on the grounds of incompatibility, underscores this fact. We sincerely hope that our bishops will refuse clergy permission to remarry after divorce, or to marry divorcees. We argue this not on canonical gounds, but on pragmatic ones. Such a situation in a parish does not promote the welfare of the Church.

A group of clergymen of various Churches recently issued a strong statement against the new draft law. They advised disobedience of the law by the youth of our country. We disagree with this position entirely. While we are not convinced of the wisdom of the draft law in peace time, yet it is now the law of the land and it must be obeyed. But we have been a bit amused at certain voices in the chorus of disapproval of these gentlemen. Calling loudly for obedience to the law are a number of newspapers and individuals who were on the other side of the fence when civil rights were involved, or even when prohibition was "the law of the land." Then they did not council obedience! Incidentally, the Department of Commerce has just issued an estimate of the expenditures for liquor in the United States last year. It comes to the staggering (sic!) total of $9.6 billion dollars! This is an increase from $3.6 billion since 1939. In other words, liquor consumption has tripled in less than a decade. Last year, it involved a per capita expenditure of $66.66. This is about double the per capita giving of our Church last year. These figures are worth thinking about when we consider our Church budgets, and say "Our people are giving all they can."

BOOK NOTES

By the Faculty of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific. Edited by Randolph Crump Miller.

BEHOLD THE SPIRIT: A STUDY IN THE NECESSITY OF MYSTICAL RELIGION. By Alan W. Watts. Pantheon. $2.75.

The author of this thorough-going study of mysticism is Episcopal Chaplain at Northwestern University, and the author of four other books in the same field—all by the time he is thirty years old. Plugged on the jacket by B. I. Bell and Bishop Conkling, it should have substantial influence among the mystically inclined. Writing within the Christian tradition (as many mystics do not), and more specifically within a Catholic terminology, he points out that "the mind of Christ" is "that mystical and nearly immediate experience of God which, although ineffable and incapable of exact description, may be explained sufficiently to give its traditional dogmatic and historic expressions much more clarity and reality than they now convey to the modern mind. Without some apprehension of this meaning, Christian doctrines are not actually intelligible at all, and must remain mere formulae lacking real power to move the soul however ably their factual and historical truth may be defended." With this thesis, provided there are proper qualifications, most readers would agree; but they would disagree with the author's uninformed comments about Liberal Protestant Churches (which deal "with politics and vague ethical principles") and Modernists ("if such may be called a religion at all"). Mysticism does not have to be smug to be profound, and Niebuhr's anti-mystical emphasis on sin should be taken more seriously. However, the book is valuable for its emphasis on a normal type of mysticism ("the consciousness of union with God") which is too often disregarded in modern life.

AMBASSADOR IN CHAINS. By Hampton Adams. Bethany Press. $2.00.

Dr. Adams is a good preacher, and these are sermons preached from one pulpit to one congregation; yet he hopes that they express our common Christian faith in Jesus Christ. Lay people will find these sermons simple, stirring, and dealing with non-controversial ultimates of the faith. Most readers will find the sermon on "The Youth of Old Age," preached on Dr. Adams' fiftieth birthday, particularly relevant.

THE GROUNDWORK OF THE GOSPELS. By R. O. P. Taylor. Blackwell and Macmillan. $2.50.

Provost Taylor's last work was prepared for the press by Canon Leonard Hodgson. He sees God at work in the community, and the Gospels as a result of a long process initiated and determined by God. The arguments are concise and scholarly, and yet the average reader well versed in the history of the times will have no trouble in following the line of reasoning. The first five chapters deal with Peter and Mark and with their relationship to the first Gospel, with great emphasis on the reliability of eye-witness accounts. There are a number of miscellaneous chapters: the most interesting containing evidence for the suggestion that Greek was more widely spoken than Aramaic and that in order for Jesus to reach the large crowds He must have spoken Greek.

RELIGION: ITS FUNCTIONS IN HUMAN LIFE. By Knight Dunlap.. McGraw-Hill. $3.50.

This book marks a new departure and is not to be classified with the usual "philosophies of religion." It is an approach to religious behavior within the wider context of culture and group psychology. He deals with religion as morality, as a system of tabus, as determined by emotion, as self-development, and as the outgrowth of animism. He shows how religion is related to desire, to the food supply, to sex, and to other primary desires. He eliminates from his treatment such "abnormalities" as repentance, fear of punishment, conversion, "and similar pathological features of religion," relying for his approach on Salomon Reinach, Sir James Frazer, and W. Robertson Smith. The volume contains a tremendous amount of material, and the author thinks religion will continue.

REVELATION AND REASON. By Emil Brunner. Westminster Press. $4.50.

Dr. Brunner is one of the foremost theologians in the world. His great books deal with man, ethics, the mediator, and now revelation and reason. He believes that theology should speak to its particular age. As against medieval thinking, he places revelation first and thus begins with the faith of the Church as found in the Word of God and then uses reason as its agent. He hopes that lay people will read his book, as theology is not limited to theologians. This is a large and ample treatment of a most important theme, and it is deserving of careful consideration by Christians of every persuasion.

KILVERT'S DIARY. Edited by William Plomer, with introudction by A. L. Rowse. Macmillan. $3.

This is judged to be one of the great diaries of nineteenth century literature. Written by a young English clergyman, it is excellent prose with a sweep and descriptive power never seen in the modern age of slipped sentences. Full of comments and observations on English life, these delightful and delectable episodes make good reading for everyone. The topics are commonplace enough, but the way the incidents are related mark this book as a minor classic. The diary stops shortly before Kilvert's marriage and subsequent death of peritonitis.

PROOF READING COMPETITION

By Miss Mary Junkin
Director of the Curative Workshop
In Appreciation of the Patience of the Workers In the Southern Churchman Office

The office of the Southern Churchman, as you all know, is in the Diocesan Church House. The Church has furnished space for the Curative Workshop, a non-profit organization giving treatment to orthopedic cases. This is how the Workshop probably sounds to the Southern Churchman's office.

The sound of a three-alarm fire split my ear as I opened the morning mail to see if there were any news items for the Southern Churchman. I looked up into the back yard from my window to see five five-year-olds with braces on careen around the walk on tricycles, four of them emitting siren noises, full voice, followed by one clanging like a bell. Sometimes I begin to wonder just how fragile and delicate these crippled children are!

The siren noises gave place to a loud hissing sound, followed by screams of "turn off the hose." They get the fire out after a while and the yard quiets down as they join some "fairly" quiet little girls under a tree and start making the funniest faces at the teacher. She says they are doing speech work so they will learn to talk plainer, but at a distance it looks mighty queer. A group sit and stick out their tongues at the teacher, open their mouths, shut them and appear to be licking molasses from their lips. Next they are all blowing red wind mills and later the back yard is full of soap bubbles.

This group breaks up and a train of children from about three years to eight start chugging around the walking bars that run all over the yard. You never realize just how noisy learning to walk can be until you try to proof read items for the Southern Churchman while a train goes over the trestle. The train gets derailed and the group breaks up and it is difficult to keep up with what they are doing.

A volunteer is reading something about 'Brer Rabbit took his foot in his hand" in one corner. In another a little boy is slapping along on something he calls duck feet. He couldn't stand up when he started coming to the Shop. Now he stands alone and takes two steps. By next year he will probably graduate to the fire department and be another noisy siren.

Is nothing sacred to a cripple! Two of those boys with the braces on are rushing around on roller skates. The only reason I think they probably won't break their necks is because they did it yesterday and are still alive today.

At twelve o'clock it quiets down for an hour as mothers begin coming for their children. By one o'clock it starts all over again. Only they are a little older and most of them stay in the Workshop where I can't see them and hear their pounding and hammering and sawing.

Would you believe it, the other day I went by the door of the Workshop and sitting away up in the air on a bicycle I saw a sweet old lady who must have been seventy if she was a day. They say she had a broken hip and they were loosening up her hip and knee joints. Maybe so, but to me it looks a little like flag pole sitting.

Did I say it was quieter in the afternoons?—that was before those three frying-sized boys hung that punch bag to the tree and started slugging it around.

But they do seem to have a grand time while they are getting better.

ACROSS THE STREETS OF ETHER

When sleep evades the confines of the mind—did you ever try praying rather than counting all the sheep you could find? There are so many folk—some in sorrow, some in pain—who would like a visit from you again. But time is full of many things; so visits are rare, 'though memory brings the hauntingness of gracious days, for which each heart now humbly prays, for which each mind seeks, across life's span, to do the little good it can.

If you refuse a kindness,
  If you refuse a gift,
And stumble on in blindness,
  How can you give a lift?
How can you show the way here
  Through faith—to realms above,
Beyond all grief and care, dear,
  Because you know of Love?

If you possess that Love, dear,
  To reach beyond the world,
No grief can find a way, dear,
  'Though bombs of hate be hurled.
No outer strength enfold you
  If peace be lodged within,
No boldness seek to hold you
  Except of self—sans sin.

CXXXIII

Page 80—The Prayer of Consecration —The Manual Acts—Clergy in the Church today celebrate the Holy Communion with a great variety of physical motion, some genuflecting before the altar at every mention of the name of Christ, others merely bow at this point, and still others stand erect all the way through. In the same way some clergy stretch forth their arms at the beginning of this prayer and some lift up their hands as a type of supplication while many make no gesture whatever with their hands.

So far as the actual rubric is concerned it only calls for the breaking of bread and the taking of the cup in one's hand, and a final passing of the hand over the sacred elements.

This is one of those places where a great deal of acting has been added to the simple Prayer Book instructions, just as colored hangings for the various seasons have supplemented and often superseded the "fair white linen cloth" required by the rubric. These things apparently are left nowadays in the hands of the clergy rather than a simple compliance with Prayer Book instructions. It is very seldom that any ecclesiastical authority seems to exercise control in these matters.

The actual wording of the prayer here is so nearly according to the gospel records and to St. Paul's directions in his epistle to the Corinthians that it suffices merely to give the Biblical citations and let the reader look them up and compare them if his interest or curiosity leads him to do so. One could comment and point out quite a variety of differences in details in the four gospel records, but it seems to the writer that the general practice and the words contained in this prayer are near enough to the records as found in the four gospels so that further comment is unnecessary.

The institution of the Communion is found in Matthew xxvi, Mark xiv, Luke xxii and Paul (1 Cor. xi). Probably the quotation from the Epistle to the Corinthians is the oldest in the matter of actual date of writing.

News of the Church

A CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY IN JAPAN

New York, N. Y.—The Japanese have already contributed one million Yen (or more than $300,000) toward a Christian University in Japan, and have set 150,000,000 Yen as their goal, the Rev. Dr. Carl D. Kriete, prominent missionary-educator and former president of Miyagi College in Japan, said here today.

Addressing a group of about fifty leading churchmen and educators at the Gramercy Park Hotel, Dr. Kriete, who returned recently from Japan, said that contributions by Christians in Japan "may represent more sacrifices than the raising of the $15,000,000 set as the American goal. I hardly dare mention the figure the Japanese have set, because it seems to me to be so far beyond their power to realize."

The missionary described the Christian University, which is sponsored by the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, and the Foreign Missions Conference, "as not a request for charity, but as a genuine cooperative effort for an international inter-racial, co-educational institution at the highest level of education."

Dr. Kriete said the idea of a Christian University in Japan had been a "dedicated dream" for a long time, but so far had failed to materialize. "What its failure has cost Japan and us none of us can estimate," he said. "We have paid part of the price in blood and tears. But this time we must not fail. Whatever it costs in treasure and life we must pay before it is too late."

Emphasizing that Japan has broken with the past, and her military leaders are "dead as far as their influential leadership is concerned," Dr. Kriete claimed the Japanese were looking to the United States for leadership and guidance.

"Today those in high positions and low look to America, and more specifically to Christianity as the highest inspiration," he said. "They believe that in our religion, in our system of education, in our political system, in our family life, we hold the key that would unlock the door to their future."

As evidence of Japanese respect for Americans, Dr. Kriete cited the views of the members of the Japan Committee for the Christian University, all of whom favor an American for president of the proposed University.

Dr. Kriete said the new generation in Japan regarded education as the best way to rebuild Japan, and was anxious to scrap the old educational system.

Mr. Soichi Saito, chairman of the Japanese Committee for a Christian University in Japan, and general secretary of the National Committee of the Y. M. C. A., urged educators interested in the Christian University to take immediate steps to prepare young men and women for faculty positions, and make scholarships available for study abroad.

He also stressed that in the organization of the University, the major emphasis be placed on "the spirit rather than the form, on the faith rather than the work."

Special guests introduced at the luncheon included Mr. Robert E. Bondy, executive director, National Council on Public Welfare; Mr. John M. Glenn, retired president, Russell Sage Foundation; and Dr. Guy Snavely, executive director, Association of American Colleges.

MAJOR U. S. DENOMINATIONS TO UNITE IN NATIONAL BODY

Lake Geneva, Wis.—Organization of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in America has been set for the spring of 1950, it was reported here at the recent annual meeting of the Association of Council Secretaries.

Some two hundred executives and staff members of national, state, and city councils of churches from 31 states, District of Columbia, and Hawaii met here for a six-day conference on the theme "Man's Disorder and God's Design in the Community."

In addition to addresses and discussions they heard reports on developments in interchurch work throughout the nation.

The National Council of Churches will merge the major national interdenominational bodies, including the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, International Council of Religious Education, the Home Missions Council of North America, National Protestant Council on Higher Education, and United Stewardship Council. The new body will include the major denominations of the United States in one interdenominational organization.

A national church conference on family life is scheduled to be held in Cincinnati, Ohio, November 29-30, it was reported. The conference will precede the biennial meeting of the Federal Council. It will use the findings of the National Conference on Family Life held recently at the White House.

A plan to hold six hundred one-day, county-wide conferences on the "farm family" within three years was discussed. The purpose will be to develop a Protestant program for the family farm.

Dr. H. Paul Douglass, editor of Christendom and director of the committee for Cooperative Field Research, New York City, was the major speaker. He gave four lectures on the conference theme.

Dr. Douglass pointed out that neighborhoring churches are usually competitive. He urged each local church to act toward other congregations in a Christian manner as individuals are expected to behave. This means, he said, "Thou shalt not harm thy neighbor church. Thou shalt love thy neighbor church as thy own."

Dr. Douglass advocated that neighboring churches work together in certain common projects and events, such as social action, civic betterment, religious education of children, union services, house-to-house religious surveys, common public relations policy and programs of publicity, adult education, youth work, women's work, and recreation.

"The churches belong to the community," declared Dr. Roswell P. Barnes, associate general secretary of the Federal Council, in an address.

"The churches are concerned with the welfare of the community as a whole and of every group in it."

One million American church laymen and lay women have been trained in recent years in evangelistic methods and "have gone out to carry the message of Christ into the unchurched homes of the community," according to Rev. H. H. Mr. Connell, field secretary of the Department of Evangelism of the Federal Council.

LAST WAR-TIME CLASS GRADUATES FROM CHURCH DIVINITY SCHOOL OF PACIFIC

Berkeley, Calif.—The last war-time class was graduated from the Church Divinity School of the Pacific on June 8. The Rt. Rev. F. Eric Bloy, D. D., newly consecrated Bishop of Los Angeles, was the commencement speaker. The honorary degree of Doctor of Sacred Theology was conferred on Bishop Bloy, and of Doctor of Divinity on the Rev. Arthur A. Vall-Spinosa, headmaster of St. Helen's Hall, Portland, Oregon. Among the graduates, the Rev. Tod Ewald will be vicar of Holy Innocents' Church, Corte Madera, Calif., the Rev. J. Robert Nicholas will work in the missionary district of Utah, the Rev. Max L. Christensen will be assistant at the Church of the Good Shepherd, Buffalo, and the Rev. Peter C. C. Yu will return to the diocese of Shanghai.

The Board of Trustees, acting upon the suggestion of the Province of the Pacific, increased the budget of the school for 1948-1949 by $11,000, and a program was put in motion to raise this money by increases in "unit" giving. Every Church member in the Province will be given the oportunity to become a "Friend of the School" by pledging a unit or more per year for the next five years.

At the annual dinner preceding the commencement, speakers included the Rev. Paul M. Wheeler, president of the alumni, Rev. Russell B Staines, rector of St. Mark's, Berkeley; the Rev. A. Ronald Merrix, of the National Council; the Rev. Prof. Randolph Crump Miller; and Kenneth Samuelson, president of the student body.

The Dean announced that forty-four full-time students were in residence during 1947-1948 and that instruction was given to ninety students including those from nearby schools.

DEATH OF LOYAL CHURCHMAN

Rehoboth Beach, Del.—The death, on June 29, of Alexis Felix duPont, followed a severe illness of one month after his recent return from Florida.

Mr. duPont was born sixty-nine years ago at Hagley, Del., near the site of the old powder mill from which sprang the varied interests which have made the name duPont world-famous. Beginning as private secretary of his father, Felix assumed ever-increasing responsibilities until his retirement from the finance committee in 1944 and as a vice-president in 1946.

One often hears "Mr. duPont" referred to as though there is one person who represents the company, but in reality the name so used applies to a composite of a dozen or more persons among whom, as a matter of policy, the responsibilities are constantly shifted. Felix duPont was a prominent factor in the composite picture.

Wide-spread as his interests naturally became, he will perhaps be best remembered as a churchman. For many years a warden in the Cathedral Church of St. John's, Wilmington, and later vestryman of All Saints Church, Rehoboth, he was a chief factor in their material development. He built, in memory of his father, the beautiful Church of Our Merciful Saviour at Penn's Grove, New Jersey, to help serve the needs of the many employees of the company in that locality. He was cofounder, with his sister, Mrs. Irenee duPont, of St. Andrew's School for Boys, near Middletown, Delaware, in the beautiful chapel of which his burial service was read by the Rev. Dr. Nelson Waite Rightmyer and the Rev. Dr. Walden Pell, 2nd. The interment was in the nearby cemetery of Old St. Anne's Church.

CHAPEL CONSECRATED AT CAMP CAPERS

San Antonio, Texas.—The Chapel of St. Francis at Camp Capers in the Diocese of West Texas was consecrated recently by Bishop Jones. About four hundred people from all parts of the diocese assembled for the service which included dedication of six cabins (memorial gifts), the chapel altar, an electric water fountain, and other gifts. A picnic supper was served.

For two days preceding the service, laymen from parishes and missions had met for conference at the camp. Following the theme, "The Art of Christian Loving," the program included addresses by the Rt. Rev. John E. Hines, of the Diocese of Texas, and the Rt. Rev. Everett H. Jones, of West Texas. Discussions were led by laymen on diocesan and general church subjects. The organization is to be known as the Episcopal Churchmen's Association and the newly elected president is Mr. Hollis Fitch of Eagle Pass.

The Woman's Auxiliary summer conference began with the service of dedication of the chapel and lasted for four days. There were two guest leaders, Mrs. Schubael Beasley, of Memphis, Tenn., and Mrs. Benjamin Phillips, of Galveston. The program included a daily celebration of Holy Communion, a demonstration of Altar Work, talks on devotional side of Branch Meetings, Program Planning and Christian Social Relations and Adult Education. Mrs. P. W. Harral, diocesan president, was in charge.

Many other conferences will be held at Camp Capers during the summer.

ANNUAL CONVOCATION OF WYOMING

Laramie, Wyo.—The 39th annual convocation of the Missionary District of Wyoming was held on June 15, 16, and 17 at St. Matthew's Cathedral in Laramie, Wyoming. The Rt. Rev. James Wilson Hunter presided at the first meeting of the Wyoming Convocation since his consecration in April.

In his address Bishop Hunter said, "I would pay tribute to the Rt. Rev. Winfred H. Ziegler, D. D., who for eleven years labored diligently in this portion of the Lord's Kingdom. Bishop Ziegler, due to ill health, which came upon him as the result of his giving of himself unstintingly, has had to leave the District to live in Carmel, Calif.

Bishop Hunter expressed his desire to see the Missionary District of Wyoming advance from Missionary District status to Diocesan status, and stressed the need for a deeper sense of stewardship. In line with training for true Christian stewardship, he asked that nowhere in the District should money be raised for the Church by card parties, bingo, or any games of chance. While thanking every parish and mission that went all out for the Presiding Bishop's Fund, he urged the clergy and laity "to challenge your people to give to what I consider a 'must' in the cause of Christian stewardship."

In calling attention to the 400th anniversary of the Book of Common Prayer, he said: "I urge clergy now to begin to plan study classes on the Prayer Book to be held in 1949. May I also call the attention of both clergy and laity that as we study the Prayer Book we should realize that tampering with the services, as outlined within its pages is sacrilege. We should never indulge in or allow any deletions or additions. A book which has stood the test of 400 years deserves to be read, studied, and used exactly as is."

Regarding Evangelism, he said: "Christianity has always been evangelistic. Christianity has always implied going out unto others. In order to do this we much know what we have to go out with, we must recognize the personal implications of evangelism, we must recognize the ever continuing nature of true evangelism. The only way we justify ourselves is to continue to grow and how better can we grow unless through the opportunity of evangelism."

By action of Convocation the District College work was removed from support via voluntary askings and became a part of the District Budget through an increase of assessments to cover this work.

A Canon was passed for the establishment of an Executive Board for the District, the board to be composed of the Bishop, Bishop Coadjutor, Archdeacon, Chancellor of District, Treasurer of District and Secretary of Convocation, as well as, a representative of the Women's Auxiliary of the District.

General Convention Deputies: Clerical—the Rev. Henry H. Heard; Alternates—the Rev. Marcus Hitchcock and the Very Rev. Dudley B. McNeil. Lay—Mr. A. D. Watson; Alternates—Mr. Milward Simpson and Mr. Walter Schmehl.

Executive Board: Elected for three years—the Rev. Charles Bennett, the Rev. George Ridgway, Mr. James Jiacoletti, and Mr. Burr Bailey; two years—the Rev. Marcus Hitchcock, the Rev. Lon Johnson, Mr. Fred Laymen, and Mr. Erle Reed; one year—the Rev. Sidney Morgan, the Rev. Harold Weaver, Mr. R. L. Esmay and Mr. Ed. Lewis.

BUCKSTEEP MANOR REUNION

Springfield, Mass.—The eleventh annual Bucksteep Manor Reunion was held at the Highland Hotel in Springfield on Friday evening, May 28. The attendance at this reunion was well over two hundred and forty people who came from Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Connecticut.

The reunion was under the direction of the Rev. John Brett Fort, Director of Youth of the Diocese and Director of Bucksteeep Manor for the past eleven years. Mr. and Mrs. Fort are leaving for Maine, where Mr. Fort will assume the rectorship of St. John's Church, Bangor, on September 15. Honored guests included the Rt. Rev. and Mrs. W. Appleton Lawrence, Bishop of Western Massachusetts; the Rt. Rev. Charles F. Hall, Bishop of New Hampshire; the Rev. Lemuel J. Winterbottom and Mr. Harold Binns. Bishop Lawrence was the man who conceived the idea to use this estate as a leadership training center for young people. Bishop Hall was the first faculty member to become a Bishop. Mr. Winterbotom was the first staff member and Mr. Binns the first conference members.

Another guest of the evening was the Rev. Charles K. C. Lawrence, son of Bishop Lawrence and rector of Christ Church, Biddeford, Maine, who brought the greetings of the Diocese of Maine.

Bucksteep Manor is the youth leadership training center for the Diocese of Western Massachusetts. Over one thousand young people have attended this conference center.

"CATCH-UP CONFIRMATION" SERVICE

Detroit, Michigan. — In accordance with the custom in the Diocese of Michigan for the past several years, a special "Catch-Up Confirmation" service was held at a late afternoon hour in St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit. This year, the service was held on Thursday, June 10. At that time the Rt. Rev. Richard S. Emrich, Ph. D., Bishop of the Diocese, confirmed more than one hundred and fifty persons from about thirty parishes and missions in Detroit as well as the outlying sections of the Diocese.

This service is for the convenience of persons who for some reason missed being confirmed when the annual Visitation by the Bishop took place in their parish churches.

In recent years, the service has grown in popularity and considerable numbers have been brought to it by the parish clergy for confirmation. For the most part the candidates are those who were ill at the time of the Bishop's Visitation to their parish, or who are leaving the city before the next Visitation, and have been privately prepared.

COMMENCEMENT AT AUGUSTINE'S COLLEGE

Raleigh, N. C.—Forty-six graduates, representing fifteen states, received their degrees and diplomas at the eighty-first commencement at St. Augustine's College May 26. Eleven of the seventeen men in the graduating class were World War II veterans.

Dr. Clyde A. Erwin, Superintendent of Public Instruction, State of North Carolina, speaking on the topic, "Paths Toward Understanding," told the graduates and a capacity audience that education, a square deal for minority groups, the development of a strong world government, and religion, were the ways towards a better world.

Bishop Edwin A. Penick, chairman of the board of trustees, in introducing the speaker, said that Dr. Erwin had never had a recommendation for improving Negro education turned down by the Governor or the General Assembly.

Degrees and prizes were conferred and awarded by Dr. Harold L. Trigg, president of the college. Music for the program was supplied by the Choral Club, under the direction of Mrs. Constance O'Dell. Prof Theodore C. Mayo. The Rev. John W. Herritage, D. D., of, Charlotte, an alumnus and member of the board of trustees, led the opening prayers, and Bishop Penick pronounced the benediction.

The Rev. Stephen B. Mackey, of the class of 1927, archdeason of South Carolina and rector of Calvary Church, Charleston, was the preacher at the baccalaureate service on May 23.

IN MEMORIUM

Mrs. Robert Glass

A vital, lovely woman so enriches life that where she is there life is warm and strong and full, and the heights and the depths of living are most easily borne and the median way is on a high plane where the fortunate are to be found. Gray Wright Glass held this way for her friends.

Energy, possessed by her in such abundance was to be expended for others. Her gifts of conversation, her charm as a hostess, her devotion to good causes made her place in the community one of influence, brought to her the admiration, respect and love of those who knew her well and had the privilege of her friendship.

Gray Glass knew the fullness of life, its joys and its sorrows. She knew it with courage and forthrightness and so could share with others at need and with gentleness and that precipience, that understanding which transcends sympathy. She liked people and wanted to help people, and in another time would have been among those women of the South always to be found visiting among those in need of help. In her time, though she was among the foremost in her work with St. Paul's Church, Lynchburg, and organizations serving the community, she was somewhat hampered in the personal, warmly human manifestation of beneficience that was natural to her.

The graciousnes and loveliness which Virginians always have cherished in women was hers in a distinctively Virginian way. So in her Virginia, in her community, these attributes are her memorial and imperishable in the memory of those who knew her.

PHILIP LIGHTFOOT SCRUGGS.

Important Announcement

TO ALL VESTRYMEN!

THE CHURCH is going on the air over a national network Friday evening, October 1st. The value of this program to your parish or mission and to the Church nationally will depend to a very great extent on your understanding and support.

The booklet pictured below has been mailed to you either direct or in care of your clergyman.* Please read it carefully because as its title indicates it will give you a clear understanding of why the Church has turned to the great medium of radio—why the Church will use the kind of program that has been selected and how this program can help you build and strengthen your local Church.

On the first page of this booklet you will find the following message from your Presiding Bishop, The Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill.

If for some reason you have not received a copy of this important booklet, will you please send a post card or letter with your name and address to The National Council, 281 Fourth Ave., New York 10, N. Y. as soon as possible.

. . . .

Dear Friends,

With great earnestness I urge your serious attention to the message contained in this booklet.

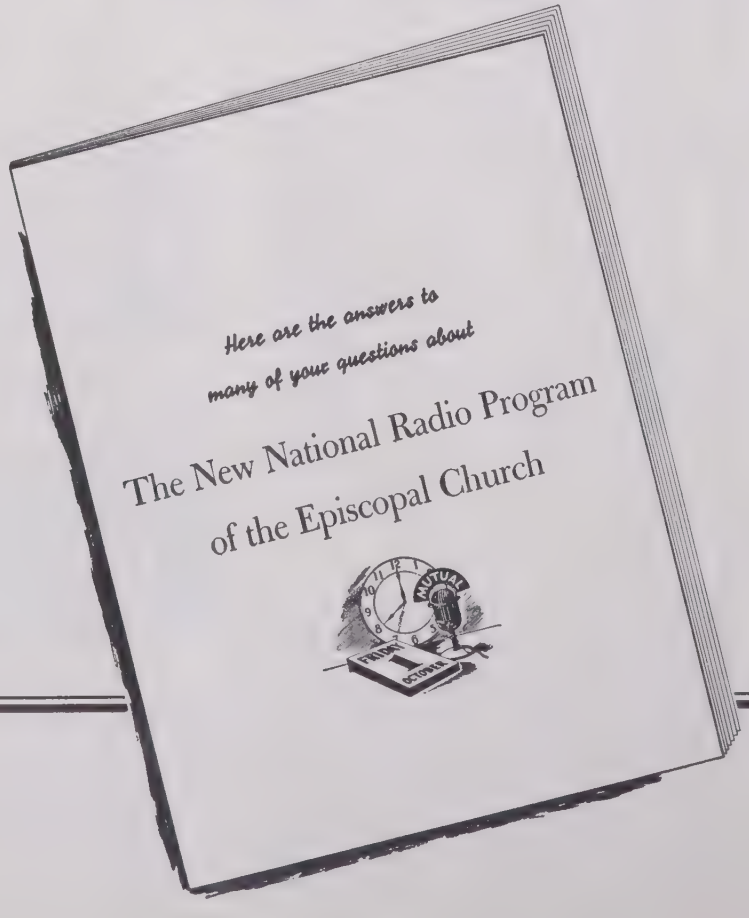
We all know that in this country there are millions of men and women who have no connection with any communion of the Christian Church. If this is to be a truly Christian nation they must be reached and interested and this must be done where they are and in a language at the initial approach they can understand. The radio gives us such a medium.

I urge your support of this new, to some daring and yet essentially sound evangelistic plan.

Faithfully yours,

Henry K. Sherrill

PRESIDING BISHOP



*Booklets for the following dioceses, at their request, will not be sent until early in September: Connecticut, Eau Claire, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Milwaukee, New Hampshire, New York, Northern Indiana, Quincy, Southern Ohio, Vermont, Western Michigan.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

"The Christian Idea of Man"

First of Three Radio Addresses

By The REV. GEORGE W. MORREL

Rector of Trinity Church, Redlands, California

Although we might not like to admit it, most of us rather enjoy talking about our neighbors. I don't mean to suggest that we are necessarily gossips, but we do like to discuss the activities of those we know. Now, in the course of such conversations, you and I are likely to use such phrases as, "Well, his intentions are good"; or, "He did the best he could"; or "I wonder what made him do it." These and the many other such phrases that we use bear witness to the fact that we have a notion of what theologians would call "the doctrine of Man." That is to say, we have some idea as to how a human being ought to act, and what his motives are likely to be, and what his ordinary potentialities are. It is as impossible to avoid having some sort of a doctrine of man as it is to avoid thinking about oneself. Various people have various ways of thinking about human nature; the fascist thinks that human beings are only tools of the State; the anarchist thinks that every individual is a law unto himself. Now, the question I would like to answer for you this evening is: What does the Christian religion think about human nature?

Don't get the idea that this is merely an academic question, of interest only to philosophers or spinners of fine theories. It makes a great deal of difference, real practical difference, whether or not we have an accurate picture of what this human species really is like. Are we living among a species, for example, that is likely to destroy itself with its own atom bombs before the end of the present century? Or, are we among people who are basically reasonable and unselfish enough to solve their common problems without recourse to such suicidal violence? Is the human race bad, or is it good? And if it is bad, is there any hope of its ever becoming good? And, above all, what does the Christian religion have to say about these things?

It may surprise some of you to know that in answering this most pressing of questions, the Christian thinker welcomes the scientific information that comes to him from the psychologist, the sociologist, and the anthropologist. We of the Church recognize that truth is truth, from whatever quarter it may come. We are, however, cautious about seizing upon every latest theory as being the last word in ultimate truth, because twenty centuries of experience have taught us that today's final theory is likely to be discarded tomorrow. Much that is being announced regarding human nature today, particularly by certain minorities among psychologists and psychiatrists, we frankly regard with a certain healthy dubiousness. There is one school of psychiatry, for example, which would try to tell us that all our actions and choices are predetermined, and therefore we have no real freedom of will at all. You may think this sounds very modern and scientific, but the truth of the matter is that the Church was dealing with precisely this same error in the 3rd century A. D., some 1700 year ago! In those days it was known as "Grosticism" which was a Greek term for "Science". You will forgive us, therefore, if we seem a trifle skeptical about accepting the modern equivalent of an ancient falsehood which we disproved well over a thousand years ago.

You see, we of the Christian Church have been at this business of dealing with human nature for quite a long time. We've had a good deal of experience behind us. And that experience has taught us that man does have free-will and can really choose between doing this thing and doing that thing. But there is something else we know about man: he has a most amazing way of persistently choosing the wrong thing! He finds it easier to be lazy than to be industrious, easier to be selfish than to be self-sacrificing, easier to be angry than to be forbearing, and so on. What is it about us human beings that makes us dream of righteousness and practice wickedness? What is it that makes it easier for us to be bad than to be good, even when we really would like to be good? Isn't this indeed a paradox? Isn't it obviously true that human nature is at cross purposes with itself, that every man is divided against himself?

Now, division is the source of agony. The division of families, the division of old friends, the dividing of nation from nation, all are potent sources of human unhappiness, as this tragic generation knows only too well. It is a truism to say that we live in a divided world; that we belong to divided Churches; that divided homes and divided personalities are among the chief human problems of our time. It is easy to see how much of our common misery is derived from the fact of division. The Christian Faith tells us that all this comes from the one basic division of a man against himself—of every man against himself. That great man of religion, St. Paul, saw it, and put it thus: "I do not understand my own actions. For I do not do what I want, but I do the very thing I hate. . . . I can will what is right, but I cannot do it. For I do not do the good I want, but the evil I do not want is what I do."

This contradiction within every man's soul reveals the sinfulness of man, for it is the very nature of sin to be divisive, just as it is the very nature of love to create harmony. Interpret it how we will, we must all admit that humanity has fallen far from its Paradise, and it desperately needs help to find its way back. Is there, indeed, a way back? Is there a way out of this dilemma in which we see ourselves to be at once good and evil? Shall we take the easy way and say with the pollyannas that all is well on the human scene, and simply forget the other side? To do so is to invite a painfully rude awakening. Or shall we say with the tyrants that man is hopeless, and is good only to be ruled and exploited? To do that is to commit race suicide, for we are all members one of another.

The Christian Church alone has the answer. She teaches us that man was created good, and is still potentially good: that is the true, sane and balanced humanism. She also reminds us that we are sinners, in need of forgiveness and in need of God's grace. When Jesus of Nazareth said, "The light of the body is the eye: therefore, when thine eye is single, thy whole body also is full of light." He pointed the way. We shall achieve unity and direction in our personal lives only when we will one thing above all other things, and when that which we will coincides with that which God wills. We Christians believe we have found the way to do this, or, to put it more accurately, that Jesus Christ has both shown us the way to do it and provided us with the strength and ability to do it. Our religion is a practical, a realistic religion: it tells us that the human race is a "house divided against itself" . . . and the truth of this insight is borne out by every morning's newspaper. And our religion also tells us that man has infinitely great possibilities, and that we can become One Family by serving humbly and sincerely the cause of our One God, who is the Father of us all.

Whenever we talk about our neighbors, we are likely to intimate that we believe that human beings are somehow capable of doing better than they do, that our race has ethical potentialities which remain unexploited. And so, indeed, we have. Christianity teaches us that there is no reason why this world should continue to be immersed in the mud-bath of selfishness and cruelty and despair. God does not intend it to be so; God does not want it to be so. God created us for something better. It is we who continually frustrate His design for us. God intends us to be happy, and so He created us with a thirst for happiness. We, foolish and perverse creatures that we are, insist on looking for that happiness in almost every place except that in which it is to be found. We are like a child who foolishly persists in looking for a dish of ice cream in a clothes closet. That happiness which is man's natural destiny and for which he was created is to be found only in conscious fellowship with God. And lest the very familiarity of these words obscure the tremendously great truth which lies behind them, let me put it another way: Christian theology teaches that man is the kind of being who enjoys the company of his Heavenly Father, just as a child enjoys the company of his earthly parent. Man apart from God is exactly and precisely like a fish out of water . . . he gasps and writhes and flounders about with a compelling restlessness. But put a man in living, creative touch with God, and see what happens. His whole life is changed; as St. Paul puts it, he becomes "a new creature". The glory of humanity is not to be found in its cultural or scientific achievements; the glory of our race consists in the fact that we are so constituted that we can become saints, sons of the Living God . . . and to that high and difficult and infinitely rewarding adventure the voice of God even at this moment is calling us.

Pretension in International Relations

By Reinhold Niebuhr

The rift between Yugoslavia and Russia is the first break in the monolithic structure of the Soviet bloc of nations. As such it encourages a degree of hope that the formidable structure, which Russia has erected and by which she hopes to expand her influence, may disintegrate and thus contribute to the peace of the world.

But these hopes may be vain. We must not count on them too much. It may be more profitable to isolate certain aspects of this rift which teach us an interesting lesson about the morality and behavior of nations.

Russia accused Yugoslavia of violating the principles of "Marxist-Leninist internationalism"; and offered as proof of this charge that Yugoslavia had shadowed Russian agents in its country and otherwise proved that it did not perfectly trust Russian policy.

Russia, in other words, identified itself with "internationalism" and accused the smaller nation of disloyalty to the wider community of the Communist world. It did not seem to occur to the Russian idealists that this vaunted Communist internationalism, being under the control of the most powerful Russian Nationalism, may easily become a screen of Russian interests.

Yugoslavia may possibly have discovered that its interests and those of Russia were not in perfect concord; and that Russia was using its power to override Yugoslavian interests. This is not a new development in international relations. French nationalism and Napoleonic ambitions had exactly the same relation to the liberal internationalism of the eighteenth century.

Even now a realistic critic of the bloc of western-democratic nations can point to various policies, ostensibly designed to serve the whole western bloc, which are in reality conceived in the interest of America, the most powerful nation in the bloc. We are not as completely different from Russia in this respect as we may imagine. Powerful nations, as powerful individuals, are always tempted to do what they want and to pretend that what they do is in the wider interest.

But Russia is particularly tempted to this kind of dishonesty because it operates in terms of a secular religion which assumes that nations, which have had a revolution, have been purged of all power impulses and of all selfishness. They are, therefore, by definition, incapable of the very evils which they reveal day by day.

It is this pretension of sanctity and purity which makes Russian ruthlessness so dangerous. It is the ruthlessness of an uncritical self--righteousness. That is always the most dangerous kind of inhumanity among individuals and among nations. We may expect it to create a great deal more confusion in the pretended heaven of the Communist world before the last word has been said.

Brotherhood among nations, as among individuals, requires a humble give and take which this kind of self-righteousness makes impossible.

THE PROVINCIAL CONFERENCES

The provincial conferences provide your directors with the best opportunity for getting the over-all picture of how the work is coming along. We have now completed all of the meetings excepting the Fourth Province, gathering at Sewanee, June 18-21, and the Seventh Province meeting in St. Louis, October 28-29. The readily seen evidences of growth would convince the most skeptically inclined that the last year has been a period of steady development. In every province save one the attendance was better than it ever has been before, and the diocesan reports show that there are many new ideas and procedures being employed. By and large, we have an exceptionally devoted group of diocesan chairmen, whose enthusiasm for this work is proved by their willingness to travel long distances to present the result of the labors in their own diocesan fields and to pick up new helps and tools for the improvement of work under way. A good third of all the chairmen were so eager to spread interest that they brought a fellow worker with them. Optimism was tempered by a realization that in the passing of a half a century, the Church has lost heavily in her hold on laymen, and that the most steady and determined efforts will be necessary to shake off the lethargy that is still too characteristic. "We are ministering to a sleeping giant," said one conferee, but there were many indications that there are real stirrings in the body of the laity. When the giant wakes up we shall all be amazed at the way we underestimated his strength.—Church Man Power.

Reviews and Ratings of Current Films

Picture of the Month: MELODY TIME

A delightful combination of music, cartoon animation and "live" action, "Melody Time" (RKO) was our reviewers' unanimous choice for this month's feature. They felt that it has everything calculated to entertain, not to mention certain techniques that cause one to marvel at the artistry of Walt Disney. It is especially appropriate for summer, a time when most of us average movie-goers prefer our fare to be on the light side.

"Melody Time" might well be subtitled "An Album of Disney Achievements." For this is a skillful compendium of several unrelated stories, all portrayed in exquisite color and with great imagination in design and interpretation. The live characters fit in perfectly with the animated drawings, and the whole imparts the wizardy of enchantment.

Among the episodes making up "Melody Time" are these:

"Once Upon a Wintertime"—the story of a boy and girl who go sleighing in winter's enchanted land and meet with adventures shared by animals and birds. Frances Langford tells the tale in song.

"Little Toot"—a children's tale, ingeniously depicted, of a little tugboat in New York Harbor whose mischievous antics made his family and friends ashamed of him, but who crashes through in heroic style when courage is required of him. The Andrews Sisters relate the story.

"Johnny Appleseed"—another folk tale familiar to all, featuring the voice of Dennis Day.

"Pecos Bill"—a story of a mighty man of the desert as told by Roy Rogers, aided by some western ballads by the "Sons of the Pioneers."

The three others—"Bumble Boogie," "Blame it on the Samba" and "Trees." The latter is doubtless the loveliest of the collection; it is based on Joyce Kilmer's poem and features the music of Oscar Rasbach rendered with great artistry by Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians.

With this charming Disney fantasy, we can all be children again, taking the whole family along on a warm summer's day, and coming away refreshed for the experience. A, Y. C.

OTHER CURRENT FILMS

Audience Suitability Ratings:

A—Adults; Y—Young People 12 to 18; C—Children under 12

DESIGN FOR DEATH (RKO). A serious, thought-provoking picture which should add to the understanding of the anatomy of war. Confiscated Japanese documentary films are combined with studio-produced historical sequences to tell the story of the rise of the war lords in Japan, from feudal times to Pearl Harbor, and the resulting tragedy to the people caught in the struggle. It emphasizes the great danger to the individual and the nation when religion—Shintoism, in this case—is used for evil ends. Free from hate propaganda, the film ends on a note of hope. A, Y.

THE EMPEROR WALTZ (Paramount). The way of a phonograph salesman from New Jersey (Bing Crosby) with a high-born lady of the Imperial court (Joan Fontaine) runs its parallel course with the love affair between a distinguished pedigreed poodle in need of psycho-analysis and a "mutt" as unsiphisticated as his master. Strauss waltzes and yodeling country folk furnish the musical obligato. Exceptional color photography helps redeem a preposterous farce of a story. A, Y, C.

THE IRON CURTAIN (20th Century-Fox). With a "voice of doom" narrator presenting a direful prologue, this is a story based on some facts brought out at the Canadian spy trials after a code clerk at the Soviet Embassy in Ottawa revealed what his country was attempting to learn about atomic scientific secrets. The semi-documentary technique may give more authority than the picture deserves because of its propaganda overtones. It will in no way further the hopes of those working for Russian-American amity. A, Y.

FOUR FACES WEST (United Artists). As a variation from the accepted "western," this story gives the background of the rough-and-ready men and women whose valiant spirits made the West a great American heritage. Authentic and vital, it is based on actual events and characters, following closely the semi-biographical novel "Paso Por Aqui" by Eugene Manlove Rhodes.

GIVE MY REGARDS TO BROADWAY (20th Century-Fox). Romantic comedy with a strong seasoning of music and hearthside philosophy. Tells the story of the family of an ex-vaudeville actor (Charles Winniger) his wife, (Fay Bainter) and their children. How the mother holds her brood—and her husband—in line, and inspires them to practice the good virtues, makes a story both clean and entertaining. A, Y, C.

ESCAPE (20th Century-Fox). A picture comprised of strong conflicts between the forces of good and evil, personal judgment and public justice, this tells the story of an innocent man convicted of manslaughter who escapes, is befriended by a girl (Peggy Cummins) and seeks sanctuary in a village church. Rex Harrison is superb in the exacting role of the escaped man, and Norman Wooland has a choice part as the parson who leads him to the right decision. A, Y.

SO EVIL MY LOVE (Paramount). The story of a missionary's widow (Ann Todd) who, in Jamaica in the 1860's, falls under the spell of a blackguard (Ray Milland) and does his bidding to the ultimate destruction of her own sense of decency, integrity and honor. this is an absorbing drama. Some may see in this a serious reflection cast upon missionaries and the missions cause; one would like to believe that a missionary would have acquired enough spiritual resources to combat and resist evil. A.

RED RIVER (United Artists). The dramatization of an historic Western adventure, the story of the first great overland cattle drive up the Chisholm Trail to Abilene, Kansas. It has the inevitable flavor of Indian massacre and "quick on the draw" rugged individualism. There is considerable brutality implied and depicted. The story, however, is absorbing, the photography unusual, the acting generally good. A, Y.

EASTER PARADE (MGM). It seems to us that another title for this elaborate production would have been more fitting. It associates Easter with bunny rabbits, eggs, flowers and fashion parades, a custom which is getting prevalent and most regrettable. The Christian festival commemorating the Resurrection of our Lord should not be lost amid the symbols of pagan practices. Some familiar and some new tunes and lyrics by Irving Berlin, skillful dancing and singing by Fred Astaire, Judy Garland, Ann Miller and Peter Lawford embellish a story of stage life. Technicolor, lavish costumes and settings. A, Y, C.

KEY LARGO (Warner). Based on a play by Maxwell Anderson and with the help of an exceptional cast (Humphrey Bogart, Edward G. Robinson, Lauren Bacall, Lionel Barrymore, Claire Trevor and others) this portrayal of underworld activities along the Florida Keys has a strong impact on the emotions. Crime is shown with all its base violence and cruelty. Superb photography and inspired direction by John Huston. A.

LADY FROM SHANGHAI (Columbia). A slow-paced and strenuous picture, produced with typical Orson Welles technique. Welles is the narrator and plays the part of an Irish seaman whose questionable relationship with a rich adventuress (Rita Hayworth) brings on evil amid suspense, murder and general confusion of plot and action. A.

THE VELVET TOUCH (RKO). Theme: the devastating effect of fear on a woman, causing her to commit unpremeditated murder of the man who has helped her to achieve worldly fame but has stultified her real personality. Rosalind Russell gives a convincing performance as the woman in the case. Artistically produced with dramatic quality and excellent acting, this picture is for adults only. A.

THE BAD SISTER (Universal-International). A J. Arthur Rank production concerning two women who, at the opposite ends of the social scale, meet when they are both in great need. The contrast of dire poverty to riches, when both women know the same anguish, makes for dramatic exploration of social values, even though the motivation is not always well shown. Good English cast and interesting backgrounds. A, Y.

THE TIME OF YOUR LIFE (United Artists). The locale of this passing show of odd characters is a saloon on San Francisco's waterfront. Containing no plot, it is a series of episodes touching the human flotsam who try to find a precarious anchor in alcohol. There is no attempt to embellish this situation, fortunately. A.

THUNDERHOOF (Columbia). A western picture of the desert and the men who ride over it. The emotions are primitive and crudely expressed. There is a triangle situation, and a moral dilemma is solved by circumstances. Fair acting and some excitement. A, Y.

WATERFRONT AT MIDNIGHT (Paramount). Fair depiction of what is involved in apprehending "hi-jacking" gangs. Crime is shown in its true light. Faithfulness to duty and courage win out. A.

TRAPPED BY BOSTON BLACKIE (Columbia). Stolen pearls; guilty husband. Chester Morris and his associate George Stone in their usual roles. A, Y.

UNDER CALIFORNIA STARS (Republic). An old-fashioned western brought up to date and enhanced by technicolor. The villain kidnaps the horse Trigger and pays dearly for this misdeed. Catchy songs by the "Sons of the Pioneers." A, Y, C.

WHIRLWIND RAIDERS (Columbia). The "Durango Kid" has moved to Texas and uncovers duplicity of corrupt State Police. Standard fast-riding and shooting affair. A, Y, C.

GUNS OF HATE (RKO). A gold nugget identified as coming from a formerly rich mine causes the death of its owner and false accusations to be heaped upon two traveling cowboys wanting to be helpful. They are vindicated after the guilty are identified and punished. Average western; much action; slight romance. A, Y, C.

FULLER BRUSH MAN (Columbia). Selling brushes can lead to unexpected developments, even murder, but a good salesman should be equal to any emergency and Red Skelton qualifies in his slap-stick way, urged on by the incentive of winning the girl of his choice (Janet Blair). A, Y, C.

I, JANE DOE (Republic). Exploration of a serious social problem: the behavior of an unfaithful husband sent overseas during the war, the evil results of his conduct, and the eventual dramatic climax wrought by the women he has betrayed. Good acting and direction; plausible action. A, Y.

SECRET SERVICE INVESTIGATOR (Republic). A familiar plot about tracing guilty counterfeiters of U. S. money and the machinations of criminals. Fair acting; realistic fighting. A, Y.

BIG TOWN SCANDAL (Paramount). Intended to show how a newspaper can become a force for good in the community—in this case, correct the causes of juvenile delinquency—this picture is lost in a maze of complications. The solution of the problem becomes secondary to plot interest and does not always give social values their proper emphasis. A, Y.

Meditations In His Presence

XXI. "Intend to lead a new life." (From the Invitation, page 75.)

Our intention usually bespeaks our desire of the moment, but its compelling power is often weak—"the road to hell is paved with good intentions." So, no matter how good our intentions are, we must back them up with something stronger if they are to be followed into action.

Each time we come into the presence of God, we want to wipe out the past, and usually it is our honest intent to go from the service renewed and strengthened and ready to lead a new life. But as the fizz goes out of the livest drink when left to stand, so life goes flat when the inspirations and convictions which come are not carried out.

What kind of life change do we need at this moment? Each one must ask and answer his own question. What old portion of thought or conduct needs to be cleared out and what new life thought implanted and a new course of conduct followed? We can easily put our finger on the need, but the follow up, the follow through—that is much, much harder.

Supposed we earnestly intend to lead a new life following this service, how are we to do it?

Locate the area where there is greatest need for newness of life.

Concentrate on it during some communion service. Let the words and atmosphere feed it. By the time you come to the altar rail nail down the first step to take.

As you partake of the body and blood of Christ, ask for a portion of His strength to carry with you. Associate your need and your intent with His spirit presence.

As you leave seize the first opportunity to make good your avowed intent to be His disciple, and never let a single exception occur..

JAMES W. KENNEDY.

VOID IF DETACHED

"Void if Detached." In many different ways and in many different places these words meet our eye. On railroad tickets, passes, street car transfers, coupons, etc., these three words testify to the simple fact that said ticket or pass or transfer or coupon, etc., loses its value, is no good, can't be used, when detached.

This suggests to us the recent case of the Harvard man who, sick of a quarreling world, dissociated himself from all national ties and became a "citizen of the World" (whatever that may be.) (It may mean he wants to be a citizen in a one-man state in a one-man world.)

It also suggests those rugged individuals who feel they can exist without a society, who feel they can go their own way without consideration of the society which gives him his own character and to which he unwittingly contributes.

It brings to mind those "religious" people who can be religious outside of a religious society, who don't need the stimulus, support, and help which comes from being a part of a body. You know the kind of spiritual Robinson Crusoe we mean: "I have my own religion and I don't see why I can't practice it without going to church . . . After all, religion is a personal thing and I can be religious without belonging to any religious group . . . I have my own philosophy of life and it's good enough for me . . . ad infinitum . . . ad nauseam."

We know several of these "alone-with-the-Aloners." Most of them are fine people. But they seem to overlook the fact that man is man only when he is part of society. Society (religious or any other) gives man character and vice versa. Neither can exist without the other. Men make society; society makes men.

And apart from the religious community, one does not realize his true nature as a child of God. And man who does not fulfill his nature as a child of God becomes "void."

Mark well, O rugged individualist, thou spiritual isolationist, thou religious Robinson Crusoe, the legend of the ticket: "Void if detached."

"Lighten Our Darkness"

By The REV. ROBERT JOHNSTON PLUMB

Rector of Saint Mark's Church, Washington, D. C.

An occasion not to be passed over lightly is the four hundredth anniversary of the Book of Common Prayer which will come on Whitsunday of 1949. The leaders of the English Reformation in 1549 acted more as translators and compilers than as authors in bringing into being this book whose aim was "to excite piety and devotion in the worship of God." Most of the collects for the Church year were translated from the collections of Gelasius 494 A. D., and Gregory, 590 A. D., and were probably in use many years before these dates. This means that many of them were in use at the time of the fall of the Roman Empire.

Toward the close of the Fourth Century, A. D., Roman sentries stationed along the Danube, noticed unusual activity among the Goths who lived in the dark forests beyond the farther shore. A canoe swiftly crossed to the Roman outpost with the message, "The Huns are upon us. Allow us to cross to safety!" The Huns were the most feared of all barbarian foes. Part Mongol and part Turk, their hordes from the Far East, checked by the Great Wall of China, had turned toward the West. Cruel and as wild as the beasts whose skins they wore, their hard riding horsemen had swept over Europe enslaving the Eastern Goths and now had come to the very borders of the Roman Empire.

The Roman border captains dispatched couriers to Constantinople to ask the Emperor what they should do. Back came the word that the Goths should be allowed to cross the river if they yielded up their arms and agreed to settle peaceably upon the land. The Goths were very willing to agree to these terms and for days thousands and thousands of them crossed the river in dugouts; hastily improvised rafts and floating tree trunks. The barbarians had entered the Empire at last. The camel's nose was in the tent. They were to become like a huge glacier sweeping down from the north. The sun might melt away the southernmost fringe but behind there was a depth of steadily advancing ice which no sun could melt. Rome might successfully beat off the vanguard but there were aways replacements to fight in their stead.

Rome fell to the Goths and Jerome, a great Christian of that period, wrote, "Who would believe that Rome, built up by the conquest of the whole world, had collapsed; that she had become both the mother of nations and their tomb? The world has perished in one city."

The first invasion by the barbarians must have been a terrible blow to the Christian community at Rome. Those who had clung to the worship of the old Roman gods called it a judgment upon the city for having turned to Christianity. After the Goths, the Huns under Attila who was called the Scourge of God, threatened to invade the Eternal city for many years. And then the Vandals came.

During this long reign of Terror people prayed. "Defend us Thy humble servants in all assaults of our enemies that we, surely trusting in Thy defence, may not fear the power of any adversaries, through the might of Jesus Christ our Lord."

Then, as night falls over the city and watchmen are set upon her ancient walls; when there are rumours of the rapid approach of the Huns and no one knows what terrors the night holds, we can picture the Christian praying, "Lighten our darkness, we beseech Thee, O Lord and by Thy great mercy defend us from all perils and dangers of this night; for the love of Thy only son, our Saviour, Jesus Christ."

The Collect for the Fourth Sunday in Advent reminds us of the great need that the men and women of those far off times felt for the Coming of the Lord Jesus. "O Lord, raise up, we pray Thee, Thy power and come among us, and with great might succour us." Was ever there a greater need for prayer "that the course of this world may be so peaceably ordered by Thy Governance, that Thy Church may joyfully serve Thee in all godly quietness?" And the prayer to God "mercifully to look upon our infirmities, and in all our dangers and necessities stretch forth Thy right hand to help and defend us".

These prayers have not become outmoded with the passage of the years. Our cynical age needs their revelation of God's unquestioned power. We need their strong and beautiful faith which believed that their Saviour would stretch forth his hand to help them as He put forth His hand to heal the leper or to catch the drowning Peter in the Gospel story. We need to become more aware of the might of Jesus Christ. It has been said that the slogan of the Twentieth Century is "I saw it but I don't believe it." Let us change it to "Lord, I believe, help Thou mine unbelief" and pray,

"Lighten our darkness, we beseech Thee, O Lord."

THE INTERNATIONAL SITUATION

When this phrase appears in our daily papers, it usually betokens distress and concern about a present world crisis. Not so with reference to the ramifications of our national office. Recently we have had several interesting contacts with distant points. The Very Rev. Stephen S. H. Tsang, Bishop-elect of Hankow, China, has been in conference with your directors concerning our methods for giving more responsibility to laymen. The Dean is going home at the end of this month heavily laden with our literature. Archbishop George Frederick Kingston, Primate of All Canada, sent a letter requesting information concerning our movement and its publications. From across the same border, the Bishop of Niagara sent an official observer, in the person of the Rev. F. Allen Hill, to the meeting of the First and Second Provinces at Seabury House. On September 23 the Executive Director expects to fly 2,500 miles west in the Pacific to aid in the furthering of Laymen's Work in the territory of Hawaii, where Churchmen of Polynesian, Japanese, Portuguese, Chinese, Korean, Philippine, as well as Caucasian descent are to be found. Further, many of our bishops on their way to England and the Lambeth Conference have been calling at the office. Of course, our Lay Reader's Sermon Service goes regularly across each of the great oceans to many different countries.—Church Man Power.

PROJECT FOR VOLUNTEER YOUTH WORKERS

A selected group of young men between the ages of 17 and 23 will form a work group at Seabury House, national conference and hospitality center at Greenwich, Conn. They will begin their program of work, study, worship and recreation on August 2, and end the project August 14.

Seabury House was unoccuppied for a time before it was acquired by the Church, so that there is much clearing away of undergrowth, and other outdoor work to be done. The boys pay their own expenses and cost of their meals. They will live in the House and take their meals there.

The Rev. Knud A. Larsen, rector of Grace Church, Rutherford, N. J., and volunteer youth worker for the Division of Youth, will be leader. The project is sponsored by diocesan youth leaders of the Second Province.

"The Church in Japan"

By The RT. REV. ARTHUR LEA

Retired Bishop of Kyushu, Japan

It is already five months since we caught a glimpse of glorious Fuji San rising out of the Pacific Ocean, while Japan itself lay below the horizon. These five months have been spent first in trying to appraise the psychological and spiritual condition of the Japanese under the occupation and secondly in responding to invitations from all sides to give addresses in schools, to students, teachers and P. T. A's.

Japan is a changed country. Three years ago she was a mighty Power in control of China, Korea, the Philippines, Malaya and the Pacific Islands. Today she is stripped of her empire and foreign troops control her life. The Chinese and Koreans who were in Japan on sufferance now walk the streets with the air of conquerors. Recently one hundred and fifty trucks carried thousands of Koreans in a procession which celebrated their emancipation. There was only one banner in English of the hundreds which were waving aloft or placarding the trucks. "Thanks to the allies for our liberation". This demonstration, which time and again held up the traffic, was directed by patient Japanese policemen. Neither they nor the Japanese people showed the slightest resentment.

The astonishing thing is that five months of observation has failed to discover any sign of bitterness or sullenness. On the contrary there is a spirit of unfailing goodwill and courtesy. The relationship between the Japanese and the occupying forces is exemplary and, we believe, a new thing in history. Loyal cooperation is everywhere in evidence. This is not entirely explained by calling it oriental fatalism. The people with one voice condemn the policies of those who brought Japan to ruin through their aggressive ambition. We are bound to recognize the good in a people capable of such self-restraint.

This is a time when the Christians of the world are bound to step in and give words of encouragement and comfort to a nation willing to admit its failures and reconstruct itself on democratic lines.

The Christian congregations which lost their church buildings in the bombings now meet for worship in their homes, squatting on the matted floors. It is not difficult to point out to them that in N. T. days there were no church buildings and that they are fulfilling the ideal of fellowship, and God is with "the Church which is in thy house". The western world is filled with churches too large to realize the ideal of fellowship, and God is calling us again to manifest in its fulness the fellowship which is in Christ.

It is, of course, impossible to describe the sufferings and fears which the Christians endured during the war period. They are greatly cheered when one assures them that now they know by real and bitter experience the meaning of the words of the Apostle "By honor and dishonor, by evil report and good report, as deceivers and yet true; as unknown and yet well known; as dying, and behold, we live; as chastened and not killed; as sorrowful and yet always rejoicing; as poor and yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things".

It may be interesting if we indicate the main lines of our approach to congregations of non-Christians, such as meetings of the P. T. A. We are continually being asked to speak to them on the making of a new nation. This we always refuse to do for very clear reasons. One is that a nation cannot be re-made overnight . . . that anything like a revolution will only bring confusion and further distress . . . that what we need is not a new Japan, but the real Japan based on a new foundation.

We assure them that it would be a fatal mistake to cast aside their heritage of loyalty, patriotism and their spirit of sacrifice. These must be based not on mythology, but on faith in God who is their God as well as ours. The idea of a divine country with a divine mission is not to be cast aside, but to be fulfilled by making Japan the Kingdom of God. We do not hesitate to tell them that in a peaceful world Japan can renew herself and make her own contribution to the world; that the climax of Japan was not in the past, but is to be realized in the future. We assure them that the attitude of the democracies towards Japan is steadily changing through the good reports that returning G. I's are giving to the democracies.

The time has come when we are now free to tell them frankly what has been wrong with Japan; in fact that is often what they definitely ask us to speak about. It is very effective to show them that the militarists used and abused their fine loyalty and patriotism for aggressive purposes, and especially is it effective when we point out that Japan's greatest trouble was her confusing and confounding two quite different things, that is to say, patriotism and religion. When one presents this idea in detail the effect on their minds is instantaneous. In fact their minds are prepared as never before to receive those truths which prepare the way for Christian faith.

The great subject here now is education. The American Educational authorities here are making great efforts to rid education of the nationalistic ideas which led to Japan's ruin. The great difficulty is, however, that the authorities have not been able to make up their minds as to what substitute they will provide for this powerful motive which dominated the mind of Japan in the past. School teachers do not hesitate to press for some real substitute, but the authorities of the Occupation Forces are afraid of allowing any connection between religion and education. They hark back to the old controversy of separation of Church and State, and in doing so think they must keep all religion out of the schools, in other words, give a non-religious type of education. Non-religious education, however, is atheistic and materialistic, and this means planting the seeds of the hated enemy, Communism. They are on the horns of a dilemma and there seems to them no way of escape.

It is to this problem that we are now devoting our attention. In England the problem has been settled by making teaching of religion compulsory, except that parents may withdraw their children from the religious instruction. In America the problem is still unsolved. It happens, however, that the Christian schools of Japan are at present the freest in the world, and a great effort is now being made to solve this problem. Having been asked to head the Women's College and organize it into a Women's University I am bound to try and find the solution. Time and space will not permit me to go into details in this report but I may have the opportunity to take the matter up as we go ahead with our plans.

At a recent meeting to consider the matter of spiritual education, a Shinto priest was asked by a Christian leader what idea of God he would now present to young people, seeing that now Ancestor-worship had been set aside. The priest at once demurred and said he did not care to be asked such difficult questions. When pressed, he replied: "General MacArthur has not yet told us what idea of God we may teach".

At any rate a new era has opened for the Christian schools of this country. Hitherto, in order to maintain government recognition of these schools, Christian Education had to be set aside, or given surreptitiously, and this led to a very unsatisfactory situation. The matter is now clarified, with the result that Christian schools have come out with definite statements of their purpose to make these schools thoroughly Christian.

It is at this point that I shall refer to the greatest difficulty that has arisen in the history of the Seikokwai (Church of Japan, Anglican and Episcopal). At the time when Japan was heading straight for war the whole nation went mad on the principle of unification and consolidation. This at once had its repercussions on the Christians of Japan. The nation was about to enter upon the most critical period of its history. Is not this the time for all Christians to unite? After all is not unity the ideal of Christ Himself?

Thus arose the movement to compel all non-Roman Churches to unite. It soon received the forceful support of the Department of Education which for years had been working on a "Religious Bill" which would bring the many Churches under its control.

It appears that the pressure of the Government, and those who favored the amalgamation of the Churches was of the most intensive kind. The Seikokwai then entered on a period of its history without parallel in its complexity. Many clergy (including Bishops) were in favor of finding a way to join in this amalgamation effort if for no other reason than that otherwise colossal difficulties would arise which might even destroy the Church. Endless negotiations were carried on and crisis followed crisis. There was vacillation on all sides, because the situation was always changing. Fear was a dominating motive in the country and often officials would bring the Christians under suspicion, to prove that they themselves were loyal. Reports would be spread abroad that the whole Seikokwai had joined in order to influence those who were still holding out. The difficulty of many in the Seikokwai was that the body had no creed, as yet, and would be without the Episcopate, the organ of continuity in the historic church. In the end about one-third of the church, many of the clergy and three Bishops joined the amalgamation. The continuing church was then compelled by the Government to bring its organization to an end, but was allowed to exist as individual churches only, as a sort of congregational system. Bishops were not to be in charge of Dioceses, for the Diocese had to be dissolved. In order that a Bishop might confirm church members, he had to go forth ostensibly on a evangelistic tour. The Constitution and Canons of the Church were set aside. At this juncture three of the Bishops who had entered the Amalgamation decided to consecrate seven Bishops in order to maintain the Episcopate within the Amalgated Body, though the consecration was done secretly, for fear both of the Amalgamated Body and of the Government. It was argued by them that if Dioceses were destroyed the individual churches should have Bishops to continue the Episcopate in the church, and thus there were seven Bishops without any jurisdiction except their own parishes. Thus arose a division in the Seikokwai: those within the Amalgamated Body and those who continued their existence as "individual churches".

As soon as the occupation took place the whole situation changed. One Diocese which had gone completely into the Amalgamation returned and several of those consecrated Bishops returned to work again as priests in their churches. Two of the consecrating Bishops died, and many other changes followed. The problem of the past three years was that of effecting a reconciliation with three of the consecrated Bishops and several Clergy and congregations.

Recently this was accomplished in a great Reconciliation Service held at Holy Trinity Church, Tokyo, when I was invited to preach the sermon. All rejoiced in this reunion of our church, especially as three of our Bishops were on the point of starting for the Lambeth Conference. One church still remains with its Clergyman, but we do not anticipate great difficulty in this case. So intricate are the details of this trouble which divided the church for several years that it is impossible to give an intelligible description of what happened; but we are filled with thanksgiving to Almighty God who stepped in to effect what human wisdom could not accomplish. Over and above this, we are thankful for the relief that will result, for this matter has occupied altogether too much of our time since we arrived.

When we were in Tokyo a group of our former fellow-workers, Clergy and laity, held for us a welcome meeting, which was profoundly moving for us all. We realized as never before that perhaps our long years of work were not entirely in vain. Again and again men of high standing here have come forth to tell us that they were our "boys" forty-five and fifty years ago.

After our return from Tokyo, we went to Kure, the great naval center of Japan, where I consecrated a beautiful chapel, St. Peter's, for the Commonwealth Forces of Australia and New Zealand. I also had a Confirmation Service for soldiers. At Eta Jima we found the great Audience Chamber used by the Emperor turned into a wonderful chapel, the altar occupying the place where the throne had stood. It is a building of great beauty and this transformation into a Christian chapel is symbolical of what must take place in this country of Japan. Alas the change to a church was made by military forces and not by the people themselves.

From all sides are pouring in requests for addresses and the torrent is swelling. The questions asked are many, but the following are typical—"What is to be the future of Japan"; "My only son died in battle; what are the proofs of immortality?"

I thank all our friends for their letters, their parcels, the unfailing loyalty and their prayers.

The final request of the great welcome meeting in Tokyo came in these words; "And now Bishop, just one more request! Just promise that you will die here!"

He HAD NEVER HEARD

"The young Yugoslav, with whom I shared a seat on the airplane," reports Secretary Betts of the Bible Society, "asked me politely about my business occupation. I told him I was a representative of the American Bible Society. 'Bible,' he asked, 'what do you mean Bible?' "He told me he had never heard the word before. Then I tried to explain. The Bible is a book of sacred writings and tells the life story of Jesus of Nazareth. Apparently he had never heard the word 'Jesus'. So I spent a few minutes telling him something of Jesus Christ. Then I had an inspiration. I happened to have in my brief case copies of the Gospels of St. Luke and St. John in Serbian. They had just been published by the Bible Society. Can you read this? I said and offered him a Gospel. His eyes lighted up as he recognized his own language. 'Yes,' he said eagerly. 'May I keep it.' I assured him it was his and gave him the other Gospel to go with it. God grant it may prove to be but the beginning of a new and richer chapter in his life."

MISSIONS—MONEY—MEN

Something about "Missions" that is disturbing because it shatters complacency. Missions cost money. Missions mean men. And we don't like to part with money. Nor do we like to see our best men go to far away places. But wait—Missions mean "The Man", Christ Jesus. Missions mean salvation. Without Missions we would be without hope. God sent forth His Son. That Son makes the difference between hope and despair, between courage and fear, between peace of mind and frustration. Yes, Missions mean Christ Jesus. We know what He means to us. We want Him to mean abundant living to all mankind. So we give money and we send men into all places and into all areas of life whither Christ Himself would come. Or do we?

Converts

The Roman Catholic Church has just published its statistics for the past year. The number of "converts", 115,214, is called "record-breaking." Undoubtedly it is, but upon analysis it works out to less than one-half of one per cent on the basis of 26,075,-697 members of the Roman Church in America. On the same basis, it would mean one convert per year by each Episcopal parish in America. We do not doubt that the Churches of our communion have reached that average. Surveys in recent years have shown that the drift between Romanism and Protestantism is about even in each direction.

But two remarks in the report, as quoted in "Time," are worthy of serious consideration. "Effective convert-making requires systematic action," writes Jesuit Father John E. Odou in explaining the organization called "Convert Makers of America" of which he is director. This is precisely the point at which most evangelism fails in the Episcopal Church. We have been interested to note that practically every Bishop called for an increase of evangelism in his diocese in the episcopal address at diocesan conventions this spring. So far as we have seen, only two bishops proposed definite plans. Evangelism in our Church remains in a pious fog. We steadily refuse to bring it down to earth by using proven techniques and careful organization.

Monsignor Fulton J. Sheen in the same report writes, "Modern converts . . . unlike those of past generations have nothing to be converted from. It is no longer Protestantism from which we convert souls; it is confusionism." With this Protestants will agree, and add that the same breakdown is unfortunately also seen in erstwhile Romanists.

Part of the answer surely must be to drive home to the American people their lack of religion. Most Americans assume that if they are not Jews, they are automatically Christians. Within Christianity, by a mysterious process of spiritual osmosis they think of themselves as part of the religious tradition of their parents. So men and women who are spiritually illiterate and religiously untaught register themselves as "Protestants" or "Methodists" or "Episcopalians." In tragic reality they are none of these. It is time to label them for what they are—pagans!

We ought to remove the shadow of religious respectability from these people. They have masqueraded under the label of Christ too long, and the Church has suffered much because of them. Let us not be afraid any longer to use the name "heathen" for them. There is no way to create a sense of need for the Gospel of Jesus Christ in these people while they still think of themselves as Christians. The hardest person to convert is not the out and out sinner, but the respectable man who considers himself a Christian, though he has no understanding of Chrisianity and has never been near a Church for years. Perhaps the Churches should issue membership cards annually! Surely the difference between a Christian and a pagan should be made distinct and clear!

Prayer Book Simplification

We hope that some parish priests as well as scholars will have a share in planning the celebration and the attendant discussions surrounding the 400th Anniversary of the First English Prayer Book next year. For this might well be the beginning point of a new revision of our Book of Common Prayer.

As a parish priest, we have often wondered about the confused theology of the committal in the burial office. We have wished there might be a simpler and better "Order for the Visitation of the Sick." We have puzzled over the inept placing of the prayer for the blessing of the ring in the wedding service, and hoped that in a future Prayer Book there might be provision for the use of two rings in the ceremony. For that matter, if by canon we are to have second marriages permissable, we really need another service more appropriately worded than the present Form of Solemnization of Matrimony. We'd like to see "The Thanksgiving of Women after Child-Birth" 'revised to make it a service of thanksgiving for both father and mother.

But most of all, we would like to see the entire Prayer Book simplified in respect to its rubrics and its printing. Did you ever realize that there are forty-two rubrics in the service of Morning Prayer, and that it takes fifty--six properly to direct us through the Holy Communion? Many could be eliminated; most could be reworded to advantage. The printed aspect of the pages could be vastly improved, so that the book would be much simpler to follow. Indeed, perhaps we need a Shorter Prayer Book, such as the Church of England has recently issued, which would contain Morning Prayer, the Holy Communion, the Litany, the Collects, Epistles and Gospels and the Psalter.

Rome, History, and the Movies

The corruption of the renaissance papacy has long been understood and admitted by all historians. But the movies have their own way of dealing with history when it places them vis-a-vis the Roman Church! Twentieth Century—Fox is about to film Samuel Shellenbarger's novel, "The Prince of Foxes," in which Pope Alexander VI is presented as an unprincipled scoundrel (as indeed he was!) and his two illegitimate children, Cesare and Lucrezia Borgia, are placed in hardly a more favorable light. But though true to history, this would surely offend the Roman Church. "We have solved the problem very simply," Sol C. Siegal, producer of the picture, discloses. "Lucrezia and Cesare have no father in the picture. . . . If we had done anything else, we would have created a great furore among Roman Catholics."

At Paramount, another photoplay about the famed Lucrezia is under way. "We were assured," Richard Maibaum, its producer, states, "that as long as we made no mention of the papacy or of religion, the (Roman) Church would not interfere with the project." So Cesare's connection with the papacy will be completely overlooked in the picture.

It is worthy also remembering that the Roman Church forced the Board of Education in Newark, New Jersey, to remove "The Nation" from high school libraries in that city because the magazine had published articles critical of the Roman Church.

Does the Roman Church impose a censorship upon our media of mass communication in America?

Mission Work in The Philippines

By CLAUDA ROGERS McAFEE

Since I returned in June I have found it almost impossible to do anything other than assort and distribute relief as we have to be very careful to see that no one is forgotten. We give relief mainly to our own neighborhood as we have not less than 350 people living in this same block with us, a great many of whom come here to church sometime during the week. I am also handing out a vitamin and a cup of milk daily from the Church World Service.

I wish I could give you a clear picture of their crowded living conditions —for instance, there is a 12x16 foot house a stone's throw from ours in which thirteen people live. Here they eat and sleep. There are three students in the house who have high school assignments to do each day and others of school age who must have home work of some kind—and still they have courage to go on. I have not been able to figure out where each one can find floor space when they lie down at night to sleep. I presume if one could look in one would see them lying very close together packed like sardines in a can. This is not only true of this house, but all of them. From my bedroom window I count thirty-six houses and shacks, which are probably as crowded. Although the Filipinos are proverbially hospitable, the majority of the householders do not invite us inside their houses, as they would have done in prewar times. They content themselves with asking us to sit down on the porch, if they have one, or possibly on a crude seat in the yard, as they are "ashamed" to let us see their true condition today,—a condition which in most cases, is a result of the war and not truly representative of their pre-war circumstances. We need a Filipino visiting nurse. They would not be so embarrassed to let her see how they live, and she could do things for them we could not do. She could assist me in getting Child Health Work, similar to the work we did in Upi, with the Tirurai, started here. (Our work before the war was in Upi. We started that work in 1822 and were there until we were interned by the Japanese).

We have a tiny Chapel under our bedroom—it will seat forty-five comfortably, but often for daily evening prayer there are between forty and fifty crowded there, or even up to sixty. They often come one-half hour before service time, perhaps just to have a clean, quiet place in which to sit and rest, perhaps to pray, too, but many are too young for that—they just sit there where it is restful, clean and quiet and sometimes a young one falls asleep.

Several times after the service was finished the whole congregation just sat on. Finally, Mr. McAfee said, "Is there anything you want?"

"Yes, we want to sing some more," was the reply.

There are forty-eight who come to choir practice. We have to send those who are younger than fourteen years home as there is no room for them. One night after I had worked them hard practicing eighteen songs, and had said, "That will be all," they immediately spoke up and said, "Now, tell us a story." They love to sing and hear Bible stories or read the Psalms.

All of our institutional work in Zamboanga was destroyed. We now have a temporary thirty-five bed hospital, and an over-crowded nurses' home, and our own tiny house which is also the Mission office and center from which the relief supplies are assorted and distributed. On Sunday morning forty or more children are crowded into our saladining room-office. The one place where we have any privacy is in our bedroom. Our beds stand in the middle of the room and trunks and boxes almost surround them. Here we store our own trunks and boxes as we have no place to put their contents if we unpacked them, and there would be no place to work. Every time one needs something, of course, it would be in the bottom of the trunk!

The Bishop has given consent to have a Parish House built, so the congestion in our house may be relieved in five or six months, and these people will then have a place in which they can play, rest, work, and read, and where I can have a kindergarten room where the small children can play and, I hope, have a cup of milk each day.

A young girl came to me recently saying, "Mother, I have only two dresses and this one broke (tore) today and I can't wear it to school anymore." She was holding it together close around her throat to hide herself. A girl in high school with only two dresses! There are many, I doubt, that have more than three. A bath towel, if they are fortunate enough to get one, means a raincoat.

One of the boys came to borrow money for his high school tuition as he wanted to go very badly. Mr. McAfee gave him a check. A few days later he returned it saying, "Our principal would not take the money. He said, 'Why should we make you pay full tuition when we have no books to give you and you only sit out under a cocoanut tree on the ground where I lecture to you'?" So, it is all over the Philippines, but the young people especially, have courage as they know the future of the Philippines depends upon the training they receive today.

OLD DELAWARE CHURCH NOTED FOR STAINED GLASS

By J. N. Taylor

Visitors to St. Peter's Church at Smyrna are attracted by the simple dignity of this old Delaware church and especially by the beauty of its stained glass windows. St. Peter's, the "home church" of the late Rev. Dr. Alexander G. Cummins, former rector of Christ Church, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and founder and editor for many years of "The Chronicle," contains a number of memorials—including several stained glass windows—to members of his family. A bronze tablet in the vestibule records the presentation of chimes in memory of his father:

TO THE PRAISE OF GOD AND
THE REVEREND
ALEXANDER GRISWOLD CUMMINS,
A. M., L. L. B., 1830-1904.
THE CHIMES OF THIS CHURCH ARE DEDICATED BY HIS FRIEND
MORRIS LEWIS CLOTHIER,
ASCENSION-TIDE, 1907

St. Peter's is one of the oldest churches in Delaware, the original church, made of wood, being built a short time prior to 1746 at Duck Creek, about a mile north of Smyrna. This frame building was replaced by a brick church, also at Duck Creek, to take care of the needs of the expanding congregation. The church in Smyrna dates from 1827.

The present edifice and adjoining Parish House have recently been redecorated. Although without a rector during the past year, the Wardens and Vestry took the intitiative and have effected a complete renovation both within and without. Significant also of the initiative and enterprise displayed by the Wardens and Vestry is the recent publication by them of a Directory of the Smyrna-Clayton trading area.

A number of prominent clergymen have ministered to St. Peter's spiritual needs ad interim. Among the clergy who have conducted services in the church, administered the Sacraments, and preached from its pulpit are the Rev. Canon Benjamin F. Thompson, rector emeritus of Christ Church, Dover; the Rev. Percy L. Donaghey, B. D., rector emeritus of St. Annes, Middletown, and the Rev. Frederick M. Barton, a former rector of St. Peter's, Smyrna.

The interior of St. Peter's Church is thought by many to be the most beautiful in the Peninsula and some have remarked that it is one of the most beautiful churches in the country. Contributing in great measure to its beauty is the effect of the stained glass, of which there is an abundance. Beauty stemming from glorious windows is augmented by the pleasing symmetry of graceful arches supporting the vaulted roof and ornamented by symbolic carvings on the bosses. It is, however, the effect of the stained glass windows which gives rise to the emotion of beauty—"the genial relation between truth and personality"—which cannot be expressed in words. The rich ruby reds, the blues and yellows and their complementary colors combine with the designs and symbols to convey this subtle effect. Light streaming through or reflected from the various pieces of stained glass causes them to take on the appearance of jewels or precious stones with a consequent glorious effect impossible adequately to describe—to be sensed only as music is felt. The story is dramatized, its meaning interpreted. One must "be still and know."

The Church is cruciform in design, with the High Altar in the East. Above the Altar and Reredos is the largest window in the church, a perfect example of stained-glass art. It consists essentially of a large central window of richly colored glass portraying the Transfiguration with symbolic panels or lancets on either side. The Altar Windom was erected in memory of several members of the Cummins family—the first mentioned being John Cummins, born in 1777.

On the South Aisle of the Nave are three windows in memory respectively of William Cummins, M. D., 1814-1883;

Jacob Raymond, 1788-1852;
Martha A. Raymond Cummins,
1869-1880.

On the North Aisle of the Nave there are also three windows in memory of Eliza B. Raymond, 1792-1885 and

Susan H. Raymond, 1816-1876;

Susan H. Fisler, 1807-1892, and of Juliet Polk Cummins, who entered into rest in 1894. This beautiful window represents the Holy Family and was made in Tours, France.

The window in the South Transept—in which are the Choir and Organ—depicts David with Harp and was installed in memory of William Polk Cummins, 1855-1895.

There are two stained glass windows in the North Transept: one to memory of George Wilson Cummins, 1809-1891, and one in memory of Wilhelmina Leinberger, 1826-1896. This lovely window with its delightful colors is over the Baptismal Font and depicts the Good Shepherd. It was made in Innsbruck, Austria.

The foregoing is a very brief outline of St. Peter's stained glass. The wealth of subjects and richness of color would take a Burnham to do justice to them and to describe them and to set forth their contribution to Divine worship, praise and adoration.

Page 80, The Prayer of Consecration. The second of the four parts of this prayer repeats, and thereby emphasizes the fact of our Saviour's own institution of this Holy Sacrament, and calls attention to the "elements" to be used; using the word memorial to remind us that there is a double purpose in the Communion, and that it may be used both as spiritual food and mental stimulus.

In bringing to mind the scene it is recognized that the use of certain material things have their value, and the church undoubtedly recognized the importance of going through certain motions with the elements so as to make the remembrance of what took place more vivid.

The conclusion of the portion of this prayer with the recitation of the four outstanding features of our Saviour's last deeds on earth affords a fine opportunity for meditation.

The "blessed passion" leads us into the Garden of Gethsemane and we hear His prayer, "If it be possible let this cup pass from Me," and we also have that great reminder of the fact that He bore our flesh and our nature in the words, "the spirit truly is willing, but the flesh is weak." The knowledge of this fact is indeed a blessing.

The "precious death" takes us to Calvary, and that great prayer of Intercession, "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do," which comes down to us across the centuries to give us hope and comfort and courage.

The "mighty Resurrection" brings us to the empty tomb, with its first thought of consternation, but its later revelation of the conquest of death, and the opening to us of the doors of eternal life.

In the "glorious Ascension" we hear the words of the parting benediction. with the promise of a future return. The reliving of these events is the best possible preparation for receiving the elements and makes a beautiful preface to all that follows.

R. CARY MONTAGUE.

For we must share if we would keep
That blessing from above;
Ceasing to give we cease to have,
Such is the law of Love.

—Bishop Trench.

DEATH OF BISHOP HARRY ROBERTS CARSON

New York, N. Y.—The Rt. Rev. Harry Roberts Carson, retired Bishop of Haiti, died on July 13 in Port au Prince, Haiti, where he had been living since his retirement.

Born in Norristown, Penn., December 8, 1869, the late bishop attended the University of the South and was ordained deacon in 1895, priest in 1896. After three years of general missionary work in Louisiana he served as chaplain in the Spanish-American war, then as rector of St. Mary's Church, Franklin, La., 1899-04, Grace Church, Monroe, La., 1904-10, archdeacon of Northern Louisiana, 1910-12. He was archdeacon of Panama from 1919 until elected Bishop of Haiti in 1923, in which office he served for twenty years, retiring in 1943. During part of the time he was also bishop in charge of the Dominican Republic and the Panama Canal Zone. He was decorated by the President of Haiti "for eminent services rendered the Haitian people." In 1900 he married Zoe Theotiste Garig, of Baton Rouge. Their son, a naval officer, survives him, as does a brother, Charles C. Carson, of Alden, Penn.

New York, N. Y.—The Rev. Paul Ichiro Ueda, rector of Mejiro Church in Tokyo and chairman of the Japanese Church's department of evangelism, was elected bishop for the diocese of Hokkaido on June 17 at a synod of that diocese. Subject to the consents of the bishops and dioceses, his consecration is planned either for the Feast of the Transfiguration, August 6, or St. Bartholomew's Day, August 24, Bishop Maekawa, of South Tokyo, acting for Presiding Bishop Yashiro, who is at the Lambeth Conference. Mr. Ueda attended the Virginia Theological Seminary.

The diocese of Hokkaido, which includes all the northern island of Japan, was organized in 1896, with missionaries from the English Church Missionary Society. The area of 45,000 square miles has a population of some three million, including several thousand Ainus, the aborigines of Japan, among whom the Japanese Church's missionary society hopes to do some work when recovery from present postwar destitution is farther along.

The Hokkaido bishopric has been vacant since Bishop Maekawa was transferred to South Tokyo in 1947. It is not yet up to pre-war strength, but the figures for 1946 and 1947 show progress. Eleven clergy, caring for fifteen churches, have 1,546 Church members, including 327 communicants. The 1941 report showed 1,989 members.

ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY OPENS "CHURCH OF THE AIR"

Introductory Series to World Council of Churches

The Most Rev. Geoffrey Fisher, His Grace, the Archbishop of Canterbury, speaks from London on the first of a four-program introductory series to the forthcoming World Council of Churches, on CBS' "Church of the Air" Sunday, July 25 (CBS, 10:30-11:00 AM, EST). From New York Dr. Henry Leiper, associate general secretary of the World Council, also discusses the purpose and significance of the Council meeting.

Called in Amsterdam, Holland, for a two-week session beginning August 22 to unite religious bodies of the world in closer cooperation, the World Council of Churches represents one hundred and forty-eight Protestant and Orthodox bodies from forty-two countries. Over-all theme of the conference is "Man's Disorder and God's Design".

Following the July 25 broadcast, the three subsequent "Church of the Air" programs dealing with the Amsterdam conclave will present Dr. Leiper and Dr. Douglas Horton, chairman of the American Committee for the World Council of Churches, Sunday, August 1; the Rev. Earl H. Ballou, acting secretary of the American Board of Foreign Missions, Sunday, August 8, from Boston, and a prominent theologian, to be announced, Sunday, August 15 (CBS, 10:30-11:00 AM, EDST).

ROBERT H. REID, JR., APPOINTED FOR ALASKA MISSION

New York, N. Y.—Because of contributions received since the disastrous effect of necessary cuts in the current National Council budget were announced, the Council has now been enabled to appoint one of the clergy needed to fill vacancies in Alaska. Robert Huie Reid, Jr., who graduated in June, 1948, from the Virginia Theological Seminary, has been appointed for St. Mark's Mission, Nenana. His ordination is to take place in Texas before he leaves for Alaska. He comes from Christ Church, Houston, Texas, is a graduate of the University of Texas, and is married. He was four years in the United States Marine Corps and two years employed in Houston before entering the seminary. Since June he has been lay reader in charge of All Saints' Church, Cameron, Texas.

CAMP AND COMMUNITY CENTER, KIYOSATO, JAPAN

New York, N. Y.—Further construction is under way for the Brotherhood of St. Andrew conference, camp and community center and rural mission at Kiyosato, Japan. Bishop Maekawa, of South Tokyo, broke ground on June 13, 1948, for a clinic.

This is to be a center of health education and public health measures to benefit farm people and school children, and to give emergency care to serious cases. Doctors, nurses and technicians from St. Luke's Medical Center, Tokyo, will staff the clinic for year-round service, in cooperation with the prefectural (provincial) health authorities.

The ground-breaking was followed by the first Eucharist in St. Andrew's Chapel, which is already built.

Besides the Bishop and other clergy, officials who took part in the ceremonies included Prince Takamatsu, the Governor of the prefecture, the Director of St. Luke's Medical Center, the President of St. Paul's University, Tokyo, and the American Commanding Officer of the military government region. The Prince, the Governor and the CO were asked to plant trees.

Within a radius of twenty miles there are thirty-nine villages which are to make up the immediate field of influence of this rural Church center.

The camp is a memorial to the late James L. Houghteling, who founded the Brotherhood of St. Andrew at St. James' Church, Chicago, in 1883.

FILM BRINGS CHURCH TO THE COMMUNITY

Jonesville, Mich.—Grace Church is using a new and novel means of telling the unchurched of the small community that the Episcopal Church is an active force.

A film short has been made showing pictures of the Church building and the lay-reader, Mr. J. E. Warner, and containing an invitation to all of the services. This film is being shown each Saturday evening in the local movie theater and has already aroused much comment.

The film was made for a small sum and will be shown in Jonesville by the local theater manager (who is not associated with any church) for a year without cost.

A CORRECTION

The Girls' Friendly Society has requested us to make the following correction regarding a news item sent us from their office concerning the departure of Mrs. Violet Phinney for China, which was published in the Southern Churchman of June 26th:

". . . The person who sent you the story misunderstood the exact nature of the appointment. What really happened was that the project was suggested by Dr. Pettus, who made a survey of China for Mission needs. It was approved by the Rev. Mr. Swift, who was at that time, Director of the Overseas Department. It was approved as a special Mission project. As Mrs. Phinney is sent by GFS and all expenses paid by this organization, she cannot be called an appointee of the Overseas Department of the National Council."

MRS. STEPHEN MAHON ELECTED PRESIDENT OF THE G. F. S.

Estes Park, Col.—Mrs. Stephen K. Mahon, Toledo, Ohio, was elected president of the Girls' Friendly Society, U. S. A., by delegates from forty-five dioceses at the week long National Council, held recently at Estes Park. Mrs. Mahon, member of the National Woman's Auxiliary Board, has been active in church and community programs in Toledo and the Diocese of Ohio, and has served on the National G. F. S. Board in numerous capacities.

Greetings were cabled to the retiring president, Mrs. Malcolm Peabody, who is attending the Lambeth Conference in London with her husband, Bishop of Central New York.

Formal presentation of The Friendly Trailer and its equipment to the Home Missions Department of the National Council of the Church for use in rural work was a feature of the G. F. S. National Council program. The Rev. Clifford Samuelson came from the Town-Country Institute in Parkeville, Missouri, where the Trailer is now stationed, to accept this gift of the Girls' Friendly Society to the Church.

Seminary has been added to the staff as Tutor and Graduate Fellow. He was the youngest man to graduate from Seabury-Western in many years. He has his bachelor's degree from Southern Methodist University.

To the duties of Librarian and Tutor there has been added to the Rev. Robert Leonard Miller, work as an Instructor in the Department of Homiletics. Mr. Miller, also an alumnus of the Seminary, is canonically attached to the Diocese of Western New York.

The Rev. Holt Graham, for the past few years Instructor in the New Testament Department, was elected as Assistant Professor at the recent annual meeting of the Board of Trustees. A graduate of the University of Washington in Seattle, he has his master's degree from Columbia University and he received the degree of B. D. and S. T. M. from Union Theological Seminary. Mr. Graham is canonically connected with the Diocese of Olympia and is well known as the Book Editor of the Anglican Theological Review.

The Rev. Joseph Moore, who was rector of St. Paul's Church, Evansville, Indiana (and still canonically a member of the Diocese of Indianapolis), before his long service as Chaplain in the South Pacific area during the recent war, has been teaching part-time at the Seminary while studying for his Ph. D. He was recently appointed Director of Training, Lecturer in Practical Theology, and the William G. Hibbard, Jr., Lecturer in Christian Social Work (with the rank of Assistant Professor). Mr. Moore has been in great part responsible for the unique "in-training" program in practical theology and the summer field work requirements and opportunities for students at Seabury-Western. Moreover he has made an original contribution to the Church by the establishment of the Research and Survey Department of the Seminary. Still in its infancy, it has undertaken on behalf of various church agencies a number of technical surveys and research projects. Seabury-Western is, as far as we know, the only seminary of the Episcopal Church which has available service of this sort.

The rural emphasis of the Seminary curriculum has been strengthened by the recent appointment of the Rev. Dargan Butt as Instructor in the Department of Practical Theology and Lecturer in Town and Country Church Work. Mr. Butt was one time Warden of DuBose School in Tennessee, has his B. D. from Sewanee, and recently received the degree of S. T. M. from Seabury-Western. Mr. Butt is a native of Alabama, has had a long rural ministry in diverse areas of the country. He continues also his work as Field Secretary for the Rural Work Division of the National Council.

GROWING PARISH ACQUIRES ADDITIONAL PROPERTY

Hannibal, Mo.—Nearly a century ago Trinity Church was erected in the middle of a block and in the course of time was surrounded by apartment houses. Recent growth of the parish made it imperative that adjoining property be purchased to provide for future needs, as well as adequate facilities for present requirements. Property, consisting of two apartment houses, and frontage on Bird Street, has been bought, giving the parish the most desirable and convenient location for church work in the city. During the rectorship of the Rev. L. W. Heaton, the church has been completely renovated and redecorated, a new heating plant installed, and numerous memorials added including the Hill clerestory windows designed by Emil Fret and areredos now being fabricated by the Ossit Studios. The parish has not only fully subscribed its budget and increased its percentage of giving to extra parochial projects, but has been able to substantially increase its endowment and trust funds. Membership and attendance at services has shown consistent and steady growth.

THE NEED FOR CHAPLAINS IN THE NATIONAL GUARD

Sir: The recent letter of the Rev. Percy G. Hall, S. T. D., who is the Chairman of the Army and Navy Division of the National Council, on the matter of National Guard chaplains, is greatly appreciated by those of us who are concerned with the spiritual needs of several hundred thousand men now in the National Guard of the United States. There seems to be a great reluctance on the part of non-Roman clergy, to accept chaplaincies in the National Guard. The State of New York may be used as an example. The two National Guard Divisions in this state are the 27th and 47th, together with certain other attached units. There are approximately thirty-three chaplain vacancies. Of this number, twelve would be normally held by Roman Catholics, and the rest by non-Romans. At the present time there are only three federally recognized non-Roman chaplains in the National Guard of New York State. We are informed that every Roman Catholic vacancy is filled, plus a few extra. I believe that the Roman Church deserves a lot of credit in seeing to it that the spiritual needs of men in these civilian military services are cared for.

During the past year we have attempted to enlist the interest of some of our bishops, and some of the Protestant denominational agencies in meeting this need. They have all written very nice letters, but nothing has come of this attempt.

What an opportunity the National Guard presents to minister to American young men! A large percentage of American Youth have no Church allegiance. They turn to their chaplain no matter what his faith, because they know him and have confidence in him. In case the National Guard is called out for full time active service, the chaplain who has been with the troops right along will naturally command the greatest respect and, of course, receive a military promotion accordingly.

Some clergy when approached, tell us that they are pacifists and cannot conscientiously become chaplains. They misunderstand the purpose of a chappaincy. The chaplain is not a military man. Instead he is the minister of Christ pastoring the sheep who need Him most. Others bring up out-worn and somewhat silly arguments about Episcopal chaplains and their place in the service.

Can we not, for the sake of the souls of several hundred thousand men, forget personal and selfish reasons, and volunteer for this very definite patriotic and Christian service? A letter to the Adjutant General at the State capital, or an approach to any National Guard Armory, will acquaint one with the need and qualifications.

LAMBETH CONFERENCE

Address at the Opening Service Held in Canterbury Cathedral, Delivered From The Historic Chair of St. Augustine By The MOST REV. GEOFFREY FRANCIS FISHER, Archbishop of Canterbury

My Very Dear Brothers in the Lord, Archbishops and Bishops of the Holy Catholic Church:

Every Lambeth Conference except the first has opened with a service of welcome here in Canterbury Cathedral, and from the Chair of St. Augustine successive Archbishops of Canterbury have spoken that welcome: Tait, Benson, Frederick Temple, Davidson (twice) and Lang. It was the ardent hope and expectation of Archbishop Lang when he resigned his office, as it was of every one of us, that William Temple would summon the eighth Lambeth Conference and that he would now be welcoming you from this Chair.

Many of us here will be recalling the great concourse which gathered in this cathedral for his enthonement, thanking and praising God for all that He had given and might still give to His Church through the great mind and spirit of His servant. Little more than two years later, as great a multitude gathered here once more, burdened with the sense of immense personal and public loss. No one can do for us what William Temple would have done—Amoris Christi Interpres et examplar—but as we turn to our own tasks, we are strengthened and uplifted by the memory of his friendship and his inspiration.

How good it is, my brothers, that after this long interval of eighteen years we are again assembled and, in spite of all difficulties, in larger numbers than ever before, 330 bishops of the Anglican Churches. From my heart I welcome you; but the full truth is that we are all welcoming one another and rejoice to be together. This renewal of our fellowship overtakes and obliterates the long years of separation which the war imposed upon us.

From every part of the world you come, each having known in the circumstances of your own country the physical and spiritual strains and sacrifices of these days; some of you having experienced extremities of national suffering and destruction. May I say that we of the older Churches in the West have been deeply moved to humble thanksgiving by the constancy and steadfastness of the younger Churches under every trial, by the shining examples of their Christian charity and devotion extended alike to friend and foe, by the single-minded faithfulness of their members even unto death.

Churches Young and Old

And now, through our gathering, all our Churches young and old are brought together again to be refreshed in their membership of one another in Christ. There will be a striking symbol of our reunion when on Sunday next in St. Paul's Cathedral the preacher will be the Presiding Bishop of the Church in the United States, and the chief ministers with me in the celebration of the Holy Communion will be Bishop Tsen, who presides over the Church in China, and Bishop Yashiro, Presiding Bishop of the Church in Japan.

Most properly, the first act of our Conference is to meet here before God in the Cathedral Church of Christ in Canterbury. I do not forget that our Communion is no longer English or British or Anglo-Saxon. It includes Churches of many other nations, races and tongues, in every continent. But it is still called the Anglican, the English, Communion: and though the word is no longer altogether appropriate for this diverse family of autonomous Churches, yet it bears witness to a truth of the past and to a truth of the present.

Truth Past and Present

A truth of the past—for as a fact of history every one of the Churches here represented traces its ancestry back to the Church of these islands, and so to Canterbury and to St. Augustine. Not that he was the first or the only begetter of English Christianity. There were the great Evangelists of the North from Iona and Lindisfarne. But it was from his first work and action that Canterbury came to hold its special place within the Church of England: and from the Church of England, by its faithful members, by its emigrants, missionaries, martyrs, were born Churches in other lands, until now it is but one Church among the many of our Communion. That process of history makes this great Cathedral of Canterbury with its majesty and memories to be the dear Mother Church of us all and gives us the family name of "Anglican."

But that name stands also for a truth of the present. Though the unity of the Church of Christ is for ever secured in Him Who is its source and center, the visible manifestation of that unity on earth has long since been lost; the Church is divided and by those divisions the "wholeness" of the Catholic witness to the riches of Christ is obscured. But in His patience Christ uses even the discords of His disciples for some good; and it is our belief that each of the great families of separated Churches hold in trust from Him some special apprehension of His will and truth until such time as He may enable them in the consummation of a re-found fellowship to set forth more faithfully the wholeness of His great Design for man.

In what we call the Anglican tradition we have a treasure and a trust which He commits to us for faithful keeping. That tradition first acquired its distinctive form here in this country in and after the days of the Reformation: and though now it is shared and shaped by all the Churches of our Communion, its three distinguishing marks remain the same.

Faith and Order: Doctrine and Worship

We have ever held the grand scheme of faith and order, of doctrine and worship, which from the beginning was the possession of the undivided Church. That which we thus receive, we ever verify and test and interpret by Holy Scripture, through which the Holy Spirit speaks to the Church and to the heart of every man the saving truths concerning God and His revelation in Christ our Lord. And holding thus to the word of God declared in Scripture and tradition, we are free, free to listen for the voice of the Holy Spirit speaking in the immediacy of today through the Christian thought and experience of faithful men and through the expansion of human knowledge; free to apprehend and assimilate new aspects of the eternal verities; free among ourselves to walk in a fellowship with no other bond than that of a mutual loyalty to the three-fold nature of our tradition.

We believe it to be our special responsibility, entrusted to us by Christ, to hold together in a living fellowship of common life and worship these diverse elements "which elsewhere tend to exist in separation," that they may teach and discipline and enrich each other. If we know something of the strains which such a task from its very nature involves, we know, too, the strength and charity and grace of life and thought which it breeds among us.

It is our conviction that in so far as we are faithful to our trust, we are preserving a temper and spirit, a truth and an integrity, which must always belong to the fullness and wholeness of the Church's witness to Christ. To that tradition of Christian experience, which by the circumstances of history has come to bear the name of Anglican, we are united in a common loyalty of gratitude and devotion.

Towards Unity

But, as I have said, by its nature it looks beyond itself to seek that visible unity of the Church of Christ which has been lost and is to be rewon. That subject has engaged the earnest attention of every Lambeth Conference since their beginning, and will once more engage ours. If sometimes it oppresses us that progress is so slow and painful, let us remember with thankfulness how much progress has been made.

A hundred, fifty years ago, how few even looked towards this goal or thought its attainment either desirable or possible. Now, in every Church there is an increasing number of eager men working, thinking and praying for advance, and between them a companionship in the quest. The first Assembly of the World Council of Churches to be held in Amsterdam is evidence of the companionship, now resumed with added emphasis after the disruptions of the war, and is an incentive to the quest.

It is not only the pressure of forces hostile to the Christian faith and witness, not only the practical urgency of common action which has led to this drawing together, though no doubt they are contributing factors. It is due chiefly, as I believe, to a devout reapprehension of the will of Christ for His Church and to a rediscovery of the duty which He lays upon all Christian people to work for unity of fellowship and faith in Him.

The search proceeds from and to Christ, not that we may unite but that the Holy Spirit may unite us in the Unity which is of Christ and in Him. There indeed is progress for which to be thankful. If the route to the summit of our hopes and prayers is still hazardous and obscure, let us remember that the higher ranges of the mountain are always the steepest, the most dangerous and exhausting. But across the dividing crevasses, the separated groups call to one another with friendly counsel and encouragement as they climb the steep ascent.

Our own Communion reaches out on many sides to those who are fellow seekers in the quest. It is a joy to receive and welcome in Christian friendship here and at the first session of the Conference representatives of the Orthodox Churches, the Old Catholic Churches, the Churches of Scandinavia, the Church of Scotland and the Free Churches of England. We may not travel faster than our Lord would have us go; but neither must we go more slowly. As we thank Him for the progress made, we pray that we may have the will, the wisdom and the strength to follow where He leads.

In our Conference we shall look beyond the Church to the world. Indeed, the two cannot be separated. Over both God reigns. We care for the Church that it may more worthily worship God; but part of its worship is to minister to the world, to which God in His love sent His Son to be its Saviour, and now sends His Church to be the messenger of His salvation. The history of this, as of every era of human history, is shaped above all by the formative beliefs by which men govern themselves. Every belief which ignores or denies the origin and the end of man in God, is false and breeds its own disasters; but false beliefs are by no means all equal in their falsity. There are beliefs which poison at their source the wells of truth and justice, and of regard for man's essential worth. There are beliefs which seek to serve the betterment of men, but misconceive the true range and requirements of betterment. There is a belief in having "no belief" which makes man an impotent prey to his surroundings.

All these in this pregnant and painful era are striving to possess the souls of men. And as never before in human history false beliefs, better and worse, can in these days be imposed and enforced upon men so as to shape the very texture of their inner life and thought.

In our few weeks together we cannot survey the whole distracted field of man's actions and beliefs. In some salient points, no doubt, we shall seek to make Christian judgments by which our people may be helped to "test the spirits" of this age, "whether they are of God," to resist evil and error, and to defend those principles of human life and social order which God has laid down. But our chief desire will be to show once more that the Christian Gospel is in its liberating power and truth the formative belief which this age needs, since without it man cannot find himself, nor societies a wholesome order nor nations their peace.

"That religion," said Professor Whitehead, "will conquer which can render clear to popular understanding some eternal greatness incarnate in the passage of temporal fact." That very thing is the charter of our Faith—the Word, the Wisdom, the Love of God Incarnate, operative in Christ for every man. It is our mission, the mission of the Church, to make clear to all what it means for history and for social order and for all of us that Jesus the Incarnate Son of God lived and lives to win men to His eternal greatness by His eternal love.

Brothers, in the faith of the Incarnation we have come together. By that faith we are sustained. To serve that faith is all our desire. Let us with thankfulness and hope, offer to God in Jesus Christ our devotion, our fellowship and all our work in the words of the Creed which binds all ages of the Church to Him.

ANOTHER WAY OF HELPING OVERSEAS WORK

New York, N. Y.—Through Church World Service and Bishop J. I. Blair Larned, a letter of thanks has been received in New York, for the gift of a light-weight motorcycle to the Old Catholic priest in Stuttgart.

Because of the settlement of large numbers of Sudeten Germans belonging to the Old Catholic Church in the area of North Wurttemberg the Stuttgart parish has increased by almost 200%. Efforts to establish adequate spiritual care of these people, located in many scattered villages, have been unsatisfactory, partly because there is only one priest, and partly because of bad railway connections and service. The priest has been attempting to care for his people in Stuttgart, Pforzheim, forty miles away, and three daughter parishes. With the motorcycle he can take his services and give pastoral care with greatly increased efficiency. This is another of the many ways in which the gifts of Episcopal Church people to the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief are helping Christian people and Christian work overseas.

What Is the Church?

Second of Three Radio Addresses

By The REV. GEORGE W. MORREL

Rector of Trinity Church, Redlands, California.

If you were to ask the question, "What is the Church?" of ten strangers passing by on a downtown street corner, chances are that you would be amazed at the answers you would get. A fair number would probably tell you that they thought the Church is "a helpful institution which other people need"; a few might say that the Church is "an outmoded institution which nobody needs in modern times"; while some would undoubtedly tell you that the Church is "the most important institution in our society and one which everybody not only needs, but needs desperately." Now which of these quite different answers is the right one? It is this question which I hope to answer for you this evening.

It is a matter of supreme importance to you to get the right answer. No one can dare to ignore the subject. Those who have decided that the Church is unimportant and outmoded, and who stay away from Church must be very sure that their reasons for holding such a view are absolutely conclusive, because if they are wrong, these people are in a serious predicament indeed. Those who believe the Church is a good thing for other people, but that they themselves have no need of it and therefore stay away, must likewise be absolutely certain that their reasons are conclusive, or they will find themselves in the situation of a desperately sick man who has somehow got the idea that physicians can be of help only to other people. So you can see how exceedingly important it is to know what the Church is, and how tragic it would be to make a mistaken judgment about it. Even if you don't go to Church—indeed, especially if you don't go to Church—it is of utmost importance that you know what it is that you are rejecting. What, then, does the Christian Church hold itself to be? What can the Church do that can't be done just as well outside the Church? These are fair questions, and I shall endeavor to give them fair answers.

Our Episcopal Church Catechism uses an interesting phrase in describing the Church; it calls it "all the people of God". Now this idea is based upon the ancient Hebrew conviction, which we find throughout the Old Testament, that Israel is God's people. Well, you may ask, aren't all people God's people? Yes, in a sense they are; but the Catechism means that the people of God are those whose lives consciously have been dedicated to Him. They are the ones who know that they belong to God, and whose lives are changed by that fact. This Biblical idea of the Church as God's own people is basic to any understanding of the Christian Fellowship.

Well, some will say, every primitive nation and tribe has claimed to be the people, the chosen ones. It is true that Israel did claim to be the chosen nation, but only because it was also the choosing nation. There is a great difference here. Israel chose to worship and obey God, and upon this choice the idea of a covenant, or agreement, between God and His people was built. And there is another important difference, too. God's people are conscious of having been chosen, not because of their superiority, but in spite of their own obvious unworthiness. They didn't deserve the blessings that God showered upon them, and they knew it. Consequently, their attitude toward God was one of constant gratitude, and this too marked them off from other peoples of the time. We believe that God used the Hebrew nation to prepare the way both for the coming of the Redeemer and for the reception of people of other nations into His Family. For since the coming of Christ, that most universal of all personalities, God's Family has taken on a universal aspect. Now a person can become one of God's Family whether he is old or young, rich or poor, educated or ignorant, white or black or yellow, quite regardless of the country he lives in or the language he speaks. This remarkable fellowship of the people of God cuts across all those many natural barriers which seem to segregate and compartmentalize human beings. The dividedness of human society is being overcome by this very fact of the universal character of fellowship among the people of God, the Christian Church. The fact that there is such an institution in our society, one to which people of violently different political creeds, of different national and cultural and racial backgrounds, of different economic levels, of different educational backgrounds, can all belong and in which they can all be brothers, is of tremendous importance. Did you ever stop to think how many of our democratic principles owe their origin to this idea, which is the idea in and behind the Christian Church, and which, except for the Christian Fellowship, the human race would probably never have heard about?

And then there is something else which the Church claims to be, and this claim also has its roots deep down in the Bible. The Church is not only God's people, it is also God's Army. You remember how the old Hebrew captain by the name of Joshua led the people into the Promised Land, pushing their enemies before them. The whole nation had become a military force, and they believed from their hearts that their battle was God's battle. Don't you think that God has some battles to fight today? What about the war against man's inhumanity to man, the war against injustice, cruelty, greed, and all the other hosts of sordid sins which stand between us and that Promised Land of human happiness? What about the war against fear, against superstition, against all the subtle forms of idolatry which are keeping literally millions of people from the peace and joy which come from knowing God? You may think that the major problems of our time are social and economic problems, but I tell you the major problems of our times are spiritual. Alcoholism, neuroses, broken homes, the exploitation of man by man—all these and a hundred other ills are but symptoms of the disease. They are but the smoke, not the fire. The real trouble lies deeper, much deeper. The real trouble is ignorance of God and indifference to God. That is the real enemy, the enemy is binding the human race hand and foot, enslaving our culture with the heavy chains of selfishness, cruelty, and that ultimate, terrifying loneliness which is the final destiny of those who forget God. It is against this evil monster that the Army of God, the Christian Church, is called out to fight.

Some of you may be tempted to smile a bit when I call the Christian Church an army. You will think that Church people on the whole don't seem to be a very militant bunch—you may think of them as rather gentle, quiet, devout folk of whom almost nobody would be afraid. But I tell you there is more strength underlying this apparent weakness than you suppose. Hitler found that out. Stalin will find that out. The battlefield of history is littered with the bones of tyrants who thought that they could conquer the Christian Church. No one has ever done it, and no one ever will. The reason? It's simple enough: the Church is the Army of God. Every Christian is a soldier, and every Clergyman is an officer, in that army.

Therefore, just as the citizen, no matter how patriotic he is, cannot defend his country as effectively outside the army as he can if he joins his efforts to those of other patriotic citizens, so no worshipper of God, no friend of the Christian cause, can be of much use to God if he stands aside from the Church. God wants every individual, man, woman, and child, to join His army and get into the fight. The forces of evil are already gathering, like a dark thundercloud over the horizon; those who would enslave humanity are winning recruits by the thousands to their cause; the Church, consequently, needs every individual to rally round her standard. No one is too young or too old, too poor or too ignorant or too far away. Everyone can do something, and most of us could do very much more than we have been doing.

I would not want you to get the impression that the Church is the only institution which is waging war on evil. There are evils in almost every department of life and many are the noble agencies which are doing battle with them. Medical science is waging war on evil; education and research are waging war on evil; public-spirited statesmen and many, many others are waging war on evil. I would not for one moment wish to minimize the importance of all this. But I do say that the evil against which the Church is fighting is the most basic of evils; that evil is ungodliness, man's perverse refusal to obey God and to take his proper place as a child of the loving Father. And, until this ungodliness is transformed into that love for God and for our neighbors which we call Christianity, all these lesser evils will continue to flourish and abound.

To those of you who are outside the Christian Church, I say, then, get in touch with the Church and get to know it. I think you will be surprised to discover how much real good is being done by God's people, in spite of casual impressions to the contrary. And to those of you who do belong to the Church I say this: be proud that you are a soldier in the Army of God. See in your Church an army with banners. Hear in your Church the trumpets of God, sounding forth today even as they did long ago before the walls of the ancient city of Jericho, sounding forth the call to service, sounding forth the promise of victory.

Moral Responsibility in a Technical Society

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

Atomic scientists have been waging an interesting debate on the responsibilities which they have for the uses to which their discoveries are put.

Until the atomic bomb came along practically all scientists assumed that every scientific advance automatically contributed to human welfare. This was never the case; for every increase in human power and ingenuity increases the possibilities of both good and evil.

It was one of the weaknesses of our age that the atomic bomb was required to prove to scientists and to other people that the hope of moral progress through technical skill is a delusion. Long before the bomb was developed it should have been apparent that the airplane, for instance, increases both the possibilities of peaceful communication and of destructive power in wartime.

At any rate, the scientists are now conscious of the dubious uses to which scientific discoveries may be put. They have an uneasy conscience about their contribution to the fearful possibilities of an atomic war.

Some of them think they ought to band themselves together and refuse to work on any project which has primarily a destructive purpose. They argue that if they fail to make such a distinction they are no better than Nazi scientists who allowed themselves to be used for the most dubious purposes on the ground that science is neutral.

In this debate one scientist recently came up with the rather curious argument that scientists could do nothing about controlling the uses to which their discoveries would be put; but that they could help the whole of human society to cultivate a scientific and intelligent attitude toward all human problems. In this case, he felt sure, a society would be created in which such fearful issues as the atomic bomb would be automatically set right.

This scientist proves that we are inclined, in a scientific age, to make two errors rather than one. We falsely assume that technical power is always good, when actually it can be used for evil ends. We also equate intelligence with virtue, which is an even greater error.

The very fact that intelligent physicists should be ensnared in so great an evil as modern atomic destruction, and should find no easy redemption from the guilt which they feel, ought to prove to them that intelligence is no guarantee of virtue.

The mind, even as the modern technical instrument, can also be the servant of good as well as of evil. The difference between good will and malice is not finally a difference between intelligence and ignorance. It is a difference which reaches into the very center of the human heart.

The question whether we will live for ourselves or for others, or whether our nation will seek its own glory or the world's peace is decided, in the ultimate instance, as a religious and moral issue and not as a question of reason. Frequently the simple heart comes closer to the right answer to life's ultimate issues than the enlightened mind.

XXII. "By thought, word, and deed." (From the General Confession, page 75.)

The general confession is usually all too general and leaves us neither depressed because of the burden of our sins nor free because we have poured them out to God. In other words it is nothing more than a liturgical formula we assent to as a necessary part of the service.

The intention of the authors, I feel sure, was far more drastic and specific and personal. As we pray about our manifold sins, and the wickedness of our perverse natures, which are sufficiently grievous to provoke God's wrath and indignation, we are given opportunity to pull them out one by one, in sorrow confessing. We then go on to ask forgiveness and for strength to lead a new life in which no repetition of the fault will occur.

By thought:

How hard to hold our thoughts in check and to be charitable of another, or to refuse to follow each arousal of desire to a sinful act in the mind, or to rationalize our conduct when contrary to His laws, or to acknowledge defeat without giving battle. Pin down each thought and get it straight.

By word:

The unruly tongue, so difficult to control, when words of anger come, when the urge to be smart or "manly" brings dishonor from our lips, when the cruel desire to hurt forms into words and lashes out in the home or among friends. Pin down the thoughtless and uncontrolled word in His presence.

By deed:

Each one should rise like a scarred telephone pole in front of us, whether the nuisance made of ourselves by a childish insistence upon rights, or some dark disobedience which flushes our cheeks with shame in remembrance. Confess it now and partake of His body and blood in the purity of forgiveness.

Christian Promotion: Its Nature and Justification

PART I

By The REV. W. E. CRAIG

"We don't believe in promotion at St. Botolph's," says the rector of a large and influential parish. "It isn't dignified for the Episcopal Church to descend to such sensational methods." Yet that parish is known far and wide for the immaculate beauty of its buildings and grounds—one of the most effective methods of church promotion known.

Surely there is a misunderstanding here, and a wrong attitude toward propagation, and a consequent weakening of our approach to the great masses of the unchurched. It isn't our fault, of course, that "Promotion," "Propaganda," and "Publicity" have been so often used to describe unworthy secular and religious efforts. Yet those words, in their proper sense, describe fundamental tasks we must undertake if the work of propagation is to go on. Leaving aside, if we may, their unpleasant connotations let us place them in the light in which they are to be used here.

"Promotion" is the best omnibus word available to describe the whole effort of the Church to make herself and her faith known in order that they may be propagated. Promotion appeals to the minds, emotions, and wills of men in the Church's behalf. "Propaganda" describes the material to be promoted: that is, the ideas, principles, and doctrines of Christianity. Propaganda originally was synonymous with "propagation," but has changed its meaning with the passage of time.

Where do "Public Relations," "Publicity," and "Advertising" find their place? They may be thought of as the methods available for promotion.

"Public Relations" is one of the facts of life, "those aspects of our personal and corporate behavior which have social implications." That is to say, everything that we and the Church are and say and do is somehow related to the public. Relations with others—public relations—are inescapable, except on a desert island. Great industries employ men whose sole occupation is to study what others are saying about that industry. Other men then strive to correct those things in the industry which the public dislikes. Still others spend their time advertising the things about the industry which the public approves. The Church does not hold a privileged position when it comes to relations with the public; everything about us is interesting to the public, which is constantly judging us by these things. Approval or disapproval follows, but the interest is there in either case. That approval or disapproval is what we must be concerned with, if propagation is to go on. Therefore we must constantly strive to improve our (inevitable) public relations. Our task is to strengthen those of our public relations which help the whole effort of propagation, and to try to abolish those which hinder it. Of course, any effort to cover up—without inner correction—bad public relations is foredoomed to failure; we must believe as Christians that the truth will out. Our Lord's advice as to the proper use of the lighted candle is a direct incentive to the improvement of public relations.

"Publicity and Advertising" are the other two methods of promotion. Again, we must define. "Publicity," in particular, has unfortunate connotations. Yet its plain meaning is the "public knowledge of the individual, corporation, or the product to be publicized"—that which we try to establish every time we commend our Church to others. "Advertising" is really the same thing, from another point of view. In ordinary commercial usage, publicity is thought of as "indirect, hidden, or free"; while advertising is "direct, open, paid for." As methods of church promotion, we can think of them more specifically. Thus publicity attempts to show the general reasons for the confidence the local or national community ought to have in the Church and her propaganda, while advertising attempts to capitalize on that confidence, to bring new persons into the sphere of the Church's influence. It might be said that publicity's outlook is general, while advertising's is particular.

An obvious example of these definitions may be drawn from one use of the radio. In the diocese of Los Angeles, Bishops Stevens had a weekly program called "A Churchman Views the News." The program improved the Church's public relations insofar as the public is impressed with the quality of the program and with the realization that the Church is up-to-date in its methods. It is publicity in that it capitalizes on the well-known popularity of news broadcasts, seeking to glean listeners among those who would never listen to a frankly religious broadcast, and also in that the audience is impressed by the new knowledge to many of them that the Church has something worthwhile to say about all the events of life. Then occasionally the Bishop spoke of coming church events, urging listeners to attend; that is advertising.

So much for vocabulary. It is important for every Christian to have some such scheme constantly in mind, because each phase of promotion is distinct from the others, and we ought to use every weapon in our armory. Each step is necessary. It is a fact that "religion is news," whether we like it or not, and it devolves on every Christian to establish whether or not the news about our religion is to be helpful to the propagation of that religion. Christian itself has always been known as the Gospel, the "good news." We must not obscure this good news by bad public relations.

Inevitably, the public relations of the Church and Christianity are effected daily in countless forms. Our task then is two-fold. We must first improve our public relations, so that what is said and written about us without our planning is helpful to our task of propagation. Then we must make our good public relations, our "good news" more widely public through publicity and advertising, to the end that more of what is said and written about us will appear with our planning. These two things make up the Church's work of promotion, which ought to be the work of every Christian.

For promotion is more than merely advertising ourselves, however rightly and soberly we do that. It is an high task, an essential first step on the path of propagation. In this book we are trying to set forth the view that propagation consist of four separate and essential steps, and is never complete untill all the steps are taken. We believe that Propagation is the execution of the Church's' God-given Mission to build up the Kingdom of God on earth and to save individual souls. This mission is accomplished when Evangelism brings persons and nations to Conversion, and when Nurture builds them up in their faith. But evangelism is not the starting place. Evangelism is "personal work," the wrestling with individual souls before and during conversion. But how are the souls to be located and attracted? How are they to be made ready for evangelism? This is the work of promotion.

Perhaps there was a time when evangelism was thought to be all that was necessary. When the vast bulk of a nation gives at least lip service to Christianity a Whitefield may need only to preach in the open air to attract the unchurched convert them, and bring them into the fold. Perhaps, on the other hand, this may be one direct cause of the fact that things are different now, and that evangelism is not now enough.

Before evangelism can even be commenced in this 20th century, promotion has a social and an individual task to do in preparation of the ground.

The social task of promotion is to render the general mental "climate" in which we live as favorable as possible to the hearing of the Gospel. How nearly infinite is the number of souls lost to Christianity and the Church through the prevalent common prejudices which are perpetuated in our "bad press"! Every priest and lay worker is continually being shocked by the revelation of the ignorance about things Christian which is the current coin of our time. We must do what we can to change this total situation. If religion is news, proper promotion can help restate the fact that Christianity is good news.

Promotion's individual task is more obvious and closer at hand. It is to locate those persons in our communities who are at present most amenable to evangelism. Again, many souls are lost to us through our indifference to the work of finding them, even though they be ready to come in and need only an invitation. Jesus' command to go "into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in" is our text here. Promotion can help to find these people; indeed, any effort put forth to find them is promotion, by whatever name it is called.

It should not be necessary to point out that both the individual and social tasks of church promotion ought to work together. Like the two Dromios of The Comedy of Errors:

"We came into the world like brother and brother, and Now let's go hand in hand, not one before another."

The conception that both tasks are necessary to promotion underlies all that we shall say. The attitude of whole nations must be made at least respectful to Christianity, while we seek out interested individuals. All promotion must envisage both.

Narrower points of view may concentrate on one or the other of the methods of promotion—public relations improvement or publicity and advertising. St. Botolph's lovely grounds is an example. But this stultifies propagation. Narrowness may also abandon either the social or the individual tasks of promotion. We can grow so concerned with the secularist prejudices inculcated in public schools, for example, that we neglect individual work with public scholars. Or we can be so passionately interested in souls that we forget that most people are spiritual chameleons, taking on the color of the times in which they live.

It ought not be thought that the method of public relations improvement corresponds exactly with the social task of promotion, and publicity and advertising with the individual task. Each method has both tasks. Public relations, when improved by forethought and Christian will, can help to change the mental climate in which most people think of Chrsitianity and the Church; and can also render amenable people who were not previously disposed to evangelism. In the same way publicity and advertising can show forth our improved public relations in such a way that the mental climate in which we live will be made more favorable to us, and individuals will be predisposed to accept the work of evangelism.

Is all this justification-by-definition sufficient for the rector of St. Botolph's? Perhaps the case for promotion as one essential step in the path of propagation can be better made by a clear view of church promotion's objectives. Here we come to the criterion which definitely and forever forbids our use of anything approaching sensationalism. Promotion must not be its own objective. If our methods of promotion defeat the end for which we are working, it will be because we neglect this truth. The story is told about the pastor who was to preach about "Jesus the Carpenter." He replaced the pulpit by a sawhorse. He invited the local building trades unions to come in their work clothes. He vested the choir and himself in overalls. He hired a singer accompanied by a musical saw. Icewater was distributed during the sermon. Probably his church building was filled on that occasion, but at dreadful cost. No wonder we fear sensationalism! Yet the example is one of bad promotion merely, promotion without objective, promotion for its own sake and consequently self-defeating.

Church promotion has ultimate and immediate, personal and social objectives. All must be understood for any to be successful, in the way the Church and Christianity understand success. The "full church" is an objective of the whole process of propagation, while promotion alone has a more modest aim.

To begin with, church promotion has a social objective. That is to influence the whole of society: ultimately, to a true appreciation of the Church and Christianity; immediately, to a better appreciation of the same. All of the Christian religion is a matter of striving toward self-unatainable goals. So it is with church promotion. If the ultimate social objective were ever achieved, all men everywhere would accept Christ as a personal Saviour, the Holy Spirit as a personal Guide, and the Church as a personal ruler. Of course this is a description of Heaven and the Millenium. Only in Heaven will the Church and the State be the same, and all souls be perfect. No approximation is really possible in this life. Yet we have that final universal acceptance in mind while we work at lesser things. A more easily attainable objective is to keep working toward giving Christianity and the Church a better reception in the world, so that relatively fewer well-disposed persons will turn aside in ignorant disgust. If we are merely content, however, with this immediate aim and lose sight of the ultimate, we will lose much of the joy of Christian striving for mastery.

Secondly, in the matter of personal objectives, the same dualism holds true. Church promotion strives toward, and never attains to, a complete predisposition for evangelism of all persons at present unchurched. Impossible, of course, for there will always be lapses. But the immediate goal of stimulating the already well-disposed is attainable. It is primarily a matter of publicity and advertising's seeking out such people. But it also means removing the bars which have kept such people out, by improving public relations.

We are doomed to futility if we neglect the immediate goal, doomed to visionless gloom if we neglest the ultimate. The social goal makes the personal easier, and the personal leads on to evangelism, the next step of propagation.

Finally, Church history approves the work of promotion, by supplying us with proof-texts and by showing that we walk in a well-worn path. St. Botolph's point of view may be influential in the 20th century Episcopal Church, but other generations will have their say also.

In the beginning, our Lord expressly commended the work of promotion, and practiced it Himself. He said "neither do men light a candle and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house. Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 5:15-16.) And again "What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light; and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the housetops." (Matt. 10:27.) Always Jesus would have us keep watch on the ultimate objective, lest we practice self-promotion: "But when thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right doeth: that thine alms may be in secret" (Matt. 6:3-4). The ministry of our Lord was spent in publicity, seeking out those who were already predisposed to hear Him. Of course, the only medium of publicity which he had was the spoken word, but He used that to best advantage.

Later, Jesus' closest friends developed another medium of publicity, the written word, the Holy Scriptures. That book itself is the most valuable single piece of publicity available to the Church, for it has proved its power in the lives of millions. Parts of the New Testament are written for the improvement of public relations. St. Paul has this in mind when he instructs the Corinthian women to cover their heads in church. The uncovered head in contemporary Corinthian temples was the sign of a loose woman. Therefore, St. Paul says, dress so that no outsider can ever misunderstand the virtue of Christian women. So the two methods of church promotion were practiced in the primitive church: public relations were improved as much as possible, so that outsiders would be attracted to the Church; and publicity and advertising —in the media of the spoken and written word—were used to call these worthy public relations to the attention of all. When the martyrs remained steadfast in the face of the lions, they were making good a heaven-sent opportunity for publicity. Then there was the work of a group of writers known as the Apologists. Strange libels had been told about the Christians' sacrificing children as part of their worship. The Apologists endeavored to publish the truth, and therefore practiced written publicity. Everything possible was done to publish the Good News.

When the barbarians overran the Roman Empire the situation was changed. Now the Church became powerful and worldly, whole nations were baptized in a single day, and the Church was the only center of civilization and order in the western world. Monkish missionaries still tried to explain the differences between Christianity and the pagan religions, and used publicity to do so. Some efforts were made to render the Church more understandable to the people, which is improving public relations. For example, the celebration of Easter was set at a time of year when the pagans were thinking of the rebirth of the sun-god. Later such men as Ramon Lull and St. Francis of Assisi, concerned with the failure of Christianity to subdue Islam, went to the courts of the Moslem princes, confident that explanation of Christianity was all that was needed for the Moslems' conversion; or, in other words, publicity.

But in general, throughout the Dark and Middle Ages, the Church felt too secure in her temporal position to worry much about any kind of promotion. Individual rebels might rise here and there, but was not the whole world Christendom? When we are well-fed and confident of our rectitude, we feel no urge to improve our public relations. So the courts of the Renaissance Popes cried to heaven for reform lest they offend the consciences of the brethren, as now Roman Catholics and Protestants alike know. Publicity also tended to be ignored. For example, the Bible and the Mass had once been powerful weapons for promotion. Now they were relegated to a language unknown to the common people. Whatever the sound reasons behind this neglect, its effect tended to be bad public relations as well as a failure of publicity. The educated could understand the language of Bible and Mass, but the poor and ignorant were thereby discriminated against.

But during this period, modern advertising began. For many centuries before the Reformation, the church door was the place where public notices were posted, a billboard for the town. When Martin Luther wanted to debate about Indulgences, he posted his famous "Theses" on the church door. The invention of mechanical printing began the development of advertising. From the first, the Church used this method of promotion, along with merchants and the entrepreneurs of shipping. The Society for the Propagation (the title on the Seal is actually "Promovendo", "Promotion") of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, which was founded in 1698 and which was largely instrumental in establishing the Church of England in the new world, was launched with a campaign to raise funds. The campaign was extensively advertised, and the funds were planned to be used partially to equip clerical libraries in America. Thus the clergy were to be better equipped to preach the Gospel and argue with Dissenters, a work of publicity. In the colonies, theological debates were widely advertised by handbills. Some of these debates went on almost without end, with continual advertisement. For example, a prophetic soul would print and distribute "The Case for Episcopacy." An opponent would then publish "The Case for Episcopacy Considered." The original debater would then bring forth "Refuting of the Case for Christianity Considered." The process went along like the house that Jack built. Titles grew longer as tempers grew shorter. But it was all publicity and advertising.

The Roman Catholic Church also used advertising. One of the most effective exemplars was St. Francis de Sales, who circulated handbills among the members of the militantly Calvinistic diocese to which he was assigned. They did not advertise debates and services, but were irenic statements of morals and theology, designed to attract the earnest inquirer. Down to the present time advertising has been a widely-practiced and fairly well-understood method of church promotion.

Not until the last century has there been any extensive, conscious desire to improve public relations on the part of Christians. This is understandable if we remember the bitterness and preoccupation caused by our divisions. Christians in general have been turned defensively against other Christians. At such times, we are not likely to improve, or even to admit the need of improvement of, our public relations.

But with the world-wide missionary awakening of the last and present centuries, a different attitude (and a very old one) has emerged. There are two causes for this. When we take the Gospel to pagans of a high civilization, we learn that we must adopt an attitude of toleration for unessential things. We learn to see the good in many of the things the Chinese and the Hindu do and believe. Naturally, we reflect upon ourselves and our attitudes, to discover those which stand in the way of the task. The Chinese or Hindu is discerning, and is not overwhelmed by the pretensions of the white man. So we learn to improve our public relations. With the cultured pagan we must put our best foot forward; with the ignorant savage either foot may do. Secondly, the Church and Christianity now face more severe and prejudiced judgment at home than for the last fifteen centuries. We are, or ought to be, growing nervous about the progress of things. If persecution is again to come, we ought to say: let it be on the true basis of the Christian's witness against the world. Let us improve our public relations to the point that no one can ever charge us truthfully with anything less worthy than what Christ demands of us. That is to say, it is worthy of heaven for a Christian to be persecuted for his faith. It is unworthy, and a dreadful waste, for a Christian to be persecuted because he belongs to "an upper-class Church." The example of the purging of the Orthodox Church in Soviet Russia should always be before our eyes as an admonition to us to improve our public relations—and in time.

THREE VIRGINIA BISHOPS HEARD OVER RADIO

Richmond, Va.—Virginia's three bishops who are attending the Lambeth Conference in London, were heard in radio interviews from there Tuesday, July 22—broadcast by BBC and rebroadcast here by Station WRVA.

The Rt. Rev. F. D. Goodwin, D. D., of Richmond, Bishop of Virginia; the Rt. Rev. William A. Brown, D. D., of Norfolk, Bishop of Southern Virginia, and the Rt. Rev. Henry D. Phillips, D. D., Bishop of Southwestern Virginia, took part in the broadcast, which was arranged at the special request of the WRVA studios.

The Bishops were enthusiastic over the hospitality of the English people.

The Future of Anglicanism

The discussions at Lambeth and Amsterdam will certainly raise far-reaching issues involving the future of the Anglican Communion. The fundamental question concerns the aim and form of the United Church of Christ towards which all the Churches claim to be preparing the way. Can this great Ecumenical Movement be dismissed with a sneer as "Pan-Protestantism" or as "the Church uniting in the last ditch against Communism"? Both of these charges are levelled against it from different quarters. Or is it a fact that the Holy Spirit is at work in His Church and that the most relevant expression of Christian witness in the contemporary world is that of united fellowship?

The pressure for unity comes with greatest force from the Younger Churches, and will gather increased momentum as they grow into maturity and take their places as equal partners with the "sending" Churches of the West in the World Church. It would be a mistake to assume that their interest in unity is primarily due to their numerical weakness or to their nationalist aspirations, although these are both contributory factors. The main driving force behind their concern is the nature of the Gospel itself. They are not as case-hardened to the sin of disunity as are their older partners, and it is one of their main contributions to the evangelization of the West to shake us out of the complacency with which we continue to tolerate our divisions.

The Regional Principle

It is imperative, however, that we should have some idea of the pattern to which we are working. It seems fairly clear from the New Testament that the Pauline pattern was one of regional Churches in fellowship with one another. There was one Church, but there were local Churches with a large degree of self-government united by a common Faith. The centralization of the Church which followed the pattern of the Roman Empire was not true to its original nature, and was, of course, resented by the regional Churches which were made to acknowledge Papal supremacy. With the emergence of National States, the original pattern of the "Church of the Land" was restored, and our own Church, together with the Church of Scotland and the Continental Reformed Churches, emerged from the Reformation as National Churches, in limited communion with one another. Unless, therefore, we believe that the divine plan is a World State and a World Church in the sense of global organization with unlimited power, we must accept the idea of national or territorial Churches co-ordinated together in a World Council of Churches. Such a Council would, as time goes on, be delegated certain powers by all its member Churches, but they would have authority in their own territory, the Council being their servant and not their master. Such an organization would, needless to say, be the reverse of that of Rome, where the power is at the center and the National Churches are subject to it. It would also be much more in accord with the spirit of freedom which it is part of the Church's responsibility to keep alive in the world.

Lambeth and World Council

If this be accepted, the Union movement will proceed along the lines of the creation of territorial Churches such as the Church of South India. There are already signs of similar Churches coming into existence in many other parts of the world, and it is more than likely that unions of this kind will be consummated increasingly in the future. It is with this in mind that the Bishop of Winchester writes in his foreword to the "Handbook of the Lambeth Conference," the words which have caused despair and despondency in some circles of our Church. "If the great venture towards Christian reunion in South India works out, as all should hope and pray, successfully and happily, and if it is followed by other such ventures in other lands, the Lambeth Conferences of the Anglican Communion will inevitably and happily decrease in importance, and some form of General Council of Churches, increasingly reunited in their respective areas, will come more and more to the front. The very fact that the Lambeth Conference this year will be followed by the first meeting of a World Council of Churches (even though as yet the Roman Communion will not be represented at it), is more than a coincidence. It foreshadows what will follow the progressive realization of God's will for His Church."

These are brave words, reminding us of the equally magnanimous gesture of the last of the prophets, "He must increase and I must decrease." The Anglican Communion, of its very nature, has so much to give to the Universal Church, that no consideration of its own future, as a separate organization, must stand in the way. Only one thing must concern us, and that is that in combining into United Churches we do not sacrifice any of the truth as we see it. In the words of the Archbishop of York, "We who are members of the Church of England have no intention of surrendering either our Catholic heritage or the freedom we gained at the Reformation. Not even for the sake of unity can we give up, or compromise on, the Catholic creeds, sacraments, Scriptures, and the threefold Apostolic Ministry; nor are we prepared to surrender an appeal to the Scriptures as the test and standard of what is necessary for eternal salvation, nor the right of a particular or National Church 'to ordain change and abolish ceremonies or rites of the Church ordained only by man's authority.' "

Faith and Order

But when none of these sacrifies is asked of us, and we are free to contribute them all, as in South India, it would be sin to remain outside merely for the sake of preserving our world-wide Anglican Communion. The Anglican Church undoubtedly faces a time of great tension for those whose conception of reunion is with Rome are apprehensive or worse. (The latest pronouncement of some of our brethren shows signs of panic.) And yet it might well be that the ultimate reunion of Christendom for which we all pray, will be hastened by the union of the non-Roman Churches. A united Protestant Church would be in a much better position in relation to Rome than one which is, as at present, broken into fragments. Disunity is one of the factors leading to the growth of the Roman Church in many parts of the world. It is not too much to say that, in the long run, unity will come either by the absorption by Rome of a divided Protestantism or by a united Protestant Church facing Rome as an equal and demanding to bring into the Great Church of the future those precious insights which have been its heritage since the Reformation.

Evangelicals have a heavy responsibility in this question of reunion, for we have for too long allowed the initiative to pass to those Anglicans who emphasize a certain conception of Order at the expense of Faith. We should by no means take it for granted that because a Church is able to prove a historical succession it is necessarily pure in doctrine.—The Record.

BOOK NOTES

By the Faculty of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific. Edited by Randolph Crump Miller.

A BOOK OF WORSHIP FOR FREE CHURCHES. Oxford University Press. $1.50.

A revolutionary forward step in liturgical worship is being taken by the Congregational Christian Churches, in the publication of A Book of Worship for Free Churches.

The book, a distinguished attempt to place within the framework of Congregational Christian tradition a definite form of church worship, is the result of ten years' preparation on the part of the Congregational Christian Churches' Seminar on Worship. It is comparable in some respects to the prayer books of churches with a longer history of liturgical interest, and so marks an important and growing interest in liturgy among Free Churches.

A Book of Worship for Free Churches, it is expected, will find interest and wide acceptance in the Congregational Christian Churches, since it has been long awaited by clergy and lay people, and since it provides a service tool urgently needed.

In A Book of Worship the minister will find orders of worship for nearly every service he may be called upon to lead. There are orders for morning and evening worship, baptism, communion, marriage, burial of the dead, the blessing of civil marriages, ecumenical worship, Advent, Christmas, Lent, Palm Sunday, Good Friday and Easter. Secular holidays are not neglected, and a full treasury of prayers provides for every occasion.

The Seminar on Worship was asked by the General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches to prepare a book congenial to the spirit and practices of the non-liturgical churches. While the Christian Year has been constantly in the minds of the editors, the arrangement of the book is equally useful to the minister who does not follow it.

In response to manifest interest in the enrichment of worship the editors have provided an introductory chapter, Symbolism in Worship, which discusses the proper use of symbols through colors, vestments, stained glass and music.

The orders of service were prepared by the several members of the Seminar, but all came under the critical study of each member. Prepared for small as well as large churches, rural as well as urban, churches with simple worship patterns as well as those with more elaborate ones, the book should be widely useful.

A large selection of prayers makes A Book of Worship for Free Churches valuable for individual use. There is a section of Family Prayers, and interesting and instructive comment on the history of Christian worship. The editors drew heavily upon the great stores of classical prayers and other worship materials. They attempted no violence but felt free to modify traditional wordings, and arrangements when doing so seemed more in the spirit of Free Church practice. They prepared a book which they hope will extend its usefulness beyond the Congregational Christian Churches to other Free Churches.

The Seminar on Worship responsible for the compilation of the book is composed of the Rev. Messrs. Boynton Merrill of Ohio, chairman; Wallace W. Anderson of Maine; Wofford C. Timmons of New York, Executive of the Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life; Richard Ritter of Hawaii, Martin Goslin of New Hampshire, and Fred Hoskins of Iowa.

THE HISTORY OF GRACE CHURCH, CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA: THE FIRST HUNDRED YEARS. By William Way, Rector, 1902-1946. Published by the Congregation. pp. 119.

To one who loves the history of the Church as a whole the story of one hundred years of life of any congregation should be of real interest. There are always in such histories the inevitable things, lists of rectors, vestrymen, and organizations; details of acquirement of property and incidents of building, which are of great interest to those who are connected with that particular congregation. Yet in addition to the ordinary and customary things of parish history there are always the particular experiences which every congregation, like every individual must undergo.

For Grace Church, Charleston, the century from 1846 to 1946 included a yellow fever epidemic in which one of their assistant ministers died rather than forsake his post; the experiences of war and bombardment in which the church building was struck, and because of the flight of people from the beleaguered city the congregation consisted of "ten women and about ninety men in Confederate uniform"; The era of Reconstruction, with all its shame; the great earthquake of 1886, in which the chancel was destroyed; and the experiences and growth of the past fifty years.

The parish has had only five rectors in a century of life; three of whom served a total of eleven years, and two for eighty-nine. The Rev. Dr. Charles Cotesworth Pinckney served as assistant and rector over a period of 48 years, and the Rev. William Way, D. D., as assistant for one year and rector for forty-four. It has been generally believed in the past that a long pastorate of a generation or more by a devoted and beloved pastor is a blessing for which a parish should be devoutly thankful, because of the stability and strength and sense of security that comes from such a pastorate. Grace Church, Charleston, was doubly blessed in having two such pastorates.

CXXXV

Page 81—THE PRAYER OF CONSECRATION—Section 3, The Invocation—This part of the prayer has been found in a place before the Manual Acts in some of the Prayer Books, and both its position and wording in our present book leads us to one of those interesting historical digressions that introduces a prominent character in our Church history.

In this case it is the Right Reverend Samuel Seabury, the first American bishop to receive Apostolic consecration. He was a man of very firm convictions, both politically and ecclesiastically. Throughout the Revolutionary War he was a staunch Loyalist and ever adhered to the British side in the War of the Revolution, being a chaplain in a Loyalist American regiment.

After his election as Bishop by the clergy of the new state of Connecticut, after its transformation from a colony he went to England to receive consecration from the British Bishops. The war at that time was too recent a thing to be overlooked even by these Christian brethren, and they refused to consecrate him.

He then journeyed to Scotland where a group of clergy known as the "Non-Jurors" (because in 1680 they had refused to take the oath of allegiance to William of Orange and Queen Mary) received him, and were willing to grant him Apostolic consecration upon his promise to retain the Invocation in the service of the new-born American Church. Having given this promise Bishop Seabury was faithful to it, and in the adoption of the first American Prayer Book he stipulated that this part of the Consecration prayer should be retained with only a slight deviation from the wording as contained in the Scotch service in their book of 1637.

That first House of Bishops consisting of only three members, Provost of New York, White of Pennsylvania, and Seabury of Connecticut represented the three great parties in the Church. Provost was a low churchman, and had been a chaplain in a continental regiment. White was a broad churchman, and had been chaplain for the Continental Congress in Philadelphia. Seabury was a high churchman, who, as we have said affiliated himself with the Loyalists, and denounced the Continental Congress, and liked to maintain the English practice of using the name of his Diocese instead of his own surname. In fact he was so firm in his convictions on these subjects that it was only after considerable persuasion that he was willing to combine his Connecticut Church with the Dioceses of Pennsylvania and New York, and so formed the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States.

BEQUEST

By Barbara C. Ryberg

If I can leave one song to bless the world
  Or cheer the hearts of weary, fainting men;
If I can leave one verse that some may read
  And, taking heart, rise up to try again;
If I can leave one painting when I go
  That shall stop someone's tears or ease his pain,
Though I may leave no jewels or gold behind,
  Then I can know I have not lived in vain.

If I can win some precious soul to Christ
  And know that when I leave, he'll carry on,
And maybe win some other to his Lord
  To carry high the torch when he is gone;
If some shall stop me in the Gloryland
  And say, "I'm here because one day you came
To tell me of the Saviour's matchless love,"
  Then I can know I have not lived in vain.

LIVE ALL YOUR LIFE

The Rev. Dr. Walter Russell Bowie tells of a letter he received from a small boy who was just learning to write. The letter concluded with these words: "I send you my love. I hope you live all your life!"

That sentence impressed Doctor Bowie so much that he wrote a book with this thought as its central theme. He entitled the book: "On Being Alive."

Most of us are not living all our lives. We are not getting out of life all that we should. We go about oblivious to the beauties of nature, having eyes but not seeing. We meet people and fail to discover the treasures buried in their lives. We live on our little corner of the world and never experience the thrill of adventuring into strange places. We listen to music without really hearing it. Often we are less than half awake to what life has to offer.

We should heed the small boy's advice and wake up and live all our lives.—The Silver Lining.

A LETTER FROM LONDON

The Lambeth Conference meets only in closed session, and news of action taken there will not be released until meetings are concluded. To give Washingtonians an idea of what Lambeth and London are like, Mrs. Angus Dun has written the following letter to The Washington Post, which we think will be of interest to our readers:

Chelsea, London, July 10.—This is a cheap and hungry Lambeth. When the Anglican bishops last met they came together in a world of empire and established order.

Our American bishop arrived at Lambeth Palace for a morning meeting in a normal soft felt hat, and was denied admission until more obviously respectable brothers rescued him, vouching for his episcopal status.

Now the absence of a silk hat is accepted as an American idiosyncrasy, like the absence of apron and gaiters. "Toppers" come to all parties on English heads, although no longer to morning meetings. I wonder if they were stored with British Museum treasures through the blitz?

Cooking in Fur Coat

English women's dress obviously was not stored. Our hostess has worn her fur coat to cook in—with a flowered apron tied over it. She still wears it, July 10. The weather suggests the damp cold of February in Washington, so penetrating that it is discipline to sit still long enough to write in an unheated house.

The tall silk hat should not be taken as funny by us. We should see in it the staying power of English decency. Our hosts have received us with every courtesy in houses of grace and beauty, filled with inlaid furniture, fine pictures and delicate china.

But the sheets we sleep between have been borrowed from a friend who still treasures three pair. And the long stretches of English larders, pantries and storerooms are conspicuously bare except for our small food packages.

Egg for Bishop

A day or two ago our host and hostess breakfasted early for no given reason. I knew well enough that the one egg which appeared on the table for the Bishop of Washington was the only egg and the only breakfast which they could offer to their own satisfaction. Fortunately it is established that the Bishop's wife does not eat eggs.

As I have traveled about in buses, I have been questioned by women conductors as I stood by them waiting for

BELLS TO PROCLAIM PRAYERS FOR PARIS ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED NATIONS

Bells and chimes will ring in churches around the world on Sunday, September 19, as a call to prayer for world leaders who gather in Paris for the General Assembly of the United Nations that week.

This Angelus for the General Assembly is sponsored by the Laymen's Movement for a Christian World. The Laymen's Movement has conducted a continuous campaign for such prayers on behalf of world leaders since Dr. Frank C. Laubach was sent to the Paris Peace Conference nearly two years ago, and people in this country were asked to give their prayerful support.

A release from the Laymen's Movement of which Wallace C. Speers, Vice-President of James McCutcheon and Company, is Chairman, states that "The plan is for silent and audible prayers to be offered at the close of morning church services while ringing bells proclaim this call to prayer. The time will generally be from 11:55 to 12:00 noon in each time zone. Just before the Paris meetings of the United Nations begin, this will help form a common outreach of man's soul, around the world, imploring God's help for peace and brotherhood."

State Governors have said that they will issue proclamations of the Angelus at a later date, including: James H. Duff of Pennsylvania; Earle C. Clements of Kentucky; R. Gregg Cherry of North Carolina; Horace Hildreth of Maine; Ralph F. Gates of Indiana; J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina; and Frank Carlson of Kansas.

Governor J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina says, "That our Churches join in world prayer for peace in advance of the United Nations General Assembly at Paris, September 21, 1948, is an excellent idea, in that it will help to unite the hearts of all mankind in a common prayer for the most cherished hope of us all."

Endorsement of this Angelus for World Peace has come from such church and lay leaders as Douglas Horton, of the General Council of The Congregational Christian Churches of the U. S. A.; Ralph W. Sockman, Christ Methodist Church, New York City; Roy A. Burkhart, First Community Church, Columbus, Ohio; Samuel M. Shoemaker, Calvary Episcopal Church, New York City; and Harold R. Martin, Second Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ill.; from Mrs. Ruth Mougey Worrell, Executive Secretary of the United Council of Church Women, New York City; W. T. Clemens, General Secretary of the New York State Council of Churches, Albany; W. Glenn Roberts, General Secretary of The Connecticut Council of Churches, Hartford, Conn.; and from W. E. Montgomery, Director of The Brotherhood of the Evangelical United Brethren Church, Dayton, Ohio; Walter A. Graham, Executive Director of the National Laymen's Fellowship of The Congregational Christian Churches, Pembroke, Ky.; Lawson H. Cooke, Executive Secretary of the Baptist Brotherhood of the South, Memphis, Tenn.; S. J. Patterson, Jr.; Director of Men's Work of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, Richmond, Virginia; and A. William Loos, Education Secretary of the Church Peace Union, New York City.

Weyman C. Huckabee, Secretary of the Laymen's Movement, and Walter A. Graham, a Director of the Laymen's Movement, are now in Europe seeing lay and church bodies in the interest of this call to prayer. In a private audience, Pope Pius XII said to these Protestant laymen that he would ask Divine Blessings upon the efforts. Said the Pope, in expressing great concern over the possibility of another war, "I believe it can be prevented and it must be to avoid catastrophe."

Churches in China, India, and Latin America will be cooperating with American and European Churches and the announcement of the Angelus has already been translated into eleven languages, according to the Laymen's Movement.

BISHOP HART TO VISIT CHAPLAINS IN EUROPE

New York, N. Y.—The Rt. Rev. Oliver J. Hart, Bishop of Pennsylvania, has been asked by the General Commission on Chaplains to represent them when he visits chaplains of the Episcopal Church in the European theater. Bishop Hart is chairman of the National Council's Army and Navy Division. After attending the Lambeth Conference in England, he plans to confirm classes in Europe which have been prepared by the chaplains.

Starting from London Aug. 6, the Bishop's itinerary includes visits to Frankfurt, Wiesbaden, Heidelberg, Berlin American zone, Munich, Salzburg or Vienna, and Stuttgart.

The Rev. Percy G. Hall, executive secretary of the Army and Navy division, observes: "As a chaplain himself in both world wars and as post chaplain at Fort Dix, New Jersey, when he was elected bishop, Bishop Hart knows the work and is in sympathy with its problems. Because of his experience, he will be able to advise and help the chaplains in an efficient way."

MEDAL OF MERIT PRESENTED THE REV. JOHN B. WALTHOUR

The highest civilian award given by the Army, the Medal of Merit, was recently presented to the Very Rev. John B. Walthour, Dean of the Cathedral of St. Philip, Atlanta. The presentation climaxed an impressive ceremony which took place immediately after the regular Service at the Cathedral. Lt. General Alvan C. Gillen, Jr., Commanding General of the Third Army, made the presentation, the entire congregation remaining for the ceremony.

Dean Walthour received the medal and a citation for his work as Chief of Chaplains at the United States Military Academy at West Point during and after World War II.

NEW ST. PAUL'S CHURCH, WASHINGTON, DEDICATED

Washington, D. C.—The Rt. Rev. Harrington Littell, D. D., retired Bishop of Honolulu officiated at the dedication service of the new St. Paul's Church, on Sunday, July 18th.

The Rev. Arlington A. McCallum has been rector of St. Paul's since 1924. A native of Canada, he was educated at St. John's College, Winnipeg, and Seabury Divinity School.

Almost four years ago the Government condemned the property on which the old St. Paul's, then nearly eighty years old, was standing. The old structure was torn down to make room for the George Washington University Hospital.

Since then the congregation has been worshipping at St. Thomas' Church.

Ground for the new $180,000 structure was broken in January, 1947. The design of the building is based on English ecclesiastical architecture of the 11th to 14th centuries, according to Philip H. Frohman, the architect.

Sacred vessels from the old St. Paul's, will be used again in the new church. In addition, the altar and reredos from the chapel of the old church and some of the stained glass windows have been transferred to the new chapel.

Floors in the choir, sanctuary, and chapel will be paved with marble from the old church and the old pews will be used.

SOUTH FLORIDA

Church Changes Name

Miami, Fla.—At the request of the vestry committee of St. Francis' Church, Miami Shores, Bishop Wing has acceded to their wishes to change the name of that congregation to the Church of the Resurrection. This rapidly growing mission is located in the newly developed residential section of north Miami. The request for change in name was brought about primarily because of confusion with St. Francis' Hospital, a Roman Catholic institution in Miami.

College Conference

The Rev. D. A. McGregor, Ph. D., will be the feature speaker for the annual College Conference, sponsored by the Dioceses of Florida and South Florida, on the subject, "What is the Episcopal Church." A second series of lectures will be on "Problems of Christian Reunion," the lecturer to be announced.

This conference, limited to college students who have spent at least one term in college, was established several years ago and has had consistent growth in numbers and interest. It alternates yearly between the conference centers of the two sponsoring dioceses. The dates this year are September 8-15, with the week-end given to the annual meeting of the State Canterbury Club. The Rev. George M. Alexander, of Gainesville, is director of this year's conference.

Captain Frederick J. Seddon, C. A., is in charge of St. Agnes' Church, Sebring, Florida, for two months effective July 1. On September 1 he will be in residence at Naples ,Florida where a new mission will be established and he will be diocesan missionary in the Everglades. Captain Seddon has recently returned from Africa where he served the Church for eight years.

Mr. John Jacob Jarrett, Jr., a recent graduate of the Bishop Payne Divinity School, has become lay-reader in charge of St. Andrew's Church, Hollywood, St. Christopher's Church, Fort Lauderdale, and St. Ann's Church, Hallandale, Florida. He will be ordained to the Diaconate in the early fall.

gray with green doors and blinds. The massive columns, with the hitherto unseen carved capitals, give it a majestic appearance. For years covered with ivy, the church had a quaint touch of antiquity, but when a hurricane blew the ivy off two or three years ago, it exposed the shabbiness of the building. The interior is now being redecorated.

It is said that such a change has been brought about in the appearance of the church that after a conference with the painting contractors, Stephen Rabey's Sons, E. I. DuPont de Nemour Co., is plannig to show pictures of the church "before" and "after" and have a write-up of the parish in its magazine.

A Ground-Breaking Service for the new St. Matthew's Church took place Sunday afternoon, July 4. After being dedicated and blessed the ground was broken first by Mrs. Eliza P. Deveaux, 92, the oldest member of the parish, followed by Iverness Dukes, one of the youngest members. They in turn were followed by the Wardens, Vestrymen and officials of the parish organizations. The guest preacher was the Rev. Dr. Henry W. Murphy, pastor of St. Philip's A. M. E. Church, Savannah. The Rev. Gustave H. Caution, rector of St. Matthew's stated that it hoped to start building very soon.

Waynesboro, Ga.—St. Michael's Church, has taken on evidence of new life and interest. The once-gray Church building is now painted white. A new oil heating unit has been installed, the interior has been redecorated and a new electrically operated organ put in.

A beautiful Communion Burse and Veil in memory of one of the founders of St. Michael's, Mrs. Lucy Jordan Blount, has been given by one family.

A generous bequest has started an endowment fund to which everyone, however humble in the world's goods, may add.

Of more importance than the additions to the physical equipment is the increase in the activities of its organizations.

Ministers and laymen of St. Paul's Church, Augusta, have taken the services and other acts of ministry throughout the years at St. Michael's Church.

UNUSUAL CONFIRMATION

Otter Lake, Michigan.—It is not at all uncommon for friends to be baptized at the same time and later confirmed at the same service; but it is seldom that a period of forty-five years elapses between the two ceremonies. The Rev. Charles D. Braidwood, Missionary-in-Charge of St. John's Church, Otter Lake, presented to the Rt. Rev. Richard S. Emrich, S. T. D., Bishop of Michigan, a class of eleven persons including Messrs. Walter Berridge, aged 79, and Bert Hemingway, aged 77. These two pioneers of the community were baptized in 1903 by the Rev. W. S. Sayres, then General Missionary of the Diocese. Mr. Sayres came for the burial of Mrs. Bert Hemingway. Messrs. Hemingway and Berridge, his brother-in-law, together with five other members of the family, were baptized before Mr. Sayres left.

For years, Mr. Hemingway and Mr. Berridge have intended to be confirmed, but something always seemed to prevent their joining the class for instruction. This year they shook hands on a mutual promise to attend the instruction together and be confirmed.

During the instruction period, Mr. Braidwood and the class learned much from the two gentlemen. They well remember when the church was built, and told many stories of its beginnings. They reported, among other things, that St. John's very nearly was organized under another Communion. The pioneers were of many denominations and therefore took a vote as to which Communion to join. Another denomination had strong support, but the Episcopalians won the vote and all the others helped to establish St. John's.

THE KULING SCHOOL

New York, N. Y.—News from Kuling School has been infrequent in the past ten years. The China Inland Mission now reports continued good use made of the plant. Kuling is a summer resort in the mountains of central China, in the province of Kiangsi, where many missionaries and other foreigners had summer homes and where a school for foreign children, especially from missionary families, was opened in 1919 under Presbyterian and Episcopal Church auspices. During the war the buildings were used by some isolated missionaries to care for Chinese refugee children.

The Kuling School board in China has felt that not enough children were available as yet to warrant reopening but the China Inland Mission with a large staff in western China has needed such a school. With the ocnsent of the managers in China and the trustees in the United States, the school property was leased to the CIM in 1947 for three years at a nominal rental. The headmaster writes that "the children are very happy, and another fifty are expected in September." (Present enrollment not stated.)

The heating plant and power plant were destroyed during the war; the former has been rebuilt by an appropriation of $4,000 received from the "American Council on Education," a group administering funds for the State Department. Electricity now comes from the local powerhouse, "paid for, at a good stiff price." The Rt. Rev. Lloyd R. Craighill of Anking is chairman of the board of managers in China; in the United States, Claude M. Lee, M. D., of Alexandria, Va., is chairman of the board of trustees, and Miss May Carroll of New York, secretary.

They always ask "Are you hungry?" I can always reassure them with enthusiasm. We are eating the one egg offered with great courtesy, and received with a twist of the heart which calls for equal courtesy.

Great Parties Set

There will be great parties to receive the Anglican bishops. What lacks in refreshments cannot be noticed when we are received by the Lord Mayor in full regalia, or when the Lord High Chancellor welcomes us to the House of Lords, or when their Majesties receive us in the gardens of Buckingham Palace.

This may be a cheap and hungry Lambeth to those who have known the conference in prosperous days. We shall remember it as a deeply Christian gathering in which the tone is set by those who have learned generosity in the days of loss and want.

DEATHS

Frederick Leprilete Perkins, 14½ years old, only son of the Rev. Louis L. Perkins, Rector of St. John's Church, Auburn, N. Y., and Mrs. Perkins, died June 28th.

Frederick had just finished his first year of High School with high honors, and with eventual intentions toward the Ministry. At a vocational guidance clinic at High School he chose the group considering the Ministry and wrote a prize essay for this group on "The work of a Clergyman".

The funeral service was held at St. John's Church on Thursday, July 1.

Besides his parents, he is survived by two sisters, Constance Perkins, a premedical student at Cornell University, and Dorothy Perkins, a sophomore at Wellesley College.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

POST HASTE . . .

PRESBYTERIAN SACRAMENTS, MINISTRY AND DOCTRINES

Sir: Perhaps I should apologize for writing you at all, as I am a Ruling Elder in the Presbyterian Church, and have been for some sixty years; but among many of my best friends are members of your Church, and I read your magazine almost every week, and admire it greatly. In your number of June 12th, there is a leter on page 2, signed by R. B. Henry, who does not say whether he is a clergyman or layman. The letter itself is admirable in tone, but it quotes some statements from Bishop Brown's "The Church for Americans", r e g a r d i n g the non-Episcopal Churches, he in turn quoting from the late Bishop Thompson, of Mississippi, summarizing their teachings and institutions, which have astounded me. Of course, I can only speak for my own Church, but I am sure that what I say is generally true of all the great American "denominations". I protest against the following many misrepresentations of my Church in regard to its Sacraments, ministry and doctrines:

1. "They profess not to have Apostolic Succession". This is absolutely untrue. We claim the true Apostolic Succession, based on our Lord's commission in Matthew xxviii: 19,20, and carried out imperfectly by the Historic Church, composed of presbyters, bishops, archbishops, etc., all subject to the Holy Spirit's guidance and rule. Milton's famous lines, "new presbyter is but old priest writ large", is etymologically true, whatever may be said of his implied charge against the Puritans of his day. Peter, John and Paul, all claimed to be Elders in the original sense.

Peter, in I Peter v. 1. "Who am also an elder."

John in 2nd Epistle I:1. "The elder."

John in 3rd Epistle "The elder."

Paul in Letter to Titus, including "Presbuteros" and "Episkopos" on equal terms. Titus I:5 and 7.

2. That the non-Episcopal Churches celebrate the Holy Communion merely "in remembrance of Him". The sufficient answer to that, is this quotation from our Shorter Catechism, "The Lord's Supper is a Sacrament wherein by giving and receiving Bread and Wine . . . the worthy receivers are, not after a corporal and carnal manner, but by faith, made partakers of His Body and Blood, with all His benefits; to their spiritual nourishment and growth in grace." (Questions and Answers No. 96.)

3. That our ministers have no "Sacerdotal" power or authority. Sacerdotal we do not want, but as to "power and authority", how about our General Assembly and Dr. Briggs?

4. There seems to be a general feeling that our Church is not "Catholic" in the true sense. Yet the Apostles' Creed and the Ten Commandments are an integral part of our Confession of Faith and Westminster Catechisms. It is the backbone of the Federal Council of Churches and the World Council of Churches in Switzerland. It's record in Japan and Korea has been a power in the direction of Church Unity.

The Episcopal Church of Scotland has built up a mighty Middle Class so powerful that Scotland's influence in Parliament and the Colonies has been, and is, far beyond its numerical strength in comparison with the Middle Class in England.

I know you cannot print all of this, but I want you to know how one Presbyterian elder feels on the points now uppermost in our two great Churches, and negotiating toward closer union in the future.

CHAS. E. MACKEAN.

Baltimore, Md.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

Christian Promotion: Public Relations Improvement

Part Two

By The Rev. W. E. Craig

It is a commonplace that "romance, royalty, and religion" are the journalist's staff of life, the subjects of reader interest that make publishers rich. More formally, we say that the public relations of Christianity are always newsworthy. We are "encompassed about with a cloud of witnesses" in more ways than the apostle knew. Let a man murder his parents, and his story will be told in a few inside-page inches. Let the murderer be also a "former church organist" and reporters note his every action. Whether we like it or not, whether we even admit it or not, "religion is news"; the news may be good or bad, and depends partly on ourselves. When the news published about Christianity is good the effort of Christian Propagation is helped by just that much, but when the news is bad it is hindered in the same measure.

We have agreed to use the title "Public Relations Improvement" in literal and obvious sense. That is, everything Christians and the Christian Church do which affects the public, or comes to the public's notice, is a part of Christianity's and the Church's public relations. These public relations can help or hinder propagation. If we agree that our task as Christians is propagation of the Gospel and the Church, we must see that whatsoever can be done to improve these public relations must be done. This task of public relations improvement has two phases or aspects: an external and an internal.

The external aspect of public relations improvement may be looked at in this way. Let something be done by the Church or by a churchman, something that will make even the prejudiced anticlerical say instantly, "It's about time the Church did something worthwhile like that". Now if that notably good action be brought to the attention of the general pubilc, inevitably some will be brought—if only a little—to revise their thoughts about Christianity, and the work of propagation will be advanced. If the Christian's task is to propagate his faith, he will be guilty of neglect if he fails to do what he can toward making that good thing known. This is a matter of finding the strong points of the Church's activity and service, things that will be of interest and will appeal to the general public—and then making these things known. Such effort is the work of publicity, to be sure, but if skillfully done will result in improved public relations for the Church and Christianity. It should be the work of every priest and layman. As it is directed toward those outside the Christian fellowship, so is it the external aspect of public relations improvement.

The external aspect is important. No matter how much we improve the internal aspects, if the outsider does not know about the improvement, the aid we might have given to propagation is lost. But it is with the internal aspects of public relations improvement that we are here concerned. This indicates the effort to do and be and think and say everything in such manner that the man outside cannot help but be drawn to the institution which we represent. Externally, our effort should be to make public everything about us that commends the Gospel. Internally, our effort should be to make ourselves such that everything which is made public about us will commend the Gospel. Wherever priest or people try to eliminate or correct those things which obviously repel outsiders, they are practicing this kind of public relations improvement. They are also, and not just incidentally, trying to live up to what the Gospel expects of them. It has been a long time since the very atmosphere Christians breathed was supercharged with a tension of almost palpable goodness such that the outsider could not help but be impressed. Obviously, under such circumstances, propagation is vastly expedited. These were public relations improved to the hilt. It has been long, it is true, since Christians impressed their pagan neighbors so obviously, but still many Christian people and parishes do the same thing on a smaller scale. Can anyone imagine better public relations than the old pagan Roman's cry of "Behold how these Christians love one another"? Incidentally, an illustration of the constant overlapping of the four phases of propagation is afforded by the fact that steps taken to develop this group morale which results in improved public relations, are also the property of Conversion and Nurture.

Many people find it hard to realize that all of the social aspects of our individual and corporate behavior enter into public relations—that everything about us which can possibly influence some other person or group is in fact our public relations. It includes the small things, of course, as well as the large. For example, the public may be momentarily shocked or pleased by some great act of Christian statesmanship—and this is public relations, but they are attracted to the Church or repelled from it much more by the countless small impressions which they have received all through their lives. The successful businessman who will never enter the church, though he is on the best of terms with the pastor and every member, has his motives buried back in his childhood; it was spent in poverty in a small town whose tight-fisted banker was the local senior warden. These are the things that count when we take propagation seriously. Of course, many of the things that should be improved in this regard may seem picayunish as individual cases, but their cumulative effects over a long period of time may explain why many people do not become Christians. Some of our bad public relations may seem small and for the trouble involved in correcting them, tolerable. We forget that the tolerated lower standard of today becomes the intolerably low standard of tomorrow. How often must it be said that Christ demands the best, and only the best, of His Church and His friends. There are two basic criticisms of tolerated lower standards. One is that it is a denial of Christ's will. This is the first and great objection. But the other is like it, that it interferes with the work of propagation. Our public relations, which are the sum total of all our attitudes and actions which affect the public, must be improved in order to propagate the Gospel and in order to follow the commandment of Christ.

There are bad public relations in every parish, in ever diocese, in the national Church, and in the universal Church. No list could ever be drawn that would encompass them all. The effort we make here to compile such a list is necessarily limited by the author's observation and understanding. The important thing is for each individual Christian, for each parish and diocese, and for the National Council, to recognize that such things can be bad public relations and then to compile its own list, and to act thereon.

Influence of Books and Magazines

(i) A convenient starting-point is the attitude that other great social bodies have recently learned in one aspect of this matter of public relations. This is the influence of books and magazines. All the great corporations, trades unions, businesses, and political parties are learning to be concerned that widely-read publications should express their corporate points of view, if possible. This is comparatively easy for business corporations, for the whole economic environment in which authors live is already slanted in the direction of the mores of business. It is more difficult for trades unions to do, and even more difficult for the Church. Most of the magazines and books with wide circulation in this country will still accord passing courtesy to the Church as a venerable society of eccentrics, but are frankly pagan in their fundamental attitudes. The Church as a whole ought to take a page from recent public relations efforts of the American Manufacturers' Association and the CIO, while of course adapting their methods to our message. On the individual level, something can be done by each of us to assist in the circulation of pro-Christian literature. Novels like "The Robe" can be commended and passed on to neighbors, as well as more serious but still popular books of apologetics. Perhaps the Church can do something to discourage the reading of anti-Christian literature, though the way of ecclesiastical censorship is a thorny path which frequently results in nothing but added publicity for the questionable material. Yet the weekly circulation of fifty million "crime and confessions" magazines certainly gives cause for such organizations as the Legion of Decency. The radio and the motion pictures, as the two other great media of public influence, ought to be regarded with similar principles.

(ii) A similar field, more fruitful but less attended, is that of public school text-books. Their publishers are much more sensitive to pressure from organized groups than are those of general magazines and books. They are perhaps more important in the molding of minds. While it may be utopian to think of establishing Christianity as the underlying philosophy of school-books, still something can and ought to be done in such obvious matters as the notorous carelessness of history texts in the matter of Henry the Eighth and the founding of the English Church. The layman who is a publisher has here a direct task, but each diocese and local church ought to do what it can to influence its own Board of Education toward a more generous hearing of the Church's claims. Diocesan departments of Christian Education can and ought to be constantly busy in this field as well as in that of the criticism of our own church school texts. Christian parents and other Churchmen can bring objectionable psychology and history texts to school boards' attention. A specific possibility of improving public relations would be an effort to emphasize the founding of America at Jamestown in 1607 rather than Plymouth in 1620. It is mere inertia, following the model of the first New England public school texts, that dwells on Puritan Massachusetts rather than on Anglican Virginia.

Thoughtless Public Criticism

(iii) It is one thing for the pagan outsider to scorn the Church and to repeat canards against her personnel and work. But it is quite something else when within our own ranks there is thoughtless public criticism of the same. Of course, this is not a phase of that salutary and vital self-criticism, amongst ourselves and brought forward in a spirit of good-will, which is the very life-blood of the Church's progress. It is rather, for example, the careless comment on the organist's mistakes, which within the Christian family would do no harm, but when repeated to the non-Christian neighbors leads the neighbor to further entrenchment in his prejudice against the Church. On a corporate scale, we have the sorry type of parochialism which comments publicly and acidly on other parishes' liturgical differences. If we realized ourselves members of the Christian family, such actions would be impossible. After all, have we not often observed how the members of a family speak differently to each other at home than about each other away from home? Christian public relations would be much improved if corporately and individually we took the same family attitude toward each other. It is all a matter of where it is appropriate to wash our dirty linens.

Some Ways of Improving Public Relations

(iv) A fruitful means of improving public relations is for the local church to co-operate in community affairs, at least in fields where there is obvious need of the sort of service the Church can give consistent with her own principles. The example of co-operation of members and parish with local Community Chests is obvious. The only possible motivation for this sort of co-operation, of course, is the Church's mission of service to the community; public relations and publicity cannot be the motive. But the fruit of proper community service is good public relations.

(v) Another aspect of the public relations of the Church in the community is the appearance of our buildings and grounds. There is practically complete correlation between the church which is expanding its spiritual and material horizons and the church which is neat and attractive, and vice-versa. Individually, the attitude of ushers and congregation at services is important. Too often have we been stared at as if some strange, hostile creature when we visited a new church. Back-slapping jollity is the opposite evil. The manner of the serving of parish dinners, and the appearance of the guild room after luncheons and parties are too often neglected, to the deterioration of public relations.

(vi) That avarice has its own reward is nowhere more evident than when the Church uses—for whatever apparently good reasons—questionable methods of raising money. The association in many minds between the Roman Catholic Church and the game called "Bingo" is largely a figment of prejudice and slander, but it has undoubtedly lessened the effect of Roman Catholic efforts to propagate their faith. We have our own problems of this kind, of course. How many parish card parties end with positive hatred between some persons! When individuals come to our card parties to "play for blood"—that is, when gambling and not sociality becomes the end—it is time to improve our public relations by abandoning the card parties, even if a temporary loss of income is involved. The souls outside are more important to the Church's future.

(vii) A similar matter is the type of investments and financial transactions in which the Church becomes involved. Questionable financing can stimulate prejudices which last for generations. For example, Trinity Church, New York, sold its holdings in the slum and sweatshop areas as long as fifty years ago, yet critics can still be heard asserting that Trinity Church is supported by the blood and sweat of the poor and outcast. Another example would be the fact, unquestionable though hard to prove, that inimical outsiders take pleasure in noting when prominent Episcopalians run afoul of the corporation and embezzlement laws. Perhaps this is unavoidable. Perhaps, however, if we were not so corporately fond of pointing with pride in the direction of financial leaders who deign to grace the Church we might not be so involved in their downfall.

The Individual's Part

The foregoing situations are types of the kind of public relations improvement which can be practiced either individually or corporately: by the Christian man or woman, or by the parish and larger ecclesiastical units. Their danger lies in that because they are large-scale tasks, Christian individuals are likely to shirk their own small duties. But these dual-effort situations are not alone in the field. There are some aspects of the Church's public relations which are plainly in the hands of the Church's members themselves. The obvious and outworn example of bad public relations from the individual Christian point of view is that of the Christian employer piously singing hymns every Sunday in church and sweating his workers the rest of the week. This is a caricature, of course, and a type with which we are now seldom afflicted. This character no longer goes to church at all, since his only motive in church attendance was the respectability it seemed to give. The Church is no longer able to cloak with respectability in the eyes of the general public.

(viii) In these times, carelessness in speech is the readiest example of our bad public relations needing improvement. A lack of readiness in speech may come to the same thing. It has been often noted and made capital by critics of the Church that we are generally bemused in timid silence in the face of secular and anti-Christian propaganda. This silence, like so much else, is wrong because it is a denial of the Gospel; it is also bad public relations. An immediate and very trying example in the war was the individual Christian's duty to point out—what his religion shows without question—that the Japanese too are children of God, whatever evil they may do and whatever public policy toward them may be deemed necessary. More abiding strictures of a racial kind are those against Negroes, where Christians who follow the mind of Christ ought to stand up and be counted in the same way. This is an obvious field for the Christian to express conviction, and in just the measure he does so, the Church's public relations are improved. Not everyone will like it, indeed! But some will be shaken in their prejudices when they see a Christian witnessing bravely for the right. Incidentally, this matter of racial strictures against Negroes overlaps into the corporate field. Not only should we individually stand up and be counted when the "Negro problem" is discussed; the Church as a whole ought to pay Negro clergy on the same scale as white clergy.

(ix) Not only do we acquiesce, but sometimes Christians thoughtlessly contribute to the propagation of such anti-Christian philosophies. Let a Christian repeat the vile idea that Hitler may be right at least in the matter of his dealing with the Jews. By those words, he may add one more piece of evidence in the mind of another man who may be coming to think that everyone wishes to persecute Jews.

(x) Similarly, the individual Christian should avoid conversation which speaks lightly of Christianity and religion. That funny story about missionaries, for example, should end with the Christian who hears it; or that other funny story about some other denomination, which just possibly might give a casual outsider the impression that Christians spend their time cutting each other's throats. Humor has its place in religion, but this is not it.

Other Examples of Bad Public Relations

The most dangerous examples of bad public relations, and the most difficult to change are those which spring not from carelessness so much as from a studied effort on the part of Churchmen or outsiders to conform the Church to the secular world.

(xi) One of the most important and disruptive of good public relations is one of the oldest of Christian problems, a New Testament problem: that of deferring to the man with a gold ring, respect of persons. Numerous examples suggest themselves, of things that can be corrected by intelligence and firmness. For example, no fee or contribution should be large enough to buy the Church atmosphere for the weddings and funerals of people of notoriety unless—it seems hardly possible—they are members of the Church. Few things can more firmly set prejudice than the sight of an elaborate gangster funeral emerging from some parish church. Even if the deceased or to-be-marrieds are Churchmen, no extra publicity ought to be allowed in their cases. The same principle, of course, applies to the socially prominent and acceptable. What effect of revulsion must there be for the poor and obscure when "marrying parsons" boast of their wealthy "clients". another example of this sort of deference is the readiness of many clergymen to strain the rules of the Prayer Book in order to administer Holy Matrimony and Holy Baptism in the homes of fashionable people. For such sacraments the poor would be made to come to church; so should the wealthy. Again, it has been frequently said that wealthy Churchmen are elected to vestries and conventions rather because of their wealth than their piety. The pretext, of course, is that the wealthy man may thus be ogled into a small contribution, or may give some free advice in the investment of endowment funds. It would seem obvious that it is much better business and public relations to hire such professional advice—and perhaps the advice would be safer, in some cases! The outstanding example of this un-Christian inversion of values is afforded by the large deliberative bodies of the socially respectable denominations. Their lay delegates are largely chosen on such bases as their wealth, social standing, or business connections rather than on their piety, consecration, or real effectiveness in the service of the Church. Yet the denominational organizations are such that those men are placed in a position to change fundamental questions of the Church's faith and morals! The root of the evil, of course, lies not in constitutional government, but in the attitude of deference to secular respectability which seems to have become the hall-mark of modern American Christianity. Again, the fault is the denial of Christ's will; the effect is bad public relations and the impeding of the Church's growth.

(xii) A similar evil is partisanship in public affairs and politics. This is necessarily and exclusively a corporate evil, because every Christian individual to be a good citizen must have such opinions. But the Church as a corporation ought not. Too often has the jibe been repeated, that "the Episcopal Church is the Republican Party at prayers". Perhaps there is some truth in the statement, but not enough to make up for the prejudicial effect it will have on everyone who disagrees about the Republican Party's virtues. Another piece of obviously bad public relations is the similar apparent identification of the Roman Catholic Church with certain notorious local political machines. A damning example of this appeared recently in a popular picture magazine. The article studied Jersey City and the Hague political system. A page of pictures showed Jersey City squalor and slums. Among them one picture showed a smooth-faced priest, and the caption beneath it said "Hague's priest". Perhaps thousands of Americans were turned away from the Church by that picture and title.

Of course, the list could be made endless, limited only by observation. Wherever we look, anti-Christian forces can find ammunition for their attack in our attitudes and actions. Our task is to eliminate as much of the ammunition as we can, so that our public relations may be improved, so that our faith may be propagated. But again, the end is the important thing, not the means; the command, not the reason. We must take pains in these matters to do our best and to correct the worst, ultimately because Christ demands it. Having done so for this reason, we will find that another of His commands, to "go teach all nations", will be immeasurably simplified. Perhaps the case may be better stated in this way. All of our bad public relations and actions and attitudes are contrary to the faith of the Bible and Prayer Book: this is what makes them bad actions and attitudes. Now public relations improvement is a phase of propagation. They are therefore bad public relations because they impede propagation, for the reason that they deny the very thing to be propagated.

Politics in the Church

By Reinhold Niebuhr

The papers recently carried an account of a Boston clergyman who challenged the men of his congregation to raise mustaches as symbols of loyalty to the presidential candidate of the party to which most of the congregation belonged. Leaving aside the puerile character of such a symbol of loyalty, the parson raises a more fundamental question. Should the church officially, and the minister in his official capacity, ever participate in politics in this fashion?

It must be admitted that this question is a little more complex than appears on the service. Political questions all have moral implications and moral questions have religious implications. There is therefore no hard and fast line which can be drawn between politics and religion. A church which tries too rigorously to keep free of politics usually divests the religious life and the religious message of every specific content.

Nothing is quite so uninteresting as a religious moralism which is always on the side of the angels but never fights any particular evil; which advocates brotherhood, but never in a specific situation; and which admonishes men to be just, but never hazards an opinion on problems of justice in current dispute. We must be willing to "take sides" if we are to make any concrete contribution to any moral issue.

We must not, however, assume that all people of good will or of common religious convictions will arrive at common conclusions in regard to the strategy of achieving a certain end. Politics is compounded of both morals and strategy. No minister has a right to claim religious sanction for a particular political strategy. Even if a congregation should actually have common political convictions (which, thank God, most congregations do not have) it would be wrong to suggest a necessary relationship between the political and the religious convictions of the congregation.

"Republican" or "Democratic" congregations are an offense. At some point the Christian faith must illumine the fragmentary and conditioned character of all political idealism. The proof of a bad religion is its tendency to make a simple and unqualified identification between the cause of Christ and some political ambition.

If the uneasy relationship between religious faith and our political ideals becomes an easy and complacent relationship, the salt loses its savor. Then we have religious congregations which do no more than add a touch of religious sentimentality to what men do and desire in any event.

Republicans identify Christianity with free enterprise and are never challenged to criticize the weaknesses of their individualistic creed from the standpoint of the love commandment. And Democrats are equally tempted to identify the cherished objectives of their party with the ultimate of religious faith.

There is an element of idolatry in all politics; because political idealists always claim a more absolute validity for their cause than it deserves. If faith becomes the uncritical ally of such idolatry it is no longer faith in the true God, whose majesty dwarfs all human majesties and whose holiness convicts all human ideals of their imperfection.

XXIII. "Earnestly repent." (From the General Confession, page 75.)

In dead earnest we spin the life which has been, away from the direction of its walking, away from certain times, places and persons, and set it upon another course. The new direction of our going leads from where we are to where God wants us to go.

In order to find out where we are we line up present life alongside His life, as all may do this morning in this service of remembrance and communion which is centered in the very Person of Christ. If this does not reveal the need and shock us into action through sorrow over our present condition so far removed from our best, calloused indeed are we, and other more drastic measures must come to crack the hard shell of our own conceit and insensitiveness to nobler and higher things.

To earnestly repent of our sins means the willingness to give them up and to substitute other ways of using our time and substance and being. It means giving up old cronies who refuse to repent. It means submitting to disciplines that bar off the temptations of the flesh. It means surrendering to His love and clinging to Him and the way He shows us as we begin to walk in the light.

"Ye who do truly and earnestly repent" are at the beginning of a wonderful journey which leads from the land of broken dreams, bitter disillusionments and clanking chains of slavery, to the bright and free land of oneness with Him and His way of life fulfilled, expanded and every whit complete.

CHAPLAIN JAMES H. O'NEILL NAMED DEPUTY CHIEF OF CHAPLAINS

Washington, D. C.—Chaplain (Brigadier General) James H. O'Neill has been named Deputy Chief of Chaplains, United States Army, and assumed his new duties July 26.

He succeeds Chaplain (Colonel) Patrick J. Ryan, recently designated Sixth Army Chaplain. Chaplain O'Neill has been stationed at Headquarters First Army, where he has served as Army Chaplain since June, 1946.

One of five Army Chaplains ever to attain the rank of Brigadier General, Chaplain O'Neill, a 56-year-old Roman Catholic priest and native of Chicago, Illinois, entered the Army in June, 1926, from Mt. St. Charles College, Helena, Montana, where he had been an instructor, and served two tours of duty at Fort Mills in the Philippines and at other installations throughout the United States. He served as Third Army Chaplain during World War II, accompanying it in its sweep across France and Germany to victory in Europe. He wears the Legion of Merit and the Bronze Star Medal, Army Commendation Ribbon, Medal of War (Brazil), Order of the Crown (Italy), Bronze Medal of Valor with Star (Italy), and the Order of the British Empire.

On two occasions, first in North Africa and later in Italy, Chaplain Ryan accompanied Cardinal Spellman on the latter's visit to those theaters of operations.

The Church and The Family

Third of Three Radio Addresses

By The Rev. George W. Morrel

Rector of Trinity Church, Redlands, California.

If you really want to have a happy life, then you should see to it that your home is a happy one. Most human beings live in family groups: that is the normal social unit. The Christian religion teaches us that God intends for people to live in family groups: children are to live with parents, parents are to live with children. According to the Book of Genesis, the Lord said, "It is not good for man to be alone." Therefore, the Lord certainly intends that the vast majority of the human race should get married, establish homes, and bring up children in the faith and fear of God. God so constituted human beings that most of them do not fully round out the development of their personalities except in marriage and family life. And yet this family group which God intends to be such a source of happiness and peace, is often just the opposite. Many a stomach ulcer and many a nervous breakdown can be traced back to a difficult family relationship: it might be strain between a parent and a child, between husband and wife,—it might be due to favoritism, to neglect, or to that stifling kind of undisciplined, sentimental affection which someone has called "smother love."

The first step toward happy family life is to realize that it's something you've got to work for. It doesn't just happen. Romantic novels and even more romantic movies have misled many a person into thinking that if peace, love, and harmony do not automatically and perrenially blossom of their own accord in the home, then they never will be seen there, so why not call the whole thing off? This tragic delusion has probably led to more broken homes than any other single factor in our modern culture. And the reason is that it has kept people from making a conscious effort toward adjustment by nourishing this dangerous notion that adjustments in the home are either automatic or impossible.

So, then, you see that if we are to have good family relations we must be willing to work for them. But then, as in the case of all other work, there's a right way and a wrong way. Even if your intentions are of the best, you still cannot achieve a happy home life if you go about it in the wrong way. Unless you were born with a larger store of knowledge than most of us were, you will need someone to show you how to do this. You will have to draw upon the accumulated wisdom and experience of other people. And just as you must have the right kind of recipe if you're going to bake a successful chocolate cake, so you must have the right kind of guidance if you're going to build a successful life.

Now, here's where the Church comes in. Because of her two thousand years of practical experience in helping people to live happy and useful lives, the Christian Church has earned a certain right to speak with authority on the matter of family life. Christianity began its work in the ancient Roman Empire, in days when divorce was common and ideals of family life were low. Unwanted children, and especially little girls, were frequently simply abandoned and left to die. No one ever thought of the family as a divine institution and no one ever connected family life, as such, with religion. Into that sordid situation came the Christian Church, and Christianity bluntly and flatly stated that if you wanted to have happy homes and high ideals of family life, then you had to bring religion into the picture. As pagan society and pagan morals declined and decayed, Christian homes became more and more obviously cases of happiness and constructive patterns of living. You may think that that was long ago, and times have changed. Well, in many ways times have changed since the days of ancient Rome, but human nature hasn't changed very much. If you read ancient literature and ancient history you will be surprised how very modern the ancient Greeks and Romans really were. And nowhere do they seem more modern than in the human sphere. So you see, human nature has remained about the same, and human problems have remained much the same. It doesn't sound very flattering to our sense of progress to say that, but a careful study of history will show you that it's true.

Consequently, it stands to reason that if Christianity could create happy families and elevate the moral tone of communities in times past, it can do so now. And indeed, so it can.

The Christian Church, if you are willing to take it seriously and honestly observe its precepts, can show you how to make your family life eminently satisfying to every member of the family. Christianity can transform a home from a hotbed of hatred and jealousy into a haven of comfort, peace, and pleasure. But again, I remind you, you'll have to work at it. It won't just happen, all by itself. And it, in some respects, won't be exactly easy.

A very common cause of unhappiness in family relations is, of course, various (and sometimes subtle) forms of selfishness. We are often very clever at disguising our selfishness and making it appear quite respectable, at least to ourselves. We clothe it with a thin veneer of self-righteousness and call it self-respect, or concern for another person's own good, or a just insistence upon our rights, and so on. People can conjure up a whole army of weasel-words in order to justify what they wanted to do anyway. All this kind of hypocrisy has to be given up. We must give up that deadly poison, that dangerous narcotic, which we know as pride. Pride has broken up millions of homes, but honest humility never broke up one. We must, in other words, give up that dearest idol which we love to worship above all other idols—self-will. We must offer our wills to God, and take our orders from Him. We must, in short, repent and be converted.

The unconverted home is a menace to society. It is the unconverted home, for the most part, which supplies our society with its delinquents, both juvenile and adult. It is the unconverted home which largely assists in keeping our mental hospitals crowded far beyond their capacity. It is the unconverted home which keeps Sunday Schools empty and criminal courts full. All this may not sound exactly pleasant, but it is true, tragically true. And as long as God is never mentioned at home, except in blasphemy, as long as prayer and the Bible and the things of the spirit are ignored and by-pasesd, the situation is going to get worse rather than better. We shall have to build bigger and better madhouses, bigger and better jails, and employ larger and larger police forces. And even then we shall not see real peace and security in our land, and very little happiness.

Perhaps you can see, then, why the Church is so vitally interested in the family and the home. She knows that the home is the community in microcosm, and as our hearts are, so is our nation. You can see why the Church pleads, through every means of evangelism which she has, for converted, Christian homes.

Not only the welfare of the community, but your own happiness is at stake in all this. If you would build a happy family life, a family life which molds well-balanced Christian character, you must bring religion into your home—into your living room and into the conversations which take place there, into your bedroom, into your dining-room, into the children's nursery. It's not enough just to go to Church on Sunday, important and indispensable though that is: you must bring the Church into your house. The Bible must not only be upon your bookshelves, its pages must be well-worn by frequent turning. If the older translations of Holy Scripture seem a bit antique and hard to understand, then get one of the recent translations into modern English and discover how fresh and up-to-date the Holy Scriptures really are. But above all, see that your home has a Bible and see that it is in regular use.

And now, what about the children? They go to their Sunday School, you say; isn't that enough? No, it isn't enough—not nearly enough. Most Sunday Schools can provide at best only an hour or two of instruction each week, and often not even as much as that. How long do you suppose it would have taken you to learn to read and write if you had had only one hour of training per week? The Sunday School was never intended to be a substitute for religious training in the home; it was intended o n l y to supplement and strengthen it. Parents must learn that they simply cannot shove this responsibility off on some one else. It is their own responsibility, given to them by God Himself. And if we are interested in the future happines and usefulness of our children, we shall take this responsibility very seriously indeed.

"But," some will say, "how can I teach religion to my children? I haven't studied theology." No, of course, you haven't, but any parent can teach the elements of religion at home. You can see that your children learn the Lord's Prayer, and the Creed, and the Ten Commandments, and you can see to it that they understand what the unfamiliar words mean. Older children can be taught the Catechism and the main events in the life of Christ.

But there is still another way in which you can teach religion to your children, and that method is the most effective of all. That method is by example. Example is by far the most powerful means of teaching—it is the original and most effective form of visual education. If your children see you on your knees in prayer, both at home and at Church, if they see you studying your Bible, if they observe from your whole manner and attitude (and, believe me, children are much more discerning in all this than you might think) that religion is important in your life, then you can rest assured that you are giving your children a good religious education. To those who have found the peace of heart and the spiritual benediction that come from a Christian family life there is a great and touching beauty in the words of the ancient Hebrew poet, who sang so many years ago:

"Blessed is every one that feareth the Lord; that walketh in His ways.
For thou shalt eat the labor of thine hands: happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee.
Thy wife shall be a fruitful vine by the sides of thine house: thy children like olive plants round about thy table . . .
Yea, thou shalt see thy children's children, and peace upon Israel."
—Psalm 128.

YOUNG PEOPLE ATTEND AMSTERDAM CONFERENCE

New York, N. Y.—The Rev. William Crittenden, executive secretary of the National Council's youth division, has gone to serve in the Youth Section of the World Council Assembly in Amsterdam in August, as chairman and resource person for one of the four study sections which meet during the Assembly. The subject of Mr. Crittenden's section is "The Universal Church." The secretary of his section is Eva Svabo, of Hungary. The group will include about twenty young people from the Philippines, India, Canada, Switzerland, United States, Denmark, the Lebanon, the Netherlands, Great Britain, New Zealand, Greece, South Africa, Germany. The chairmen of the other three study groups are from other countries than the United States.

A hundred young delegates from fifty-nine countries are expected to be present in Amsterdam. "The fact that young people themselves are attending such meetings," Mr. Crittenden said as he was leaving New York, "is of the greatest importance for the future of the religious and moral life of the country and of the world. Their immediate contact with leaders from many countries, and the first-hand information gained as to conditions, problems, hopes, and ideals in many lands will fire them with a determination to make their own lives count."

Following the Assembly, a World Council Youth Department also meets in Amsterdam to formulate future plans. Mr. Crittenden attends this department meeting as an alternate delegate from the United States.

Before the Amsterdam meetings, after landing at Plymouth Mr. Crittenden with several other Americans attends an international meeting of Youth Divisions of national social agencies, held in London.

The Disorder of Society

"We wait for light, but behold darkness; for brightness, but we walk in the darkness . . . and judgment is turned backward, and justice standeth afar off; for truth is fallen in the street and equity cannot enter," (Isaiah 59:9, 14.)

This ancient passage is an accurate picture of the social scene in large areas of the world. Even in the more fortunate countries there is bewilderment, cynicism and paralyzing fear. The roots of the disorder of society must be found if we are to bring order out of chaos. European culture, of which we are the heirs, developed upon the foundations of Christianity and reason. Now we see Europe's civilization disintegrating, and with it our own, because in the last few decades economic, political and social forces have developed independent of these traditional values and without any regard for each other. Note some of these characteristics of our present day:

(E) "Things are in the saddle and ride mankind." Mechanistic judgments have more and more taken the place of moral and spiritual values.

(B) There has been such an extension of the function and power of the State that even in countries where there is no authoritarian, or state-socialist doctrine, the power of the State so increases that basic liberties of men disappear. Society tends to become totalitarian.

(C) There is a titanic struggle between political and economic power in a world where things and property count for so much. It is possible to have virtual slavery, through economic power, while enjoying theoretical political power.

Should the Church be concerned with this disorder of society? There was once considerable debate on that subject. Advocates of the "social gospel" were told that the Church should be concerned only with the inner life and the destiny of the individual soul. In the face of what World War II taught us, that position has had to be largely abandoned. It has become clear that Christ is the Lord of all life, public as well as private. There is not yet agreement as to just how the Church should discharge its obligation to be the "conscience of the State" and the "guardian of society" but there is general acknowledgment that the disorders of society, as well as disordered lives, are the Church's business.

The Church is itself involved in the disorder of society. It reflects, all too often, prevailing social attitudes. There are racial distinctions, and social ones as well, and they are sometimes a greater bar to unity than theological considerations! The Church has surrendered to secular organizations ministries which it formerly exercised. Once in our American scene the Church was the center of the common life of every village and town. Now it is too often pushed off in the corner. Most serious of all, the Church has abandoned what Prof. Ellul of Bordeaux has called its "mission of permanent revolution" only to have it fall into the hands of political parties. If the Church is to be concerned with the establishing of the order of God in the world, this must mean constant change in society to bring it evermore within the conformity of His will. Instead, the Church has contented itself with the "established order of things."

The Church cannot lead the world to repentance and regeneration until its own house is in order. What is needed is a re-Christianizing of Christendom! The forthcoming Assembly at Amsterdam must study and pray to the end that the Church, under God, may be the center around which all the values of life can be integrated. "The Church's call to the world is a call to the recovery of both holiness and wholeness. Having lost its reverence for the Divine Holiness, the world has lost its wholeness." P. G. M.

On the doorstep of the United States lie five stepchildren: Three island groups, a peninsula, an isthmus. From time to time one or another of them becomes big news; all have rated headlines in recent months.

"Time" reports outsider families moving into Alaska at the rate of twenty a day. "The Saturday Evening Post" runs a feature-length profile of William Henry Hastie, first Negro governor of the Virgin Islands. Puerto Rican immigrants take shelter on the fringes of already crowded Harlem. The Republic of Panama declines to renew United States leases of airbases. Washington hums with talk of a forty-ninth state. Alaska? Hawaii? What are the pros and cons?

How does the United States happen to have this quasi-paternal relationship to five countries, the nearest of them a thousand airmiles from the mainland? How is our government discharging its responsibilities to them? To what degree is the church expressing its concern?

"Our geographical frontiers," the Missionary Education Movement calls these outposts, as it highlights them for attention in 1948. "On Our Own Doorstep," the home mission book for the coming year, must have been exciting to write; certainly it makes stimulating reading.

Eighteenth century pirates and planters and slave traders of the Caribbean come to life in its pages; the gold hysteria of the Klondike and the epic building of the Panama Canal. How polyglot Hawaii, "spendthrift with color and romance," comes to be "Uncle Sam's sociological laboratory"; how the harbor at sight of which Ponce de Leon exuberantly shouted "Que Puerto Rico" has become for the United States "a grade A political, social, and economic headache"; the history behind the headlines is all here, swiftly paced, unmarred by fictional liberties or embroidered prose.

Startling sentences leap from the text. "Half the population of Puerto Rico doesn't know what milk tastes like." "Out of this melting pot is emerging a new Hawaiian American Race." ". . . toasts are being drunk all over Alaska: 'Here's to Joe Stalin—Alaska's best friend!'"

Nevertheless the church woman of Boston who cancelled her subscription to one of our weeklies because she found its pages too disturbing could take comfort from selected pasages of "On Our Own Doorstep." She could read with pride of church-sponsored community development projects in Puerto Rico, and of the Palama settlement for working people in Hawaii; of the Union Church in the Canal Zone, which in 1946 out of a total budget of $39,000 gave $4,000 to home missions and $8,000 to foreign missions; of the coordinated missionary efforts on all these fronts made possible through the years by the Home Missions council.

But anyone who prefers religion with no social implications had better close the book before he reads too far or he will be forced to some reluctant realizations. He may be led to see it his duty to find out why Federal authorities are hesitant to enforce the laws of Alaska. He may be stirred to initiate a movement in his own community to find housing and jobs for Puerto Ricans. And if he reads the book to the end he cannot escape the acknowledgement that the native of the Virgin Islands is as much his neighbor as the man in Omaha or Beacon Hill.

CHILDREN AND RELIGION. By Dora P. Chaplin. Scribners. $2.50.

This is a book which many of us have been waiting for. A Religious Book Club selection and summarized in TIME's religious section, it gives a clear and distinct treatment of a new trend in Christian education which keeps all of the insight into modern methods achieved in the past generation and relates it to the Christian Gospel in a way which children will find meaningful. It will make happy those who want Christian education to be theologically based, those who want the best modern pedagogy, and those who want children to be normal Christians at their own age-level. But it does not give an easy answer. This is no book by which parents and teachers can make Christians out of children in ten easy lessons; it is a challenge to adults to present the Christian religion in the light of the capacities of children to appropriate the Christian faith for themselves, and this can never be easy. Mrs. Chaplin, as a successful mother and religious educator, is not writing from an ivory tower, but against the background of practical experience. She is now director of Christian education at the Church of the Redeemer, Chestnut Hill, Massachusetts, a member of the curriculum commission and associate editor of curriculum materials for the Protestant Episcopal Church.

MAIN ISSUES CONFRONTING CHRISTENDOM. By Harold A. Bosley. Harpers. $2.50.

The Dean of the Duke Divinity School has written a penetrating book which is sure to prove both stimulating and helpful. Written so that any layman can understand it, it probes deeply into contemporary problems. It deals primarily with the various forces within our culture which the Church must face, such as skepticism, intellectualism, and totalitarianism. Dean Bosley believes that a new perspective is possible within the churches, that it derives from a sound religious liberalism, and that a new church can work for a new world. This is a responsible and forward-looking book, such as one would expect from the pen of a leading American churchman. R. C. M.

THE COLLEGE SEEKS RELIGION. By Merrimon Cuninggim. Yale University Press. $4.

The professor of religion at Pomona College tells what is being done about religion in the average four-year college program. It is a cerefully documented account, and the author tells of general views and specific plans for the presentation of religion in typical colleges, some private and some state sponsored. He gives a picture of historical developments and of contemporary trends. R. C. M.

CHRISTIAN BELIEFS. By Ralph E. Knudson. Judson Press. $1.75.

The Dean of the Berkeley Baptist Divinity School has written a book which is really for lay people, dealing with the major problems of Christian belief in language they can understand, at a price they can afford, and with study helps for individual or group evaluation. He begins with the Bible, then looks at the God of the Old Testament and the God of the New Testament, and against this background there are chapters on Jesus, the Holy Spirit, Sin and Forgiveness, Salvation, the Church, the Kingdom of God, and Immortality. The position maintained is a middle-of-the-road view of Christian beliefs, interpretated in terms which are reasonable to the 20th century man, full of zeal and vitality without sacrificing the moral and corporate sides of Christian living.

THE MODERN PARENT AND THE TEACHING CHURCH. By Wesner Fallaw. Macmillan. $2.50.

The clue to successful Christian education is not the child but the adult, not a Church school but a "school of the Church." Assuming that Christian education is "practical theology," and that it must apply to the entire life of members of the congregation, Dr. Fallaw sees in the home-church relationship the key to a successful Christian education. There is nothing radical in this, except that no one has done the job as thoroughly as the Winnetka Congregational Church. This book gives specific details of the experiment which can be applied to any non-Roman educational set up. This book is primarily for clergy, educators, and seminarians, but parents concerned for the education of their children might well use this as a starting point in organizing their congregation for Christian education. The book is rich in sound theory and in practical suggestions. R. C. M.

CXXVI

Page 81—The prayer of Consecration—Section 3, The Invocation—There are two outstanding features of this invocation.

1st. That it includes all three of the Persons of the Holy Trinity. It is addresed to the Father and invokes the blessing of the Holy Spirit on the elements, and reminds us that we are acting in receiving them "according to Thy Son our Saviour Jesus Christ's holy institution, in remembrance of His death and passion."

The second important feature of this solemn dedication is found in the word "remembrance." It is only by the vividness of our memory that we are partakers of "the body and blood." This may seem a trivual distinction, but it marks the great transition from the doctrine of transubstantiation of the Roman Church wherein they teach that the communion elements are actually changed into the body and blood of our Lord, to the Protestant teaching that the entire communion service is merely a memorial, and that the bread and wine are simply "the outward and visible sign of the inward and spiritual grace."

The wording of our Church catechism, or, as it is called in the present Prayer Book, "The offices of Instruction," gives us as clear an explanation of this whole subject as it is possible to find anywhere.

Persons can be found in the wide range of the churchmanship of the Episcopal Church who go all the way from extreme Anglo-Catholics to the broad and low church theory of the Lord's Supper.

The former go almost as far as the Roman Catholics in reserving and adoring the elements of the communion, although without any authority for doing so: while the latter attend this service, much as do other Protestants, simply as a solemn memorial to bring back to our mind the great sacrifice that our Saviour made for us in the giving of His body and the shedding of His blood.

R. CARY MONTAGUE.

COLLEGE PLANTS SEEDS FROM "FRIENDSHIP TREE"

Wuchang, China—Episcopal Church-supported Hua Chung University here is the proud possessor of several seeds taken from a "friendship tree" which is the last surviving of twelve saplings belonging to George Washington.

To perpetuate the idea of friendship that existed in colonial days, seeds of this tree, which was presented to General Washington by Colonel "Lighthorse" Harry Lee in 1785, are being sent to freedom-loving nations of the world, as well as to various parts of the United States. Hua Chung (Central China) University hopes to have a grove of these trees on its campus.—Christian Observer.

Happy then that soul, who in the lucid intervals of a wounded conscience can praise God for the same. Music is sweetest near or over rivers, where the echo thereof is best rebounded by water. Praise for pensiveness, thanks for tears, and blessing God over the floods of affliction, makes the most melodious music in the ears of heaven.

WATTS YEAR—1948

More than two hundred years ago a young man returning from church complained to his father about the hymns they had just been singing.

"If you don't like them, perhaps you could write some better ones," suggested his parent.

Perhaps he could, indeed. Isaac Watts accepted his father's challenge, and wrote his first hymn at the age of eighteen. At his death in 1748 he had composed six hundred songs of worship.

In recognition of Isaac Watts' great contribution to modern Church music, the Hymn Society of America has declared 1948 as "Watts Year." Religious, choral, and historical groups are planning hymn festivals and exhibits in his honor.

Watts' work was a vital change from the Church music of his day. For instance, his "Psalms of David" paraphrased the original text, eliminating those passages which conflicted with New Testament dogma. This work precipitated strong comment in religious circles. Many objected to his 'freedom with God's Word." In spite of opposition, Watts' hymns grew in popularity. Churches adopted the new form of Church songs, earning their author his position as the "father of modern hymnody."

The fame of this musical man of God continues to this day. His pre-eminence is undiminished, through such hymns as "Joy to the World," "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross," and "O God, Our Help in Ages Past."

Information for special services commemorating "Watts Year" may be obtained from Dr. Reginald L. McAll, executive secretary of the Hymn Society of America, 2268 Sedgwick Avenue, New York, New York.—Missions Public Relations Bulletin.

RELIGION

Religion applies either to everything or to nothing, and no department of life can be left outside of God.

Religion's purpose and object is not to make a man certain and cocksure about everything, but to make him certain about those things about which he must be certain if he is to live a human life at all.

If I had the full cup of all the world's joys held up to me, and could drain it to the dregs, I should still remain thirsty if I had not God.

Unless the Church of Christ is by love so united with the whole of mankind that the sin of the world is the sin of the Church—then it is not a church at all.—Studdert Kennedy in The Wicket Gate.

EARTHQUAKE DAMAGE IN JAPAN

New York, N. Y.—The Rev. John J. Lloyd, of Kyoto, writes of the severe earthquake in Japan on June 28. He managed to get through to Fukui, the center of the disturbance, near the west coast, two hundred miles west of Tokyo, and found a scene of devastation, a mile-long area of houses shaken to rubble or leaning against each other, roofs resting on the ground, a bridge lifted out of place, old house-furnishings from homes and new wares from shops shaken out in heaps, a five-story concrete structure sagging in the middle, crevices in the concrete pavement, and the street blocked by the twisted rails of a car line. The people were still dazed, staring blankly at what had been their homes or working stolidly, without any of the usual smiles of greeting.

Mr. Lloyd went out to a community on the edge of the city where the diocese of Kyoto has a mission, Trinity Church, with a kindergarten. He was hoping to find one of the leading laymen of the diocese, Mr. Sakamoto, whose home was near the kindergarten. He found him working among ruins, still almost incoherent from shock, and heard his story. Mr. Sakamoto was stepping out of his house when the ground began to shudder. He rushed back to help his wife get their three small children out of the house. While he was doing this the kindergarten building crashed to the ground, and he realized that his oldest son was there, and also the priest in charge of the parish, the Rev. Umetaro Uda. Grown-ups and children were trapped, the children screaming frantically. Mr. Sakamoto "yelled back for them to start praying hard," and for two long nightmare hours he and a few others struggled to move heavy fallen beams and clear holes through the wreckage so that people could emerge. They began coming out one by one; some had to be lifted out. His son, covered with blood, came crawling up through a hole. "Mr. Sakamoto told him sharply to take off his shirt and wipe his face before he terrified his mother."

The last person was Mr. Uda, lifted out, half paralyzed. Then they counted and were amazed to find every person saved alive. The boy's wounds were not serious, and Mr. Uda's paralysis disappeared after a few days. Hundreds of people were killed and much of the city of 80,000 was destroyed.

Trinity Church tower, which remained standing during the war, also survived the earthquake, its cross rising high above the surrounding wreckage. Mr. Uda and his family live on the ground floor of the tower and the second floor serves as parish chapel until the church can be rebuilt on the concrete foundations, which are still usable.

Mr. Sakamoto is a teacher. Singlehanded he takes care of the salaries of the priest in charge and two kindergarten teachers, besides supporting his own family. During the past two years he raised all the money to erect the new kindergarten building, which he has just seen destroyed by the earthquake. Today the amount of money needed to replace it will be twice as much, but Mr. Lloyd says Mr. Sakamoto is determined to do so, and eventually they mean to rebuild the church.

PRESIDING BISHOP'S FUND FOR WORLD RELIEF
July Payments

New York, N. Y.—Among the July allocations of payments to Church World Service through the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief were the third quarterly payment of $10,000 to the American Bible Society's emergency fund, $15,000 for Old Catholic Churches in Europe and $15,000 to Eastern Orthodox Churches in Europe, and, for medical relief at Upi in the southern Philippines, $5,000 which will be used in connection with the dispensary of St. Francis Mission and its outstations. Also, $102,000 was sent undesignated, for relief and reconstruction in Europe and Asia.

CHURCH MEMBERSHIP HIGHEST IN HISTORY

New York—Church membership in the United States has climbed to its highest mark in history—53 per cent of the nation's population, according to the Christian Herald.

Releasing the results of a nation-wide survey, the magazine said that the number of Americans belonging to churches increased to 77,386,186 in 1947, a gain of 3,713,006 over the previous year.

"Just how religious we are in spirit and in practice may be open to argument—and usually is," the magazine said. "But . . . statistically speaking, religion in the United States is enjoying the most robust health it has ever known."

To obtain its annual report on "The State of the Church," prepared for its August issue, the magazine said it polled two hundred and twenty-three Protestant and thirty none-Protestant denominations.

Of the total number of American Church members listed, the report said, sixty per cent (or 46,149,676) are Protestants, thirty-three per cent (or 25,286,178) are Roman Catholics, six per cent (or 4,641,000) are Jewish, and the remaining one per cent belong to various non-Protestant groups.

In the past year the Roman Catholic Church reported an increase of 866,049 members—a gain of about 3.5 per cent. Protestant churches reported adding 1,173,962 more members—an increase of about 2.6 per cent.

Among individual denominations making the largest gains, the report said, were the Church of God (Cleveland, Tenn.) with a membership increase of sixteen per cent; the Latter-Day Saints, with a gain of nine per cent, and the Nazarenes, Southern Baptists and Southern Presbyterians, all with a gain of more than three per cent.

SECRETARY ROYALL PRAISES CORPS OF CHAPLAINS

Washington, D. C.—Secretary of the Army Royall today sent the following greeting to Chaplain (Major-General) Luther D. Miller, Chief of Chaplains, on the occasion of the one hundred and seventy-third anniverary of the founding of the Corps of Chaplains:

"It is with a special sense of pleasure that I extend congratulations to one of the few Corps of the Army that is composed completely of volunteers—the Corps of Chaplains—upon its one hundred and seventy-third anniversary.

"Since the day upon which George Washington first asked for clergymen to serve with the Armed Forces of America, the spiritual needs of the Army have been magnificently cared for by the chaplains.

"They have worn the Army uniform in training camp, in bivouac and in battle, and the lists of chaplains killed, wounded, and taken prisoner over the long years of their service bears witness to the fact that wherever danger confronts hte soldier, the chaplain has been standing beside him.

"The Corps of Chaplains is effectively fulfilling its mission in the Army of today. Chaplains contributed greatly to the success of the UMT Experimental Training Center at Fork Knox; their devotion to duty is seen daily at training centers in America and with our men overseas. And daily they are doing their full share in occupied areas to present the world the spiritual and moral values which are essential to true democracy.

"In all that they have done since the day this great Corps was founded, they have furthered the ideal expressed in Washington's Prayer for the Nation, which he wrote at his headquarters in Newburgh, New York, in 1783: 'Almighty God, make our earnest prayer that Thou wilt keep the United States in Thy Holy protection . . . .'"

THE WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

New York—The forthcoming establishment of the World Council of Churches this summer in Amsterdam, Holland, does not imply creation of a super-church to deprive members of freedom and self-rule, the Rev. Dr. Erling Eidem, Archbishop of Upsala and Primate of Sweden, said in a recent address.

Addressing leading church officials and American delegates to the First Assembly of the World Council of Churches assembled in his honor, the Swedish Bishop said: "The primary objective of the World Council of Churches is to serve as an instrument of fellowship, through which Christians of the world might grow to love and know one another. It does not aim to hide or ignore existing theological differences, or various historical traditions."

As one of the five presidents of the World Council's Provisional Committee, Dr. Eidem will play a leading role in the First Assembly of the World Council of Churches this summer in Amsterdam, Holland. Arriving here this week on the Swedish-American liner Gripsholm, he will take part next month in the one hundredth anniversary of the Augustana Synod in Illinois, and the centennial celebration of the Swedish pioneers.

In discussing the significance of the World Council of Churches, Dr. Eidem emphasized the important contributions made by other movements aimed at Christian unity.

"The World Council of Churches represents only one of several movements striving for the lofty ideals of Christian unity," he said. "We in the World Council must not shut ourselves up in a vacuum, or think we are the only group working for Christian unity."

The church official said the historical importance of the World Council lies in the fact that it "symbolizes the longing of the Christian world for a movement in the tradition of that great apostle of love, St. John." In this respect it serves to round out the past history of the Church which has been based on authority and liturgy, he added.

Although praising American contributions to the ecumenical movement, Dr. Eidem expressed regret over failure of the movement to enlist support of all Christian groups.

"I am sorry to say that the largest church, our brethren of the Roman Catholic Church, are still outside this movement," he said, "and there is doubt if the great Orthodox Church of Russia will accept the invitation to Amsterdam this summer."

He also voiced disappointment that some Evangelical groups had dismissed the World Council as "unimportant."

Dr. Eidem was introduced by the Rev. Dr. Henry Smith Leiper, Associate General Secretary of the American Committee for the World Council of Churches. The Rev. Dr. Douglas Horton, chairman of the American Committee presided.

LAMBETH CONFERENCE--1980

The moral authority of Lambeth Conferences and their value to the Anglican Communion have been very great in the past. The need for inspired guidance in the future will be critical.

Thirty or so years hence, responsibility for spiritual and moral leadership in our Church will rest upon men who are testing their vocation and training for it now in one of the Seminaries listed below. All of these institutions need greater support and financial help to bring that training to the highest pitch of effectiveness.

MEMORIAL DEDICATED TO BISHOP SEABURY

New York, N. Y.—Bishop Walter H. Gray, Coadjutor of Connecticut, now in England attending the Lambeth Conference, supplied the following report of the dedicating of a memorial sanctuary in memory of Bishop Samuel Seabury:

Aberdeen, Scotland—In St. Andrew's Cathedral here on June 28 and 29 a group of American bishops of the Episcopal Church joined with Bishop Hall, of the Scottish Diocese of Aberdeen and Orkney, in dedicating a memorial sanctuary in memory of Bishop Samuel Seabury, of Connecticut. The sanctuary was a gift from American Episcopalians in appreciation of the act of the Scottish Church in consecrating in 1784 the Rev. Dr. Seabury as the first bishop of an American diocese.

The memorial sanctuary consists of a great High Altar, Chancel, and Chapel.

American bishops participating in the ceremony were the Rt. Rev. Drs. Frederick G. Budlong, Bishop of Connecticut; Stephen E. Keeler, Bishop of Minnesota; Charles C. J. Carpenter, Bishop of Alabama; Arthur R. McKinstry, Bishop of Delaware, and Walter H. Gray, Bishop Coadjutor of Connecticut.

Also present were most of the clergy of the Diocese of Aberdeen and Orkney and civic officials, including the Lord Provost of Aberdeen.

At the dedication service on June 28 the preacher was Bishop Budlong, of Connecticut, who said, "The noble act of faith and charity in consecrating America's first bishop in Aberdeen was the means of joining the American episcopate, the Scottish, and the English lines of succession in an enduring union."

At the service of thanksgiving on June 29 the preacher was Bishop Gray, Coadjutor of Connecticut, whose topic was the fellowship of Christian peoples, particularly the strong bonds of friendship between the various branches of the worldwide Episcopal Church, and he called for the building of a world of peace and brotherhood, based upon the principles of Christian friendship.

The celebration was brought to a close with a civic luncheon tendered the visiting American bishops by the Lord Provost and the members of the corporation of the city of Aberdeen. The principal address was made by the Lord Provost, Duncan Fraser, and the reply for the Americans was made by Bishop Keeler, of Minnesota. In addition, a welcome was extended by the moderator of the Church of Scotland.

HUACHUNG COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT

New York, N. Y.—The 1948 commencement exercises closed another peaceful year at Huachung College, Wuchaig, China, writes President Francis Wei. The twenty-two graduates were students who had been in the college two years ago when it was still refugeeing at Hsichow in southwestern China. The class was small as many Hsichow students could not go so far from home. Next year's class will probably number about forty-five, and the year following, twice as many. The total enrollment will probably be about five hundred; the freshman class is to be limited to two hundred.

Dr. Wei called the attention of his board of directors to the fact that he had been head of the institution for

The Federal Council

Labor Day Message

Amsterdam Expectations

By Reinhold Niebuhr

Amsterdam.—I am frankly a little frightened by the extravagant expectations which some of the delegates and many of the friendly observers have for the General Assembly of the World Council of Churches meeting here.

It is, to be sure, an historic occasion —the first truly legislative and authoritative assembly of the non-Roman churches of the world. It may well become a turning point in the history of Protestantism, for it may arrest the tendency toward endless division and move in the opposite direction toward unity and order.

The Assembly cannot, however, accomplish what some devout souls expect of it. It cannot, for instance, speak a kind of word from Mt. Sinai which will compose the troubles of the nations and bring in an era of peace. That is one of the frequently expressed hopes.

If the Assembly is spiritually vital it may well do something to qualify the immense self-assurance, not to say idolatry, which characterizes the political ambitions of all nations. It may prompt some decree of humility to leaven the self-righteousness of victorious nations. It may make the church as a trans-national fellowship more real and thereby check the power of racial and national bigotry.

But it cannot speak a simple word or a grand word which will solve the problems between Russia and the West. It cannot simply say that we ought to get out of Berlin in the interest of peace or that we should stay there in the interest of justice. We will have to continue to resist tyranny at the risk of war, but also minimize the risks of war by seeking for some kind of accord with the Russians. There is nothing in the Christian faith which gives us a sudden freedom over these tragic ambiguities of world politics.

Another extravagant hope, frequently uttered among delegates here, is that the Assembly will achieve a complete unity of the divided churches of Protestantism. This, also, is too much to expect. The processes of history are slower than that. It is a question whether the non-authoritarian churches of the world can ever achieve the kind of integral unity implied in these hopes.

Some price will have to be paid for liberty. The price in the past has been too high. The so-called free churches live in anarchy. Something can be accomplished here at Amsterdam to arrest that anarchy. Much can be done to make the diverse treasures of faith and grace in the possession of the various traditions and communions of Christendom into a common treasure.

Churches must learn of one another in their polity, their liturgy, their theology, their life and their message. They must also repent of their idolatrous devotion to special gifts and special inheritances as if these represented the entire riches of the Christian heritage.

If the World Council should become a place where churches encounter each other in the spirit of charity, rather than competition, and where they emphasize their common heritage rather than their diverse gifts, it will mean a new chapter in the history of Christianity, even if it disappoints some of the more extravagant hopes.

ARCHBISHOP SAYS WORLD NEEDS REVIVAL

London—The Archbishop of York, the Most Rev. Cyril F. Garbett, told 600 Anglican bishops today that the world needs a Christian revival to help civilization weather the crisis of the atomic age.

Crowding Westminster Abbey to hear Dr. Garbett call for the "uncompromising preaching of Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior" were most of the Church leaders, who, for almost a month, have been participating in the Lambeth Conference. Attending the conference are bishops representing the Church of England and the Protestant Episcopal Church, with observers from several other denominations in various lands.

Today's service was the final worship of the conference, and the sermon was a parting word to the bishops before their return to their dioceses in all parts of the world.

Saying that "Christianity now is the religion of a minority and its doctrine and moral teachings are repudiated or neglected," Dr. Garbett pleaded for Christian unity.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

Encyclical Letter Issued by Lambeth Conference

TO THE FAITHFUL IN JESUS CHRIST

We, Archbishops and Bishops of the Holy Catholic Church, 329 in number, assembled from all parts of the earth at Lambeth, in the year of our Lord 1948, under the presidency of the Archbishop of Canterbury, with whom, as with one another, we are in full communion, give you greeting in the name of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Meeting again in Conference after a long interval of eighteen years, and after the grievous separations of war, we declare our thankfulness to Almighty God for the profound and joyful experience, in this meeting, of our unity in the faith of Christ and in the fellowship of the Holy Spirit. Many of you, in distant parts and near to us, have been upholding us in your prayers. We ask you to share our thanksgiving that God has knit us together in heart and mind, and to expect that, by our interchange of friendship and counsel, all the Churches and congregations, which we represent, will receive strength and encouragement.

Mindful of the sacred commission which we bear in the Ministry given by our Lord through His apostles to the Church, we have devoted ourselves for five weeks, with earnest prayer and eucharist, to grave deliberations. In the second portion of this Letter we review the course of our discussions. In this first part we address a message to all our people, and indeed to all who will listen to us, asking that it may be read in every place of worship in the Anglican Communion, to each congregation in its own language, on Sunday, October 10, or, if there be any place which it has not reached by then, on the first possible Sunday thereafter.

I.

The Church is not something made by men. It is the instrument of the living God for the setting-forward of His reign on earth. God in Christ has won the victory. The Church lives in the power of the Resurrection. The gates of Hell cannot prevail against it. This is an hour of testing and peril for the Church, no less than for the world. But it is the hour of God's call to the Church. Thus the keynote of our message is encouragement to the people of God all the world over. For those who have eyes to see, there are signs that the tide of faith is beginning to come in.

We know well how hard it is for many of you to live as Christians in this present age. Some of you have to meet opposition in non-Christian homes; some are a small minority of Christians in non-Christian lands. Many of you are trying to bear your witness in face of contempt and ridicule in the places where you work day by day. All at times are tempted to lose heart and to wonder whether, under such conditions Christian living is possible, or whether, if possible, it is worth while. We are certain that it is possible, and worth everything, and we write this letter to tell you why.

Remember that some of the first believers were slaves owned by non-Christian masters. Many suffered persecution for Christ's sake. It was often hard for those who were in Christ before us. Because they were faithful in their generations, the light still shines in the House of God, and the torch of faith has been carried across the earth. Many of the younger Churches of our Communion, during the last hundred years, have been born in martyrdom, and in our own day this witness unto death has been renewed. The Christian life is always difficult. The fight against evil is always costly. Without the Cross there could have been no Resurrection. But the Resurrection is the guarantee that the love of God is stronger than death or evil.

Whatever man may do, God is undefeated. God reigns. The world belongs to Him, and in it He is working out that purpose which he has revealed to us in Jesus Christ. He uses imperfect and sinful men to be its servants. Christians may not always be better than their neighbors, but we serve a better Master. His is the cause that has life and hope in it.

"Life and Hope Offered to World"

This life and hope are offered to the world. Only when the sovereignty of Christ is owned in our communities can they become what God wills them to be. Societies that are built on other foundations are built on sand. In the world of our time two ways of living, two beliefs concerning the meaning of human life, contend with one another for man's soul. The battle is between that faith in God and man through Christ, by which man is set free, and (against it) the creeds of materialism and the will to power, by which he is enslaved. The Church is the champion of man against all that cheapens and degrades him; for the Gospel is the charter of man's dignity. The mission of the Church, now as always, is to proclaim and live out the Gospel by which alone men can be saved from sin and judgment, and the world from despair and self-destruction.

The social order is all the time being made by the thoughts men think, the loyalties they honor, and the deeds they do or leave undone. If the Church is to be to the world as salt, which preserves civilization from corruption and keeps wholesome, there must be something distinctive about us Christians—in the way we do our daily work, in the homes we make, and in the standards by which we live. We must take our full part as citizens. Yet, in so doing, we must not forget that we are citizens of a heavenly Kingdom and inheritors of an eternal destiny. While we seek to serve our earthly cities, our allegiance always is to Christ the King; and to hold by that is our highest contribution to the good of those among whom we dwell. For freedom and justice in the world depend on there being enough men and women who say, "We must obey God rather than men."

What is wrong with the world is that it has forsaken or never known the true God and is defying His moral law. We long for peace, but there can be no peace which is not founded on justice, and there can be no justice unless men acknowledge the authority of God. Science is putting into the hands of men new and incalculable power. But this power is turned to disaster and destruction when men forget that it is given by God, to be used for the fulfillment of His purpose. Once we ignore the first and great commandment, we do not long obey the second, and sooner or later ruin follows. "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve." Man must worship. Only by so doing can he preserve his true nature and standing as a child of God. The ancient word still speaks to all of us: "Take heed that ye forget not the Lord your God."

Thus the supreme task of the Church today is to win the nations of Christendom back to the knowledge of God revealed in Jesus Christ as Judge and Saviour, and to take the good news to those who have not yet heard it. We call on all our people to engage in this campaign and to put themselves into training for it. Every man, woman and child has his part to take. God, in His mercy, has given to us in our Conference a clearer vision of His will and purpose for His Church and of its mission in the world. To these we bid you dedicate yourselves.

MEN NEEDED FOR MINISTRY

That dedication is already being made by faithful Christians of every race, and not least in the devoted service offered by their clergy. But far more priests are needed, and if the supply of men called and equipped for the ministry is lacking, all Christian strategy must, humanly speaking, fail. With them are needed men and women for many other forms of whole-time service, and therefore a revived sense of vocation throughout the length and breadth of the Church. There is no place in the Church for those who will not try to honor the obligations of their membership. We thankfully recognize how many do so honor them, how great is the zeal of many of our younger people, and how much is owed to the witness of faithful congregations and to church-wardens and other office bearers. But all must take their full share.

We must show that we put God first by regular worship on the Lord's Day. We must put our minds to the understanding of our religion, so that we may meet men's doubts and questions with a reasoned faith. We must bring the teaching and example of Christ into our everyday lives. We must do our duty in paying for the Church's work. The Church in the diocese and parish is the key to the whole situation. The local congregation is the place where men must find the life of the Great Church, which is God's instrument for the world's salvation. See to it, then, that your congregation is a true community in Christ, that it may influence the common life of its whole neighborhood. Nothing that is good in the sight of God should be outside the Church's interest.

And since Christ's cause in the world can never be fully served by a divided Church, we also lay upon you the duty to take every opportunity of cooperating with Christians of other churches, and to work and pray for the reunion of Christendom.

Finally, we invite all men and women to join with us under Christ's banner in the war against the evils which wreck man's life and against the false creeds which debase it. In that war there can be no neutrality. To those who stand aloof Christ says, "He that is not with me is gainst me."

So we commend you to God's love. May He supply all your need, according to the riches of His grace.

II.

We now pass to a review of our work which may be further studied in the resolutions adopted by the Conference and in the reports upon which they are based. We considered some of the problems which confront man in the world and in the Church. At every point the guide to their solution is to be found not in man but in God; not only in God's power but in His purpose;; not only in that purpose but in the love by which He calls men to share it; not merely in the idea of love but in love as shown in history, in the life, the acts, and the words of Christ, the Son of God; and not only in that life and in those acts as seen in Palestine nineteen hundred years ago, but in the living presence of Christ dwelling with man through the Holy Spirit in the Church. God loved and still loves us. This is our message to the world, and the source of our joy and confidence.

GOD IN HIS WORLD

Our first subject was the Doctrine of Man.

There are many who would say that man's nature and aims can be stated in terms of a purely evolutionary view: man is a creature of this world only; and therefore an increased knowledge of his environment and a greater control of its resources fill ensure, gradually but certainly, the perfection both of his own character and of the society of which he is a member.

We welcome the great expansion of man's understanding of himself and of the world. But knowledge, though meant to be the instrument of man's progress, may be used by him for self-destruction. His greatest inventions may be turned to his ruin unless he learns to discipline his own nature and to use his powers as God means them to be used.

There are also many who identify man's happiness and welfare with his material possessions. Scientific knowledge has greatly raised the standard of life and comfort in many parts of the world. But elsewhere there is poverty and destitution. One of the gravest of modern problems is to secure that there shall be enough of the necessities of life for all. Yet even if this were done, it would still remain true that "a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth."

To possess much and to strive to possess more has been the cause of great evils and will continue to breed envy, hatred, and strife under any economic system. Because man is made in the image of God and has within his nature that which comes from God, he can never be content with material possessions, however abundant they may be.

Another answer to the question, "What is the nature and destiny of man?" is to be found in the claim that he should give himself entirely in obedience and service to the nation or group of which he is a member. Christians must reject this claim. Society exists to serve the needs of its members, not to enslave and possess them wholly: and when a society treats its members merely as means toward the securing of its ends, it becomes a destroyer of men's souls.

Mankind has only recently escaped conquest by totalitarian states which deified their own power. It now finds itself threatened by the new menace of Marxian communism which exalts atheism, puts supreme confidence in material progress, and proclaims its gospel with a militant enthusiasm which expects to conquer the world.

COMMUNISM A 'JUDGMENT ON CHURCH

Christians must repudiate this form of communism and must condemn the cruelties, injustice and lying propaganda which are inherent in it. But they cannot ignore certain lessons which are to be learnt from the unquestionable fact that communism has awakened a disciplined response in the minds of many, both in the West and in the East, who do not necessarily share its atheism or its doctrine of man. To them communism appears as a protest against social injustice. It seems to them to have inherited a concern for the depressed and downtrodden which is—wherever it is true to its vocation—a glory of the Church. In a very real sense there is here a judgment on Church and on society.

We do not suggest that communism is the only influence in our political and economic world against which the Christian conscience must take its stand. There are other forms of economic domination, characteristic of our Western society, which show something of the same ruthlessness, and, whatever their outward profession, do not in their practice exhibit any clearer recognition of moral law. Against all these forms of secularism the Church must proclaim that man is a being created by God and is under His sovereignty, and that, apart from God, he can neither master his nature nor find his true self.

This is God's world and man's appointed training ground for eternity. Christ alone can deliver man from the conflict in his own nature, lift him from the bondage of evil, and set his feet upon the way which leads to true freedom in God.

God has given man responsibility. To exercise it he must have freedom. The Christian Church therefore demands essential human rights for all, irrespective of race or color. There are unhappily countries in the world today where such rights are denied. We are grateful for the work which is being done by the Commission of the United Nations on Human Rights. We pledge ourselves to work for the removal of injustice and oppression, and, in particular, to stand by those whose right to religious liberty is threatened.

But the Church must not insist only on rights. For rights imply duties, and duties today are often forgotten in the assertion of rights. To insist only on rights turns them to wrongs unless the insistence is matched with the faithful discharge of the duties which men owe—to God by uprightness of life, to society by honest work, and to each other by bearing one another's burdens.

"Christians Must Hate War"

Security and peace have still to be won in the face of national selfishness and the menace of war. The peace of the world is threatened by suspicion, fear, and hatred. New and terrible weapons of destruction have been forged which may bring ruin upon the earth. For Christians even the destruction of civilization can never appear as the greatest of evils, since men are the heirs of an eternal world, and nothing, not even the atomic bomb, can separate them from the love of God. But Christians must hate war and everything that makes for it as utterly incompatible with the teaching and example of Jesus Christ. God's law requires the nations, severally and jointly, to condemn both the claim of a nation to unrestricted sovereignty and the doctrine that power is its own justification.

We call upon all nations collectively to control the manufacture and use of atomic power and to pledge themselves never to use it for the purposes of war. We call upon the nations also, even at the price of limiting their own sovereignty, to work together to remove the causes of war and to promote human culture and welfare. We trust therefore that the Christian Churches will give strong support to United Nations, so that it may become a more effective organ of world cooperation. It will fail, however, unless it is upheld by the conviction that nations, as well as individuals, are all members of the one family, under the one God and Father of all.

Within each nation the Church is being increasingly affected by the tendency of the State to take under its control educational and welfare work, which, until recently, was regarded as the special field of Christian activity. The Church should welcome the growing concern of the State for human welfare, and Christians should cooperate in this work wherever they can. By so doing they can contribute the specific qualities of the Christian spirit. None the less there are great dangers where the State is unsympathetic or hostile, and there must be constant endeavor to resist encroachments by the State which endanger human personality. Especially is this true in the field of education. We record our deep appreciation of all those teachers, who, in the face of great difficulties, are showing that education is not merely a means to earning a living nor merely a school for citizenship but a liberation into the world of the Spirit and a training of human souls in the knowledge and service of God.

We have called special attention to the work of education. But this is only one aspect of an ever-widening sphere of social responsibility, alike in voluntary and State services, in which Christians have their distinctive contribution to make. There is no need more urgent than to recruit and train the right men and women for these tasks. In countless ways, in education, in social service, in hospitals, as well as in other forms of public work, Christians are called to be messengers of the truth and love of God; and it is in His service and the service of society, rather than as a mere means to a livelihood, that every man's daily work should be done.

God in His Church

The Anglican Communion, as part of the Holy Catholic Church, exists to proclaim the everlasting Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ to all the world and to be an instrument in the hand of God for the fulfilment of His purpose. Deep divisions have long existed within the Church itself, based in the main on divergent interpretations of its faith and order; but, in spite of our divisions, we still know that it is the will of Christ that we should seek to overcome our separations and find again our true unity in Him.

At every Lambeth Conference this question of unity comes before us; and, at our gathering this year, a great part of our time and thought has been devoted to this subject. We have been made conscious yet again of the hindrance to Christ's cause which springs from the fact that it is a divided Church which ministers to a divided world. We have heard with great thankfulness that in many parts of the world separated Churches are making new ventures towards unity.

Our chief concern has been with the Church of South India in which, for the first time since the great division of Christendom at the Reformation, an act of union has taken place in which episcopal and non-episcopal traditions have been united. By that act four dioceses of the Church of India, Burma and Ceylon, speeded by the consent and prayers of that Church, and encouraged by the advice of the last Lambeth Conference, have joined with former Methodists, Presbyterians and Congregationalists in a more comprehensive expression of the Universal Church.

The Conference gives thanks to God for the measure of unity thus locally achieved. At the same time it records that some features of the Constitution of the Church of South India give rise to uncertainty or grave misgivings in the minds of many and hopes that such action may be taken as to lead to the day when the present measure of mutual recognition and intercommunion may become full communion between the Church of South India and the Churches of the Anglican Communion. We have pledged ourselves to do all in our power, by consultation, work, and prayer to bring about that end.

South India Union a Puzzle

On one particular question, the status of bishops and clergy, consecrated and ordained at or since the inauguration of the union, in the Church of South India, there is a divergence of opinion. A majority recognizes their status fully. A substantial minority feels bound to suspend judgment. No one of us desires to condemn outright or to declare invalid their ministry. No one of us wishes to limit the freedom of either the majority or the minority to act according to its own judgment. It has been a test of sincerity and charity to reach our conclusions. But it is only by costly effort that the unity of the Body of Christ can be restored.

There are movements toward union in other parts of the mission field, affecting the younger Churches. But the movement is no less strong in the English-speaking countries themselves. We feel more and more keenly the rift between the different parts of the Anglican Communion and the Protestant Churches; and we have a great desire to find a way forward to closer unity with them. In the United States, in Canada, in Australia, in the British Isles, there are projects and schemes of various kinds, some for organic union, some for a mutually recognized ministry. In our report we mention certain guiding principles which should be borne in mind in all approaches to reunion. We bid Godspeed to all those who are doing their utmost in different ways to set forward this work.

We also keep in mind our strong desire for a closer fellowship of Episcopal Churches. With some we are already in partial communion. Full intercommunion has been achieved with the Old Catholics since the last Conference upon terms which should provide a model for such agreements. Each Communion recognizes the catholicity and independence of the other and maintains its own, and while each believes the other to hold all the essentials of the Christian Faith, neither requires from the other the acceptance of all doctrinal opinion, or liturgical practice, characteristic of it.

Here we desire to set before our people a view of what, if it be the will of God, may come to pass. As Anglicans we believe that God has entrusted to us in our Communion not only the Catholic faith, but a special service to render to the whole Church. Reunion of any part of our Communion with other denominations in its own area must make the resulting Church no longer simply Anglican, but something more comprehensive. There would be, in every country where there now exist the Anglican Church and others separated from it, a united Church, Catholic and Evangelical, but no longer in the limiting sense of the word Anglican. The Anglican Communion would be merged in a much larger Communion of National or Regional Churches, in full communion with one another, united in all the terms of what is known as the Lambeth Quadrilateral.

"Vision Far From Attainment"

It is well to keep this vision before us; but we are still far from its attainment, and until this larger Communion begins to take firmer shape, it would be only a weakening of the present strength and service of the Anglican Communion if parts of it were severed from it prematurely. If we were slow to advance the larger cause, it would be a betrayal of what we believe to be our special calling. It would be equally a betrayal of our trust before God if the Anglican Communion were to allow itself to be dispersed before its particular work was done.

In our resolutions, we recommend that, in further schemes for reunion, care should be taken to see that they do not, unless for a brief time, put any member of our family of Churches out of communion with it and that they are not put into force unless after consultation with the rest of our family. That is a right and wise precaution. Yet we look to, and work for, the larger family, and we are thankful that in so many parts of the world other Churches are joined with us in working for it.

The Oecumenical Movement is one of the principal facts in the Christian life of our times. We cordially welcome the formation of the World Council of Churches as marking a notable stage in that movement, and we bid our people to pray that in and after its first Assembly, which follows quickly after our Conference, God will guide and direct all its operations.

Meanwhile, it is our duty to make the life and witness of our own Communion strong and effective for its own work. To that end we are bound to preserve our unity in the tradition which we have received. Owing to the number and variety of the national Churches, provinces, and missionary dioceses within our fellowship, and the great distances which separate them from one another, problems arise which call for the application of a wise and sympathetic strategy. Our organized life will rightly be influenced by local color and national culture, and will, in consequence, develop varied characteristics. But within this diversity, it is essential to maintain such a unity of faith and order as will preserve its unity of purpose and spirit.

We find the authoritative expression of that faith and order in the Book of Common Prayer, together with the ordinal. This book is the heritage of the whole Communion, and, while revisions of it are made to suit the needs of different Churches, it provides our accepted pattern of liturgical order, worship, and doctrine which is to be everywhere maintained. We hope that, throughout the Anglican Communion, suitable steps will be taken in 1949 to celebrate the growth of the English Book of Common Prayer which had its beginning in the first English Prayer Book of 1549. Such celebrations will help to call to mind, and emphasize, the important position within the fellowship which the Book of Common Prayer has always held, and the formative and unifying influence which it has exercised.

Central College for Clergy Asked

Among other proposals for increasing means of common consultation and action between the various parts of our Communion, two deserve special mention. The Conference desires the establishment, at St. Augustine's College, Canterbury, of a Central College, under a Council representative of the whole Anglican Communion, to which priests and others from every part of our fellowship may come to study together and to learn from one another in an atmosphere of scholarship and common life.

Another proposal which has been approved is that of a Congress, to be held between Lambeth Conferences, elsewhere than in the British Isles, and to be attended by representative leaders, clerical and lay, from all parts of the Anglican Communion.

The Church discharges its mission to the world through the devotion and work of its members. Its greatest need is for an increase in the number of men and women who will devote their lives to its service. We believe that Christ is calling many who are not aware of His call. From many lands the appeal is made for teachers in schools and colleges, for scholars to help in the training of clergy and catechists, for doctors and nurses. Nor does this exhaust the list. There is need for experts in agriculture, crafts, and domestic science, and in many of the welfare services.

It is a call to young men and women who desire to do constructive work for Christ and for his people, and are ready for His sake to face difficulties and make sacrifices. Especially is there need for a great increase in the ordained ministry of the Church, to make good deficiencies which have accumulated before and during the war and to equip the Church to go forward. From every part of the Church comes the conviction that great opportunities can be taken, if the Church's ministry is strengthened by the coming into the ranks of the clergy of an increasing number of young men who hear the call of Christ, and are willing to give all to obey it.

But the Church can only fulfill its mission to mankind if every member of it is a faithful, disciplined and instructed servant of Christ. Again and again, in our resolutions and reports, we recall our people to the obligations to which they are committed by their faith. Christ needs their service and witness in their everyday lives—in their homes, in work and industry, in all the activities of the community. One whole report is devoted to Christian teaching about marriage and to the witness which Christian people must give to it. While we should not forget that faithful and happy marriages still far outnumber those that fail, yet the prevalence of divorce and the easy acceptance of it gravely threaten the stability of individual, home and family life and cause great suffering to innocent children thus deprived of the security of home.

Divorce Still a Problem

We believe that there is, especially among younger people, the beginning of a revolt against the degrading of marriage and a desire for homes made stable by the vows of obligation and the bond of children. The Church owes it to those engaged to be married to help them to prepare for it. When there has been divorce and remarriage, the Church must keep those concerned within its pastoral care and love, recognizing with sympathy and understanding the suffering and distress which have been inflicted upon many of them and desiring for the sinful penitence.

The Church will not marry anyone who has been previously married save where no marriage bond as recognized by the Church still exists. It bids its members to uphold faithfully the lifelong obligation of the marriage vow and to give no occasion for sin. But it cannot exclude from the love of Christ, nor does it exclude from its own fellowship, those who have come through bitter experience and look for help. About this matter there is special urgency. But in every sphere of human life there is an insistent call to every Christian at this time to bear clear witness to the character of Christ and the principles of conduct which He enjoins.

For this witness there is needed the grace of Christ, which He promises to those who are of the household of faith. One report emphasizes the importance of the careful administration of baptism and confirmation, whereby God gives entrance to that household. Another dwells on the essential place of private prayer and public worship. Another suggests a rule of life which every faithful Christian should observe. Through all these means, God in His love reaches us in the fellowship of His Church, to maintain in us the new life which is from above. He meets each in his or her own field of opportunity, service, and need: He unites us in the common bond of one faith, one worship, one Lord.

Finally, we would say a special word of recognition and encouragement to our clergy. In all parts of the world you have shepherded your flocks, strengthened their courage, and consoled them in their sorrows, through some of the hardest trials mankind has ever known. On you, and on your people, we bid God's blessing.

Let the Church and all its members take fresh heart and hope. "In all things we are more than conquerors."

Signed on behalf of the Conference,

GEOFFREY CANTUAR,
MERVYN WINTON, Secretary,
STANLEY ELEY,
Assistant Secretary.

General Report of the Lambeth Conference

A new and deep sense of unity within the world-wide Anglican Communion, and a new vision of increasing unity with other Churches through schemes for progressive mutual recognition and inter-communion leading on to organic unity, were among the outstanding achievements of the Lambeth Conference, 1948, as revealed in its Encyclical Letter and Resolutions and the Reports of its Committees.

Other important pronouncements and decisions included: approval of a declaration of human rights; a condemnation of Marxian Communism; a plea for international control of atomic energy, so as to prevent its use in war; an appeal for active evangelism by all members of the Church; a scheme for a larger episcopal conference to include bishops from Churches now outside the Anglican Communion; a scheme for a Pan-Anglican Congress representative of the whole Anglican Communion including clergy and laity, the first meeting to be in 1953. (It is understood that this is likely to be held in the United States); a proposal for the setting up on a Pan-Anglican basis of an Advisory Council on Missionary Strategy and of a Central College for the Anglican Communion, if possible at St. Augustine's College, Canterbury; encouragement of the steps being taken in East, West and Central Africa, and in the Pacific, towards the formation of new provinces or other regional groupings; an interim pronouncement on the South India Church; a re-affirmation that "the marriage of one whose former partner is still living may not be celebrated according to the rites of the Church, unless it has been established that there exists no marriage bond recognized by the Church," together with a strong recommendation "that provincial and regional Churches should consider how best their pastorial responsiblity to wards those who do not conform to our Lord's standard can be discharged"; and a rejection of a Chinese proposal for the ordination of women to the priesthood for an experimental period of twenty years.

Unity

The sense of unity in the Conference appears to have been extraordinary and finds expression again and again in the Encyclical, the Resolutions, and the Reports of the Committees. It was a revelation to the Bishops to discover how much they shared in common and how great was their unity of mind and spirit. In the opinion of the senior Bishops there was no question, as compared with the Lambeth Conference of 1930 (when many of the English and American Bishops seemed to have different interests), that on this occasion they had all been considering much the same issues and were far more equally well informed on the range of subjects coming before the Conference.

Even where there was agreement to differ on some aspects of the South India scheme, the difference seemed less important owing to the range of agreement and the growth of a world-wide oecumenical outlook. The Bishops went away immensely encouraged and feeling that they were backed by world-wide prayer and understanding.

Reunion

Current schemes for reunion or intercommunion were shown as of two main types, namely: schemes for organic or corporate union, examples of which are the schemes projected in North India, Ceylon, Nigeria, and Iran; and schemes for intercommunion between Churches in the same area on the basis of provision for a mutually recognized Ministry. Such schemes have been proposed in Canada and Australia, and a similar scheme is under consideration in the United States. A scheme for intercommunion between Churches in the same area on the basis of provision for parallel but mutually acceptable Episcopates is classed as of the second type. The disadvantages of this type are enumerated in the Committee's Report and a warning is issued against proposals "for mutually recognized Ministries without the satisfactory adjustment of terms of union." The same Committee's Report, which receives a general endorsement in the Resolutions of the Conference, records two views regarding the Church of South India, namely that of the majority who held that its bishops, presbyters and deacons should be encouraged and accepted (subject to local provincial regulations) throughout the Anglican Communion; and that of "a substantial minority" who held that it was "not possible to pass any definite judgment upon the precise status" of such bishops, presbyters and deacons. But in the sphere of immediate and practical action the Conference was able to recommend a general policy for relations with members of the Church of South India.

The essential decision on South India is contained in Resolutions 52 and 53:

"52. We

(a) Endorse generally the paragraphs in the Report of our Committee on Unity which refer to South India;

(b) give thanks to God for the measure of unity locally achieved by the inauguration of the Church of South India, and we pledge ourselves to pray and work for its development into an ever more perfect fulfilment of the will of God for His Church; and we

(c) look forward hopefully and with longing to the day when there shall be full communion between the Church of South India and the Churches of the Anglican Communion.

53. The Conference expresses the hope that, so soon as it may appear to the authorities of the Church of South India to be expedient to take up the matter, such provisions of the Constitution of the Church and such statements contained therein as are known to have given rise either to uncertainty or to grave anxiety in the minds of many, may be reconsidered with a view to their amendment. The Conference would call special attention to the six points specified in the Report of its Committee on Unity."

The Conference welcomed the development of friendly relations with the Orthodox Churches and the lesser Churches of the East. It has assigned a new importance to reunion with certain Protestant Churches and has approved various exploratory steps.

A passage in the Encyclical Letter states:

". . . We feel more and more keenly the rift between the different parts of the Anglican Communion and the Protestant Churches; and we have a great desire to find a way forward to closer unity with them. In the United States, in Canada, in Australia, in the British Isles, there are projects and schemes of various kinds, some for organic union, some for a mutually recognized ministry. In our Report we mention certain guiding principles which should be borne in mind in all approaches to Reunion. We bid Godspeed to all those who are doing their utmost in different ways to set forward this work.

"We also keep in mind our strong desire for a closer fellowship of Episcopal Churches. With some we are already in partial communion. Full intercommunion has been achieved with the Old Catholics since the last Conference, upon terms which should provide a model for such agreements. Each Communion recognizes the catholicity and independence of the other and maintain its own, and while each believes the other to hold all the essentials of the Christian Faith, neither requires from the other the acceptance of all doctrinal opinion, or liturgical practice, characteristic of it.

"Here we desire to set before our people a view of what, if it be the will of God, may come to pass. As Anglicans we believe that God has entrusted to us in our Communion not only the Catholic faith, but a special service to render to the whole Church. Reunion of any part of our Communion with other denominations in its own area must make the resulting Church no longer simply Anglican, but something more comprehensive. There will be, in every country where there now exist the Anglican Church and others separated from it, a united Church, Catholic and Evangelical, but no longer in the limiting sense of the word Anglican. The Anglican Communion would be merged in a much larger Communion of National or Regional Churches, in full communion with one another, united in all the terms of what is known as the Lambeth Quadrilateral.

"It is well to keep this vision before us; but we are still far from its attainment, and until this larger Communion begins to take firmer shape, it would be only a weakening of the present strength and service of the Anglican Communion if parts of it were severed from it prematurely. If we were slow to advance the larger cause, it would be a betrayal of what we believe to be our special calling. It would be equally a betrayal of our trust before God if the Anglican Communion were to allow itself to be dispersed before its particular work was done.

"In our Resolutions, we recommend that, in further schemes for reunion, care should be taken to see that they do not, unless for a brief time, put any member of our family of Churches out of communion with it and that they are not put into force unless after consultation with the rest of our family. That is a right and wise precaution. Yet we look to, and work for, the larger family, and we are thankful that in so many parts of the world other Churches are joined with us in working for it."

COMMUNISM AND HUMAN RIGHTS

The subjects of Communism and Human Rights are dealt with very clearly in the Encyclical:

"Mankind has only recently escaped conquest by totalitarian States which deified their own power. It now finds itself threatened by the new menace of Marxism Communism which exalts atheism, puts supreme confidence in material progress, and proclaims its gospel with a militant enthusiasm which expects to conquer the world.

"Christians must repudiate this form of Communism and must condemn the cruelties, injustice, and lying propaganda which are inherent in it. But they cannot ignore certain lessons which are to be learnt from the unquestionable fact that Communism has awakened a disciplined response in the minds of many, both in the West and in the East, who do not necessarily share its atheism or its doctrine of man. To them Communism appears as a protest against social injustice. It seems to them to have inherited a concern for the depressed and downtrodden which is —wherever it is true to its vocation— a glory of the Church. In a very real sense there is here a judgment on Church and on society.

"We do not suggest that Communism is the only influence in our political and economic world against which the Christian conscience must take its stand. There are other forms of economic domination, characteristic of our Western society, which show something of the same ruthlessness, and, whatever their outward profession, do not in their practice exhibit any clearer recognition of moral law. Against all these forms of secularism the Church must proclaim that man is a being created by God and is under His sovereignty, and that, apart from God, he can neither master his nature nor find his true self. This is God's world and man's appointed training ground for eternity. Christ alone can deliver man from the conflict in his own nature, lift him from the bondage of evil, and set his feet upon the way which leads to true freedom in God.

"God has gvien man responsibility. To exercise it, he must have freedom. The Christian Church therefore demands essential human rights for all, irrespective of race or color. There are, unhappily, countries in the world today where such rights are denied. We are grateful for the work which is being done by the Commission of the United Nations on Human Rights. We pledge oursIves to work for the removal of injustice and oppression, and, in particular, to stand by those whose right to religious liberty is threatened.

"But the Church must not insist only on rights. For rights imply duties, and duties today are often forgotten in the assertion of rights. To insist only on rights turns them to wrongs, unless the insistence is matched with the faithful discharge of the duties which men owe—to God by uprightness of life, to society by honest work, and to each other by bearing one another's burdens."

SOME OTHER SUBJECTS

Among the many other subjects dealt with in pronouncements or decisions of the Conference were Missionary Recruiting; the Training of Ordinands; Baptism and Confirmation; Education; the Christian Way of Life; and the Administration of Holy Communion. In connection with the last the Conference held that "administration from a common chalice, being scriptural and having a symbolic meaning of great value, should continue to be the normal method of administration in the Anglican Communion," but was of opinion that "there is no objection to administration of both kinds by the method of intinction where conditions require it" under provincial regulation.

They tell me that if a rattlesnake is cornered it will become so angry that it will bite itself. That is exactly what the harboring of hates and resentments against others is—biting of oneself. We think we are harming others in holding these spites and hates, but the deeper harm is to ourselves.

The Labor Day Message of the Federal Council of Churches

"This is a call to Christian thought and action. On Labor Sunday Christians should give special emphasis to the practical decisions that economic life daily forces men to make. Christian principles are involved in these decisions. It is the responsibility of the churches to help men to discover what these principles are and what they mean for men as producers and consumers, as investors and citizens. The church is under a divine imperative to call all men—but first its own members—to recognize God's lordship over individual souls and the whole of life—the home, the farm, the factory, the market place, the banking house, and every form of associated activity in the community, nation and world. It is His will that His Kingdom come on earth among men."

Ownership Is a Trust

"All the resources of the earth are gifts of God to all nations and peoples. Under the laws of men they become property, but God remains the absolute owner of 'the earth and the fulness thereof.' This means that every form of human ownership or control or use of property is a trust with responsibility to God and one's fellow men. It must be kept under the most severe scrutiny in the light of the purpose of God's creation."

Christian View of the Worker

"According to the Christian faith each person is made in the image of God, and hence has dignity and worth whatever his work or status. Hence, the worker must never be treated as a commodity but always as a person, whose well-being depends in large part upon the rewards and conditions of his labor. No economic system fully serves the common good. No such system fully expresses the will of God. Improvement of economic arrangements is, therefore, the obligation of all Christians. It is their duty to see that economic arrangements serve human welfare and that the welfare of society is not sacrificed for the sake of the economic system."

Joint Action a Necessity

"Growth of large-scale enterprise and technological developments, with the consequent integration of control and large-scale financing, tend to produce a concentration of economic power. This has been accompanied by a growing feeling of economic insecurity. These changes have made it increasingly clear to men that they are helpless in coping individually with major economic forces around them. Joint action for mutual aid and protection has become an imperative necessity to those who depend on their labor for a living."

Responsibility of Leaders

"Christians who share in the control of economic power, whether in management or as representatives of organized labor, have a special responsibility to direct economic forces toward service to the whole society. In the present world situation there are real conflicts of emphasis among such positive values as freedom and order and justice. The neglect of any one will soon make an economic system intolerable because each of these is a necessary part of God's purpose for economic life. All systems must be tested by the extent to which they conform to God's will as revealed in Christ. What then are the principles and objectives which should guide Christians in their judgment upon economic institutions and in the personal decisions which they make in their various occupations?"

Minimum Rights of Workers

"1. There should be a minimum standard of living to which every person has access. Such a minimum should be sufficient for health, cultural growth and protection against hardships beyond one's control. It must be recognized that such a minimum standard will be conditioned by the relation of production to population."

Equal Opportunity

"2. All persons have the moral right to equal opportunities to develop their capacities. To make equal opportunities available to all children and youth is therefore a special responsibility of the Christian community."

The Duty and the Right to Work

"3. Every able-bodied man and woman has the moral right and duty to serve the community, in the home, through work under conditions that assure fair compensation, and in voluntary community service."

Responsibility to Share in Action

"4. Economic decisions are in large measure group decisions for which both political and economic forms of organization are necessary. The Christian's responsibility includes his taking a vigorous part in these political and economic activities which hold the greatest promise for the realization of Christian objectives. All persons have a moral right to such participation regardless of race, color, creed or sex."

Churches and the Labor Movement

"5. The Churches have been right in giving encouragement to the development of the labor movement, both as an instrument for the security of greater economic justice and as a source of both dignity and morale for workers. Yet, in specific issues that may today separate labor and management, the church should not prejudge the rightness of either group. While making judgments in particular cases, it should concentrate on the encouragement of all those processes which are in harmony with its ministry of reconciliation."

The Right to Experiment

"6. Every national policy must be judged by its consequences for the lives of people in all lands and by its effect upon the economic basis for a peaceful world. There should be tolerance toward the economic experiments and institutions of other peoples, though these must be judged by the same moral principles as our own."

Call to Christians

"Labor Sunday presents a clear call to every Christian to consider earnestly the possibility and the means of attaining a more Christian economic life than now exists. It summons him to reexamine his own relationships as employer or emplyee, as buyer or seller. It requires each Christian to revaluate his position on the grave economic issues that have emerged upon the field of political action. Labor Sunday calls him to ask of himself and to give answer—after rigid self-analysis—concerning his economic activities: Am I right or wrong? Am I selfish or generous? Am I loving my neighbor as myself, or am I taking an unfair advantage over him? How truly Christian am I in my part of the economic life of this nation and of the world?"

Life is full of good beginnings and bad endings. Few indeed are the failures which you and I have experienced that might not easily be traced to our failure to finish a good work begun, or to keep to ideals once enthusiastically accepted.

It is but another way of saying "stick-to-it," "carry-through," or "hold-fast."

The Lambeth Report

It is too soon for a detailed critique and assessment of the results of the deliberations of the bishops at the Lambeth Conference. Due to the secretive method of Lambeth, it is not possible to follow the debates, discussions and thought of the conference. Now that the meeting is over, there must be time to study the Encylical and the resolutions and reports.

On first reading, the reports are cheering. There was apparently a deep regard for the issues involved in Christian unity. The committee that reported on the Church of South India found that it could not report unanimously, but the resolutions adopted by the entire conference are most encouraging. These "give thanks to God for the measure of unity locally achieved by the inauguration of the Church of South India . . . and look forward hopefully and with longing to the day when there shall be full communion between the Church of South India and the Churches of the Anglican Communion." Anglican clergy who went into the united Church "should be encouraged and accepted."

Fortunately this is a far cry from the extremist demands of the International Priest's Convention, an Anglo-Catholic body, which this summer uncharitably stated "these former Anglicans ought not to be allowed to receive or celebrate at Anglican altars. . . . To other members of the Church of South India, no rights whatsoever ought to be extended."

Evangelicals will learn with gladness that Lambeth feels "more and more keenly the rift between the different parts of the Anglican Communion and the Protestant Churches; and we have a great desire to find a way forward to closer unity with them." But the climax of this part of the Lambeth pronouncements is found in the stress upon the peculiar responsibility laid upon the Anglican Communion to be a leader in this field. This leadership is not to require submission to our viewpoint, in the Roman way, but calls upon us to blaze new trails towards a more "comprehensive Church." Our Church then would be "merged in a much larger communion."

Human Rights

There is a strong statement which negatively is anti-communist. Positively, it is based on the will of God that each child of God shall find justice in living. Communism is rightly condemned, but so are the evils of our own capitalistic society. All alike are under the judgment of God. This section of the Lambeth reports might well be read together with the fine statement of the Federal Council of Churches for Labor Day.

The section on marriage seems to limit the Church to annullment as the only road to remarriage after divorce or separation. If this is to be cited as a directive in interpreting our own ambiguous marriage canon, it is distinctly on the side of the view which would limit the bishop's power in permitting marriage after divorce to cases in which the former marriage could be considered to be null in the eyes of the Church, no matter what, of course, the civil action was. Yet even with this, Lambeth strongly recommends that Churches should consider how to exercise their pastoral responsibility to those who do not conform to the Church's law.

The full Encyclical and the Reports of the Conference will be studied for many months. Some of the puzzling points will thus undoubtedly be cleared up. But what now? Lambeth is only a consultative body. It has passed no legislation. It has no direct authority over our Church, or any Church. The key is to remember that Lambeth was a gathering of our bishops. They will come back to our Church in America with new knowledge, new enthusiasm and new vision. They have met brothers in the episcopate from all over the world. They have a new sense, we are sure, of the world crisis and of the Christian answer. Let us hope that they will speedily interpret this into diocesan and parish life here in America.

Amsterdam

Representatives from one hundred and forty-eight Churches, including our own, are meeting at this time in Amsterdam, Holland, in a conference that is unprecedented. True, there have been other widely representative Christian gatherings in years past. But this meeting is not only to confer, but to bring into living reality the "World Council of Churches." This meeting is not only for discussion, but for action.

There are always two streams in the slowly moving river of Christian unity. One is that intimate one which flows towards the port of full organic union between Churches. The other is that of growing cooperative relationships between Churches which find that they can work together in many fields even though they cannot as yet merge in organization. It is in this stream that the World Council stands. Perhaps this stream must flow swiftly and strongly onward before the other stream can. For by working together in Christian fellowship, we learn that give and take which ultimately must be at the root of any plan for organic union.

In the late Archbishop Temple's words, the World Council of Churches is "the great new fact of our time." Let us all be praying that God will bless and guide the assembly with His Holy Spirit as it meets in Amsterdam.

Some children at one of the conferences of the Diocese of West Texas were asked to write out the Apostle's Creed. There was much variation in spelling, but the most amazing phrase was "Born of the Virginian Mary"!

BOOK NOTES

By the Faculty of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific. Edited by Randolph Crump Miller.

REINHOLD NIEBUHR: PROPHET FROM AMERICA. By D. R. Davies. Macmillan. $2.00.

This little book is a sympathetic appreciation of the foremost theologian of the United States written by an Anglican for English consumption, and it is the perfect introduction to Niebuhr for the American layman who has been up against the barrier of Niebuhr's dialetical style of writing. It tells of his Detroit days, when he was pastor to some who were workers in the Ford plant, and of how that experience formulated the fundamental principles of Niebuhr's prophetic and revolutionary outlook. Srangely enough, although Niebuhr began as something of a liberal, his theology has become orthodox while his politics have become radical, and by moving to the right and to the left at the same time he has created the tensions which reflect modern life. By all means reads this little book if you want to know what is happening among Christians who can think and act in terms of the Christian perspective (which is more rare than many of us would suspect.)

ON THE MEANING OF CHRIST. By John Knox. Scribners. $2.50.

John Knox, in three little books (The Man Christ Jesus, Christ the Lord, and this volume) has put us all greatly in his debt, for in simple and concise style he has given us the essence of what Jesus meant in his own living, in the New Testament Church, and for contemporary theology. This volume centers its emphasis in the "event" of Jesus Christ and relates the "event" to the person of Jesus, the Gospels, the miracles, the story, and the church. It is a deeply satisfying Christology which results, for it is both adequately empircal and scholarly on the one hand, and profoundly faithful to Christian insight and living on the other. Buy it and read it.

THE MEDIATOR. By Emil Brunner. Westminster Press. 6.00.

MAN IN REVOLT. By Emil Brunner. Westminster Press. $6.00.

THE DIVINE IMPERATIVE. By Emil Brunner. Westminster Press. $6.50.

Emil Brunner is probably the most influential continental theologian of our day, outranking Karl Barth in the number of his books actually being read. The Westminster Press has done us a service in reissuing three of his most famous books and in publishing two others (Revelation and Reason and The Divine-Human Encounter). Brunner came to fame in 1927 with the publication in German of The Mediator, which is a thorough-going and thoroughly Christian approach to the meaning of Christ. Over 600 pages of careful scholarship and Christian faith are reflected here, and it is a permanent contribution to Christian theology. In 1932, there appeared the German edition of The Divine Imperative, still the most thorough-going treatment of Christian ethics in this generation; grounded in theology and with Lutheran assumptions, it probes to the depths of ethical problems facing the world today, and its most practical section of over 300 pages deals with the various orders of society, labor, law, culture, and faith. Man in Revolt was published in 1937, and like the others has been translated by Olive Wyon with the assistance of Dr. Brunner. This is the Christian doctrine of man, turning on the contradiction between man as he was intended to be and man as he actually is. Every clergyman should own these volumes, for these prices are below the pre-war cost of books.

LETTERS TO YOUNG CHURCHES. J. B. Phillips. Macmillan, 1948. $2.50.

The author, J. B. Phillips, has presented us with a translation of the New Testament Epistles in modern English. The format is good and each letter is presented as a letter instead of a series of chapters and verses.

The book is preceded by an introduction by C. S. Lewis and is an excellent review of the arguments for modern translations of the Bible. The translator's preface is a good outline of what a modern translation should be. There are some statements with which the reviewer personally would object, for example, that the Apostolic Age was illiterate. It was an age of learning, exceeding much of the present world in the ability of the common people to read and write, but this minor point should not distract from the general worth of a book.

For several reasons, however, it is felt that this book is not too important: first, it does not compare in scholarship with the excellent Revised Standard Version; second, it is written by an Englishman in the modern British language and there are sufficient differences in the use and meaning of words to confuse the reader, and lastly while the book is valuable in presenting a brief introduction and summary to each letter there are many conclusive statements (e. g. the Pauline authorship of Ephesians and the Pastoral Letters, the nature of Romans Chapter 16, etc.) that are in such dispute that it would have been much better to have taken a little more space to discuss them.

All in all it is a good book, but not one that will be of much value to the average reader.

CHURCH UNION: WHY NOT? John R. Scotford. Pilgrim, 1948. $2.00.

In this book Mr. Scotford has attempted the big task of reducing the ecumenical movement to a brief 123 pages. To accomplish this he is forced into many generalizations and oversimplications which will trouble some people. His analysis of denominational characteristics, at least as far as the Episcopal Church is concerned, is inadequate and one-sided: it is not difficult to tell where he lives and what Episcopal publications he reads. It leads one to wonder if other groups are also misrepresented as is reasonable to assume.

The greatest objection, however, is in the lack of an appreciation of the theological implications of unity. As an Episcopalian (and Mr. Scotford seems to exclude Episcopalians from those concerned with the union of Chistianity) I must insist that reunion of the Body of Christ is something more than expediency to secure a local congregation of 500 and a budget of ten thousand dollars per year (the minimum size for survival, p. 5). Every so often the author does catch a glimpse of this idea that theology matters but the fog of expediency always manages to obscure it.

There are some excellent ideas presented in the book which should not be overlooked. In listing the reasons why church union is desirable Mr. Scotford is the first to my knowledge to put into print what everyone knows: that the Roman Church is organized and aggressive and must be met by a united front. This is a true observation but the negative side of the picture.

It is not clear as to what form of union the author is advocating. From his regard for mere bigness of The Methodist Church (p. 77) I assume that we are to have one big homogeneous Protestant church. It is not a stirring proposition and I feel that he is overly optimistic as to its accomplishment. The general tone of the book is well-expressed in the title which gives this reviewer the feeling that if we don't have anything else to do just now we might try uniting—but it doesn't make much difference. This is also the spirit of the conclusion.

It is not a book which many Episcopalians will like or profit from in their search for the "whole state of Christ's Church."

NEARER MY GOD TO THEE

On Sunday, August 15, the English people all over the country sang at their services of worship that grand old hymn, "Nearer My God to Thee," in commemoration of the 10th anniversary of the death of its author —Sarah Fowles Adams.

We are reminded that this was the favorite hymn of King Edward the Seventh and was sung at his funeral. It was also played by the ship's orchestra when the Titanic was sinking. It was a favorite hymn of Woodrow Wilson and many other great men of our time. It has been a great inspiration to many thousands during these more than a hundred years. It was published in 1841.

AMSTERDAM

Sunday, August 22, the great World Council of Churches at Amsterdam opened its meetings. . . . This is an important occasion! An outstanding leader said a short time ago that for ages to come the world would look back on this Conference as the outstanding event of this era. The following quotation was taken from the Scottish Guardan:

"We may not travel faster than our Lord would have us go, but neither must we go more slowly."—The Archbishop of Canterbury at the opening of the Lambeth Conference.

These are wise words of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and we hope that they will determine the keynote of the first meeting of the World Council of Churches which is being held at Amsterdam.

The divisions of Christendom are now of long standing, their causes go far back into the past, and such divisions will not easily be healed. Too facile attempts to heal them might well lead to fresh schisms and divisions in the future; but that they should be tamely acquiesced in would be equally wrong and futile. One cause, and probably the most fundamental of all, of these divisions was lack of Christian charity. Had there been sufficient charity on both sides it is unlikely that the great schism between East and West would have occurred at the beginning of the 11th century, and the subsequent religious revolution in the West in the 16th century would also have been avoided. Where there is sufficient charity though men may differ they do not divide. And it is one of the most encouraging signs of our times in the religious world that there is a great increase in charity and tolerant feeling. Dean Swift could remark "we have just enough religion to make us hate, but not enough to make us love one another," and much of the division of the past has been increased by the protagonists having enough religion and fanaticism to hate, but not enough to love one another. And we may be thankful for any decrease in this spirit.

There can be no doubt that the Anglican Communion has a great part to play in any such discussions. She seems providentially situated between the older traditions and the newer developments in religion, so as to be the reconciler of them. We would not, perhaps, in the twentieth century use such strong or impolite language as the old Anglican writer who spoke of the Church of England as steering a mean between "the gaudy meriticiousness of the Church of Rome and the slatternly slovenliness of the conventicle," but his words do stand for the truth that Anglicanism, however much some of its more extreme exponents, whether to the right or to the left, may dislike the fact, is a via media; and only along some such via media will all Christians be able to come together in a once more united Christendom. Meanwhile all Churchpeople should remember this historic gathering at Amsterdam in their prayers, and hope that, in the words of the Archbishop which we have already quoted, they will not travel faster than our Lord would have them go, nor will they go more slowly.

GIFTS FOR MEN

Rich I am beyond compare
All Christ has with Him I share,
For He was God's gift to me,
Hanging on the shameful tree.
What more could the Savior give Than His life that I might live?
Nothing now will God withhold,
What is silver? what is gold
To the mighty wealth untold
In the treasure-house on high,
By the blood of Christ made nigh
It is mine for me to share
With my brethren everywhere.
Bringing gifts of heavenly worth
To the sorrowing sons of earth.
Could the angels who adore
Him in glory wish for more?

—Frederick W. Neve.

In the Holy Communion we are reminded that it is the service which Christ Himself instituted, "and in His Holy Gospel commanded us to CONTINUE."

When we were baptized, we were signed with the sign of the Cross in token that hereafter we "may CONTINUE Christ's faithful soldier and servant unto his life's end."

CXXXVII

Page 81. The fourth and concluding section of the consecration prayer is more personal than that which has gone before, and deals less with the institution and elements of the Sacrament, and more with the individuals partaking of it.

It is inclusive, taking in the "whole church," and all others who shall be partakers of this holy communion.

The dedication to God of "ourselves, our souls, and bodies" probably has its origin in the ancient practice of the Nazarite vow of the Jews. According to this custom the head of the Nazarite was shaved on the first day of dedication, daily prayers and offerings were made until the final day of the period when the head was shaved again, and the hair that had grown since the first day of the services was burned on the altar as a symbol of dedication to God of one's entire growth, mental, physical and spiritual. We see St. Paul participating in this kind of service in the temple at Jerusalem in Acts Chap. 21, verses 22-28.

Also the words "a reasonable holy and living sacrifice unto thee" have their background with St. Paul in the first verse of the 12th chapter of his epistle to the Romans where he exhorts his readers "by the mercies of God that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."

Finally we remind ourselves of our utter dependence on God's mercy and that we are asking Him to forgive us "not weighing our merits, but pardoning our offenses"; and it is on this note of humbleness before God, and yet trusting in His goodness that this great prayer concludes. Its whole tone has a beauty and rhythm that we sometimes fail to recognize through its familiarity from constant repetition, but no priest should ever allow himself to forget to say it with proper emphasis.

R. CARY MONTAGUE.

"THE GRACE OF CONTINUANCE"

It is interesting to note the emphasis, or repeated use, of the word "CONTINUE" in our Prayer Book.

At confirmation, the solemn sentence of the Confirmation Service is, 'that he may CONTINUE Thine forever."

As to those who are departed, we pray for their CONTINUAL growth.

LAYMEN APPOINTED FOR SERVICE IN CHINA

New York, N. Y.—Appointment of three laymen for missionary service is announced by the National Council, all of them for work in China.

Dr. Helen W. Taylor, who will sail for China the latter part of August, will join the staff of St. James Hospital, Anking. Dr. Taylor is the daughter of Dr. Harry B. Taylor, for many years a medical missionary in the district of Anking. Born in Anking, she studied at the Kuling American School, Chatham Hall in Virginia, and St. Andrew's University in Scotland before entering Sweet Briar College, where she secured her B. A. degree in 1940. She then entered the Medical School of the University of Virginia under a National Council scholarship, and received her M. D. degree in 1944. Her 15-months' internship was spent at the Montreal General Hospital, and since completion of that she has had further specialized study at Doctors' Hospital and Bellevue, New York. She has been a junior resident physician at Sloan Hospital, New York City, for the past year.

Dr. Biven R. Galbraith, recently sailed for China for work at St. Andrew's Hospital, Wusih. He was accompanied by Mrs. Galbraith, who is the daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. Benjamin J. Darneille, of Los Angeles.

Dr. Galbraith, a graduate of Baylor University and of Baylor Medical School, spent five years in general practice in Texas before serving with the American Red Cross in England. He returned to general practice in the United States for two years before entering the Army Medical Corps. He and Mrs. Galbraith are members of Trinity Church, Pocatello, Idaho.

Mr. J. Patrick H. McGinnis has been appointed for work in Hankow, on the teaching staff of Boone Middle School, Wuchang.

Mr. McGinnis, a member of St. Stephen's Parish, Providence, R. I., is a graduate of Brown University, and of the Berkeley Divinity School. He served from 1822 to 1944 in the United States Marine Corps, and from 1945 to 1946 he was assistant in two mission churches in Rhode Island. Since 1946 he has been teaching high school English, public speaking and journalism at San Rafael Military Academy, San Rafael, Calif.

Mr. McGinnis expects to sail for China in mid-August.

PALESTINE NEEDS RELIEF URGENTLY

New York, N. Y.—The Rev. Dr. Walter C. Klein, American Chaplain in Jerusalem, in a communication to the National Council, calls attention to the fact that "In its preoccupation with the political aspect of the Palestine problem, the world has not observed that thousands of Arabs are facing complete and unmitigated poverty. Simple people from urban areas as well as rural have abandoned their homes, under the influence of a fear only too well grounded, and have crowded such refugee concentration centers as the Armenian Convent and the Greek Orthodox Convent in Jerusalem. Bombs and looters have made short work of unprotected property, and hundreds of families have lost home, furniture, and the means of making a living. In many parts of Palestine banking has been at a standstill since two weeks or more before the termination of the Mandate. Large numbers of refugees have exhausted their supply of cash and simply cannot buy the food that is available. Medical service is inadequate. Stringent sanitary measures have been adopted and enforced wherever the Arabs have the requisite personnel, but everybody admits that Arab resources are insufficient.

"So many missionaries have left the country that those who remain can barely meet current and routine demands. It is generally felt that no agency in the country has shown itself equal to the task of relieving even the present distress, to say nothing of the horrors that winter will bring if steps are not taken, without delay, to house, feed, and clothe the multitudes now entirely dependent on foreign generosity. The Christians who have been the guardians of the Holy Places for hundreds of years have fallen into a bitter despair.

KAGAWA COMMITTEE TO RAISE $60,000. WILL REBUILD SKINKAWA

Toyohiko Kagawa, world-renowned Japanese Christian leader, celebrates his sixtieth birthday this month. In recognition of his birthday, as well as of the 40th anniversary later this year of the beginning of Kagawa's first settlement work in the Kobe slums, friends of Kagawa in this country plan to raise $60,000 to rebuild the Kobe settlement destroyed by bombs during the war.

Kagawa, born July 10, 1888, son of a humble dancing girl of that time, knew extreme hardships and cruelty in his childhood but found comfort in his religious experiences. A victim of tuberculosis when a young man, Kagawa decided to devote what little he thought was left of his life to helping the forgotten millions in the slums of Kobe.

On Christmas Eve, 1908, he began his ministry in a 6 x 6 foot shack. By the time the last war began, Kagawa had become an international figure—with 19 churches, 4 city settlements, 17 kindergartens and schools and many other social and religious institutions as the result of his labor.

Near the original shack were other buildings which housed his social, medical and religious activities. This settlement was named Shinkawa. During the war these buildings, as well as his settlements in Tokyo and Osaka were completely destroyed by bombs. It is the aim of the sponsoring committee to raise enough money to rebuild and furnish this settlement at Kobe.

The estimated cost of the building is $50,000 and the necessary equipment, $10,000. The combined cost, $60,000, would mean $1,000 for each year of Kagawa's life of devoted service. The settlement would house a church, a nursery, club rooms, medical clinic, cooperative store and credit union offices.

The sponsoring committee, with headquarters at S. Parkes Cadman Memorial Center, Brooklyn, under the name of Toyohiko Kagawa Sixtieth Birthday, Fortieth Anniversary Fund, includes more than ninety names of outstanding leaders in the United Etates, among them—Harry Emerson Fosdick, Paul Hutchinson, E. Stanley Jones, Bishop William Scarlett, Walter Van Kirk, Luman Shafer and others. Galen M. Fisher is chairman and J. Henry Carpenter, secretary.

LIFE STORY OF MARY REED FILMED

Leprosy Work Memorialized

"Mary Reed," a motion picture portraying the life of the renowned American missionary who spent 52 years in exile to minister to leprosy victims in northern India, will be released this fall by the American Mission to Lepers, Incorporated. A two-reel sound film in Kodachrome, it was produced for the American Mission to Lepers by Crusader Films under the direction of Alfred Franz Stury. It is the life story of Mary Seed, born in Lowell, Ohio, in 1854, who served in India from 1884 to the time of her death in April, 1943, as a missionary of The Methodist Church, and whose heroism, like Father Damier's has been an inspiration to Americans of all denominations.

Hazel Keener plays the leading role. Two surviving sisters of the famous missionary, Mrs. Rena Ferguson and Mrs. Sadie Wickens, witnessed the filming of a large portion of the motion picture. In scope the film covers Mary Reed's life, her girlhood in Crooked Tree, Ohio, up to the time of her founding of the Chandag Heights Leprosy Mission.

Widely known in this country, her birthday on December 4th is annually observed in many churches, and on at least one occasion, her 80th birthday, she won nationwide acclaim for her unusual service.

Chandag Heights is today, as the result of Mary Reed's work, a colony of 100 acres, with homes for 100 men and women patients, a dispensary, a hospital, and achapel.

The premiere showing of "Mary Reed" will be held in Chicago on the occasion of the 41st annual convention of the American Mission to Lepers, October 21 and 22. It will be available to interdenominational church groups, church federations, and councils of church women for premiere showings in other communities later this fall and winter.

ST. ANDREW'S SEMINARY, MANILA, HAS FIRST COMMENCEMENT

New York, N. Y.—St. Andrew's Theological Seminary, Manila, has had its first commencement, at the end of its first year of existence. The graduates had beeen under instruction for a long time previous to the setting up of the seminary, when St. Andrew's was a training school for all forms of ministry, ordained and unordained.

Seven young men received their diplomas, at a service at which the Rev. A. Ervine Swift gave the address.

The Rev. W. S. Mandell, warden of the seminary, points out that not one of the young graduates has been a student for less than thirteen years, years spent both in study and in practical work. "Under the leadership of the Rev. Edward Longid, the Rev. Albert Masferre, and the deacon, Mr. Suluen, these men preached, encouraged, consoled and kept the Church together all through the war. Here was a test of vocation more lengthy and difficult than the Church usually imposes upon its men. Not one of these vocations was lost."

The graduates are: Edmund Accos, Benito Cabanban, Pable Moiket, Alejandrino Rulite, Theodore Saboy, Braulio Tade and Henry Umangil.

The Rev. Eugene H. Buxton, rector of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Bellefontaine, and minister-in-charge of St. Mark's Mission, Sidney, will become rector of St. James' Church, Wooster, Ohio, on September 5th.

MISS MABEL R. SCHAEFFER

New York, N. Y.—Miss Mabel R. Schaeffer, formerly of Tulsa, Okla., missionary in the Orient since 1921, died in St. Luke's Hospital, New York, August 1, after several months' illness. Miss Schaeffer was born in Valley Falls, Kansas, but was living in Tulsa, graduate of a normal school, and a member of Trinity Church there, when appointed as a teacher of English for St. Paul's University, Tokyo, arriving there in May, 1921.

On furlough in 1941, she was transferred to the Hawaiian Islands and during the war remained there as head of Cluett House, a Church residence for girls working in Honolulu. After the war, as there was need of reinforcements in the Philippines before opportunity was open for return to Japan, Miss Schaeffer went to Manila to teach in St. Stephen's School for Chinese girls. She returned to Japan in December, 1947, but was invalided home only a few months later. The funeral was held in the chapel of St. Luke's Hospital, New York, Bishop Bentley officiating. Two brothers and two sisters survive her.

THE REVEREND MOTHER ALICE, S. H. C. J.

Albany, N. Y.—The Reverend Mother Alice, who had been fifty-four years a member and twenty-seven years Mother Superior of the Sisterhood of the Holy Child Jesus, died on the Feast of the Transfiguration, August 6th, at the age of eighty-nine. Mother Alice was the third Superior of the Order and since assuming this office served also as superintendent of the Child's Hospital.

She was the daughter of the late Perry and Jeannette Bowers, of New London, Connecticut. Her father was a sea captain and she was born aboard his ship, February 23, 1859, in the harbor of Jarvis Island in the Pacific. She was baptized Alice Jarvis, the second name commemorating the place of her birth. She was among the oldest alumnae of St. Agnes School, Albany, from which she was graduated in 1880. She was descended from Bishop Seabury and was a cousin of the late Bishop McKim, of Japan. She acquired her education under the influence of Bishop Doane and carried on the traditions of her early life down the years. She was an honored friend of the successive Bishops of Albany and of the Deans of the Cathedral of All Saints who deferred to her judgment and relied upon her devotion. She will be remembered as having possessed amazing tact and sympathy toward those in misfortune, a maternal passion for little children, and a faculty for discerning need that was always expressed in graceful helpfulness. Mother Alice was singularly fond of animals and pets and was constantly befriending some overworked dray horse, stray cat or homeless dog, or disposing of a pitiful dead bird. When "Gallant Bess" was displayed in Albany, she was exhibited to the young ward patients in the Child's Hospital and Mother Alice, although then an invalid, received Bess in the hospital reception room and the little horse responded instinctively to her endearments.

On the fortieth anniversary of the Child's Hospital in 1937, Mother Alice was honored with a testimonial from Bishop Oldham and the medical staff of the institution. At the eightieth Convention of the Diocese of Albany last May Mother Alice was among four persons upon whom awards were conferred by Bishop Oldham for sacrificial service to the Church over a long period of time.

The Rt. Rev. Frederick L. Barry, Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese, presided at the burial service which was held in the chapel of the Sisters' House adjoining the Child's Hospital. The Very Rev. Howard S. Kennedy celebrated the Requiem, assisted by the Rev. Michael R. Becker, chaplain of the Hospital. Dean Kennedy had the committal in the Albany Rural Cemetery, assisted by Canon Becker.

MISS HENRIETTA LOUISE EVERETT

Miss Henrietta Louisa (Etta L.) Everett, retired Mission worker and devoted member of the Episcopal Church, entered Life Eternal, June 7th, 1948, at Arlington, Virginia.

Born April 27th, 1868, at "Little Everton", Harford County, Maryland, the daughter of Rev. William B. Everett, of Maryland and Ellen S. (Whitten) Everett, of Virginia, she early removed, with her parents, to Virginia where much of her long and useful life was spent.

Educated at home and at Stuart Hall, Staunton, Miss Everett taught a private school for awhile in or near Stephen's City, Virginia. Later, for eight years, she assisted in mission work at Ada, Virginia, her brother, Rev. William B. Everett, 3rd, having charge of Trinity Church, Marshall, Emmanuel, Delaplane, and the mountain mission of St. Andrew's; her sister, Miss Lelia G. Everett, being the Welfare and Mission worker at the latter.

Making her winter home with her brother, Lloyd T. Everett, in DeLand, Florida, from 1941 onward, Miss Everett helped as hostess at the Center for service men stationed at the Navy Airfield near DeLand, during World War II, and, as long as her health permitted, did mission work among the inmates of the county jail, besides spending much time writing letters of comfort and cheer to the elderly and shut-ins of her acquaintance.

To the end she maintained an active interest in the Bible Class she had taught at St. Andrew's Mission. Two of the mountain men were among her pallbearers and many members of the class came with other friends from Fauquier County to the funeral services conducted by Rev. William Williams, June 9th, at St. George's Church, Arlington and, following Miss Everett's special request, completed at Zion Church, Fairfax, where interment was had in Fairfax Cemetery.

Miss Everett is survived by a brother, Lloyd T. Everett of DeLand, Florida, two sisters, Miss Lelia G. Everett and Mrs. Fontaine Davison, a niece, Mrs. Lellie D. Merritt and her two sons, Capt. H. W. Merritt and Fontaine L. Merritt, all of Arlington, Virginia.

Resolutions of the Lambeth Conference

MAN, THE CHURCH AND THE WORLD

DECISIONS ON SOUTH INDIA AND NANDYAL

Progress Toward Unity

—o—

Sermon At The Closing Service Of Lambeth Conference

By The ARCHBISHOP OF YORK

The World Council of Churches

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

This is the first of a series of reports on the first assembly of the World Council of Churches held at Amsterdam, which I attended.

Just before the Assembly opened, 160 Church leaders from every part of the world gathered together at a student camp near Utrecht to do the preliminary work of the Assembly.

The human elements of such a conference were most intriguing, since one met old and new friends, coming from the most varied conditions of life. I shared a bedroom with a bishop from Sweden and a theological professor from Hungary. We naturally plied our friends from behind the iron curtain with many questions about conditions in their part of the world, and they in turn asked what chances Henry Wallace had to become President of the United tSates, etc., etc.

On interesting aspect of these world conferences is that the second World War has made English a practically universal language so that old barriers to understanding have disappeared and laborious translations have become unnecessary. In addition to the strictly Anglo-Saxon delegates, the Asiatics all knew English from the mission schools of China and India.

The northern Europeans have learned English, mostly from British broadcasting during the war. Our Dutch hosts were always multilingual, since every Dutch child learns English, German, and French in addition to his own language. The Germans learned our language from our army of occupation. Only a bare ten per cent of the conference did not understand the almost universal language.

Common ideas were not as universal as the common languag. There was less than 90 per cent agreement upon the matters which affect the reunion of the churches. However, there was a fine spirit of charity which augured well for the achievement of genuine agreements. But when such a question as the nature of the Church was discussed it was interesting to hear the contrasting statements of a Greek Orthodox theologian on the one hand and an Anglo-Catholic or a continental Protestant on the other.

Karl Barth, the famous Swiss theologian, was present and he usually stated the continental position, and did so with great authority. His authority is in fact tremendous. I read a letter of his to the Reformed Church of Hungary in which in effect he advised them how to proceed in the election of a Bishop of Budapest. He spoke almost as with Papal authority.

Considering the rigor, not to say the frequent truculence of his public utterances, many of the delegates were surprised by his personal charm and amiability. Like St. Paul, he is much more formidable in his letters than in his personal presence.

The 160 leaders who gathered near Utrecht were the nucleus of the much larger numbers who later assembled at Amsterdam to create for the first time since the Protestant Reformation a united Church or at least a unity of all non-Roman Churches.

CHAPLAINS MUST BE ENDORSED

New York, N. Y.—The Army and Navy Division of the National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church advises that all Episcopal clergy seeking commisssions as Chaplains in the National Guard should write the Division for an application blank before accepting commissions. All National Guard Chaplains must be federally recognized before they can receive drill pay. To be federally recognized by the Department of the Army, the Chief of Chaplains must receive ecclesiastical endorsement from the Army and Navy Division of the National Council before he can recommend Episcopal clergy for commissions.

The War Department Technical Manual 16-205 entitled The Chaplain, shows the requirements for a Chaplain's commission in the National Guard.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

Resolutions of the Lambeth Conference

We print below a summary of the Resolutions of the Lambeth Conference, as given in the Report of the Conference. A word should be said on the authority of the findings of the Conference. The Resolutions alone represent the mind of the whole Conference. The Reports of the Committees have been received by the Conference; but the responsibility for the statements and opinions which they contain rests solely with the committees by whom they were prepared. Nor can the findings be made the basis of canonical or disciplinary enactments until they have been promulgated in and accepted by the various Provinces and Churches of the Anglican Communion.

"The Doctrine of Man"

The first resolutions deal with the Christian doctrine of man. Man has a spiritual as well as a material nature; grace, offered him in Jesus Christ, enables him to rise superior to his sinful environment, and become the child of God. As man's knowledge grows, so does his responsibility. No view of life which confines men's interests to this world alone can satisfy man; claims of the State to control all human life imperil the recognition of the human person"s individual responsibility before God.

The following section declares that as every human person is the object of God's love, he is bound by certain duties and possesses certain rights. These rights include security: the right to work, bring up a family, and possess personal property; freedom of speech and discussion, and opportunity to obtain accurate information; and finally freedom of religion, which should include the right to associate with those of like belief, and to give definite religious teaching to one's children.

"Church and World"

The Conference reaffirms that "war as a method of settling international disputes is incompatible with the teaching of our Lord," urges that international armaments be reduced, and in particular that atomic energy should be so controlled that it cannot be used as a war weapon; advocates speedy conclusion of the peace treaties, an active international policy for the settlement of displaced persons, and a juster distribution of the world's economic resources. A particular resolution urges that in Palestine, Jerusalem and its surroundings be placed under international control.

In relation to the modern State, the Conference condemns the doctrine that power is its own justification. The Church proclaiming the sovereignty of God must repudiate the unrestricted sovereignty of the State. The individual does not exist for the State; rather, one of the ends of the State must be the development of human personality. Church members should accept political duties where the State recognizes its responsibility for human welfare; they should jealously guard the rights of the Church freely to worship, teach and evangelize.

Marxian Communism, denying the existence of God, revelation and a future life, is contrary to the Christian faith; moreover, it treats the individual man as a means, not an end, and regards the moral law as contingent on the needs of the State. The Church must show by sound teaching that it possesses a better way of life, must fearlessly oppose economic injustice, and by intelligent study meet the Communist challenge.

Religious Education

The Conference, "'while giving full support to State education, is convinced that there is a value for the community in the tradition of Church education." It places the responsibility for maintaining this on individual clergymen and parishes. It welcomes provision in England for religious instruction and worship in State schools and universities, and asks the training colleges to provide adequately trained teachers in this field.

The great influence of films and broadcasting, both for good and evil, and the danger that films shown to children may undermine sound educational influences, are both recognized by the Conference, which welcomes the efforts being made to improve the quality of films and the provision of wholesome films and broadcasts for children. The Church is urged to investigate, further, the use of films and radio programs as a means of religious education.

All members of the Church are summoned to confess their failure, rededicate themselves to Christ's service, and strengthen the life and worship of their local church. Bishops and parish priests are exhorted to shoulder their responsibilities; while all Churchpeople are reminded of their duties of regular worship (especially at Holy Communion), private prayer and Bible reading, and financial support of the Church at home and overseas.

While "valuing the witness of those who through a special vocation keep themselves apart from the world," the Conference emphasizes the duty of most Christians to take part in the life of the world. It reminds them all of the need for evangelization in their own circle; the aim of promoting justice to all, irrespective of race and color; the recognition of the grave effects of large-scale gambling—"no Church organization should make money by gambling, nor should the State raise money through sweepstakes or similar methods"—and the importance of fostering in young women a sense of the dignity of marriage and motherhood.

An appeal is made for united Christian action, irrespective of denominational differences. The Conference thanks God for the revival of interest in the cause of Christian unity.

"Christian Unity"

The most important resolutions on the subject of Christian unity are those which deal with the Church of South India. While thanking God for the measure of unity there achieved, and hoping for eventual full communion between the Anglican Communion and the Church of South India, the Conference hopes that the authorities of the latter will reconsider provisions and statements of its Constitution which have caused grave anxiety. Particular reference is made to six points, specified in the report of Christian Unity, but not mentioned in detail in the text of the resolutions. These recommend: (1) the re-drafting of the Church of South India's statement of faith, so as to place beyond question its adherence to historic Christianity; (2) the removal of ambiguities from its statement on the Sacraments; (3) the making of the rite of Confirmation of general obligation;

(4) the modification of synodical procedure to clarify the position and rights of bishops; (5) reconsideration of the relation of the Church of South India with non-episcopal bodies; and (6) a clarification of the future terms of admission to the Church of South India of ministers not episcopally ordained.

Present Action

For the present the Conference recommends that, subject to local regulations, ex-Anglican members of CSI should be allowed full privileges of Communion and ministry throughout the Anglican Communion; that members of the Anglican Communion who join CSI should not be subject to censure; that ministers of CSI not episcopally ordained should not be regarded as having acquired any new rights or status in relation to the Anglican Communion; that confirmed laymen in CSI should be received as communicants, and that other recognized communicants of CSI should be admitted to Communion by the principle of "economy," subject always to local regulations."

Opinion is divided as to the status of the ministers consecrated or ordained by the CSI rite. While the majority holds that they should be acknowledged as truly ordained ministers, a substantial minority believes that "it is not yet possible to pass any definite judgment upon their precise status." The Conference as a whole recognizes that there will be local differences within the Anglican Communion regarding their status, but unanimously hopes that "such differences may never in any part of the Anglican Communion be made a ground for condemnation of action taken by any Church, Province or Diocese."

The Conference concurs with the recommendations of the same Committee with reference to Nandyal. (These again are not specified in the text of the Resolutions). No Anglican province is to be set up within the CSI area, but no Anglican may be coerced into membership of CSI. The arrangement whereby a Commissary of the Metropolitan should have oversight of Anglicans who have not joined CSI shall be continued "for as long as may be necessary." When episcopal ministrations are necessary, the Metropolitan, with the consent of the Moderator of CSI and the local bishop of that body, may arrange for an Anglican bishop to carry out such ministrations.

Future Proposals

For the future in all approaches to reunion, theological differences, especially those concerning the Church and the ministry, should be faced at the outset; the unification of the ministry in a form satisfactory to all should be regarded as a pre-requisite in future proposals; the connexion between the Church and the ministry should be safeguarded; and a step involving the withdrawal of any part of the Anglican Communion from the whole should not be taken without consultation with representatives of the entire Anglican family of Churches.

A carefully guarded encouragement is given to proposals for providing a mutually recognized ministry in advance of organic union. Disadvantages are recognized, and it is affirmed that organic unity must be the final goal. The Statement on Faith and Order prepared by the Episcopal Church of USA is commended as in harmony with the Lambeth Quardrilateral. The reopening of negotiations with the Presbyterian Church of Scotland and the English nonconformist bodies, in view of the Archbishop's Cambridge sermon, is recommended.

Proposals for reunion in Ceylon are regarded as "among the most promising of various schemes." Approaches in North India, Iran and Nigeria are also mentioned. Other resolutions deal with relations with the Orthodox Churches; the Old Catholics; the lesser Eastern Churches; and Lutheran and other Evangelical Churches in Europe. Of particular interest is the request to the Archbishop of Armagh to enquire into the status of the reformed bodies in Spain and Lusitania with whom the Church of Ireland has maintained friendly relations between Anglicanism and other Christian communions, with a particular commendation of the World Council of Churches.

FAR EASTERN ANOMALIES

Marriage and Baptism

The final Resolution of the Lambeth Conference deal with the Anglican Communion, the Church's Discipline in Marriage, Baptism and Confirmation, and certain other details of sacramental administration. We summarize their content here.

The chief bond of unity in the Anglican Communion is to be found in the Book of Common Prayer. All revisions of this Book should be made in accordance with accepted liturgical worship. In 1949 it is hoped that services will be held throughout the Anglican Communion to commemorate the quartercentenary of the first English Prayer Book.

The Conference encourages steps already in progress for the formation of new provinces in Africa (East, West and Central) and in the Pacific. It recommends the appointment of an advisory council on missionary strategy, and of liaison officers between different parts of the Anglican Communion. Recalling with thanks the martyrdoms of recent years, it emphasizes the duty of worldwide evangelization, and individual response to vocations to the ministry and to missionary work.

Exchange of information is desirable throughout the Anglican Communion with a view to attaining the highest possible standard in training the Church's ministers both before and after ordination. It is urged that a Central College for the Anglican Commission should be established immediately at St. Augustine's, Canterbury, and that a Congress representing all parts of the Anglican Communion be held in 1953.

Finally, attention is paid to the status of six Japanese bishops. These were priests consecrated during war time by the minority of Japanese Anglican bishops who acquiesced in pressure to join the Government-sponsored "Amalgamated Church." Their consecration has never been recognized by the Japanese House of Bishops, though the Japanese Prayer Book rite was used at their consecration. It is recommended that they be received back into Nippon Sei Ko Kwai as bishops without jurisdiction; but that they should be eligible at any future time to receive the right to exercise episcopal functions.

Marriage Discipline

The Resolutions reaffirm the need for maintaining the sanctity of the marriage bond, and the Church's standard of discipline. Regular instruction on the subject should be regarded as a normal pastoral duty in every parish. The marriage of one whose former partner is still living may not be celebrated according to the rites of the Church, unless it be established that no marriage bond recognizable by the Church originally existed. (There seems to be a reference here to the Canon of the Church of USA, which makes some provision for nullifying such "marriages.") Confirmed members of the Church who marry contrary to the Church's law must be subject to the Church's discipline as regards admission to Holy Communion. Cases where such persons desire to be admitted must be referred to the bishop, subject to provincial regulations. A warning is given to Anglicans against contracting marriages with Roman Catholics, which necessarily involve a promise that children should be brought up in an alien religious system.

Christian Initiation

Interesting recommendations are made with regard to the Christian sacraments of initiation. It is not held desirable to change the present sequence of Baptism, Confirmation, and admission to Communion. Infant Baptism presupposes that the infant will be brought up in the faith and practice of the Church. The clergy must put parents in mind of this duty; but the Conference "deprecates any policy which would lead to the widespread exclusion of infants from Baptism." Nevertheless, it recommends that no unbaptized person should be admitted as a godparent; at least one godparent should be a practicing communicant; Churchpeople should be encouraged to offer themselves as godparents when necessary; the parents themselves may undertake godparents' duties. Before Confirmation all candidates should be given definite instruction about repentance and forgiveness, "as set forth in the Exhortation in the Order of Holy Communion."

Ministry of Women

Final sections of the resolutions deal with the ministry of women and the administration of Holy Communion. The Conference rejects a proposal received from South China, and referred to Lambeth by the General Synod of the Church in China, to the effect that for an experimental period of twenty years deaconesses might be ordained to the priesthood. The General Synod wished to know "whether or not such liberty to experiment within the framework of the Anglican Communion would be in accordance with Anglican tradition and order." The Conference replies definitely in the negative; it reaffirms the resolution of 1930 that the Order of Deaconesses is the only order of the minsitry which can be recognized in the case of women; and states that "the time has not come" for the formal consideration of the admission of women to the priesthood. Renewed emphasis is laid on the importance of the work of deaconesses, and the need for their encouragement.

Holy Communion should be administered normally in both kinds, in accordance with universal primitive practice; and a common chalice should be used. Where required, local sanction can be given to administration by intinction; but the method adopted should not be left to the discretion of individual priests.

The Lambeth Conference Closing Service in the Abbey

Sermon by The ARCHBISHOP OF YORK

"When these things begin to come to pass, look up, and lift up your heads; because your redemption draweth nigh." —St. Luke xxi. 28.

These words are found towards the end of a terrifying description of things which are to come to pass. Nature and man seem to have joined in alliance to bring destruction upon the earth. Earthquakes, famines, pestilence: signs in the sun, moon, and stars: the roaring of the sea and the billows cause widespread panic. And the wickedness of man intensifies the confusion; there are wars and rumors of war, nation rising against nation, the outbreak of persecution, the march of armies, the flight of refugees, and the capture and massacre of those who failed to escape. On all sides there is distress, perplexity, and fear. And then like a sudden gap in the black thunder clouds revealing the blue sky behind them, there comes this cry: "Look up, lift up your heads; because your redemption draweth nigh."

AN AGE OF REVOLUTION

We also are in an age of storm and strife. It has been very truly said that the recent rate of change has been so great that it is an age of revolution. Greater changes, social, political, and economic, have taken place in the life span of most of us than in all the previous centuries since the coming of Christ. Two great wars have left part of Europe in ruin, with their people destitute and hopeless. Both in the West and the East millions of terrified refugees have been driven by force or fear from their homes.

The demons of hate and suspicion are at large, and the air is full of rumors of war. And over mankind there hangs the menace of the atomic bomb, which with other weapons almost as deadly may finally destroy our civilization. And the changes in man's spiritual and mental outlook have been very great. He has lost his faith in God and in himself. Christianity in most countries now is the religion of a minority, and its doctrine and moral teaching are repudiated or neglected.

We are watching the death of the old age, and the new is still in its birth pangs. The civilization of which we were so proud and thought so permanent is now threatened with the fate which has overwhelmed twenty civilizations which once were strong and flourishing, but now are dying, or are buried already beneath the desert sands of the East, or whose melancholy ruins stand on the shores of the Mediterranean. The hearts of millions are fainting for fear from expectation of the dread things which may come upon the earth.

A WORD OF GOD SPOKEN WITH AUTHORITY

It is natural that in these days of crisis the Church should be asked if it has any message to give or guidance to offer. It is not only Christians who are asking this. There are many who make no claim to be Christians, but who, experiencing the bankruptcy of a materialistic secularism, are now ready to listen to and to welcome a Word of God spoken with authority. For man is made in the image of God and will not permanently be content with a creed which imprisons him in this life; presently inspired with a divine discontent he will lift his eyes from the muck rake in the hope that he may have some glimpse of that which is eternal.

Many are waiting to see if this great gathering of bishops has any message for mankind in this hour of crisis. I am sure that all of us, individually and collectively, both before and during the Conference, have been straining our eyes to see if God has any new vision for us, and straining our ears for any new word which He might wish us to hear and to declare. We must, however, acknowledge quite frankly that, however great man's need may be, God does not necessarily meet it by a new word or vision.

There have been long periods both in the Jewish and Christian Church when there was no open vision. The Church, like the individual, has often had to pass through the mystical experience of the dark night of the soul. God may feel it right to refuse to give the Church clear vision until it has repented of lukewarmness and blindness; before it is given it may have to pray much more earnestly that the Holy Spirit may "Enable with perpetual light, the dullness of our blinded sight." Or God may withhold from the Church a new word, and thus compel us to turn back again to old truths which have been too easily taken for granted and sometimes neglected.

THE CENTRAL TRUTH

It is the central truth of the Christian faith that there is the only and complete answer to man's cry for light and deliverance. Every religious revival in the history of the Church has been due to the direct, uncompromising preaching of Jesus Christ as Lord and Saviour. In an age of wild storm and darkness an ethical system will give no help. Not even the presentation of Jesus as the perfect example of love or as the gentle teacher of the way of sacrifice will help men and women in despair. A timid, sentimental, half-hearted showing forth of Jesus Christ has neither attractive nor saving power. It is the full historic Christian faith that alone can give light, kindle enthusiasm, and conquer the world; and that faith declares that Jesus Who was born in a manger, Who worked as a carpenter, Who often had no roof to shelter Him nor pillow on which to lay His head, Who was scorned and rejected of men, Who was condemned, tortured, and hung as a criminal, is our risen and ascended Lord and Saviour, God of God, Light of Light, Very God of Very God. It is this faith which alone will prevail. It is only the supernatural Christ Who has the power to save. Men are looking neither for an organization nor for a code of rules, but for One Who will save and guide them.

To the multitudes who are now like sheep without a shepherd, the Church must call with persistent love and persuasiveness, "Lock up, lift up your heads, for the Christ Who is your Redemption is near you."

GOD, MAN, AND THE TOTALITARIAN STATE

It is this doctrine of God in Christ which alone will bring reassurance and hope to a bewildered world. It is a message of reassurance to man dwarfed by the vastness of the universe as revealed by modern science, and treated by the totalitarian State as a means to its own power. Man feels he is at the mercy of systems he has created and of inventions he has made, but which he is powerless to control. But Christ revealed the greatness and value of man; for He taught that God is the Father as well as the Sovereign and Judge, and as Father He has an equal love and care for all His children. Christ died for all, whatever their race or class. And in the perfect life of Christ we see the height to which God meant man to rise. It is Christ's revelation of the greatness and value of man which is the justification of his claim for freedom, for personal security, and other human rights. It is because man is made in the image of God that it is blasphemy to degrade, enslave or torture him. It is because Christ declared that what was done to the least of men was done unto Him, the eternal Son of God, that the Christian Gospel brings hope to the despised, to the downtrodden, and the outcast.

But if the revelation of the greatness of man stood by itself it would bring despair rather than hope. For man would see not only what he was meant to be, but he would discover how impossible it is for him to rise from the old self unto the new life. If Jesus Christ was only the perfect example or teacher He could not save men nineteen hundred years after His death. It is because He is the eternal Son of God Who died on the Cross and rose again that He is powerful to save. In these last years we have learnt to our bitter cost that good intentions and human schemes will not by themselves save man from destruction. It is the living Christ Who brings new hope, and power to those overwhelmed with a sense of frustration and despair.

AN UNWORLDLY CHURCH

But if the Church is to win men to accept the supernatural Christ, its own life must be unworldly and supernatural. It must be clearly distinct and separate from the world. In the early Church there was no possibility of confusion between the Church and the world, the Church went its own way in complete spiritual freedom, and the State by persecution showed its fear and resentment at the existence of a society which had an independent life. The Church survived the fall of Jerusalem and the collapse of the Roman Empire, for it was detached from the world and the State, and did not share their ruin. The modern growth of the power of the State is a threat to the spiritual freedom of the Church whether it is established or disestablished, though an established Church is exposed to special dangers. But worldliness may pervade a Church however free it may be from the State. There is a profound difference between the Church and the world, and this should be shown in the holy life of the body in which the Spirit of Jesus dwells.

The Church has a different set of values from the world, honoring much that the world despises, and rejecting much to which the world gives high honor. And because its ideals and values are different, the world will often hate and persecute the Church. Our Lord never spoke as if His Church would be popular, but rather that it would be small in numbers, but so holy that it would be the leaven leavening the lump. A Church which accommodates itself to the views of the world on marriage or power or wealth can neither teach nor rebuke it. The Church must be detached and distinct from the world if it is to give it the light, guidance, and help which it needs.

SCANDAL OF DIVIDED CHRISTENDOM

And the holiness of the Church will be seen in its unity. Only an united Church can hope to stand firm against the united front of Islam, Hinduism, or of an aggressive and atheistic Communism. We see more plainly than our forefathers the scandal and weakness of a divided Christendom. How can we expect the nations to take very seriously the appeal of the Church for international peace and order when Christians are unable to meet together at the Table of the Lord Whom they all serve? Though we cannot yet see the way to visible unity, this is still very far off, most earnestly we must continue to pray and work for the day when all Christians are united into One Holy Catholic and Apostolic Church.

There is nothing new in the message the Church has to give today; it is the old message of Christ as the Saviour both of the individual and of society. It is the old gospel applied to the special circumstances of our day. But as we hear and give that message today, there are found in it two special notes, the notes of urgency and expectancy.

THE HOUR OF CRISIS

There is the note of urgency. We must give our message and do our work for Christ and His Church at once, and without delay. All through the Gospels there runs this note of urgency. Repeatedly in the first chapter of St. Mark the word "straightway" or "immediately" is used as if Our Lord was impelled by an inner sense of urgency. The writers of the New Testament are men who are convinced of the need for immediate action, there must be no delay for the night cometh when no man can work. We, on the contrary, have taken it for granted that we have plenty of time for God's work. We have stressed the importance of caution rather than of boldness, of thoroughness rather than of speed. We have often chosen the policy of undermining the walls of the hostile city rather than attempting to seize it by violence. But now with the discovery and use of the atomic bomb we live more nearly in the spiritual atmosphere of the first Christians who expected at any time the end of the world. Within a few years our civilization may pass away. Now, therefore, is the hour of crisis; before it is too late we must preach the Gospel and bear our witness; now we must repent and call others to repentance before the door of opportunity is shut.

HOPE

And with the note of urgency there is also the note of expectancy. The Church waited gladly and hopefully for the return of its Lord: "Maranatha, the Lord is at hand" was a salutation not of dread but of expectant hope. Beneath the fears and forebodings of the modern world there is a strong element of expectancy. There is a deep hope among multitudes that out of the present confusion there may come a better world. And we who are Christians share this sense of expectancy, we have moments when we feel we are near some great change—perhaps a religious revival such as those which in the past suddenly brought new life to dead bones; perhaps some great deliverance from fear; perhaps in some undreamed of way a coming of the Lord as often He has come in history. As a Church watchful and expectant we must wait on the Will of the Lord.

It is with this confident expectancy we shall, please God, return to our work in our several dioceses. We shall carry away happy memories of weeks of fellowship, conference, and prayer. We have made new friends. We have shared rich and varied experiences. We have reached on many matters a common mind. But while with thankfulness we shall recall these past weeks, with hope and expectation we shall also look to the

A clipping from a London newspaper carries a picture of a group of gentlemen with bared heads placing a wreath at the foot of the statue of Queen Anne. The caption under the picture was "The End of the Bounty."

"Three cheers for Queen Anne were given in Westminster yesterday afternoon," so the story ran. "They echoed a little sadly along the 18th century houses of Queen-Anne's-Gate. For Queen Anne's Bounty, founded for the benefit of the poor clergy, was dead after a life of 244 years, and the cheers ended the farewell ceremony at her statue.

"Today the £70,000,000 of the Bounty is to be joined to the £140,000,000 of the Ecclesiastical Commission to form the funds of the Church Commissioners for England, the new financial body of the established church."

No notice seems to have been taken in America of this event. One reason may be that Queen Anne's Bounty was intended entirely for the benefit of the clergymen of England, and no appropriation from it was ever made to any object in the American colonies. Yet because of the great importance of its work to the welfare of the poorer clergy of the Church of England it had also a strengthening effect upon the life of the Church both at home and abroad.

At the beginning of Queen Anne's reign in 1702, a condition existed within the Church, and had existed for generations, that a great many of the clergy, rectors and incumbents of parishes, received salaries so small as to be totally inadequate for the support of an incumbent. A report prepared in 1714 showed that there were in England at that time "5,082 livings under eighty pounds in annual value, of which more than 3,000 were under forty pounds, and 471 under ten pounds."

On the other hand there was among the perquisites of the Crown an income of about fifteen thousand pounds sterling per annum which had been established by King Henry VIII at the time of the Protestant Reformation in England. This particular income came from the Annates and Tithes paid by rectors of parishes as taxes upon the salaries received from their parishes. The Annates was a full year's income, which the rector had to pay upon receiving his induction as rector, and the Tithes consisted of one-tenth of the salary to be paid every year. Prior to the Reformation, when the Church of England was under the domination of Rome, the Pope demanded, and received more or less, these annates and tithes as a perquisite of the Papacy; but King Henry VIII forbade any further payment of this kind to the Pope, and ordered that these payments be made to the Crown. This custom continued in effect through his own and the succeeding reigns until that of Queen Anne .

It was due to the generosity of Queen Anne, and her devotion to the Church, that she secured the consent of Parliament to convey to a corporation all the title and interest of the Crown in this income from Annates and Tithes, with the instruction that this new Corporation should use it for the augmentation of the salaries of the poorer clergy. The corporation, called Queen Anne's Bounty, was duly formed, composed of more than seven hundred of the leading civil and ecclesiastical officials of England; and has continued in existence until the present day.

In addition to its annual income from Annates and Tithes, until the abolition of that form of taxation of clergy in 1926, the "Bounty" has at various times received additional grants from Parliament, and gifts and bequests from individuals, as its plans and spheres of work grew larger and more comprehensive. So, today, as it has become merged with the new organization, it owned permanent endowment funds amounting to seventy million pounds.

The first work of the "Bounty" was to augment the salaries of ministers receiving less than ten pounds per annum, (471 of them) and of those receiving less than thirty-five pounds. The policy for the beginning was, not to make direct gifts from its income to the individual clergyman, but to purchase income yielding landed property, with the title of each piece standing in the name of the Queen Anne's Bounty itself, but the income therefrom "earmarked" as augmentation of the salary paid by a particular small parish. In the beginning, as a rule, property to the value of two hundred pounds was purchased for each parish which was to be helped. In following this plan, the endowment funds of the Bounty grew from year to year as more and more tracts and buildings were purchased for the endowment of parishes.

As time passed, the Bounty has succeeded to a very notable degree in augmenting the annual income of the weaker parishes in England. It then turned its attention to other matters also pertaining to the welfare of clergymen incumbent in the poorer parishes. Perhaps the most notable of these additional services has been in helping the rectors to take care of dilapidation of the particular property for whose upkeep the rectory, or parsonage, with its glebe land and outnormally be the chancel of his Church building, and the rectory, or parsonage, with its globe land and outbuildings.

The Bounty provided a way by which the incumbent could pay a definite amount from year to year, instead of having need for repairs accumulate to an impossible figure; or it could help in the matter of the sale of rectory or parsonage no longer suitable for use, and the purchase or rebuilding of another.

As Queen Anne's Bounty has touched the life of the clergy through these 244 years of existence, it has proven a great blessing to the Church of England. Perhaps, owing to changed conditions the time has come for its work to be merged into that of the larger sphere of the newly formed Church Commissioners for England. But the whole membership of the Anglican Communion throughout the world might well join in spirit with the little group who placed a wreath at the foot of a time-worn statue in London, and gave three cheers in gratitude for the far-reaching effects of the love shown by a great Queen for her Church.

Thomas Campbell Darst, Bishop

Tom Darst was called by God to enter Paradise as this month began. He was one of the most beloved bishops of the Church. His warm personality and sincere interest in all people made him a great pastor. Forty years after he served as rector of a parish in Virginia, people still speak of his helpful ministry in times of trouble and sorrow. As a bishop, he was not a remote, administrative executive, but a father in God to thousands.

His diocese was largely a rural one. His leadership in this field was significant. The foundations he laid will continue to bear fruit for many years to come in East Carolina.

He was an able preacher and a graceful and delightful speaker. His sermon at the recent consecration of the Rt. Rev. William Gordon as Bishop of Alaska was powerful and moving. But many will also recall the twinkle in his eye as he spoke at parish dinners and on civic occasions.

His council was listened to with respect in the House of Bishops. In latter years, he was one of its sagest elder statesmen. But most of all in national Church affairs he will be remembered for his great interest in evangelism. He was chairman of the "Commission on Evangelism" of the twenties. This was one of the few truly effective efforts of our Church in this important field. The methods and materials developed by that Commission under Bishop Darst's leadership might well be studied with profit today. He was always distressed that this work was not carried on and buttressed by a permanent department in our national organization.

Bishop Darst was as busy since his retirement as diocesan as before it, fulfilling innumerable engagements to speak, aiding other bishops in many dioceses, and even filling vacant parishes for months at a time. He died as he lived, an active and stalwart soldier of the Lord Jesus Christ. We praise God for his life and ministry, and pray that he may go from strength to strength in God's heavenly kingdoms, and that we may have grace to follow his good example.

RETURNING TO WORK IN CHINA

New York, N. Y.—Mr. B. W. Lanphear of Worcester, Mass., sailed on a freighter of the Maersk Line from Brooklyn, N. Y., August 2, returning to his work in Wuhu, China, Diocese of Anking. Accompanied by some seventy pieces of baggage, more than 600 cubic feet, mostly relief goods, Mr. Lanphear expressed appreciation of the Maersk Line's consideration and cooperation. The trunks of relief clothing, boxes of books for the school library in Wuhu, and other needed supplies, represent many weeks of work in assembling and packing by friends in the diocese of Western Massachusett and elsewhere. The freighter's six-weeks voyage is by way of San Francisco, Manila, Iloilo, Cebu and Hongkong to Shanghai.

Mr. Lanphear has been on the mission staff since 1917 as teacher, treasurer, and in other capacities. He was one of the small group of foreigners who lived in Wuhu for four years of Japanese occupation and then was interned. He was seriously ill during most of the internment period but immediately on release returned to his station to get things in order before leaving on furlough. After a long convalescence in the United States he has recently completed a number of speaking tours and leaves for China in good health.

BORROWING TO FINANCE NEW WORK

Providence, R. I.—A current trend in life, including Church life, is found in Rhode Island, as elsewhere. What with the shortage of houses and apartments in the cities, and the urge for small houses away from the crowding of city streets, many families are leaving the cities for the suburbs or the country. There they remodel old houses, or build small new ones. After awhile the ties with the old church parishes grow less strong and also it is difficult to get the children to Sunday School or church. And the result? Churches lose members and Christian life is dimmer—unless new churches are built among the scattered people.

All the Christian bodies are feeling this movement, and the Episcopal Church in Rhode Island is doing something about it. The diocesan Convention has authorized the borrowing of $85,000 to help finance new work among our missions in Rhode Island.

College work is not neglected in this upswing effort. At Brown University and Pembroke College and the State College at Kingston, aggressive work is starting among the students, men and women, including a large number of ex-G. I.'s.

future. When we are discouraged by the stolid indifference of a pagan world, and by the slight impression we seem to make on it, we shall hear the call, "Lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." When some of you return to work which is dangerous, exhausting, and depressing, in your darkest hour of anxiety God grant you may hear the promise: "Your redemption draweth nigh." When the Church has to face unpopularity and scorn, with the falling away of many, it will hear the Master speak: "Your redemption draweth nigh." And when the tired body fails, and life draws to a close, then will be heard the trumpet cry, "Look up, lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh."

Seabury House at Greenwich, Conn., has extensive grounds. During the period of vacancy before the Church acquired the Center, the grass, weeds and brush grew lushly. This month (August) a Work Camp of boys from the Second Province is housed there. and much clearing and cleaning is being done. The boys work about four hours a day, and in addition have a program of study, recreation and worship. The Rev. Knud Larsen, rector of Grace Church, Rutherford, N. J., is leader.

Among the wisest things that the revisors of 1928 did was to transpose two prayers in the communion service.

They moved the Lord's Prayer from its position following the administration of the elements to its present place as a part of the Consecration Prayer, and they brought the "Prayer of Humble Access" from a place preceding the Consecration prayer to its present position on page 82, coming after the Lord's Prayer, and immediately before the administration of the elements.

The Lord's Prayer has been discussed in previous pages of these articles in sufficient detail to make further comment unnecesary. The introductory sentence, however, is something that requires some explanation. To many people it seems an odd thing that the minister should say, before beginning the Lord's Prayer, and now as our Saviour Christ hath taught us, we are bold to say." These words sound almost incongruous when followed by the gracious opening, "Our Father, etc."

This is one of those places where the historical background is both interesting and informative. In the early Church converts were put through a course of instrutcion that was like the lectures that are now given to candidates for admission to the Masonic Order. They were secret and the ten commandments, the apostles' creed and the Lord's Prayer were used as passwords among the early Christians. The last one of these private teachings to be learned was the Lord's Prayer, and this ancient preface to it was used, because it completed instruction and made the person a full fledged Christian, and in those days it really required some "boldness" to join a group whose members were liable to be taken out any day and be fed to a lion, or who might be placed on a street corner and oil poured over them and set on fire to be used as street lights. So a short sentence can remind us and impress upon us the dangers and difficulties through which the Church has come, and reminds us of past heroism.

R. C. MONTAGUE.

Immediate steps should be taken to strengthen the charter of the United Nations by modifying the veto power, and there should be a federal union now of all nations which favor this action. This according to action taken by the Diocesan Convention of Western Massachusetts.

LOOKING AHEAD

Our summer vacation days are about over. The heavy work of the Christian Program is about to begin. How many grave problems we are facing just now! But we must meet them bravely and in a noble, heroic way. Perhaps it would be well to begin with a few "DON'TS": Don't spend too much time condemning our co-workers. "Don't" forget that none of us is perfect, we all err and stray like lost sheep. Our most desperate need is for a Good Shepherd to lead us into the paths of righteousness. Let us try to be good shepherds, and help our weaker brothers. We want to build up a world fellowship and make people happy and peaceful and kindly. A new disciple was heard to remark a short time ago: "That the old Church workers were too old-fashioned. They do not seem to realize that we are living in a new age. But is that any reason that we should neglect the beautiful qualities of the soul?

"LORD, MAKE ME KIND!"

Lord, make me kind!
The World is full enough of needless tears,
And hungry hearts are full of nameless fears,
To these no vision of Thy kindness appears.
Lord, make me kind!

Lord, make me think!
For thoughtlessness has caused so much of needless woe.
That thoughtless word of mine may grow and grow
Until, like torrents mad, no thing can stay its flow.
Lord, make me think!

The Diocese of Indianapolis is congratulating the congregation of St. Paul's, Indianapolis, upon the completion of a new church building. It notes also that since the first service in the new church last September, the Bishop has confirmed two classes of 76 each, a total of 152 persons. Of these new communicants, 25% were unbaptized until prepared for Confirmation; 60% had been baptized in other communions; and 15% were baptized in the Episcopal Church, the products of normal Church families. "This would seem to indicate that an old and established parish, set down in new surroundings, can be a real evangelizing force and spur us on in our program of Evangelism."

News of the Church

EPISCOPAL RADIO PROGRAM A REALITY

Aim To Reach Unchurched

New York, N. Y.—On October 1, at 8 P. M. E. S. T., the first weekly national network radio program of the Church will go on the air. It is produced by the National Council, with the enthusiastic and valuable cooperation of the Episcopal Actors' Guild.

This is the first important Church broadcast to be sent out on a weekday evening, when listening audiences are largest, rather than the usual Sunday daytime periods, when listening audiences dwindle to almost nothing. The Episcopal program goes on Friday evenings at 8, with a re-broadcast for the far west. It will be carried by the entire Mutual Broadcasting System network, with a few additional independent stations where Mutual coverage is not complete.

The program is a complete innovation in Church broadcasting. It is pioneering. It is planned to reach the unchurched, who will never, voluntarily tune in on the usual type of religious broadcast. It is hoped to develop some interest and relationship between the Church and many of the seventy million pagan-Americans, who have no Church affiliation whatever.

The program makes no attempt to do the work that clergy and parish church are intended to do. It aims to reach the unchurched, to show them that the Church has help to offer in personal problems, and that its aim, right now, is of special timeliness, in this unsettled world. It is designed to bring people into parish churches, and to have them get acquainted with the rectors. Then the local parishes and missions have the magnificent opportunity of leading these "inquiries" into the Christian fellowship . . . a challenging opportunity indeed.

The unusual nature of the program prompted the Presiding Bishop, in urging the support of Church leaders, to refer to it as "this new, to some daring, and yet essentially sound evangelistic plan."

"Great Scenes From Great Plays" is the title of the program. Fine dramatic works are presented by great artists of both stage and screen. The 800 members of the Episcopal Actors' Guild, with other guest stars of equal magnitude, are eager to do their full share in making the broadcasts truly memorable dramatic presentations. The programs will draw listeners, churched and unchurched, through sheer entertainment value and artistic merit. Following the drama, a lesson is drawn, briefly and pointedly, from the play itself, then comes a closing comment about the Church and what it can do for the needy people of this chaotic age, with an invitation to come to Church, your own Church if you have one and if not, then get acquainted with the local Episcopal Church and its rcetor. Listeners are asked to send for a booklet, Finding Your Way, which tells about the Church, simply and directly, in a style planned especially for people unfamiliar with ecclesiastical nomenclature.

The first presentation, Friday, October 1, will be Rostand's famous Cyrano de Bargerac, with the distinguished veteran of the stage, Walter Hampden, playing the role of Cyrano, the role which he has portrayed more than a thousand times. Episcopal Churchman Hampden will appear in all the subsequent programs as host, presenting play and players and giving necessary narration to set the scenes.

While not intended for the saints of the Church, who, none the less, will want to hear the programs, every Church member can help make the program fulfill their evangelistic purpose. Already men are organizing telephone groups, women are planning to invite friends to their homes to hear, young people are developing listening groups, and clergy are thinking of sermons based on the lesson taught by the various broadcasts. Every Church member can have a part in building the listening audience of the unchurched . . . that in itself constituting a fine evangelistic service.

A radio producer, not associated with the program in any way, said: "This is a fine and challenging thing. It is bound to succeed. It opens wide a door of opportunity to the whole Episcopal Church, and should, in time, strengthen every parish in the entire Episcopal Communion."

CATHEDRAL MARKS QUEEN WILHELMINA'S GOLDEN JUBILEE

New York, N. Y.—The Golden Jubilee of Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands was observed at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine on Sunday, September 5, at the 11 A. M. service.

The Consul General of the Netherlands in New York, together with diplomatic representatives and other members of the consular corps were present and occupied special seats reserved for them, as were other distinguished guests.

The service began with the singing of the hymn, "We gather together to ask the Lord's blessing," sung to an ancient Dutch folk song.

The Rev. Canon Edward N. West, Sacrist of the Cathedral, made an address. Bishop Gilbert was not present, being still at his country residence at Heath, Mass.

The Rt. Rev. Charles K. Gilbert, bishop of New York, has authorized the service for use in the Diocese of New York.

As part of the authized Service is the following prayer:

"Almighty God, who rulest over all the nations of the earth; we yield Thee hearty thanks for the blessing granted to our brethren of the Netherlands in the person and reign of Thy servant Wilhelmina, their sovereign lady and queen. As Thou hast vouchsafed her to earn the love and trust of her people during these fifty years, so do Thou, the God of mercy, grant her, we beseech Thee, to spend the remainder of her days in quietness and peace. May the faith and steadfastness which she and her people have shown forth in time of trial be fixed in the memory of all mankind and inspire in us all a like determination to serve Thee with singleness of mind and devotion to the duty which freedom involves. Through Him, Who for the winning of our liberty laid down His life, Thy Son, our Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen."

A festival Te Deum was sung by the clergy and choir, and this part of the Service was concluded with the National Anthem of the United States and of the Netherlands. The Service of Holy Communion then followed.

DIOCESE MAKES SURVEY

Study Reveals Dissatisfaction With Quality of Spiritual Work

Detroit, Mich.—The 30 young people engaged in summer work in the Diocese of Michigan are beginnnig to uncover some interesting facts in connection with their surveys and other labors. One of the recent projects undertaken was a chaplaincy need survey of the health and correctional institutions of Detroit, made by Mr. Louis C. Breitenbach, Michigan State College student, under the supervision of the Diocesan Department of Christian Social Relations. Mr. Braeitenbach was one of the young people doing summer work in the diocese under the Bishop Page Foundation, as part of the project of training seminary students and others fn Church leadership.

The survey reveals a somewhat unsatisfactory state of affairs in the meeting of spiritual needs of people in health and correctional institutions. A glaring fault seems to be that there is little coordination between the activities carried on by various ministers, and that there is also a failure on the part of administrative authorities to recognize the work of the chaplains as a necessary part of the work of the institution.

The study also reveals a general trend on the part of all institutions to be increasingly dissatisfied with the quality of spiritual work undertaken, and their growing alarm over the activities of the more emotional types of religious workers.

The most encouraging part of the survey is that without exception the heads of institutions are eager to have the highest type of chaplaincy service, and assured the Church representative of their willingness to co-operate in securing chaplaincy services which would be a recognized part of staff activities.

The director of the Department of Christian Social Relations, the Rev. G. Paul Musselman, in conjunction with the Rev. Sheldon Rehn, of the Social Service Department of the Detroit Council of Churches, has organized a Chaplaincy Council to co-ordinate chaplaincy services and raise the standard of ministrations.

Worked As Labor Pastor

Another summer worker, Mr. G. Lucian Slone, a student at the Episcopal Theological School, worked for two months on the staff of the Detroit Episcopal City Mission Society as a Labor Pastor. He called on the local offices of the labor unions in Detroit, as a pastor would call on the homes in his own parish. He was warmly received, and many union leaders have commended the Church for her foresight and have made suggestions about the ministry of the Church to the organized worker.

Many union officials have asked that the Church in this area undertake a full-time labor chaplaincy, by adding another clergyman to the staff of historic Mariners' Church. This summer pastoral work was undertaken as a joint project by the Bishop Page Foundation and the Detroit Episcopal City Mission Society.

BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW

50th National Convention

Oxford, Ohio.—Lt. General John C. H. Leo, executive vice-president of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, announced that the largest gathering of Episcopal Churchmen of 1948 was called to order on August 30 by President Samuel S. Schmidt of York, Pennsylvania.

The keynote address was given by Bishop Tucker of Ohio who had just returned from the Lambeth Conference in London.

In addressing this 50th National Convention of Episcopal Laymen, it is expected that Bishop Tucker was one of the first of the returning American bishops to give an account in this country of the proceedings and momentous decisions of the Lambeth Conference. He challenged men in America in the crucial months remaining in 1948 to the task of bringing Christian America to array itself firmly for world peace.

President Schmidt of the Brotherhood, who also has just returned from a summer in Europe visiting with Chapters of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew both in England and on the continent, addressed the meeting on the importnce of World Wide Evangelism in our time.

Many former Army and Navy chaplains attended to take over the duty of leading discussion groups. Among them were the Rev. Francis B. Sayre, Jr., grandson of Woodrow Wilson and son of the former Assistant Secretary of State who at the time of Pearl Harbor was United States Commissioner to the Philippines. The Rev. Mr. Sayre was a Navy Chaplain and is now rector of St. Paul's, Cleveland.

Other Church leaders who gave addresses were Bishops Clingman of Kentucky, Barry of Albany, and Heistand of Harrisburg, the Rev. Frederick McDonald and Rev. Dr. John Heuss of New York City.

CHRISTIAN YOUTH CONFERENCE

New York, N. Y.—Episcopal young people displayed much interest in the Christian Youth Conference of North America held in Grand Rapids, Mich., August 31-September 5. The quota for the Episcopal Church was 100, and by August 24 there were 85 enrolled, with other applications coming in, so that the Episcopal quota was more than filled.

The conference was sponsored by the United Christian Youth Movement, in which the Episcopal UMCY holds membership. About 5,000 young people attended to witness for Christ and to discuss the problems of interchurch cooperation. There were group discussions, worship services, Bible study, pageants, recreation and separate denominational meetings.

A member of the National Youth Commission from each Province served on a general committee, Robert Taylor of Brockton, Mass., chairman. Each afternoon there was a meeting of Episcopal Church delegates, with John Booty as general chairman.

LOSSES IN JERUSALEM

New York, N. Y.—Writing on the fourth day of the actual suspension of hostilities in Jerusalem, the Rev. Walter C. Klein, Th. D., reported to the National Council that "Jerusalem is her usual sanguine self." "Whatever may be the sentiments of the fire-eaters, the clergy and the ordinary people of the land will be enchanted if there is no more fighting."

Dr. Klein has been trying to gather accurate figures as to losses, and believes that seven priests have been killed, three Latins, one Greek Orthodox, one Russian Orthodox, one Syrian Orthodox, and one Abyssinian. During one phase of the fighting the Anglican Cathedral, St. George's, was pelted with mortar bombs. No serious damage was done, and the only person wounded was a young servant, who is off the danger list. The losses of the Eastern Churches are estimated to be about $1,170,000, with a number of churches and monasteries not yet reported.

The Rev. Prof. Ovid R. Sellers of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Chicago, has taken over the duties of director of the American School of Oriental Research in Jerusalem, thus releasing

Dr. Klein, the American Chaplain, for full-time work at the Cathedral. With Bishop Stewart's consent, Dr. Klein had served for three and a half months as director of the school.

SUCCESSFUL CONFERENCES

Salt Lake City, Utah.—An adult Summer Conference and the second year of "Camp Tuttle" a District Youth Conference, were conducted in the Missionary District of Utah this Summer, and both were highly successful.

The Summer Conference was held at Rowland Hall School for Girls, and the Rev. Kenneth A. Heim, of Virginia Theological Seminary, and Miss Charlotte Tompkins were the headliners. Since such a Conference had not been held for twenty-five years, it was something of an innovation, but the attendance more than justified its meeting, and all present enthusiastically voted to continue it.

Camp Tuttle was held in Ogden Canyon at a Girl Scout Camp, and was both larger and more successful than the previous year. Those attending asked for a larger camp next year if possible. The visiting lecturer was the Rev. Gilbert P. Prince from Ventura, Cal., and the Camp was under the direction of the Rev. J. Burton Salter, of Ogden, the District Youth chairman.

NIOBRARA CONVOCATION

Indian Field, S. D.—The 77th annual Convocation of the Niobrara Deanery (Indian Field) in South Dakota was held at Lower Brule Agency, August 5-8. Over a thousand Indians were present, and it was one of the best Convocations that has ever been held.

At that Convocation the Rt. Rev. W. Blair Roberts, bishop of South Dakota, ordained one Indian to the diaconate, made one a Catechist, one a Helper, and one a Senior Catechist. At the same time he presented to the Convocation four Indian Senior Catechists, each of whom had spent forty years or more as Catechist and Helper. One, Mr. Allen Last Horse, of the Corn Creek Mission, who is now almost eighty years of age, had served for forty-seven years.

One of the features in Niobrara Convocation is the presentation of the offerings which the Indian people gathered during the year. This year they presented offerings amounting to over $9,300, which was an all-time record through the many years which they have had Convocations. It was $1,000 more than last year's offering, which at that time was an all-time record.

Convocations next year will meet on the Rosebud Reservation.

Bishop Jackson was a native of Baltimore and a son of the late Edward Thornton Jackson and Helen Long Jackson. He was born in Baltimore, March 28, 1884. He was a graduate of the Virginia Theological Seminary near Alexandria.

He had served as rector of Episcopal churches at Towson, Md.; assistant at St. Paul's Church in Baltimore; rector of Emmanuel Church in Harrisonburg; rector of St. Martin's Church in Charlotte, N .C., for about 25 years and resigned that post to become Bishop of Louisiana in 1940. He resided at New Orleans.

The Bieth of the World Council of Churches

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

The World Council of Churches, which held its first official Assembly in Amsterdam, came formally into being by a simple action on the second day of the conference.

The first day was devoted to religious observance, impressive enough because of the presence of the representatives of the 150 churches comprising the Council in the great church in which Princess Juliana was recently crowned queen and because of the religious solemnity of the occasion.

But the actual official act was more thrilling, partly because the action was practically unanimous and accurately mirrored the tremendous desire of the whole of non-Roman Christendom for a larger measure of unity between the churches.

After this first official act, the Assembly was divided into sections in order to deal more effectively with all the problems confronting the Council. There were 450 official delegates, whose deliberations were authoritative. However, the alternates also discussed the same questions in their own sections. Including accredited visitors, there were over two thousand people present from every part of the world. The public meetings were attended by more than three thousand people.

In these sectional meetings one was sometimes left with a complete sense of bewilderment. If the delegates were thrilled by the prospects of a closer unity, they were also frequently dismayed by the difficulties.

Sometimes people from different parts of the world used different words when they meant the same thing. (The language difficulty as such was not great as most of the delegates understood English.) Sometimes they did not mean the same thing.

We may think in America that there are great differences between our denominations. But they pale into insignificance in comparison with the differences between the Anglo-Saxon world on the one hand and continental Protestantism on the other. The latter spoke with a pessimism about this world which Americans find difficult to understand.

There was an equally great difference between all the church primarily Protestant and those which belong to the Catholic tradition. The Roman Church was not in Amsterdam, of course. But other non-Roman Catholic Churches were there.

The political difference between the West and Russia was not so obvious because most of the Church leaders from behind the iron curtain did not espouse the Communist cause. The few who did added considerable spice to the proceedings.

On the whole, discussions gave the impression of a very great confusion of tongues which could only be resolved by a miracle of Pentecost. On the other hand, gradually and slowly common convictions emerged and common concerns were stated.

One realized that the reunion of the churches could not be created by an official act, but must be slowly generated through patience and love. But one also realized that, once the first confusion was overcome, this movement could become a very fruitful exchange of thought, a sharing of life and a mutually beneficial exploration of the deeper meaning of a shared faith.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

A Man and His Vision

By GILES J. PATTERSON

Former President Florida Bar Association

This is not a history—a history, as a rule, is lifeless. This is the story of a life; of a great personality and of its timeless influence upon a community; of how a young Episcopal rector, amidst the ashes of a small church to which he had been called, dreamed of creating a great institution that should be a center of Christian life in the community—and of how his dream came true.

Milton Worsham was called to the rectorship of the Church of the Good Shepherd at Jacksonville, Florida, in 1916. His predecessor had died shortly after the little Church had been destroyed by fire. There was no building fund; the insurance little more than paid off the mortgage. The Church had been located on a lot in what was at that time a new residential section of the city. But the city had grown rapidly and Riverside had grown even more rapidly. The little Church had almost been left behind. Its Mother Church, St. John's, was miles away—downtown. There was no other Episcopal Church beyond it and Protestant churches in that section were relatively small and few in number. The field was white for harvest.

He first began to build the Sunday School, for children and youth were always his first consideration. Soon the school outgrew its quarters.

Meanwhile, he had made a decision. He would build a new Church of the Good Shepherd that should be more than a neighborhood Church, more than a small Episcopal residential parish. It should be a great institutional Church, a seven-day Church for the people of that section of the city. The small lot purchased by the vestry further out from the city was too small; more room was needed on which to erect the buildings he had in mind. The vestry showed its confidence in the plan by purchasing nearly a third of a city block as a setting for buildings that would provide room to accommodate the men, women and children who were to be brought into fellowship. To design such a structure Worsham, who was himself a student of architecture, employed one of the greatest church architects in America. After a study of the future needs, they prepared a plan for the structure that would house its manifold activities. Funds were raised to build the first unit. The principal room in that unit was designed as a gymnasium, but until other portions could be built, it would—and did—serve as a Chapel, for the Church School, and as a social gathering place.

Long before a second unit could be built the Church School outgrew its accommodations. For a while, additional space was provided by use of the old wooden Chapel as an annex. But the pressing need for more room soon forced a decision to build a second unit. In it is the Parish House, which served as a Chapel and housed the major portion of Sunday School activities, a vestry room, a Women's Guild Hall and a magnificent, all tile, enclosed swimming pool—the gift of a great hearted woman.

Membership of the Church School had increased to nearly a thousand; one hundred men were enrolled in a Bible Class. Membership in the Church had increased proportionately. Gathered round the rector was a group of assistants, including an associate rector, a choir director, a parish secretary, trained Sunday School workers and a full-time assistant in charge of work among the boys and operation of the swimming pool.

Though Worsham helped design the Church proper, he was not permitted to build it. On Good Friday morning, 1924, at the age of forty-four, he died suddenly after only eight years of service. His funeral was held on Easter afternoon at the hour scheduled for annual Easter Flower Festival. They laid their floral tributes on his bier. The congregation sang his favorite hymn: "The strife is o'er, the battle done, the victory of life is won, the song of triumph has begun. Hallelujah."

He had found a vacant lot and a scattered flock. He left one of the largest Sunday Schools in the Protestant Episcopal Church and a large, closely knit, loyal and enthusiastic congregation; but he left more than that. Upon the lives of hundreds, and perhaps thousands, of men, women and children who had come under his influence, he left the imprint of his personality; upon the Church of the Good Shepherd he had stamped the pattern of his life. He had given to that institution a tradition and a character which it has never lost.

Worsham's genius was his great Christian spirit. His success as an administrator was due to the fact that no one could refuse to do that which he asked; he made the job appear easy and worthwhile as well as an inescapable duty.

His sermons were personal and intimate appeals to each listener, designed to bring comfort, hope of a better world, and to share with others the happiness he had found in his own religion. His gospel was one of charity and tolerance, the outpouring of a great heart. So that, great as was his vision of a physical structure, and his plans for the use of it, his accomplishment measured by physical, numerical or financial standards was small in comparison with his contribution to the lives of men and women—particularly to the lives of children—outside, as well as inside, the parish. Death ended his earthly life, but did not destroy the influence of his personality. Man's mind can form no greater concept than that of the everlasting influence of a great life upon the lives of subsequent generations.

Under able and beloved Charles A. Ashby, who succeded him, membership in Church and school continued to increase and a third story was added to the first unit. Under him also the Church building proper was constructed. It is a surpassingly beautiful Gothic structure.

This steady march of progress was rudely interrupted by the collapse of the "Florida boom" shortly after the Church was completed, and by the prolonged national depression that followed. The effect of these upon the financial condition of the Church was to convert the debt incurred in building the Church into a heavy burden that for a time crippled and limited its activities and benevolences. Many another church would have been unable to survive the vicissitudes of that period of the Church's life. But Good Shepherd rested upon a firm foundation. Its members had an enduring faith that Worsham's dream would come true.

Freed from the incubus of debt,—as it soon will be,—the scope of its mission will be broader than ever. Former Church School pupils are now stepping into the places left vacant by those who drop from the ranks, and new faces are appearing, while the training of churchmen and churchwomen of the future continues as a major objective.

The beautiful and commodious building, consecrated to the worship of God, will for generations continue to serve as a center of Christian worship and life. From its portals will flow a spirit of good will toward men, to the end that the Kingdom of God be promoted in the hearts and lives of the people of Jacksonville.

A Program Dissolves a Debt

By EARLE E. JONES

Secretary Jacksonville City Commission

As in the case of any successful project, long range planning must be undertaken by a church if it is to fulfill its mission in the field of God's work. Planning, which involves the use of all of the energies, facilities and potentialities of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Jacksonville, Florida, has been utilized to the fullest extent under the vigorous practical and spiritual guidance of its rector, Dr. L. Valentine Lee, and by the vestry.

To bring the parish up to the highest peak of its possibilities, able leadership has been provided and invaluable teamwork has been effected. The Church program has been organized along broad, comprehensive lines, utilizing the Sunday School, the Good Shepherd men, the Woman's Auxiliary, the senior vestry, the junior vestry, and the parish membership as a whole.

The smooth functioning of all groups in their respective spheres of endeavor paved the way inevitably for the inauguration of the "My Share Plan" campaign, conceived by Dr. Lee as the best and surest method by which the Church could be relieved of its staggering indebtedness. A concrete example of Dr. Lee's ingenuity in attacking the Church debt, the "My Share Plan" spread the Church debt over the entire parish membership on a proportionate, but equitable, basis.

The manner in which these various forces of the Church have been marshaled towards the attainment of the main objective, is to be recited here in a consideration of the various groups and their assigned parts in the over-all planned program.

No resume of the Church's far-reaching influence would be complete without an account of the activities of the Sunday School, which is playing an important part in, and contributing greatly to, the development of a great parish in one of the largest cities of the State.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

The Sunday School runs for a period of nine months each year. From the spring of 1944 a total enrollment of 196 pupils and teachers was carried over to the fall opening when the first Sunday attendance reached 234. The enrollment since has reached 596, which does not include any count of the 9:45 service, arranged particularly for the parents of Sunday School children. Attendance at these services, held in the church, ranges from 75 to 80 each Sunday.

The Sunday School attendance, however, is far below its record enrollment of above 1,000 registered in 1926. This can be explained by the fact that there are other parishes, which now serve the same community.

Much of the stimulus of this remarkable re-growth of the Sunday School was due to the able leadership and direction of John W. Donahoo, as superintendent; Charles C. McCubbin, as secretary; Fred C. Hedrick, as treasurer, ably assisted by Eugene Orr, filling the newly-created office of dean of faculty, and the various department heads, together with the large and faithful group of teachers.

For the fall of 1948 a reorganization has been effected, with the installation of the following officers: Clarence G. King, president; Eugene Orr, dean of faculty; Robert M. Sanford, dean of curriculum. Yet to be appointed are a dean of students and a dean of music.

Emphasis will be placed upon teaching. Definite requests are to be made of parents by way of cooperation. Some of the ideas advanced by the Union University experiment, are already being tried out in a practical way, although not on an extensive scale here at the Church of the Good Shepherd.

It is noteworthy to chronicle the fact that there are held annually four services for the children and their parents. Taking the place of the regular 11 o'clock service on Sunday, these joint services frequently bring together 1,000 to 1,200 persons in family units. They are conducted at Christmas, mid-semester, Easter and at the close of the Sunday School year.

THE GOOD SHEPHERD MEN

One of the dominating forces in the program is a group known as the Good Shepherd Men, who convene only when necessity demands, when a matter of real importance and concern to the parish is to be discussed. This group is one of the principal units, upon which Dr. Lee relies for dependable action, as well as counsel. Headed by A. LeRoy Johnson, as president, and J. Ellis Crosby, as vice-president, the meetings have attracted an attendance ranging from 35 to 95, all of them representing the ablest and best energies of the parish.

Typical was a session held July 30, 1948. Brief statements were made by Clarence G. Ashby, who will lead the Every Member Canvass for 1948; by Roy Boling, who is doing an outstanding job as scoutmaster of Boy Scout Troop No. 7; by Ellis E. Shaw, chairman of the Troop Committee; by Valentine Lee, Jr., representing the junior vestry, and by F. W. Brundick, Jr., senior warden, speaking for the Finance Committee of the parish.

The Rev. Dr. Reuben Shrum, associate rector, spoke, and Dr. Lee then outlined the organization for the fall season, defining every phase of the work, which could be planned in advance and already scheduled in detail, ready for implementing in the fall when the working year begins.

This program has been explained in order to give the readers a keener insight into this group, and to furnish a clearer concept of the numerous parish activities.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Some 400 women of the parish of the Church of the Good Shepherd are members of 13 chapters of the Woman's Auxiliary, which has compiled an enviable record of achievements for the welfare of the Church. Meetings are held by each chapter once a month, and in addition there are two general meetings monthly, one being for the purpose of furnishing an educational program and the other for considering business and hearing reports.

The Church, through the Woman's Auxiliary, has furnished outstanding leadership for the diocese throughout the years. No appeal from the community, diocese, or National Council, goes without an answer in the form of constructive work. The organization has a large annual budget and has assumed the principal payments on the Church rectory, purchased in October, 1944. All means and receptions are cared for by this fine group of Church women.

JUNIOR VESTRY

The junior vestry represents a group of carefully chosen and selected young men of the Church. Its members have assumed the tremendous responsibility of directing the youth activities of the parish. It is organized as follows: Giles J. Patterson, Jr., senior warden; Gray Ramsaur, junior warden, and Valentine Lee, Jr., secretary.

An elaborate swimming program for the summer was completely organized and has been operating efficiently under the direction of this association of outstanding young men, cooperating with the local Y. M. C. A.

Youth activities have been grouped under the following heads: Young People's Service League, regular and senior Boy Scout Troops, Cub Scouts, five Girl Scout Troops, including Brownies, and a Girl Mariner Troop.

All of these various groups serve not only the boys and girls of the Good Shepherd Parish, but those of the community as well. The gymnasium and swimming pool frequently are placed at the disposal of Hi-Y clubs and girls groups of the Y. W. C. A.

Swimming and play periods are regularly scheduled in the various age groups for members of the Boys' Choir. Each group of every organization is under competent supervision in the building at all times.

MY SHARE CAMPAIGN

When Dr. Lee came to assume the rectorship, the mortgage indebtedness stood at $167,000. In 15 years it had been reduced $29,000 from its original total of $196,000 in 1929. There was immediately added the sum of $15,000 for the purchase of the rectory. The two obligations, however, have been held separately and hereafter in this article reference will be made only to the Church mortgage.

Dr. Lee recognized the necessity for tackling the indebtedness as quickly as possible, although he had made a bona fide agreement with Bishop Frank A. Juhan, of the Diocese of Florida, as well as with the vestry that he would be given a period of two years to learn the parish and become acquainted with its personnel before launching a campaign. Events, however, moved more swiftly than anticipated and by the spring of 1945 talk of the campaign was in the air.

Tools With Which To Work

By L. VALENTINE LEE

Rector of the Church Of The Good Shepherd, Jacksonville, Florida

Long years ago an astoundingly energetic bishop said to a green young parson, pointing to a pile of second hand lumber under an old tree, "Here is a field of weeds and an opportunity. Hop to it." That pile of second hand lumber was the total of equipment with which I began my first piece of independent work in the Church. But in my tragic disillusionment and challenge of that moment I could never have dreamed of having the utopian equipment with which to work which I now have here at the Good Shepherd in Jacksonville. Florida.

All of our buildings had the advantage of the over-all planning of the distinguished French architect, J. W. Creswell Corbussier. Only such an artist as he would have insisted upon the huge gothic window for the swimming pool with its Christian symbolism connected with water, fish, a whale, a ship, an anchor! There is one deliberate feature exhibited in these buildings. They are constructed of a mellow, dark tapestry brick with an arresting amount of gothic stone trim. But the church itself is of native and rather colorful Indiana field limestone predominantly of buff, gray-green, and shot through a suggestion of salmon pink. There is a large amount of typical gray-white Indiana limestone trim. This difference in material emphasizes and gives first importance to the church itself. The harmony is secured through design, through line, through the blending of the colors.

Let me give you an over-all picture of the plant. The buildings face east on Stockton Street running the full block from Park Street on the south to Forbes on the north. The block is 275 feet in length. From the south wall of the south transept of the church on Park Street to the north wall on Forbes Street is a distance of 255 feet. On Forbes Street the unbroken north wall of Worsham Hall, the entrance hall, the Guild Hall and the swimming pool runs 246 feet. The exterior dimensions of the church are 168 feet in over-all length, 98 feet across the transepts; while from the pavement to the roof-beam the over-all measurement is 68 feet. Worsham Hall (the parish hall) is 95 feet by 60 feet. The gymnasium, including the passageways, is 74 by 56 feet. The over-all measurements of the swimming pool building are 50 by 120 feet. This gives one a quick picture of the immense amount of space which we have available for our seven-day a week program of activities. Now permit me the privilege of describing these buildings and their use somewhat in detail. I shall name them in the order in which they were built.

The gymnasium, our first unit, was built in 1916. It is an oblong rectangular room, tapestry brick inside and out. It has a passageway gallery around three sides of it. For the first five years the gymnasium and an old wooden Sunday School building served all purposes. Week day activities, Sunday School and church services alike were held here. Club rooms were next built to the north of gymnasium.

Then the swimming pool opened in 1922. An outdoor pool had been planned to serve only in the summer months. Then came Mrs. Wellington Willson Cummer's great gift of the swimming pool as a memorial to her grandchildren. With its abundant use of marble and its wonderful construction, after 26 years of use there is no single break in the tile of the entire pool. The pool has its own artesian well, which has a flow capable of entirely changing the water each three hours on its own pressure. The pool itself is 80 by 30 feet. It has wide sides, locker rooms downstairs for boys, upstairs for girls, together with upper and lower spectator galleries. During the recent war the pool was commandeered for use by the Naval Base in Jacksonville until their pools were built. Thousands of navy men as well as thousands of Jacksonville boys and girls have learned to swim at the Good Shepherd.

While the pool was being built the congregation decided to complete the Guild Halls. These were built on ground that would have been used for the outdoor pool, north of the original club rooms. There are few rooms in any parish house fundamentally more beautiful than these two. The Guild Hall on the first floor is of necessity our utility room, probably receiving harder and rougher usage than any other spot in the whole plant. The Guild Hall on the second floor is this summer being converted into a well equipped library-drawing room. The beginnings of a real library are in hand. This room is being decorated by an appropriation from the Woman's Auxiliary and through special gifts from an interested member of the parish.

But all this building program was as yet incomplete when, because of magnificent growth and unsuspected strength, the congregation launched into the building of the Parish Hall. This is a large gothic structure. There are wide galleries on two sides and a particularly deep gallery at the rear. It is equipped with a commodious stage. This hall, now most appropriately named "Worsham Hall" in memory of its projector, the Rev. Milton Rohrer Worsham, was completed in 1923. It served as the parish hall and as a place of worship for the congregation until the church itself was completed and occupied on Easter Sunday, 1928.

In the meantime a third story was added. Over the entire gymnasium and club room group, extending also over the locker room space of the swimming pool building, this third floor alone has two large assembly rooms together with more than a dozen separate classrooms. It can accommodate up to 300 children in Sunday School. This construction was completed in 1926.

The Church itself was opened Easter Sunday, 1928. You have already gathered some idea of the size of the church. Including the choir and the gallery at the rear it can seat comfortably 900 persons. This building is thought by many to be one of the loveliest of all gothic structures in the entire southland. In spite of its great size for a parish church it gives on the interior a feeling of exquisite delicacy. The wood carvings througout are the work of the younger Lang, of Oberamagau fame. The sanctuary, choir, ambulatories, all aisles and the narthex are paved with mellow colored hand pressed tile, which bear the crests and coats of arms of some ninety-five chapter houses and ecclesiastical foundations of the English Church. There is no room in this article to describe the many beautifully executed pieces of symbolism in stone and wood throughout the church. A plan is now under way to replace the delicately colored pale sea green glass with well designed 15th and 16th century stained glass.

In another article the program of the Good Shepherd will be discussed. This program will reveal in detail many of the uses to which our equipment is put. There are some 50-odd separate rooms in the entire plant; a wonderfully equipped kitchen modernized and engineered to serve 300 persons, Scout rooms, club rooms, assembly rooms and seven Sunday School departments, together with countless other separate facilities. The placement and distribution of rest rooms is noteworthy.

The church is provided with an almost perfect working sacristy. It has one of the loveliest possible choir rooms. Its four manual Skinner organ is probably unexcelled in parish

THE GOOD SHEPHERD CHOIR

By Fay Crimminger

One of the outstanding choir groups in Jacksonville is the Good Shepherd organization of interested, hard-working men, women and boys. Under the able guidance of James Womble, church organist and choirmaster, the service music of each Sunday's worship has become as important to the choir as any special service.

Several particularly colorful services are planned during each church year, beginning with the midnight celebration of Holy Communion on Christmas Eve and climaxing with the 7:30 A. M. Holy Communion and 11 A. M. Morning Prayer on Easter. There is an interesting contrast of moods in the quiet, serene beauty of Christmas with its choral procession of lighted white tapers and the glorious rejoicing of "Welcome Happy Morning" when the choir enters to the accompaniment of festival trumpets Easter morning.

The choir is justly proud of its boys' section of thirty-five, which has gained a city-wide reputation. Mr. Womble is doing some very fine work with these boys and has developed some talented voices. Under his direction, the boys are receiving valuable training. Two of the boys, Mac Stenmeyer and Robert Johnson, gained national recognition this past winter and were awarded scholarships for study with a famous national boys' choir.

THE NINE FORTY-FIVE EXPERIMENT

The Rev. Reuben W. Shrum, D. D.

(Chaplain, U. S. N., Retired)

With the opening of the fall and the winter work last October, we were confronted with the problem of a worship service for the parents who brought their children to the nine-thirty Sunday School. It was noted that these good folks would sometimes sit in their cars or even drive to the home of a friend to await the dismissal of their children. They did not seem interested in an adult Bible class. And there were others who found it impossible to attend the eleven o'clock service, which was frequently crowded.

After some consideration it was felt a parish the size of the Good Shepherd could and should support an additional service. This took the form of a shortened form of morning prayer with address, which gave to those who attended their traditional service. The response was salutary. The attendance rapidly increased from ten to over a hundred. And it further proved helpful by providing for us, a goodly number of candidates for confirmation. It was an experiment, worthwhile in every respect.

THE PEW TAKES A LOOK AT THE PULPIT

By Lettie G. Croom

We at the Good Shepherd feel privileged in the type and caliber of instruction and inspiration that we receive from our pulpit Sunday by Sunday. The preaching that we hear shows a wealth of background, study and preparation. But it is also "up to the minute" in its practical application of Christian principles. This is our steady diet.

Our Lenten programs are outstanding from the angle of instruction. Every age group has a special day. The instruction is planned and directed so that it will be applicable to each of the groups.

The Tuesday evening "United Lenten Services" have brought to our pulpit some of the country's distinguished preachers. Each year at least one outstanding man of another communion is included in this list. This year we had Bishops Ludlow, Newark; Gilbert, New York; Juhan, of Florida; the Rev. Messrs. Murphy, of Alabama; Walthour, Georgia. Bishop Ivan Lee Holt, world churchman-statesman, was our non-Episcopalian.

Lent culminated with an amazingly inspiring Good Friday meditation, "The Watch At The Cross," the theme being "The Broken Body," and was directed at church unity. The crowning glory of the church year rang through the Easter message of resurrection.

A Great Church

We are glad to devote this issue of "The Southern Churchman" to one of the great Churches of the south, The Church of the Good Shepherd, in Jacksonville, Florida. The Church of the Good Shepherd possesses perhaps the most complete group of buildings of any Church in the southeast. That very fact presented the parish with two great problems. The immediately apparent problem was the huge indebtedness the parish faced as the cost of building so lavishly. Under the fine leadership of the present rector, the Rev. L. Valentine Lee, this problem has been courageously faced and is now almost completely solved. It will not be long before the Church of the Good Shepherd is entirely free of all debt.

But there was another problem that fundamentally was more meaningful. It was the question of using this fine equipment wisely, so that it would minister to the congregation and to the community, to the spirit as well as to the body. Quite as significant as the conquering of the financial debt is the way in which the parish has accepted and successfully met this deeper challenge. The buildings of the Church of the Good Shepherd ring to the voices of men and women, boys and girls, three hundred and sixty-five days in the year. In dedicating this issue of "The Southern Churchman" to the Church of the Good Shepherd, we do not honor an impressive group of buildings, but a fellowship in Christ that has had the vision, the consecration and the willingness to place first things first, and use its buildings not as monuments, but as servants of the children of God. To the rector, the vestry and the congregation of the Church of the Good Shepherd, we offer our congratulations. May God lead and guide them ever into greater service, until His Kingdom come!

The Good Shepherd Spirit

It is sometimes said that Episcopal churches appeal too much to the "classes" and to little to the "masses."

The Church of the Good Shepherd furnishes one of the many good answers to such criticism. For more than 60 years past it has represented a cross section of the people of its community.

The Church commenced as a Mission Sunday School for children of working people a few blocks south of the old Street Car Barn on Commercial Street (now Riverside Avenue) in Jacksonville. This Sunday School was started by Col. J. J. Daniel, then Senior Warden of St. John's Church, the mother of the present ten Episcopal Churches in Jacksonville and its environs. It soon expanded and a few years later the first Good Shepherd Church was built at the southwest corner of what is now Riverside Avenue and Stonewall Street.

Some years later it expanded again and its sturdy membership built a commodious red brick church at the northeast corner of Oak and Gilmore Streets. After many years of steadily increasing usefulness this edifice was burned to the ground and the present group of buildings on Stockton, Park and Forbes Streets was constructed, representing a total investment of well over half a million dollars.

From its inception the Good Shepherd has been a children's church. The originating impulse of the Mission was to care for God's little ones living without the influence of any church, and its founder therefore named it for THE Good Shepherd. Its steady growth has been largely due to its continuous sense of responsibility for children, and its all-embracing love for them. Its appeal to children from all denominations and all walks of life was so great, that its Church School became a pressing problem for its adult membership. The response was wisely shown in the erection, as the first unit of the present Parish House, complete in its facilities for their training and recreation. Meanwhile the large auditorium was suitably equipped for church services. The result is a Church School among the foremost in the country.

For more than half a century its membership has been composed of devoted men and women in all walks of life, and has included former Jews, Roman Catholics, Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, and other Protestant denominations who have embraced the Episcopal faith.

Throughout its history this Church has proved a spiritual power house, inspiring its members to give themselves in work for their fellowman. It has steadily maintained a community-wide influence for good among the citizens of Jacksonville. Its swimming pool represents a gift of nearly $150,000 from the late Mrs. W. W. Cummer. This noble woman was not an Episcopalian, but her magnificent gift recognized the broad humanitarian spirit which dominated the Church. The use of the swimming pool and gymnasium has never been confined solely to "members of the Good Shepherd." But the children and grownups of all denominations have always enjoyed these privileges.

The community-wide service rendered by this Church has been fostered and developed by a long line of inspired and godly pastors. No words are too strong to describe the value of the leadership given by the Revs. Lindsey Patton, Milton Worsham, Charles Ashby and last, but not least, its present dynamic rector, Valentine Lee.

Lindsey Patton's sweet personality, entertaining and poetic sermons drew hundreds to the Church while at Oak and Gilmore Streets. To the inspired vision of Milton Worsham, the Church owes the comprehensive plan for the present group of buildings on Stockton Street. To Charlie Ashby in large measure goes the credit for the construction of the magnificent church edifice which forms the last unit in the Worsham plan.

Dr. Lee came to the Good Shepherd Church just four years ago. He found a debt nearing $200,000 and a somewhat thinning congregation. Through his inspired and militant leadership this debt has been reduced to $42,000. Hundreds flock to the Church every Sunday morning to hear his sermons which are instructive and inspiring. The Sunday School has almost trebled in the last four years and the congregation has doubled. The Tuesday evening city-wide Lenten services have been phenomenally attended and 1,400 were present at last Good Friday's three-hour service.

The congregation at present, as in the past, is composed of busy men and women who are active not only in the Good Shepherd, but who are also members of the various civic, welfare and community activities of Jacksonville. Without them, their rector could have done nothing. Without him, they would have been leaderless.

So the spirit of this Church goes marching on. May it continue to exemplify the life and teachings of Christ when He said: "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."

OUR WOMEN AT WORK

Mrs. Robert B. Paul, Jr.,
President, Good Shepherd Branch, Woman's Auxiliary

The Woman's Auxiliary is an active and growing part of our parish. Throughout the years the record of service and financial support shows its strength and importance.

The activities of the Auxiliary are numerous. Each year our "Plan" submitted offers many phases of work of interest to all ages.

There are study courses carefully designed for monthly programs. During Lent our rector and his associate are most helpful in arranging a series of meditations, which are held weekly for the women.

BISHOP AZARIAH ON "GIVING"

By the Rev. E. H. Eckel, S. T. D., Rector, Trinity Church, Tulsa

One of the saints of our generation, and one of the greatest native Christian leaders in the Orient, was the late Bishop Azariah of Dornakal, who died several years ago. He was the first native of India to be consecrated to the episcopate. When he was consecrated on December 29, 1912, he was assigned to a newly created jungle diocese where literacy, much less education, was practically unknown, and where ignorance, drunkenness and dire poverty from within, oppression and corruption from without, combined to keep the outcastes in a state that was almost sub-human. In an area the size of Wales there were six Indian clergy, 172 lay workers and 8,000 Christians.

How this wise and saintly bishop gave of himself for thirty-two years, trained a native ministry, inspired his laity to evangelize whole villages, and built up the native Church until at his death it numbered a quarter million members is one of the most glorious stories in the annals of modern Christian missions.

Bishop Azariah was deeply concerned to develop the spirit of Christian giving among his people. He was not content to think of such giving in terms of self-support, "with all its ugly emphasis on self," since only too often it began and ended with the support of the individual pastor by the individual congregation, leading to a narrow, selfish, parochial outlook, Bishop Azariah taught:

"Christian giving is a religious duty; when man does not recognize God's ownership of his money, he has not fully recognized God's claim upon his whole being. . . . Where God's claim upon our money is ignored it becomes one of the greatest dangers to our spiritual life. . . . Christians must consider it part of their religious duty to give generously according to their power, yea and beyond their power, in order that the cause of their Crucified Lord may not suffer for want of money. If they are desperately poor they must give out of their deep poverty. . . . Christian giving is worship; offerings and all gifts must therefore be the expression of the giver's personal dedication to Him who bought us with a price and must be given in the spirit of worship. Church offerings should always be offered not collected."

Many were the picturesque suggestions, gathered from others and devised by his own fertile brain, which found their way into his talks and writing. The handful of grain, put aside for God by each Christian woman every time she cooks; one chicken out of every brood, earmarked for the Church; special thank-offerings on all family occasions, anniversaries, recovery from illness or confinement, the safe return from a journey, the calving of a buffalo, and so forth.

At every service the offering must hold an important place. Large brass bowls or trays should stand about the church to receive the people's offerings in money or in kind and the act of consecration must be deeply reverent and worshipful.

Visitors to Dornakal Cathedral often remarked upon the solemnity of the moment when the entire congregation stood in silence while their offerings of grain, money and first-fruits of every description, followed by the Bread and Wine for Communion, were carried up to the altar and dedicated to God.—The Episcopal Church Times.

CANDLES IN CHURCH

By the Rev. William Paul Barnds

Rector, St. Matthew's Church, Lincoln, Nebraska.

Why do we use candles in the Church? Certainly it is not because we need them for light, because we burn them in the day-time, and also when electric lights are on. To be sure there was a time many years ago when Christians were forbidden by law to worship Christ. They had to meet early in the morning when it was dark, and then they really needed torches and lights so they could see.

But now the candles are used as symbols and reminders of Christ. He has been called the Light of the World. That means that He shows people the way to live in the right way and He teaches people through the Gospels, through the Church, and He Himself comes to the faithful in the Holy Communion.

Darkness reminds us of sin and ignorance. Light reminds us of right and knowledge.

The candles on the Altar remind us of Christ the Light of the World. The two Eucharistic or communion candles remind us that He is both divine and human. Seven remind us of the seven days of the week, the seven sacraments, and the seven gifts of the Holy Spirit. Five remind us of the five wounds of Christ. Three remind us of the Three Persons of the Holy Trinity. Six remind us of the six days of creation, and the Cross in the center of them reminds us of the day God rested.

Does the light of the Christian religion shine in your life so that people are attracted to the Church because of the kind of life you live?

CXXXIX

Prayer of Humble Access.

This approach to the Lord's Table is well named, because it is so essentially "humble," and takes for granted little or no merit in ourselves, but a complete trust and confidence in God "whose property is to always have mercy."

This portion of the service seems to have been taken more from eastern than western literatures, as it does not appear in our service until the book containing the communion that was publisned in 1548, immediately preceding the first publication of the Book of Common Prayer in 1549.

Many feel that the expression "we are not worthy to gather up the crumbs under thy table" is derived from the incident of the Syro-Phoenician woman, recorded by St. Matthews chapter 15, verse 27, but it was not an unusual expression in the day of Christ, and we find it also used with regard to Lazarus and the rich man in Luke 16, verse 21.

We find the wording of the Rubric introducing this prayer in the Scottish Prayer Book of 1637 to be very interesting, and a trifle disconcerting to those who like to emphasize the words priest and altar, for it reads "then shall the Presbyter kneeling down at God's board say in the name of all them that shall communicate, etc., etc."

Although this is usually considered a prayer for the clergyman to say alone, yet occasionally it has been suggested that the congregation say it with the minister, thereby giving it far more importance. This practice might become so universal by usage that it would be embodied as permissive in the Rubrics as has been the case with "The General Thanksgiving." Personally we hope this development will take place, for we feel that the greater part the congregation has in the service the more the devotional interest.

FOR THE OPENING OF SCHOOLS

Bless, we pray Thee, O Father, the children and youth of this nation, returning to their schools and colleges. May Thy Holy Spirit enlighten their minds, purify their vision, and strengthen their wills; that being taught of Thee they may learn to follow in the steps of Him who grew in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man; through the same, Jesus Christ our Lord.—From Prayers of the Spirit.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH WILL SHARE IN ADVANCE PROGRAM

Plans Offered to 118 Foreign Mission Boards

New York, N. Y.—The Episcopal Church will share with a large number of other Churches in the program of Advance in Foreign Missions as planned by the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, of which the Church is a member.

The Conference stated that "more Christian people must carry their share of the work of providing sufficient personnel and adequate funds to do the missionary job facing the Church." The program of advance is not a fund-raising effort. It is intended to bring before Church people of all persuasions the Christian duty of going and sending—into all the world—leaving nothing undone that the individual Christian can do, to bring men everywhere to allegiance to the Christ.

The plans offered to the 118 foreign mission boards and related agencies in the United States and Canada were developed after study of reports and requests from the overseas fields; they are not something imposed from this country upon nationals of other lands.

Basis of the plans is a series of regional meetings at which great leaders in overseas missions will speak to vast interdenominational congregations, telling of needs and opportunities in every field.

Each of the Church groups involved is planning its own meeting to precede or follow the great interdenominational meeting. For the Episcopal meetings, teams consisting of a bishop and a missionary, or someone closely acquainted with the Church's missionary work, will tell of Episcopal missions as of this period in the Church's life.

Local committees, both interdenominational and denominational, will organize the meetings locally, and clergy and laity will join in creating interest and assuring large audiences.

Meetings In 32 Cities To Be Held—Oct. 19-Nov. 19

Regional meetings, with the Episcopal meeting as well as the interdenominational meeting, are planned in 32 cities, all to be held within the period October 19 and November 19.

The regional meetings will be preceded by a World Mission Assembly, a three-day meeting to be held in Columbus, Ohio, October 6-8, to be attended by delegates authorized by their respective Churches. Bishop Henry W. Hobson of Southern Ohio opens this meeting with devotions, and the program includes noted missionaries of various Churches and from widely-separated fields. Persons in the Columbus area who would like to attend this great meeting should ask the National Council for registration cards at once, as the number of registrations is limited to 3,500 lay and clerical delegates. It is hoped that these leaders will be so inspired by the claims of the missionary cause that they will return to their homes ready to lead congregations, conferences and Church organizations in the enterprise.

The entire program is planned, frankly, to arouse Church membership as a whole to a sense of the urgency and need for greater participation in the ongoing world mission of the Church. The meetings should focus the attention of the entire Christian community upon the desperate spiritual needs throughout the world and the responsibility of Christian Churches and their people for bringing about a Christian World Recovery.

RHODE ISLAND ACTIVE IN MISSIONARY WORK

Providence, R. I.—There is considerable activity in the missionary work in Rhode Island. Among the workers: the Rev. John N. Sinclair has become vicar of St. Andrew's Church, Providence; the Rev. Leighton Burgess (Deacon) is vicar of St. Andrew's, Harris, and Christ Church, Coventry; the Rev. Dudley Tyng, on a volunteer basis, is taking the services at the Church of the Resurrection, Norwood; Mr. Eskil Broburg, a candidate for Holy Orders, is serving on a full time basis under the archdeacon in St. Mark's, Hoxsie, and at the Good Samaritan, Tiogue. Mr. Calbraith B. Perry, lay reader, is a Sunday assistant to the Rev. Arthur Leaker in expanding the work in the South County field. And the Rev. Charles H. Best will come on October 1 from Havana, Ill., to be vicar of St. Barnabas' Church, Apponaug.

In building operation and similar: New rectories have been purchased for St. Barnabas', Apponaug, and St. Andrew's, Providence. Mr. and Mrs. J. Harris Potter have given a parcel of land for St. Mark's Church, Hoxsie; work has begun on the new Church of the Holy Spirit at Shannock; work has started also on the rectory for St. Michael and All Angels, at Rumford. Things are moving!

And not to forget the good work of the Providence City Council, we record that they voted to recommend the granting of a 50-year lease on land in the Scituate Reservoir area as the site for Trinity Church and rectory in that vicinity. The old Trinity Church property was flooded out of existence when the reservoir was built.

A Diocesan School for Christian Education will be held at the Cathedral of St. John, Providence, on six evenings in October and November.

A Conference of Smaller Churches will be held at the Cathedral on Sunday, September 19.

The annual Conference at St. George's School, Newport, for clergy and laity was held September 11-13 inclusive.

CHURCH DIVINITY SCHOOL OF PACIFIC OPENS

Berkeley, Cal.—The fall quarter of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific will open on September 16, with the usual quiet days before classes begin on September 20. Dean Henry H. Shires has announced that the student body will be the highest in the school's history, with over 50 full-tme students. The facilities are taxed to the utmost, and all married students and some single students will have to live off campus, for rooms provided in Gibbs and Denniston dormitories are already taken.

Anne Elizabeth Shields, M. A., a graduate of St. Margaret's House, has been added to the staff as assistant librarian. Mr. George Daunton, from England, will be tutor in Greek. Dr. Pierson Parker will offer a course in Hebrew in addition to his regular New Testament courses.

During the summer, a mail campaign was instituted throughout the Province of the Pacific to provide funds for the next five years. An attractive brochure told the story of the work of the school, and church people were given the opportunity to become "Friends of the School" by pledging units of $10, $50, $100, or $500 per year for the next five years. The budget has been expanded by $11,000 for 1949, and this is to be met by subscriptions throughout the Province. The clergy have cooperated by providing names of church people sufficiently interested in the Episcopal Church to desire to cooperate in this crucial task of educating ministers of the future.

FURTHER SHIPMENTS DESPERATELY NEEDED

New York, N. Y.—Charles P. Taft, President of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, has announced the receipt of a cabled appeal from Christian leaders in Palestine on behalf of non-combatant refugees from areas of conflict.

He reported that immediate steps have been taken by Church World Service, the agency through which the Federal Council and other Protestant and Orthodox bodies carry on their overseas relief program, to send an initial shipment of supplies.

The first shipment by Church World Service included 359 bales of clothing for men, women, and children, 25 bales of infant clothing and a quantity of vitamins and other medical supplies.

The relief work of the churches will be carried out in Palestine by an international committee of foreign Christians to whom the supplies shipped by Church World Service are being sent. This committee will work in cooperation with the representatives of the United Nations secretariat who is proceeding to Palestine to work on the problem at the request of Count Bernadotte, the United Nations mediator for Palestine.

In recent reports received directly from representatives in Palestine and from statements made by Count Bernadotte on his recent visit to the United Nations headquarters, it is evident that widespread destitution faces approximately 400,000 who have been dispossessed or driven out by fighting in various sectors of the country.

Further shipments are desperately needed, Mr. Taft said, and those who wish to assist can send money and clothing to Church World Service, 214 East 21st Street, New York 10, N. Y.

HOMES FOR THE AGED CONFERENCE

New York, N. Y.—Thirty superintendents, board members, and others interested in the care of older people met for a two-day conference on "Life Within Homes for the Aged" at Seabury House, Greenwich, Conn., in the early summer. Sponsored by the department of Christian Social Relations of the National Council, it was attended by representatives of nineteen homes for the aged in ten dioceses.

The first two sessions of the conference provided opportunities for an exchange of information regarding the program of several homes. During the latter part of the conference consideration was given to some of the foundation stones which underlie a successful program of group care for older people. These were summarized by the chairman of the conference, the Rev. Robert D. Morris, chaplain of Episcopal Hospital, Philadelphia, as follows:

1. No home for the aged can live unto itself. It must be closely related to the community and willing to consider adaptations of its program to meet community needs. It was suggested that a study of persons denied admission to a home over a period of time might assist the board in determining the services most needed in the community. There was concern over the fact that some homes are not providing care for those most in need of it.

2. Like all of us, older people need warmth, friendliness and understanding. The most vigorous and interesting programs of activities will not meet the needs of the older person unless he senses he is wanted, that he is accepted, that he is regarded as someone of real importance and significance who is still capable of being self-directing in many areas of his life and that he is not patronized, but treated as an equal. This involves, amongst other things, coming to understand what needs to be done for an older person and what the older person can do for himself.

3. The need for clarification of the organizational structure of our homes for the aged. It became clear in the conference that the job of the superintendent or matron is not clearly defined, and frequently the board assumes many responsibilities which could be better carried out by the superintendent. As the conference became aware of the many needs of older people, there was a growing conviction that a superintendent requires many unusual qualifications; the job assumed a new importance and significance. On the other hand, the opinion was frequently expressed that there are more important jobs for the board than caring for administrative details. The board could well spend a considerable portion of its time studying the needs of older people which it should be attempting to meet.

4. The religious services and the work of the chaplain or other religious worker must be related to the particular needs of older people. The Church is particularly interested in older people because in old age we see a confirmation or lack of confirmation of the religious teaching that has been given to them through the years. When a person is old we know whether our religious teaching has been successful or not. The experience of growing old is one to which the Church and religion has special contributions to make.

The members of the conference have agreed to report back to the Department of Christian Social Relations on the progress made in applying new insights gained during the conference. Consideration was given to the possibility of conducting conferences for the boards and staffs of homes for the aged on a provincial basis, but no final decision was reached. On behalf of the Department, the Rev. Arnold Purdie, secretary for health and welfare services, offered to publish an occasional bulletin as a means of sharing experiences and pooling information, but it was emphasized that such a bulletin would be dependent upon the cooperation of the homes themselves.

JUNIOR CHOIR GIVEN WEEK AT CAMP

Augusta, Ga.—The Junior Choir of St. Paul's Church, Augusta, numbering about 50, boarded a special bus on August 7 for a week of work and fun at the diocesan Camp Reese on St. Simon's Island. The holiday was given the choir by the congregation in appreciation of the splendid service it has rendered the parish in the past year. The work that the choir has done has been an inspiration to the public school system of Augusta in adding music to the school curriculum.

Mr. Carpenter, organist and director of the junior choir, held two rehearsals a day, and between times there was surf bathing, swimming, boating and all kinds of games, not to mention the delicious meals for which Camp Reese is famous.

CHURCHES SET DAY OF PRAYER FOR ASSEMBLY

Richmond, Va.—Church bells all over Richmond will ring in chorus next Sunday, calling the people of the city to prayer for the success of the General Assembly of the United Nations, meeting in Paris.

Chimes in all Protestant churches will sound the summons at exactly 12:10 P. M. Prayers will be for peace and freedom.

This was the unanimous decision of the Richmond Ministerial Union at the first Fall business meeting.

The request came from the Laymen's Movement, a national interdenominational organization.

Dr. Almer Pennewell, Midwestern director of Spiritual Mobilization, giving the main address of the meeting, made the reason for the action plain.

"The Christian religion," he said, "is the only answer to Communism."

He cited as the basic concepts of Russian Communism the great challenge to human freedom, the denial of God and a moral and spiritual order, hence the denial of the essential dignity and value of human personality.

The clergy also voted unanimously for a concerted city-wide observance of Reformation Day, which this year falls on Sunday, October 31.

RT. REV. LOUIS CHILDS SANFORD

The Rt. Rev. Louis Childs Sanford, D. D. LL. D., first missionary bishop of the District of the San Joaquin, who retired from active work in 1943, died August 10 at his home on Blossom Hill Road, near Los Gatos, California.

Bishop Sanford, who graduated from Brown University in 1888 and attended the Episcopal Theological Seminary at Boston, came to California in 1893. He was a missionary to churches in Selma and Fowler and later became rector of the church at Salinas. At the time of the earthquake and fire in San Francisco, he was rector of St. John's Church in that city.

He was consecrated bishop in January, 1911, and thus, at the time of his death, was the second oldest living bishop in point of consecration.

Bishop Sanford received many honors during his life. He served for 16 years as president of the Province of the Pacific and was a member of the National Council for 13 years. In 1927-28 Bishop Sanford, with the late John Wood, visited Episcopal missions in China, Japan, and the Philippines. He also attended, as the church's delegate, an International Missionary Conference held in Jerusalem. In 1930 he went to the Lambeth Conference.

Bishop Sanford is survived by his widow, Ellison Vernon Sanford; three children, Edward N. Sanford, Mrs. Chester Root, and Royal K. Sanford, and five grandchildren.

The bishop's hobby was composing music. His friends will remember his annual Christmas carols.

At the time of his death Bishop Sanford was working on a history of the Missionary District of the San Joaquin and had completed his part of a history on the Province of the Pacific.

Commenting on his passing, the Fresno, California, Bee said: "He was for more than 50 years an outstanding California churchman, ever alert to the spiritual needs of the denomination he served.

"His were a kindly and genial personality which won and retained friends in all ranks and an integrity which commanded universal confidence and trust.

"This would be a better world if among its leaders, clergymen and otherwise, there were more men of the character and caliber of Bishop Louis Childs Sanford."

met regularly for the past many years, making garments which are distributed by the Red Cross.

Highlight of the year is the annual May Fete. With everyone working together in the interest of its success, we have been able to assist our Bishop materially for many years in his work with young men preparing for the ministry.

Reaching out still further the Auxiliary assists in many ways with missions at home and abroad, with youth activities and scholarships.

In short nothing is too small or too large for this alert group to undertake and it is through their untiring efforts that so many worthwhile tasks have been accomplished.

TOOLS WITH WHICH TO WORK

churches in the south. Here indeed is equipment which is extraordinarily fine. During the long years of depression and heavy indebtedness much of this plant necessarily fell into a state of disrepair. In the last four years thousands of dollars have been spent in bringing the physical plant to a high state of efficiency. The whole of Worsham Hall has been redone. Many of the classrooms have been modernized. Part of the third floor was completely redone. The equipment is being brought up to a very high standard, and the whole plant is beginning to function. One must recognize that such a plant as this which teems with people; old people, young people and very young people presents a staggering problem in upkeep. When you are told that the normal scheduled parish house activities in 1947 showed a counted attendance of more than 42,000, you begin to get the picture. The great joy of this equipment lies in the fact that it is used 365 days in the year.

The Prudential Insurance Company, holder of the mortgage, had insisted on dealing with a "permanent" finance committee. This had been set up by the vestry, and four laymen and the rector composed the "permanent" committee. The membership of this permanent finance committee has at various times consisted of the following gentlemen: C. Harrison Mann, Camillus S. L'Engle, Giles J. Patterson, I. Beverly Nalle, and Henry W. Dew. Dr. Lee appropriately enough turned to three younger men of the parish as co-chairman for the "My Share Campaign".

They were: John W. Donahoo, A. LeRoy Johnson and F. W. Brundick, Jr. They were ably assisted in their work by a fine cross-section of the Good Shepherd men.

Under rather auspicious circumstances, the Campaign was inaugurated July 1, 1945, to run for a period of 24 months, ending June 30, 1947.

It should be recalled here that Bishop Juhan had made a personal agreement with Dr. Lee in three parts:

First. That the Church of the Good Shepherd was to recognize this indebtedness as its own and first responsibility.

Second. That a campaign leading to its liquidation would be launched.

Third. That when payment of the indebtedness had reached a figure within $50,000, the Bishop would act as chairman of a small committee to secure large gifts from friends within and without the parish to complete the project.

With the advantage of three calendar years, the Plan started wonderfully well. Dr. Lee was able to inform Bishop Juhan in the summer of 1947 that the debt would be below $50,000 by early fall. The Bishop was so informed early in October. He immediately responded by letter, and at a meeting with the vestry, whom he warmly congratulated, he announced that he would begin forthwith his own part in the undertaking.

At the annual parish meeting in January, 1948, Bishop Juhan announced five gifts totaling $7,500, and expressed again his great desire and hope to see this task speedily completed.

There are many pressing demands on a bishop, serving a far-flung diocese. But the parish eagerly looks to the resumption of effort on this great undertaking, with the help of his wise counsel and spiritual guidance.

The long-standing indebtedness of the Church has been a source of great concern to the Bishop for many years. When Dr. Lee assumed the rectorship, bringing with him a wealth of experience, he, too, immediately recognized the necessity of freeing this great parish of its heavy burden, in order that its resources and energies, and its facilities, recognized as second to none in the Southland, could be made available for use in promoting the effectiveness of the program of the general Church.

The 1943 total budget of the Church, including $10,000 for debt service, was $26,000, with the quota paid for missions at $2,500. In 1948 the total operating budget, aside from any payment on debt, will reach nearly $50,000, and the quota payment will be above $6,300.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

The Amsterdam Achievements

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

The great assembly of the World Council of Churches at Amsterdam has ended but I expect to make several more reports upon it. For it is only upon its conclusion that one is able to sort out impressions and gradually detect the dominant trends.

For the moment, I should like to call attention to only one interesting contrast of the Assembly. It is the contrast between the wide diversity of opinion upon the nature of the Church and the tremendous degree of agreement upon its function in society.

Whenever the effort was made to define the nature of the Church, one felt that there never would be a closer unity than now exists, for the simple reason that there is no agreement at all upon the essence of the Church.

Every time some one from the Protestant Churches would declare that the Church must repent of its involvement in the sins of the world the more Catholic-minded members of the Eastern Orthodox Church and of Anglicanism were shocked.

For them the Church is the "extension of the Incarnation" and is therefore perfect and cannot repent. They admit that individual members fall into sin but they hold to a mystical reality beyond all historic and empirical facts. For Protestants this reality is Christ Himself who is the Head of the Church.

On the other hand, the Churches from the most divergent national and social backgrounds arrived at the most remarkable consensus on the place of the Church in modern life. That consensus was, politically speaking, so far left of center, (at least the American center) that it will shock many Americans. It may also do them good.

The reasons for this shift in the social opinion of the Churches, which were once regarded as traditional and conservative, are two:

First, the Asiatic and African churches, fruit of a century of Christian missionary activity, have begun to have a voice in the councils of the Church. That voice echoes the hopes and resentments of the colored peoples of the world against the white man's domination, against the power of money and against western culture in general.

It is a very sobering experience to hear these indictments of our world from these new churches, even though there is a good deal in the indictments which is not just. One man from India, for instance, held us responsible for not permitting them to enjoy their new freedom because we scared them with alarms of a new war. But he said nothing about the blood which has been spilt between Moslems and Hindus.

Second, the holocaust in Europe, which swept away many ancient institutions, has also purged the Church of its quietism and irresponsibility toward the social problems of our day.

Furthermore, it has reduced all classes of Europe to such poverty, as compared with our own wealth, that all classes have something of the radical approach to social issues which was once associated only with industrial classes. Americans and even the poorer Britishers, found this continental radicalism at a great Church council something quite new and stirring.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

Liverpool Cathedral

By KENNETH ROMNEY TOWNDROW

British artist and historian, who is a Leverhulme Research Fellow in the History of Art and whose book on the Building of History of the Cathedral is now in preparation.

This article is the script of a broadcast over the British Broadcasting Corporation.

Liverpool Cathedral is the fourth largest of its kind in the world, only surpassed in size by St. Peter's, Rome, and the cathedrals of Seville and Milan; and although Perpendicular in architectural style has no period Gothic pretences. It is, in fact, a modern building, an English building, the logical outcome of monumental construction in previous ages allied in possibilities with methods and materials of today. Its stones are of the ground upon which it stands; hard red sandstone cut from the native Woolton Quarries, and the soaring mass of the building is enhanced by the fact that it is built on the lip of an ancient quarry that became the site of an early 19th century cemetery.

Those who, during the war, first came to the port of Liverpool through the sea defenses of England's Western Approaches, saw the Cathedral as the beacon-crown of a great city at war. They may have arrived before or after a stick of bombs missed the Cathedral by yards but scarred the cliff-like walls and blasted out the great windows of the Choir and South-Eastern Transept. According to the hour, and to the weather, they would have seen at a distance, this single building, raised above a city mass of roofs and chimneys, towers and spires, either as a sun-lit rose colored eminence or as a rain-blackened man-made cliff. If they came by road or rail they wouldn't have been long in the city before they were surprised by the revelation of the Cathedral's sheer tower rising through the maze of buildings still between them and St. James' Mount, a mount that was itself a landmark over the city long before the Cathedral was even contemplated.

For the Cathedral is a modern building dedicated, in the words of Dr. Chavasse, its second Bishop, as "an immense and glorious work of fine intelligence—a Cathedral of the people built by them, loved by them, thronged by them; their pride, their glory, their spiritual home; their protest against the blind materialism of a money--loving age." And so, throughout the forty-four years of its building, it has remained, in inspiration and construction. So it will continue until the last stone of Nave and Western Porch has been laid upon its bed.

At Liverpool the river Mersey, after flowing from east to west from Manchester, turns north and goes into the sea northwards. Alone amongst English cathedrals, Liverpool has that direction—south to north, not east to west. It stands on the ridge of hill parallel to the river and shipping. For the poet, the artist, and the Christian thinker there is symbolism in that. Liverpool Cathedral looks toward the seaport and the ways overseas rather than inland. "O my brave soul, O farther, farther sail," these words of Walt Whitman are often sung in the Cathedral, in memory of "All brave captains, and all intrepid sailors, the sailors of all nations."

And so you will understand something of the link that this immense building effort has provided over the last fifty years for so many men and women of one blood, but separated by the earth's span. The money, time, and actual physical labor that have gone to make this a place of Commonwealth meeting, of world family-worship, was given its architectural form in an age more used to building sports-stadiums and factories, air-fields and super-cinemas than Cathedrals.

The Cathedral is the expression of the genius of one man, Sir Giles Gilbert Scott, who in 1901, when plans were first invited, was an untried student of 21. Two years later, the judging Committee found in his ideas of a cathedral "that power combined with beauty which makes a great and noble building," and recommended the adoption of his design. To accept so young a man as architect of so great a venture, however brilliant his promise, was an act of considerable courage on the part of the Building Committee, for few of its members could hope to see the full result of their choice.

It is an unforgettable experience to stand north of the Cathedral, far below street level on the floor of the chasm made by the ancient quarrying, and, with Lilliputian vision, trace the rich flowering of the Cathedral design rising above the green terraces of trees and bushes grown out of the river walls of native stone. Only Durham can match its spectacle today.

The Cathedral's exterior reflects the simple ground plan: a plan of classical regularity and complete usefulness for the main purpose: that of seating a great concourse of people so that they may all hear the service conducted and feel themselves a part of its ceremony. Nave and Choir when finished, will be of equal length, east and west of a Central Space, 15,180 square feet in area and composed of Under-tower and two pairs of flanking transepts providing, between their arms, two great Porches approached by wide, hospitable flights of steps, these porches standing north and south of the Under-Tower space and giving access to its immensity.

The main fabric is now built except for the Nave, its Narthex or sheltering porch, and the West Front. The Tower, 547 feet above road level and free at last of its scaffolding, is now the center of the landscape and the linchpin of the city's future building plans, plans reborn out of the blitz and the confusion of 19th century lack of planning. Already, on special occasions, thousands fill the Cathedral and many wait outside. With the opening-up of the Cathedral approaches full accommodation will be available. All roads throughout the city, from all directions, lead to this center of poetry, music and visual beauty.

Those who have heard them are not likely to forget the words of the Dean's greeting: "Brothers of the great Dominions, welcome home. The Cathedral is yours and ours. Here we have remembered you in our thanksgivings and in our prayers. Together now we remember the great need of humanity—the victory of peace."

Inside the building one is made very much aware of "A solid mass hollowed out and carved," for the tremendous vaults soar free above the vast enclosed space, unaided by detached piers and

Preaching At The Philadelphia Divinity School

By The VERY REV. FRANK D. GIFFORD,
Dean Philadelphia Divinity School

A recent report of the Inter-seminary Movement quotes the Traveling Secretary, after visiting 117 theological schools, as saying that "many students for ministry are unable to stand up and speak forthrightly with a contagious sense of conviction."

One of the veteran priests of the Church, the Rev. Archibald C. Knowles, D. D., in his book, "Lights and Shadows of the Sacred Ministry," makes the following statement: "Today, however, preaching has sadly fallen off, especially among the younger clergy. This is very much to be regretted, for the Priest is to minister the Word as well as the Sacraments and preaching is a most important duty, never more so than today."

At the Philadelphia Divinity School great emphasis is being laid on public speaking and an interesting and varied program in homiletics is being carried out under the direction of the Dean.

When a student enters the School his voice is tested by the Instructor in Music and Voice, Mr. Newell Robinson, F. A. G. O. The latest and best recording machine is used to enable a man to hear his own speaking and singing voice so that defects can be corrected. Men are taught individually and in classes the proper use of the voice. Because the number of undergraduates is limited to fifty it is possible to give careful individual attention and frequent practice sessions. Seniors are often amused and amazed when the records of their voices as junors are played over again.

Every Friday at 9:20 the Dean meets with the juniors to study the principles of public speaking as applied to preaching. Men gain confidence in speaking without notes by giving brief addresses in class on things out of their personal experience. Some of these talks have been of great interest, as for example, "Mining Conditions and Problems," by one who had worked as a miner in Pennsylvania; "Banking Frauds," by a student who had served as head teller in the Bank of America in Hollywood; "How the Navy Beat the Submarine Wolf-Packs" by a veteran of the seas.

At 10:15 the class enters the Chapel and becomes a congregation. Two men then preach regular sermons and receive the comments, criticism and suggestions of the Dean and their fellows. Sometimes the topics are suggested by the Dean, as for instance a recent teaching sermon on "The Symbolism of the Church Building." Some sermons are read but a surprising number of men are learning to preach acceptably with only brief outlines or notes.

The Middler Class meets with the Dean at 11:10 for an hour of lectures and discussion. Various methods of sermon construction and delivery are considered. Much attention is paid to expository preaching in which Bible characters and incidents are studied from a homiletic point of view and outlines made by the class.

The noon hour is spent by the Middlers on Fridays in the Chapel or in a neighboring church. Two men preach and listen to the encouraging and critical remarks that follow. The Dean insists that the good points of a sermon should be mentioned before faults are found.

Every Thursday at 5 o'clock there is a guest preacher and many of the visitors remain over for Friday morning with the classes. Veterans of the pulpit can thus impart the results of their own experience and be questioned by the students. Among those who have served thus as visiting lecturers in recent months have been the Rev. James C. Crosson from Pelham, N. Y., formerly Lieutenant Colonel in the Army Air Force; the Rev. Walter H. Stowe, S. T. D., President of the Church Historical Society; and the Very Rev. Hubert S. Wood, D. D., Dean of the Cathedral at Garden City, N. Y.

Tuesday has been graduate student day at the Philadelphia Divinity School and no fewer than 25 of the clergy have been taking courses to improve their knowledge and make their work more effective. A class of twelve has met with the Dean for two hours on Tuesday mornings to study homiletics. Four are rectors from New Jersey who come from parishes thirty to sixty miles distant; one is a former missionary from the Philippines; another is a former Methodist army chaplain. Lectures have been given by the Dean on methods of gathering and organizing sermon material. Essays and reports have been presented by members of the class. The second hour is spent in the Chapel where two sermons are delivered with the comments and suggestions that follow. Many of the men have found this course of training very helpful in improving the quality of their preaching.

Because of the shortage of clergy and the number of parishes and missions that are served by student lay readers, the necessity for such a program as that outlined is evident. It is not enough to give only seniors careful training and practice in preaching, and this is done throughout the senior year at Philadelphia. Many of the juniors and middlers have to be placed in charge of mission churches. Some of the most effective work in Pennsylvania and adjoining dioceses is being done by men who entered the school only last year. In one case average congregations have doubled in numbers since a junior took charge, even though the neighborhood is a discouraging part of the city.

In order to prepare men for the unexpected experiences of parish life, the Dean makes a practice of accustoming men to stand up and speak without preparation on various occasions. At a recent "Speaking and Singing Party" popular songs were sung, names of students were drawn out at random and men were given questions to answer and imaginary situations in which to "say a few words." Judges awarded amusing and interesting prizes to those who best responded in each contest. Hearty singing and "good eats" made the occasion one of the many that make training and fellowship synonomous at the Divinity School.

To the Rescue

When Bibles were plentiful Korea stood fifth among the countries of the world where the Bible was the best seller. For four years, during the war, there were no Bibles printed or sold. When liberation came and Bible work was resumed the meager stock that remained was soon exhausted. The American Bible Society, through the American Army, sent 50,000 New Testaments in Korean printed on American presses, a free gift to the Korean Bible Society and the Korean people. But what were 50,000 Testaments for thirty million people!

The American Bible Society has again come to the rescue with a second gift of 70,000 Testaments. An unparalleled opportunity lies before the Bible Societies in this day of Korea's emancipation and reconstruction. If we fail to supply the Book, so eagerly sought, one more country will be lost to the Christian world front; one more country will be absorbed into the anti-Christian bloc. Korea must have vastly greater supplies of the Bible than it has now. Once again the Bible Societies must come to the rescue.

I like the man who faces what he must
With step triumphant and a heart of cheer,
Who fights the daily battle without fear;
Sees his hope fail, yet keeps unfaltering trust,
That God is God, that somehow, true and just,
His plans work out for mortals.

The Answered Prayer

It was September, 1781. The ragged armies of the Revolution were encamped through Pennsylvania and the New Jersey flatlands. In New York City, General Clinton's British troops were living on the fat of the land. The American forces were badly in need of food, rifles and ammunition. Soldiers were deserting their posts to hunt for game, and discontent was spreading rapidly through the ranks. Now at summer's end, there was no prospect ahead but another terrible winter of privation.

George Washington, tall and gaunt, stroked his strong jaw thoughtfully. Standing outside his tent headquarters, he watched campfires blinking through the trees and heard the murmur of the soldiers who sat around him. Finally, the General turned to his visitor, a heavy-set townman.

"You see our condition here, Morris. The men are unwilling to remain in camp longer without pay and food. Mutiny is in the air! I can't blame them; but the hard fact is that unless something is done to relieve the situation, I will soon find myself a General without troops."

The visitor, Robert Morris, Superintendent of Finance of the Continental Congress, shrugged his broad shoulders. His eyes mirrored a discouraged helplessness.

"I've done all in my power, General Washington. But we have no income, our currency is in a chaotic state, and foreign bills of exchange are dropping every day.

Washington clenched his fists. "Our people must be given confidence! If we can only weather this winter, there'll be a chance to keep Clinton in New York, while we march to the South to attack Cornwallis. But meanwhile we need food, blankets, medicine, guns, bullets! We need money! Is there no one to whom we can turn?"

Robert Morris was silent, his heavy face deep in thought.

Finally he spoke up. "There is a man in Philadelphia, sir, a broker. Men say he is honest and to be trusted."

"What is his name?" the General asked.

"Haym Salomon," Morris replied. "He is a Jew."

George Washington turned toward the other man and gripped his shoulder in a grasp of iron.

"A Jew? He is an American! I've heard of this Salomon. He was a member of the Sons of Liberty in New York, and he was imprisoned twice by the British for aiding our cause. If he can help us, he will. Go to him at once. . . ."

When Morris had mounted and ridden away, George Washington passed a tired hand over his forehead. Entering his tent, hidden in the night shadows, he dropped to his knees. His head inclined forward, and the deep--set, kindly eyes closed. The General's strong hands folded in fervent and humble prayer.

"Our Father who art in heaven, help us, Thy children, to endure this trial . . . to bring liberty and freedom to this new land, for all people."

A day later, a courier galloped along the cobblestoned streets of Philadelphia. Approaching a small brick building, he vaulted from his mount and sprang up the steps. The building was the synagogue where the Jews of Philadelphia has just gathered for their most important holy day of the year. It was Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement, a time to fast and pray. Here it was that the messenger would find Haym Salomon.

The messenger extended a white envelope toward the old sexton who greeted him at the door.

"I have a letter from the Superintendent of Finance, Robert Morris, for Haym Salomon."

"For me?"

A slender, brown-haired man stepped forward from the prayer benches. His brows drew together as he swiftly read the enclosed letter. Meanwhile, the other worshippers, many in the ragged regimentals of Washington's army, gathered around in curiosity. What did Robert Morris want with Haym Salomon—on Yom Kippur?

Salomon looked up, his face grave.

"That note says that General Washington is in serious distress. He needs money to prevent a mutiny among his men—at once. Secretary Morris has sent us two bills of exchange for $20,000. He hopes that we will be able to let him have that sum, without delay!'

A murmur of protests arose. "But Haym, on the Holy Day?" "We cannot take part in business today." "It would be a sin against God!"

Haym Salomon's brown eyes shot fire and he sprang to the pulpit, holding up his hands for silence.

"Friends!" He waited a moment. "This is part of the battle that all of us are fighting—whether in uniform or out of it. We must raise $20,000 for this crisis—at once!"

The crowd hushed. Then a hesitant voice was heard from the rear. "We have three hundred dollars in the bank, Haym, if that will help. . . ." A burly farmer in homespun said, "We'd been planning to buy a new plow and team of oxen—but they can wait." One by one the members of the congregation volunteered their pledges, large and small. Not ten minutes had passed before the entire sum was raised and the men went back to their prayers. Haym Salomon turned to the messenger and said, "Tell General Washington that he shall have the money he needs!"

In the years that followed, Haym Salomon again and again aided the cause of the American Revolution. Unstintingly he gave, impoverishing his business and family so that he might contribute huge sums to the Continental Congress. These sums were never paid back, and when he died, Haym Salomon was penniless. But he left his children a far greater heritage than money. He left them the prideful knowledge that their patriot father had played a mighty role in the winning of independence for the United States of America.

RULES FOR SENDING PACKAGES TO FAR EAST

Recent letters from mission workers in the Far East indicate that well-wishers at home are subjecting the missions to expense that can ill be afforded. This arises from the shipment of goods such as clothing and linens, without proper regard for import regulations of foreign countries.

In China, packages addressed to individuals, rather than to a mission institution, are subject to import duty which is hard to pay in present inflationary conditions.

In the Philippine Republic, there is an import duty even on goods consigned to a mission, if the package is valued at $10 or more. There is no use in valuing packages high for insurance purposes, as little is lost, and parcel post cannot be insured any way. At the same time freight shipments are costly and express shipments prohibitive, especially to a mission located on one of the islands which require transshipment by sea from Manila.

Unless your gift has been requested recently by someone in the missions, or is part of a request which has been made through some department of the National Council, it would be well to hold it up until you are sure it is really needed. If you send it, follow these rules:

1. Use parcel post except for very bulky objects; if necessary break up into several lots to conform to parcel post regulations.

2. If your shipment cannot go forward by parcel post and you lack instructions as to freight shipment, write to the Shipping Department of the National Council, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

3. Place only a nominal value on packages sent by parcel post and do not try to insure.

4. Address to name of mission, in care of individual, followed by post office address in foreign country.

Apostle Of Unity; A Book Review

By The REV. ROBERT JOHNSTON PLUMB,

Rector of St. Mark's Church, Washington, D. C.

When the dean of one of our leading theological seminaries writes a book about a bishop of our Church whom many remember with admiration and when this book turns out to be not only an accurate chronicle but an interesting biography, a splendid summary of the ecumenical movement and an inspiring meditation on man's relationship with God, it deserves attention. Such is "Bishop Brent, Crusader for Christian Unity", by Alexander C. Zabriskie, Dean of the Virginia Theological Seminary, recently published by the Westminster Press.

In his preface Dean Zabriskie tells of how the Rev. Remsen Brinkerhoff Ogilby, President of Trinity College, Hartford, Connecticut, a close friend and colleague of Bishop Brent's, planned to write such a biography soon after the bishop's death in 1929 but never completed the task before his own tragic death in 1943. Asked by both the Ogilby and the Brent families to complete the story, Dean Zabriskie states that he found it necessary to write an entirely new book, the first two thirds of which is based upon the Ogilby material, the last third being his own. Those who knew Dr. Ogilby's originality of expression and uniqueness of literary style, will understand the dean's dilemma.

The book is beautifully dedicated to the memory of Dr. Ogilby, "who was primarily concerned to lead the boys of his school, the officers and men of his regiment, the students and faculty of his college, to the feet of Christ that they might learn from Him, in his own words, 'that the end of life is a love of beauty, a passion for the truth and the ability to live gallantly.'" Dr. Ogilby died gallantly, saving the life of a servant from drowning while at his summer cottage at Weekapaug, Rhode Island.

But it is about another great Christian that this tale is told, Charles Henry Brent, first missionary bishop of the Philippine Islands; president of the first International Opium Commission; Senior Headquarters Chaplain of the A. E. F., during World War I; Bishop of Western New York and president of the first World Conference on Faith and Order.

Interesting Biography

The author has followed a topical instead of a chronological scheme after the first few chapters which gives several complete portraits of the great enterprises of the bishop's life yet there is an over-all picture of gradually broadening horizons. There is a great difference as there ought to be, between the sophomoric young curate of St. Andrew's Mission, Buffalo, defying his bishop about altar candles and the mature Christian leader presiding at a world conference of one hundred and twenty-seven churches, urging humility, patience, charity and faith. In Boston the influence of both the Cowley Fathers and of Phillips Brooks played a part in the making of "everybody's bishop". Here also came ten years of parish experience among the poor of a great city. Called to be the first missionary bishop of the Philippine Islands, these chapters give an honest appraisal of Bishop Brent as a missionary, administrator and statesman. Had Dr. Ogilby written them they might have been less critical and more colorful.

Apostle of Unity

Dean Zabriskie's interest and enthusiasm centers in Bishop Brent as a great American apostle of Church unity and in this last third of the book which is his own, he "mounts up with wings as eagles". He writes, "Through the discipline of the years Brent was made into an apostle of Church unity. God kindled in his heart a vision of the Church, and sent him with a message to the churches. We shall see how that vision was developed and that message delivered." And we do. The author considers the World Missionary Conference at Edinburgh in 1910 as the real beginning of the modern ecumenical movement. The Bishop of the Philippine Islands came from this conference saying, "I was converted. I learned that something was working that was not of man; that the Spirit of God was preparing a new era in the history of Christianity."

Inspired by this vision he returned to the United States and at the General Convention of our Church at Cincinnati in the fall of that year, was instrumental in the establishment of a joint commission to promote a World Conference on Faith and Order. First to understand and respond to his approach to unity were a group of laymen who performed yeomen's service.

Bishop Brent's war experience increased his desire for unity. "In the A. E. F., proof had been given that the unity of Christendom was not a baseless dream. The fellowship of 1,300 chaplains of every phase of Christian conviction was a living fact and a great symbol. There had been no lowering of fundamental loyalties, but there had been an interpretation of the lesser in terms of the greater, the Church in terms of the Kingdom of God. This could be perpetuated into civil life."

Those who served as chaplains during World War II also felt the warm glow of a greater Christian fellowship and many of them resolved that when they returned to their parishes, they would perpetuate this. It is one of the disappointments and disillusionments of our times that so many of them, unlike Bishop Brent a generation before them, have crept back into their own little branches of Christ's Church and seem completely satisfied to remain there. This book has a message that is needed today!

A Man of God

We are given an insight into the bishop's inner life in the final chapter of the book which is one of the best. We read, "Brent's ideal was to establish and consummate the personal relationship with God which God offered human beings. This, he was convinced, was man's highest conceivable good. Human beings were creatures of a minute, certain to die after a few years, to make mistakes, to be frustrated, to sin. Their lives would be of significance only as they were linked to God's eternal purposes, invested with the dignity of His fellow workers, and raised by His Spirit from the ordinary human level to the level God intended for them. To share in God's activities and to be raised to eternal life depended upon personal relationship with Him."

It was in searching out God's will for him and then doing it that this man of God found peace. He himself had written, "Man's chief vocation is to penetrate through the things of sight and sense, and to establish and consummate relationship of a personal character with God. There is nothing that can take the place of this, and without it life loses such effectiveness as it might otherwise have."

From a careful reading of the bishop's letters and diaries we are reverently told of how he developed his spiritual life, a narrative which is of both inspirational and practical value to the reader.

This is a thoroughly good book and Dean Zabriskie has done a real service in putting before us in such readable form, the story of this servant of humanity who has blazed a trail through the tangled jungles of many creeds and gained higher ground. Those who read this volume will find themselves brought to higher ground.

Clergy And Doctors

One of the evil effects of the increasing secularization of life is the divorce of the spiritual from the material. Disastrous as this is in the realm of economics, it is quite fatal when applied to the human personality. To suggest that the clergy can look after men's souls, while the doctor has responsibility for their bodies is to do violence to the essential unity of body and soul. For it is a fact of experience that the body cannot be healthy unless the soul is at peace with itself, for an unquiet and obsessed soul must, of necessity, affect adversely the body which houses it. In recent centuries the medical profession has claimed and largely achieved complete autonomy from the authority of the Church, and this it was right to do. The error was to confuse ecclesiastical authority with the underlying truth which the Church was attempting to safeguard, namely, the supremacy of the spiritual in the spirit-body relationship. To treat the body as a machine which could be made to work by the administration of drugs or by performing appropriate operations, was to deny the reality about man's nature and was bound to lead to evil consequences. In its constant preoccupation with the duration of life, the medical profession has tended to lose sight of the fact that life is worth prolonging only if it is being lived to some purpose. It is worth reflecting upon the fact that, in an age when the expectation of life is greater than ever before owing to the conquest of disease, the possibility of racial suicide becomes an ever-increasing nightmare to all sensitive people. Medical science, no more than any other science, can help us to discover the secret of purposeful living; it can only postpone death.

New Signs of Co-operation

Furthermore, medical practice based upon a materialistic philosophy corrupts its practitioners. Many letters in recent weeks reveal a sorry state of affairs in a profession which rightly claims to set a high ethical standard. Cases have been reported from different parts of the country of doctors refusing to accept as patients those who need them most. We would hasten to add that this attitude has been condemned, and that it applies only to a small minority. Nevertheless, there is an unpleasant flavor about some of this correspondence which suggests that the means of the patient continue to determine the amount of care and attention he should receive.

The secularization of medicine has created an unhappy breach between doctor and parson. Although in the majority of cases personal relationships between the members of the two professions are cordial enough, the fact remains that there is little real co-operation. There are welcome signs that moves are being made on both sides to break down this isolation. While safeguarding the public against quacks who may do a great deal of harm, doctors now recognize the immense contribution to health that a spiritual ministry can give. In days like those in which we live a great deal of physical disability and nervous exhaustion can be directly attributed to anxiety and other spiritual ills. The symptoms may be cured by drugs, but the disease must be dealt with at a deeper level. Doctor and clergyman may approach the problem of human suffering from different angles, but they will be most effective as a partnership and not as rivals or as strangers. Ideally, where there is a Christian doctor at work in a parish he should be in close touch with the clergy over patients who are being visited by both men. It is really not good enough to call in the priest at the point where the patient is beyond medical aid. It is time, too, that the conspiracy of silence about approaching death was broken. It is a tampering with truth to act as though the patient were recovering when it is known that he is soon to depart this life. If it is the doctor's function to keep the patient alive it is the priest's to prepare him for death.

A Contribution to Prevention

But the partnership of parson and doctor is not only concerned with people who are ill; it must extend into the field of preventive medicine, and must aim at positive health. It is obvious that in such fields as sex education and moral welfare work, as in health education generally, the Church has a vital contribution to make. After all, the greatest incentive to good health is a purpose which demands all the energy and skill of which we are capable. Service to God and man is alone sufficient to bring out all the best that is in us, and those who dedicate themselves to this purpose are far less likely to need medical attention than are those whose thoughts are largely concentrated upon themselves.

In some places there have been arranged regular meetings at which doctors and clergy discuss their common problems and get to understand each other's point of view. In the case of the teaching hospitals a tremendous opportunity exists to make contacts with the future generation of medical practitioners, an opportunity which has been largely neglected in the past. The terrible shortage of medical recruits for the mission field is an index of the failure to win young doctors and nurses for the service of the Church Overseas.

A Task of Infiltration

There is no more important sphere of evangelism in the modern world than that of the professions. It is now recognized that society is being increasingly organized and its standards set by the new class of technicians and managers, but to this pattern the older professions are having to adapt themselves. The task of the Church is to see that these services are infiltrated by Christians; the alternative will be a soul-destroying regimentation in which the individual is submerged. But in order to do this work effectively a specialized ministry will be essential. It may be best done by clergy who have themselves been trained in the other professions. There is not the slightest doubt that the parish system must be supplemented in this way if it is to meet the needs of these times. The Church must adapt itself to new conditions or become increasingly irrelevant to contemporary life.

President Truman Endorses Religious Education Week

President Harry Truman holds that both religion and education are essential to a democratic government.

"American democracy is founded upon a full recognition of the dignity and worth of man and the importance of the individual human personality," the Chief Executive says in his endorsement of Religious Education Week, which will be observed Sept. 26-Oct. 3 in United States and Canada.

"From the days of our fathers, it has been recognized that both religion and education are powerful forces in the preservation of any system of government based upon the rights and the responsibilities of free men."

President Truman's support of Religious Education Week is given in a letter to Dr. Roy G. Ross, general secretary of the International Council of Religious Education, which is sponsoring the observance.

"I am glad to know that this year the observance of Religious Education Week will draw particular attention to the importance of the community and its religious institutions in our national life," the President says.

"At no time in the history of the world has there been greater need for an understanding of the truth that makes men free and for the development of those moral and spiritual resources which must undergird a free society."

Religious Education Week will be observed for the 18th year by tens of thousands of churches of 40 denominations. The theme is "Christ and the Community."

PICTURE OF THE MONTH

"HAMLET"

In connection with motion pictures, "masterpiece" is a word too loosely employed, by and large. But for once, at least, the word is needed to describe the quality of Sir Laurence Olivier's second cinematic excursion into the drama of Shakespeare. The first, you will remember, was "Henry V," a picture that deservedly drew paeans of critical praise—not the least of which was our own.

In "Hamlet" it seems that Olivier—with a capable assist from J. Arthur Rank as producer—has gone himself one better, if that be possible. If his portrayal of the anguished Prince of Denmark, plus the finesse and skill of the excellent support given him by others in the fine cast, does not redound to the Great Bard's popularity, then nothing will—and the teachers of English literature might as well cash their meager checks and go home.

The teachers, we predict, can stay on the job. One look at the screen version of "Hamlet" should convert any bored sophomore into a Shakespeare zealot, and reward any classrom with a "standing room only" enrollment. Whether the film will appeal to others than the erudite—or those who wish to seem so, or those who are having erudition forced upon them—remains to be seen. There are no few box-office prophets, some of whose forecasts reflect typical sniffishness as to the intelligence of the average movie-goer, who have conceded "Hamlet's" magnificence but are sure it will magnificently fail to bring in the public.

In prophetic mood, we beg to differ. We have a higher estimate of the IQ, as well as the discrimination, possessed by the people who attend movies. We feel that this film, given a broad enough distribution by Universal-International, and not held too strictly to the "selected houses" and the "arty" outlets, will prove to be a pleasant surprise to those gentlemen to whom cash receipts are the only criteria of a successful job of movie-making.

At any rate, we hope so. For "Hamlet" richly deserves recognition—at the box-office and everywhere else. Try it out on the youth and adults of your family and see if you agree! A, Y.

OTHER CURRENT FILMS

A DATE WITH JUDY (MGM). A delightful comedy-romance, in technicolor, dealing with the affairs of adolescence. The good cast, clean story, and wholesome depiction of family life and social implications make this excellent family entertainment. A, Y, C.

TAP ROOTS (Universal - International). A drama of the ante-bellum South, showing the greatness of a pioneering Mississippi family who are divided in their loyalties and convictions. The story's symbolism teaches that ideals cannot be destroyed, though everything else is, if their "tap roots" have grown deep. The acting is good and the plot, though intricate, can be followed. Unfortunately, there are several confusions in ethical values, and an uninspired and uninspiring Protestant minister will not make you cheer. A, Y.

THE LAW AND MARTIN ROME (20th Century-Fox). Abundantly and conclusively, this story proves that "crime does not pay", but that the criminal does pay, as do his family, his friends and the community. Interesting aspects: the incisive quality of the film's photography, excellent New York backgrounds, fine acting, and high social values. A, Y.

MR. PEABODY AND THE MERMAID (Universal-International). Pure fantasy, whimsical and witty, makes this as good an "escape" story as one could imagine. Unusual musical effects and beautiful underwater scenes help carry the fanciful plot. There is unnecessary drinking, and one character craves nicotine in an exaggerated manner. The treatment is on the sophisticated side, but the story situations themselves are harmless. A, Y.

THE BABE RUTH STORY (Allied Artists). A sentimental but quite entertaining film-biography of America's No. 1 baseball hero. Overly long, the story could have stood more ball-playing and

CITIZENS OF THE WORLD

By Rev. Geo. Paull T. Sargent, D. D.
Rector, St. Bartholomew's Church,
New York City

The true citizen of today is a citizen of the world. Unless the world is to retrogress, we must deliberately foster a growing consciousness of the oneness and intimacy of human life. Our first loyalty is to God and to God's children everywhere. Patriotism comes as a second loyalty to be checked, disciplined, and determined by the first and greater loyalty.

Christianity is fellowship divine and human—here and hereafter. The Christian Church must clearly and persistently show the way that leads, not to war, but to peace. This can be done only by creating Christian character and by developing God's plan for human brotherhood.

The Church with a definite program must be ready at all times with intelligence and power to meet and confound the forces that would make for destruction.

Our ideological enemy, Communism, is a denial of God and His Christ by man. Its greatest effort is to obliterate the ideal of Christian citizenship which recognizes the brotherhood of man and the constantly higher standards of humanity in modern civilization which have emerged from it.

Therefore, as Christians, we face a tremendously serious task which demands our consecration and absolute loyalty. For Jesus Christ commissioned and empowered His Church to create a conscience in men that will make for mutual understanding and mutual help which, slowly but with determination, shall move the world toward brotherhood and lasting peace.

Our present responsibilities lift us onto the crest of the wave of opportunity. Progress should not control us; with God's help we may and should guide and control progress.

EIGHTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

The Collect

Lord, we beseech Thee, grant Thy people grace to withstand the temptations of the world, the flesh, and the devil; and with pure hearts and minds to follow Thee, the only God; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

CHRIST THE ANSWER

By Clyde Edwin Tuck

As one by one our shattered idols fall,
And one by one the hopes of youth depart,
In this high moment of world destiny,
Life's hard realities may sear the heart;
But courage, light, and inner peace will come
If we have faith in Christ through all the years,
Whose rod and staff are here to comfort still—
Release us from time's tensions and our fears.

Sustaining strength will come to trusting souls
Poised in His love, and valor for each day,
To free us from the tyranny of hate,
Grim messenger of discord, holding sway
In realms Christ's way of life alone can save.
The love that neutralizes selfishness,
The love He taught amid earth's bitter blight,
Alone can banish chaos and distress.

Christ is the answer to all human needs,
Have faith in Him, and wait, He points the way,
For in this life of change He changeth not.
The Morning Star that heralds a new day
Dissolves the dross of years, the doubts of time,
Shines on and on truth's pathway to disclose—
The path of peace to this bewildered world;
Let nations in its rays their hopes repose.

A CALL FOR IMAGINATION

"We are in the midst of a revolution far vaster than the military campaigns for the dignity and possession of the human soul. Brotherhood is begotten by sensitizing of the imagination. We must try to see how life looks to the man on the wrong side of the railroad track or along the Burma road or in Stalingrad. We must have imagination enough to catch the viewpoint of those whose racial and religious backgrounds differ from ours. This is essential in building our broken world.—Ralph W. Sockman, in The Churchman.

The Administration of the Communion

The words of administration both for the bread and the wine are divided into two sentences, each of which has its own history and background, both in the Bible and in church history.

A comparison of the words of institution by our Saviour and St. Paul as contained in Luke 22:14-17, Math. 26:26-28 and First Corinthians 11:24-26 will show how accurately our Prayer Book follows the Bible language, except in one respect that in giving the cup both our Saviour and St. Paul used the words "this is my blood in the New Testament; in the New Testament is omitted.

Very early in church practice a distinction grew up between the sacrificial nature of this sacrament, and the fact that it was done "in remembrance" of the death of our Saviour and gradually the former emphasis became stronger than the latter, which more and more led to the idea of the sanctification of the elements, so that the feeling grew that by reason of the consecration of bread and wine it became not only a symbol of the body and blood of Christ but the actual body and blood. This led to such a veneration of the elements as ultimately to become adoration and worship, and almost to separate the sacrament into two distinct parts, the Mass partaken of almost daily by the priest, and the Communion taken by the people not more than once or twice a year.

The two sentences in our present words of administration represent, and combine these two attitudes, so that the participant can emphasize the sacrificial side as expressed in the first sentence, or the memorial phase as expressed in the second sentence.

PRAYERS AND PRAYING

There is a difference between saying prayers and praying. "One-way prayers" in which we ask God for gifts, and do not take time to let God speak to us, have little to do with the kind of prayer that made the disciples say to Jesus, "Lord, teach us to pray". We have not done our part when we have spoken to God. Only when we take time to listen to God, as well as to speak to Him, do we truly pray. The old Psalmist gave us sound advice, "Be still, and know that I am God". Every service of worship is an opportunity not only to speak to God, but to be still and listen. Every day, in your periods of prayer, you have an opportunity for communion with God. Cultivate, in public worship and in private, the ability to listen as well as to speak.

WORLD COMMUNION SUNDAY OCTOBER 3

World Communion Sunday will be observed around the world on October 3. While Episcopal parishes are certain to have the Holy Communion on that day, as on most other Sundays, yet Episcopal Church members may feel a real sense of one-ness with fellow-Christians everywhere, who on that day celebrate in the way to which they are used, the great Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. In a letter to the Rev. Dr. Jesse M. Bader of the Department of Evangelism of the Federal Council, Presiding Bishop Sherill said, "Many of our churches, as you know, cooperate, and we shall be glad to do everything possible to encourage their doing so. In many of the Churches, October 3 marks the opening of a seven-weeks' Church Attendance Crusade.

Responsibility rests not only on "281," but in the largest measure on each home diocese and parish.

INTENSIVE TRAINING CONFERENCES HELD

Boston, Mass.—Laymen from 105 parishes met for their 16th annual conference in St. Mark's School, Southborough, on September 11-12, with intensive training in preparation for the Every Member Canvass as the objective. The Rev. Dr. George A. Wieland, of the National Council's Home Department gave the opening address after Saturday night's supper; and Bishop Nash preached on Sunday morning. This conference, run by laymen for laymen, and sponsored by the diocesan Field Department, had as chairmen of its successive sessions: the Messrs. Everett F. Bowden of St. Stephen's, Lynn; John R. Quarles of St. Andrew's, Wellesley; Byron T. Atwood, Grace Church, Salem; and Llysses S. Harris, St. Luke's, Allston. Canvass technique for missions and small parishes was explained by C. Edwin Benson of St. Mark's, North Easton; that for larger parishes, by Louis E. Dafgard of St. James' Church, Fall River. John W. Prescott, financial secretary of the Episcopal City Mission, spoke on "Care and Maintenance of Church Property." Philip H. Stafford, treasurer of the Diocese and executive of the Field Department, stressed the coming series of nation-wide broadcasts.

During registration hours on Saturday afternoon, a golf tournament was held and the tennis courts used. Attendance at this conference is always prized by each delegate,—of which there are two, including one new man and the canvass chairman for each parish. Before dispersal at 3:30 on Sunday, much constructive training and inspiration has been received, and the incidental good fellowship greatly enjoyed.

A smaller conference for laymen from the Cape Cod area and the Islands of Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket was held on September 18-19 at Briarwood, the diocesan conference centre for youth on Buzzards Bay.

MEMBERS MAY SHARE IN EVANGELISTIC EFFORT

New York, N. Y.—Mailed from the Church Missions House September 15 is a packet of suggested ways for church members everywhere to share in the evangelistic effort of which the new church radio program is an important factor.

The National Council has made the point from the beginning, that the radio program is intended to do just one thing, viz., arrest the attention of unchurched people and induce them to seek out the Church for the satisfaction of needs that they experience. Then the parish with its clergy and workers, takes over, and people are led to become inquirers, and finally come to baptism, confirmation, and activity in the Church's life.

It has been emphasized that every church member may have a part in building a great listening audience of unchurched people, and in many parishes clergy, organizations and individuals are hard at work interesting people in the idea of listening to "Great Scenes From Great Plays" every Friday evening at eight.

The packet of suggested methods includes a list of all radio stations carrying the program, material for parish bulletins, material for chancel announcements, synopses of the first three plays to be presented, news stories for local newspapers, with mats for illustrations, and a letter of suggestions. This material is sent to clergy and to local parish publicity chairman where they have been appointed.

BISHOP SHERRILL COMMENTS ON LAMBETH

New York, N. Y.—Comment by Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill on the Lambeth Conference in an interview by Clifford P. Morehouse:

"Two great and significant facts have emerged from this Lambeth Conference —the unity of the Anglican Communion and the fellowship of its bishops. We have been received and treated as brothers. The courtesy and hospitality of the English bishops could not have been greater or more genuine; and we have come to appreciate to a much greater degree than ever before that we are one Church, with one Lord, and one Faith, whether we come from America or Britain, Asia, Australia or the islands of the sea."

ANNUAL FALL STUDY CONFERENCE HELD

Canton, Miss.—Episcopal clergymen from all parts of Mississippi congregated at Camp Bratton Green near here on Tuesday, September 7, for their annual fall study conference. The principal speaker was a layman, Professor John S. Marshall, Ph. D., professor of philosophy at the University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn. The Rt. Rev. Duncan M. Gray, bishop of the Diocese of Mississippi was host to the conference.

Dr. Marshall's subject was "Our Lord and Society". His five lectures were on announced topics as "Our Lord and the State", "The Christian Church and the Christian State", "The Mischief of Ideologies" and "The Healing of the Nations."

In addition to Dr. Marshall's lectures, the ministers also heard papers on the following titles: 'Roman Concept of Socity of the Democratic School" by the Rev. Louis O'V. Thomas of Natchez; 'Christian Responsibilty in the Political Order" by the Rev. James W. Emerson of Starkville; "Malvern Socialism" by the Rev. William S. Mann of Laurel; "Prospect for Christendom" by the Rev. Willam Mercer Green, Jr., of Oxford; "Theology of Society" by the Rev. Duncan M. Hobart of Meridian; "Maurice to Temple" by the Rev. Charles S. Liles of Grenada.

The conference was held on the grounds of the Episcopal church's statewide conference center and summer camp, the former Rose Hill health resort which was purchased in 1946 and transformed into its present use for church gatherings by the addition of surplus army cabins from Camp Shelby to accomodate over 100 conferees at a time. The clergy conference is the concluding meeting of a summer schedule that included five young people's camps and conferences, a laymen's week end and a women's conference. The Rev. Cecil B. Jones of Columbus is chairman of the committee in charge of the center.

shafts. Even the aisles seem to tunnel through buttressing walls so wide and solid that they positively assume a symbolic strength that can be felt, matching that material might so obvious to the eye. This, and the stained and painted glass, in itself a creative achievement, are perhaps the first impressions and the most vivid remembrance of the interior. These things are felt, I think, before so much else, before the sculpture, the wrought and moulded metals, carved wood, embroidered fabrics and Cathedral plate, begin to make one realize that this church, unlike all others, has enjoyed the unifying design of one man—a man who has been allowed to do this by right of a genius dedicated to one great end—a genius not only complete master of its own expression but with the rare gift of being able to use and inspire the work of others—those many creative artists and craftsmen whose individual work has gone to make the detail of the whole and of which should be especially mentioned the sculptor, Carter Preston. This great carver of stone is responsible for a remarkable series of symbolic figures and has worked half a lifetime in the spirit that enthused the sculptors of the Middle Ages, that spirit described as "a contagious impulse," and which, today, has as its avowed end nothing less than the re-establishment in a modern city of a central unifying idea of community. When we speak of Westminster, or Chartres, or York, we think first of their great community centers, their churches, and then of their worldly importance as places of Governments, markets, or provincial administration. So, already to many of us, this city, Liverpool means the place of the rose-red Cathedral, of which the growth and the energy have been drawn for the last fifty years out of the lives of its people.

And the building in this short time has accumulated not only the physical marks of war but a wealth of intimate history, the common man's contribution to the story of the Cathedral. Here there is only time to remember two incidents—the noble singing by an American Negro Choir of the Spiritual: "Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen," and, with an equal if different appreciation, the comment by an Englishman who, watching a party of Australian soldiers going round the Cathedral, turned to his friend and said: "Won't it be grand when the war is over and we can welcome the other Australians again!" The love of sport in the very fiber of the British stock is as inseparable from our virtues as from our vices. And now the war is over and "the other Australians"—the cricketers—have come to visit us again, and the Englishman feels once more "clothed and in his right mind."

A living building is so made of the whole of its builders' characteristics, from the sublime to the lowly. And thus we have, in Liverpool, a Cathedral of today, the pattern for all, proof that although a community can exist in the flesh alone, to grow, to be virile, to create, it must have and must care for a spiritual center of its living. A great critic, W. R. Lethaby, has given immortal expression to this truth in the phrase: "A fine architecture is the builded form of noble manners of life."

REVIEWS AND RATINGS OF CURRENT FILMS

less playing to the grandstands. There are some good scenes showing the power of the church (Roman Catholic, in this case) to help children, and the priest is well portrayed—as the Hollywood variety invariably are, thanks to their church's unceasing watchfulness and pressure. But affectionate references to beer are hardly appropriate in a picture planned to appeal to youngsters. A, Y.

THAT LADY IN ERMINE (20th Century-Fox). Lavish in costumes and elegant in settings, this Graustarkian fantasy may please both grown-ups and young people. It tells what happens when the portraits of ancestors come alive to participate in more modern affairs. Harmlessly entertaining.

A, Y, C.

THE WALLS OF JERICHO (20th Century-Fox). Romance, drama and pathos combine to make convincing this story of life in a small Kansas town during the 1900s. With situations geared to adult audiences, the film achieves the feeling and spirit of small-town life by skillfully prepared settings and a well-chosen cast. A.

Definitely Not Recommended

SORRY, WRONG NUMBER (Paramount). The fact that this film is well staged and well acted does not excuse such a presentation of unrelieved terror. It dramatizes the case of an invalided neurotic woman who, learning that her husband has arranged her murder, makes frantic and futile attempts to thwart the plan. There is plenty of taut suspense, but the end comes inexorably. Ethically and morally, there is no justification for a vicious and torturous film of this sort.

GOOD SAM (RKO). Our serious qualms about this picture relate principally to the slapstick and satirical manner in which "goodness" is treated. Through the main character, who is so "good" that he is little more than a simpleton, the virtue associated with that term is ridiculed. A Protestant minister preaches a vague sermon on I Cor. 13 at a service during which Sam gets drunk in a saloon, exchanges clothes with a tramp on a dare, and is escorted home by a Salvation Army band, to the tune of a well-known hymn. At the door he is greeted by a grinning pastor and a laughing wife—all this on Christmas Eve. Such lampooning antics offend the most ordinary proprieties, as well as reflect on the evangelical good taste that is part and parcel of Salvation Army procedure. We regret that Gary Cooper was chosen to portray the unfortunate Sam; he gains no stature by the performance.

DON'T FORGET YOU HAVE AN IMPORTANT DATE!

Friday Evening---October 1st* to listen to the first program in

The Episcopal Church's new radio series

"Great Scenes from Great Plays"

THE PLAY: "Cyrano de Bergerac" by Edmond Rostand

THE STARS: Walter Hampden with Ann Seymore

THE TIME: 8 PM (EST) 7 PM (CST) 8 PM (MST) 7 PM (PST)

THE NETWORK: Over 500 Stations of the Mutual Broadcasting System

YOUR RELATIONS AND FRIENDS WILL ENJOY THIS PROGRAM!

Be sure to tell them about it so they can tune in . . .

Of course, all Episcopalians who know about this program will want to listen to it. But it is important for you to remember that the most important objective of the program is to reach the millions in the United States who are completely unchurched. That is why the efforts of each of us are vitally important in making sure that the opening program and all subsequent programs reach the widest possible audience. That is why you will be doing a very great good when you do everything in your power to encourage others to listen to the program.

When you listen to this first program you will be hearing far more than the first production in a great new radio series. You will be on hand for a significant moment in the history of the Episcopal Church. You will share in what your Presiding Bishop calls a "daring yet ecclesiastically sound evangelistic plan."

Edmond Rostand's great play "Cyrano de Bergerac" has been selected to dramatize the vitally important Church message in this broadcast which concerns the importance of self-denial. Certainly this is a fitting subject for the first program since self-denial along with love of God is a vital principle in the Christian faith.

SPECIAL NOTE TO CLERGYMEN . . .

The value of this program to your parish or mission will depend to a very great extent on your understanding and support. That is why you received, well in advance, a folder containing suggestions and written materials to help you understand and promote the program in your parish.

*IMPORTANT NOTE: In spite of the large number of stations in the Mutual Broadcasting System's national network there are parishes not covered by Mutual stations. Most of these parishes are being specially covered through local stations not part of the Mutual System. In some cases this may mean the "Great Scenes from Great Plays" program will be heard on Thursday or Saturday evening rather than Friday—or at a time other than the times shown above. All clergymen will receive a complete list of stations and times well in advance of this program.

Look To Your Parish

THE WAYFARER

Revival, renewal, new life and power, fresh outbursts of spiritual vitality and enterprise shown in quiet or daring projects to match the desperate religious and moral needs of our time—none of these should be looked for from the House of Bishops or the National Council. Nor perhaps from the General Convention at San Francisco in 1949, unless unforeseen developments happen between now and then. If spiritual rebirth and revitalization occur at all in the next few years, the instruments will be converted and consecrated priests, laymen and women in the parishes and missions of this far-flung land of ours—and God's. "The wind blows where it wills . . . so it is with every one who is born of the Spirit." St. John's Gospel records the saying (according to Moffatt's translation), "You must all be born from above."

It is true that the Church needs many more men for its active ministry in this country and overseas. Some of them should be found among the tens of thousands of restless adolescents and young adults swarming in our over-crowded colleges and universities, or thronging city streets and busy thoroughfares. How shall they hear any call from God and the Church? Who will present the challenge? Who will counsel with them and stand by them in the valley of decision?

It is true that the Church requires immediately larger and more numerous gifts of generous proportions to galvanize our belated and tentative forward program in religious education, and to recoup the losses in our shamefully reduced budget for missionary advance within our borders and beyond our shores. Surely from the increased wealth of many of our members, and with the evidence of extravagant luxury on all sides, the Church might expect many extra gifts and additional contributions to expand receipts at diocesan and national headquarters. Must we await God's action upon laggard rectors and vestries and timid bishops, and pray for a courageous response from individual churchmen and women who count not their lives dear unto them as they persist in efforts to arouse others to action?

It might appear that our much publicized discussions on evangelism have evaporated. But come to think of it, were they greatly encouraged to continue beyond the stages of discursive talk and pedestrain experiments? What has come from official sources that breathed powerfully the Spirit of the Evangel, carried the sense of an authoritative message, or conveyed an imperative call from the Spirit of the Living God today, speaking out of the ruins of our war-ridden civilization and our pathetically inadequate efforts after peace? If we dare to lead in any venture that can break the bounds of our present horizons of the Kingdom of God, the attacking forces will come from parishes or from little disciplined companies of spiritual storm-troopers who have caught a larger vision and plumbed the depths of religious experience more profoundly than the experts in publicity.

But have we realized how much of the "church work" we are now doing is along the same lines, and at the same levels, as in pre-war days? It is as though the most devastating war in history had never broken out in our corrupt civilization to shake us to the very depths. In spite of all that has happened in recent years, too many are passively content with the state of the Church and its Sunday Schools, with the unpreparedness of teachers, parents and students. Population shifts have left us largely unmoved. Aged and tottering vestrymen hold on to office, without thought of the younger men they are keeping away from the Church, as well as out of the offices into which they might infuse some sorely needed energy, new ideas and vigorous action. Elderly women continue to monopolize women's organizations and succeed in keeping their membership rigidly limited. Few give consideration to young parents, or encourage these and other young adults to launch organizations of their own. In this, as in other respects, other church bodies are forging ahead, leaving us far behind.

Little wonder that a modern Nicodemus wrote during the war years: "I believe that our Church is, in the main, a dead Church, that it cleaves to the security and comfort of its coherence with a corrupt order of society which is itself moribund, the self-centered individualism and mammon-worship of nineteenth century civilization, with its iniquitous doctrines of the 'profit-motive', 'laissez-faire' and the 'skin-game' of competition, that it all too often preaches an emasculate pietism and shirks the fact that it has now no spiritual dynamic to offer to man, that it is in the main a compromising pseudo-Christianity. Its professionalism, its mere 'churchiness', sicken me and the typical 'parson' and his utterance and attitude fill me with despair."

WHAT CAN BE DONE?

What can be done?

Some like Nicodemus of old must gladly welcome and doggedly endure the pangs of spiritual re-birth, though at the cost of many a "midnight hour when all men must unmask". More of us must learn to pray anew, without wavering or doubting, never fainting or losing heart, until maybe because of our importunity an answer comes. Still more can turn afresh to regular reading and diligent study of the New Testament, perhaps using the Revised Standard Version as an aid to being stabbed awake by new approaches, insights and discoveries. All of us need to let ourselves be controlled more and more by the Spirit of the Compassionate Christ and by the self-denying, self-sacrificing love of the crucified and risen Lord and Saviour. Our daily longing and sincere desire can find expression in the psalmist's petition:

"Cause me to hear thy loving-kindness in the morning,
For in thee do I trust;
Cause me to know the way wherein I should walk,
For I lift up my soul unto thee."

Any man or woman who is conscious of the spiritual burden of our times can begin by seeking another, and they a few others, until after continuing stedfastly with one accord in prayer and supplication, the miracle of Pentecost happens again.

Already there has arisen a little cloud out of the sea, as small as a man's hand. A young communicant in one section of the country has braved the criticism of his family and friends as he trudges the countryside, preaching and working in the spirit of St. Francis and a greater than Francis. Another young communicant was willing to forsake all as he joined twenty-nine others in a three months' experiment of corporate living and praying, studying and discussing the teaching of Jesus and His relevance to human life and needs in the nation and the world today. Of the thirty, only one has been ordained; the others are young adults from western colleges and universities, unsettled as to their final choice of a life-work or career.

Groups of young adults are reported to have gotten together in various parts of the country. In the June issue of "The Pulpit", Charles Clayton Morrison's thought for the month is his conviction that nothing less than a reconstruction of non-Roman Christendom will "generate the spiritual revival we all profoundly desire. There will never be any more spiritual vitality in our denominational churches than we now have. These churches have long since passed their zenith in spiriual vigor. The attainment of an ecumenical church is in the interest of a profounder, a richer and a more adequate spiritual experience in personal life than our sectarianism is able to evoke. The motive for Christian unity is a double one —not only to bring to bear the full strength of the Christian faith upon the objective scene in America and throughout the world, but also to enrich and greaten the spiritual life of every individual believer."

When a few parish priests in any area agree to meet weekly, or as often as possible, to consider and pray over spiritual concerns and issues, and continue until they find a way or ways beyond anything they have attempted or achieved before, there will be grounds for hope. When small groups of friends among the laity, with or without benefit of clergy, show the courage to congregate in homes or churches for serious conversation, study, prayer and action, there will be reason for further encouragement. When in our theological seminaries there is evidence of deeper regard for spiritual values, for the training of men to do the work of evangelists and teachers, to lead the Church in new ventures to match our times and needs, to go out with informed missionary zeal and self-sacrificing devotion, while remaining ardent followers of the truth in modern scholarship and in the ability to interpret its meaning in life and language "understanded of the people", the prospects of spiritual advance will be brighter.

"When these things begin to come to pass, look up, and lift up your heads, because your redemption draweth nigh."

Some Poems Written By Authors Facing Death

By The REV. ARTHUR B. KINSOLVING, D. D.

I have been struck recently by the contrast I found in verse written by different men as they faced the after life.

Perhaps the most artistic and certainly one of the most familiar poems is R. L. Stevenson's "Requiem." Stevenson, a Scotsman, had fallen victim to tuberculosis and fled for his life to Samoa in the South Pacific. I do not know much about Stevenson's' religious history in his homeland, but the complete absence of any note of faith or penitence in the famous lines he wrote under the title "Requiem" is significant. Here are the lines:

Under the wide and starry sky
Dig the grave and let me lie:
Glad did I live and gladly die,
And I laid me down with a will.

This be the verse you grave for me:
Here he lies where he long'd to be;
Home is the sailor, home from sea,
And the hunter home from the hill.

Another Scotsman with a very different history but with a genius which fully equaled that of Stevenson wrote a poem in prospect of death which is one of the humblest, most penitential and profoundly moving in the English language. The author is Robert Burns, and this is the poem:

A PRAYER, IN THE PROSPECT OF DEATH

O Thou unknown, Almighty Cause
Of all my hope and fear!
In whose dread presence, ere an hour,
Perhaps I must appear!

If I have wander'd in those paths
Of life I ought to shun;
As something, loudly in my breast,
Remonstrates I have done;

Thou know'st that Thou hast formed me
With passions wild and strong;
And list'ning to their witching voice
Has often led me wrong .

Where human weakness has come short,
Or frailty stept aside,
Do Thou, All-Good; for such Thou art,
In shades of darkness hide.

Where with intention I have err'd,
No other plea I have,
But, Thou art good; and Goodness still Delighteth to forgive.

I have always felt that words so genuine, so humble and contrite must have elicited from the God Who loved the humble and contrite heart the forgiveness for which he prayed.

Readers will remember that Alfred Tennyson, who met in the Athenaeum Club in London from time to time Huxley, Tyndall, Mill, and the rest of the skeptics of that age, in the year 1889 wrote his immortal poem which has been the solace of so many hearts:

Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me!
And may there be no moaning of the bar
When I put out to sea,

But such a tide as moving seems asleep,
Too full for sound and foam,
When that which drew from out the boundless deep
Turns again home.

Twilight and evening bell,
And after that the dark!
And may there be no sadness of farewell
When I embark;
For, though from out our bourne of time and place
The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my Pilot face to face
When I have crost the bar.

No watery grave beside a southern isle might ever have been the goal of Alfred Tennyson's hopes, the man who wrote the majestic declartion of faith in the opening section of IN MEMORIAM. When some of the critics insisted that the word Pilot had been written with a small p, the question was referred to Tennyson, and, as I remember, his answer was in effect, "The word begins with a capital P, and of course there can be only one to whom it refers."

Any worshipper who has been present when Gounod's great setting of the Nicene Creed climaxes in the triumphant strain, "I believe in the resurrection of the dead; and the life of the world to come," must have felt the glory and sustaining power of this article of the Christian religion.

In Connecticut, it is recognized that diocesan journals may be slow in appearing, and there is ned for Church people, through their clergy or otherwise, to know promptly what took place in the diocesan convention. As an experiment, a mimeographed summary of convention action was sent to all clergy immediately after the convention, with the suggestion that they read it to their congregations and print it in their parish papers. The summary was two pages, single space.

A Holy Communion Meditation

By The REV. ROBERT R. BROWN

Rector of St. Paul's Church, Richmond, Virginia

"This is my Body. This is my Blood. This, do in Remembrance of Me."

The story is told of a Bishop of our Church who in his regular diocesan rounds visited a small church in a rural community. Before the service, as he was vesting, one of the members of the congregation came to him saying, "Bishop, I have some Methodist friends with me this morning. Don't you think it would be nice to ask them to commune with us?" The Bishop answered not a word. A few moments later another communicant approached him, saying, "Bishop, I have a Lutheran visitor with me today. Don't you think it would be appropriate to invite the Lutherans to commune with us?" The Bishop maintained his silence. Then only a short time later, still another church member came to him saying, "Bishop, I have three Presbyterians with me this morning and would like for you to invite them to have Communion with us", still again the good Bishop said nothing.

So the service was begun, the sermon was given, and after that portion which we know as "Prayer for the whole state of Christ's Church", the Bishop turned and broke into the service. He said: "I understand there are some Methodists here this morning. I don't want them to commune. I am told there are some Lutherans here this morning, I don't want them to commune. It has been announced that there are some Presbyterians here this morning, and I don't want them to commune. There may be one or two Episcopalians present, and I don't want them to commune." Then the Bishop took up the words of the Invitation: "But all ye who do truly and earnestly repent you of your sins, and are in love and charity with your neighbors, and intend to lead a new life . . . draw near with Faith."

Now this, for the most part, is the attitude of the Episcopal Church concerning open communion. We do not believe the Communion Service is a denominational service. We do not pretend to think that its strength and comfort are confined only to the valid Episcopalians. On the night in which He was betrayed, our Lord took bread and when He had given thanks, He brake it, and gave it to the Disciples saying, "Take, eat, This is my body. Do this in remembrance of Me". Likewise, after supper, He took the cup; and when He had given thanks, He gave it to them saying, "Drink ye all of this; for this is my Blood. Do this in remembrance of Me." Yes, we believe that Christ's gift of His spiritual Body and Blood transcends every boundary created by man. Therefore the service which is to follow is open to every Christian of any denomination.

But wait a minute! For though this service is an open service, still it is not a service which gives everything and demands nothing. No, there are certain conditions involved: Repentance, Charity, Good Intentions. The Bishop was exactly right. Who we are does not matter, but what we are and what we wish to become; ah, that matters a great deal. Something is given, yes, but something is also required. Down through the ages worshipping Christians have found that the spiritual effects of Holy Communion upon their hearts and souls and minds are dependent always upon the manner in which they have met these spiritual requirements.

I.

Last week at the meeting of the National Council of Our Church in Connecticut, we had the privilege of hearing Dean Steven T'sang, Bishop Elect of the Chinese Diocese, Hankow. He told of the progress of Christianity in his native land and more particularly of the method employed in receiving Chinese who desired to become Christians. Two questions are always asked: "Why do you want to be baptized?" and "What do you think of Christ?" If the petitioner replies that he wants to be baptized because he is a sinner; and that he believes Christ to be God's own Son; then he is enrolled in what is called a "Confessional Class" where he receives further instruction before he is ever permitted to approach the Baptismal Font. How different is this method from our own and how much to be preferred.

Repentance has always been the first requirement for membership in the Church of God and the phrase, "Because I am a Sinner" has always been the password for poor souls who would enter God's Kingdom. Sometimes I wonder whether modern American Christianity truly understands this. In the Episcopal Church we read a General Confession in the Communion Service and in Morning and in Evening Prayer. We say we "acknowledge and bewail our manifold sins and wickednesses," that "we do earnestly repent "and that we seek to serve God "In newness of life'. But do we really understand the meaning of these words? Is the memory of our sinfulness truly grievous unto us or is the burden of them intolerable? Yes, I think it would be well to face the question as to whether we might not have lost, over the years, some of that simple and sincere humility which should attend us as we repent of our sins before Almighty God.

At any rate the Holy Communion Service, as the first portion of the Invitation suggests, is open only to those who "do truly repent of their sins"; to those who regret those sins of omission where they have failed to do things they ought to have done; to those who feel an hearty contrition for sins of Commission wherein they have done the things which Christ and Church and Conscience tell them they ought not to have done. All this involves our little trifling, so-called "venial" sins, which are born out of our innate selfishness. It concerns the tragic weakening mortal sins which make their permanent mark on our immortal souls. Most important of all, it acknowledges Sin with a capital "S" which forbids the good that we would, and forces the evil that we would not. Yes, all these aspects of our natures must be considered individually and collectively until we come to realize the stream of evil which is literally a part of us, and then fall down upon our knees in repentant supplication to a forgiving God. Repentance, yes, but ah, having done this truly and earnestly, then help is given us through the spiritual Body and Blood of Christ.

II.

Still, in the paraphrased words of Shakespeare's "Portia" in the "Merchant of Venice", "Tarry Christian, the service hath yet another hold on you". It is the command for simple loving kindness in all human relationships. A group of Choir boys in England once asked their mentor to explain the Kingdom of God. This wise teacher answered that he was not sure exactly what the Kingdom of God was like, but he was quite sure what an individual had to be like in order to attain it. The individual, he said, had to be a gentleman or a gentlewoman and not in terms of birth or ancestry, but according to the true definition of the words gentle man and gentle woman.

The other day I was re-reading "The Snow Goose" by Paul Gallico. You will remember that it is the story of Phillip, a hideously deformed man who had withdrawn from society to hide his ugliness, and yet who did not hate, but loved very greatly, man, the animal kingdom, and all nature. The story also describes Firth, the young girl who learned to love him, and of course the snow goose, which having been saved and healed by him, showed its own love by returning each season to his lonely beach. It is a narrative of unbelieveable beauty concluding with Philip's sacrifice for the men on Dunkirk beach. But the whole undercurrent of gentleness and of spiritual love is the thing which makes the story the masterpiece which undoubtedly it is.

Well, love and charity always create a masterpiece either in art or in life. Yet, let us not indulge in the supposition that it is easily created. It involves the consideration which thinks first how a spoken word will affect another. It involves understanding which, while it may not agree, can still recognize another point of view. It calls for thoughtful little acts of kindness which ask for no appreciation or reward. It calls for discipline which resists the temptation to consider another as plain or inferior. Above all, it demands a recognition of that Divine Spark which unites all humanity in a great bond of brotherhood under God. Yes, it is not easy to live in love and charity or to be a gentle man or a gentle woman, yet this is a major requirement for inheritance of the Kingdom of God.

How does the Communion Service put it? "Ye who are in love and charity with your neighbor". It is the same thing, and the same elements are involved. For what doth it profit us to love only those who love us? A mongrel dog will do even the same. Or how does it help to return kindness only to those who have been kind to us. Any beast of the field will do the same. And how does it advance us spiritually when we give out of our plenty? A single seed is not missed in the harvest. No, we must love even the unlovely and even though our love may not be returned. We must do kindness wherever the opportunity affords and regardless of the attitude of the person to whom the kindness is shown. We must give out of our poverty and even though the gift is not appreciated. This is what it means to live in love and charity, this is the thing asked of Christians as they receive the Body and Blood of Christ.

III.

Yes, repentance and love, but there also must be progress, spiritual progress. Calvin Coolidge once said: "We do not need more material development. We need more spiritual development. We do not need more intellectual power. We need more moral power. We do not need more knowledge. We need more character. We do not need more of the things that are seen, we need more of the things that are unseen." That was true in his day and it is increasingly true in our own. Christianity cannot confront a man and allow him to remain unchanged. It cannot face a problem and refuse to meet the problem. It cannot look at sins of the world without setting about to transform the world. Christianity is not a static, do-nothing religion. It is forever reaching outward and upward.

So bring this down to a personal level and see what it means. Each individual Christian must keep himself conscious of the importance of his spiritual as well as his material development. He must look within himself and search out the weakest elements of his life with a view to remedying them. He must consider not merely the broad abstractions of such sins as Pride, Envy, Malice, but he must consider their particular aspects.

"Of what does my pride consist? Do I think of myself more highly than I ought to think? Is my pride bound up in my family or my children? Am I proud because I am intelligent or white or socially acceptable? Of whom and of what am I envious? Is it of the success of another? if so, why? What form does my malice take in giving little stings, in speaking unkindly, in discounting the contributions of others?

You see it isn't enough just to admit the general fault. We must reduce it to the particular and then be after doing something about it. Actually that is what we agree to each time we come to the Altar Rail for our communion. The invitation bids us come if "We intend to lead a new life following the commandments of God". As someone has put it: "we are self-creating beings. We cannot say that God has made us the way we are and hence is responsible for our actions. God did not make us in this sense, rather He placed in our hands the power to make ourselves. There is no such thing as a "naturally high-tempered person". To say that one is born miserly or selfish or proud is equally ridiculous. Our characters are not given to us ready-made. That is true of course. That is why we come to communion with a high resolve to create new lives, new characters, and it is a part of the miracle of the Communion that in this intent, we are given the power through spiritual Body and Blood of Christ.

So in this manner the devout Christian comes to the Communion Rail on such occasions as today. He comes, not as a Methodist, a Lutheran, a Presbyterian or an Episcopalian. He comes, not with the idea that he is participating in some memorial service such as would commemorate any great but mortal man. He comes, not in the belief that he is to receive all and give nothing. Not a bit of it. He comes rather with the understanding that here is a channel through which the Grace of God works. Here

The United And Divided Church

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

The general impression which delegates and visitors had of the Amsterdam Assembly of the World Council of Churches contained contradictory elements. On the one hand they were delighted to find how much the various churches of the world really had in common. On the other hand they were appalled and baffled by the stubborn character of the differences.

One of the reports declared, "We have found God, in His mercy penetrating the barriers of our fundamental divisions and enabling us to speak in the common language of the divine revelation witnessed to in the Scriptures. But wherever we find ourselves thus speaking together of our unity we also find ourselves faced by some very stubborn problems."

The conference was honest enough to admit that these differences are not all due to "diversities of gifts" but are also the result of sin. It declared, "It is because of our estrangement from Him—that the evils of the world have so deeply penetrated our churches, so that among us too there are worldly standards of success, class divisions, economic rivalry and a secular mind. Even where there are no differences of theology, liturgy or language there are churches based upon segregation of race or color, a scandal within the body of Christ."

The most stubborn differences apparent at Amsterdam were of two types. The one consisted of the differences which were due to varying conceptions of the nature of the Church. The other comprised those differences of class, race and nation which the conference attributed to the sinful corruption of the Church by the world. It hoped that the latter would be overcome not so much by specific efforts at unity as by the general renewal of the Church in the spirit of Christ.

"We have so often lived," declared the conference, "in preoccupation with our inward affairs instead of forgetting ourselves in outgoing love and service. We pray for the churches' renewal as we pray for their unity."

The differences due to varying conceptions of the Church, primarily Catholic and Protestant conceptions, may well prove almost insurmountable barriers to a full reunion of Christendom.

Parish Communions

In too many parishes, the Holy Communion has become an individualistic service. The entire stress is upon the communicant making his communion. A little band of faithful souls come to the early service, but never join the larger fellowship at a later hour. When the Holy Communion is celebrated at the later hour, tragicly many of the congregation leave before the blessed sacrament is administered. Or there are restrictions unknown to the Book of Common Prayer placed upon reception of the sacrament, so that customarily only the priest makes his communion. We have forgotten that this is the great service of the whole Christian Fellowship! Our customs and habits are making it atomistic and individualistic, rather than the great act of corporate Christian worship.

Perhaps we need a revival of what is sometimes called the "Parish Communion." Such a service is preceded by careful instruction by the rector, not only in the Church services, but in Sunday School, in organizations—yes, even in the vestry meeting. The deep significance of the congregation in the Holy Communion is emphasized. The service is explained not as a ritual act by a priest, attended by the congregation as an audience, in which he alone at the altar does something on their behalf, but as a corporate act in which the congregation and the priest together consecrate the Bread and the Wine.

In such "Parish Communions" we would like to see this corporate meaning emphasized by having the Wardens of the parish carry the Bread and the Wine to the Holy Table. The vestry might well be given a place in the chancel as the representatives of the laity. Congregational participation in the service should be sought at all cost, even if it means the sacrifice of all musical settings. The priest should read the service not only with constant thought to its meaning, but audibly. There should be a "quality of vitality" to the service! It should move and be moving! It should by God's grace, be filled with a sense of the Holy Spirit.

We would stress whole families attending, as well as the whole family of the parish attending. Too much we tend to keep our children away from the Holy Communion because, we say, "It is a long service and they will not understand it!" But they can catch a sense of reverence and awe; of father's and mother's feeling of the Presence of God. Do we keep the children away from our services because we are unwilling to face the responsibility of teaching them to worship with us?

Possibly the sacred hour of eleven is not the best hour for such a Parish Communion. For many Churches will make plans for a time of fellowship after the services which will have been enriched and warmed by the service itself. For in his teaching and in his sermon, surely the rector will stress that the Holy Communion is never ritual in a vacuum. It is a service that dares not end with the benediction. It goes onward and outward. It fills our parish life and our individual lives during the weeks to come. It goes out in ever expanding circles into our community, into our nation, into our world. It binds us in fellowship to the Christians of other communions and other places. It recalls to us our common fellowship in Christ Jesus. It transcends narrow denominational rules and boundaries.

So it reminds us of our task! Until the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our God and His Christ, we can only be uneasy in our communion. Politicians propose their panaceas. Militarists call for force once more. But Christians know that the only solution to the world's ill is the Good News of God in Jesus Christ. On World Wide Communion Sunday, let us make our communion, knowing ourselves parts of the world-wide fellowship but knowing too, the great task which that Fellowship still must face!

The Draft And Candidates For The Ministry

Provisions of the 1948 Selective Service Act as they apply to prospective students for the ministry are apparently closely similar to the requirements of the war-time draft law. The new law requires the registration of all within the ages of 18 and 25, even ordained ministers and seminarians. It then provides for the complete exemption of all regularly ordained ministers, and of "students preparing for the ministry under the direction of recognized churches or religious organizations, who are satisfactorily pursuing full time courses of instruction in recognized theological or divinity schools, or who are satisfactorily pursuing full-time courses of instruction leading to their entrance into recognized theological or divinity schools, in which they have been pre-enrolled."

This latter part provides exemption for college students who plan to study for the ministry. But it is to be noted that such students must be "pre-enrolled" in a theological seminary.

During the war, there was an understandable reluctance on the part of young men to avail themselves of the exemption that could be granted to pre-theological students. Some bishops refused to grant the necessary affidavit to men requesting it. There was a feeling that men would be better ministers if they served in the armed forces during the period of hostilities.

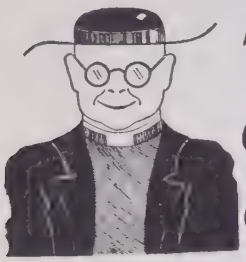
But now the situation is vastly different. We are technically, at least, at peace. The number of men required by the services is a small percentage of that called to serve in war time. The proposed training as described by the military has little to commend it. There is considerable doubt whether this conscription is necessary. Meanwhile, there is a deplorable lack of ministers in the Church. We need men and we need them speedily. It is suggested that bishops should bring the matter of this possible exemption to the attention of their candidates and postulants, and urge them to take advantage of it.



The Curate's Column

Some years ago we had a Great-aunt. She was a grand person, but she had been reared in the strictest Puritan tradition. That sort of raising, you will admit, isn't exactly calculated to make anyone broad-minded. It was Aunt Sue's custom, each Sunday afternoon, to stop at Grandfather's house, collect one of our aunts, and go teach Sunday School in a little mission outside of town. One Sunday afternoon Aunt Sue appeared at the door in a blinding snow storm. She shook the snow from her clothes, stepped inside and said: "Get your things on, Sarah, it's time for Sunday School." Aunt Sarah answered: "I have no intention of going out in a storm like this and catching my death of cold." Aunt Sue drew herself up and retorted: "Nobody ever got hurt doing the Lord's work." "How about Mrs. Thompson," Aunt Sarah replied. "She went to church in a storm, and she caught pneumonia." That stumped Aunt Sue for a minute, but only for a minute. "Oh well," she answered, "she was a Methodist."

That sentiment sounds a little shocking to us, but it wasn't considered especially peculiar a generation ago. It was the generally accepted view of Episcopalians that God looks with favor upon the Episcopal Church and has little use for those "heretics" of other denominations. Of course, every other Church was just as thoroughly convinced that it had an absolute monopoly on the truth of God, and alone represented the will of God.

That position becomes rather difficult to maintain once we realize that other Churches produce as high a type of life as does our own, and produces it in more people. This fact has driven us to the conclusion that God doesn't particularly care by what name we call ourselves, what type of organization we have, or what form of worship we use. We have an increasing conviction that God approves any of these which bring people to understand and love each other better, to treat each other more kindly, and work together in harmony for the good of all. He approves any of these which give us a greater understanding and love of God, and a keener desire to work in His way for His ends.

We find it encouraging that an increasing number of people share that view. We find it more encouraging that many branches of the Christian Church can sit together in Council and speak with one voice on vital questions. The time may still be a long way off, but we believe it will surely come, when Christians can stand together and truthfully sing: "We are not divided; all one body we." We would like that, and we think God would like it too.

The Roman Catholic Church was, of course, not represented at the Assembly. But many non-Roman Churches, particularly the Eastern Orthodox and the Anglo-Catholics, have a Catholic conception of the Church. For them the Church is essentially Holy.

For Protestants, however, the visible and historic Church, as distinguished from an invisible Church, is subject to sinful corruption as are all historic institutions. It stands under divine judgment and must continually repent. The call to the Church to repent, characteristic of Protestant piety, was regarded as an absurdity by the Catholic-minded.

The greatest points of unity were also two. At the top level was the sense of a single loyalty to a common Lord of the Church and a grateful experience of being drawn by Him into a unity beyond all differences. On another level was the remarkable unity of conviction about the responsibilities of the Church toward society in this critical day of the world's history.

The Amsterdam Assembly spoke more radical words about those responsibilities than any previous church assembly. One had the feeling that the fires of history in recent decades had purged the churches of much of their irresponsibility and irrelevance and had called them to bring the message of Christ's love to the world in actual deeds of mercy and of justice.

THE BIRTHDAY REMEMBRANCE

Each year we have in our Church Schools a chance to return thanks for another year added to our lives. We return it through prayer and offering ourself and "our extension" gift. Every year there is a new project. This is the extension work of the Church. Too often our money is just to keep things going with a little advance. This free will gift is a new project.

This year we are to help provide a Children's Room in a church, at Roanridge, near Kansas City, Missouri. Here is a wonderful opportunity to extend the work in the rural area. But why Roanridge, you ask?

A midwestern layman and his wife have given to the church a fine farm to be used as a training center for rural church work. This has made it possible for the church to provide opportunity for Christian education to several hundred children who would otherwise never have been reached.

During the past several years, the National Council has developed a training project and a ministry to the families in the area surrounding Roanridge. Theological school students have served Roanridge under the supervision of church leaders. This group has also worked on the farm as a part of the training to understand more fully rural people.

Because of the wonderful response it has proven that the center is much needed. The training program operates under the name of the National Town-Country Church Institute. This calls for action, so there will be provided by the boys and girls through their gifts proper facilities for Christian education, worship and community activities.

When the church is erected it will be seen by thousands of persons each year, as it will stand on a hill, above the main national highway on the highest point between Kansas City and St. Joseph, Missouri. When you go west with your family, look for it and be proud of it! It will be a model rural church and rural community center, showing how the church has been successful in becoming a strong Christian influence in this whole area. It will illustrate how the church can best serve the rural community and especially rural children.

The first unit to be built there is the Church School section and Christian education. This is what you are to tell your boys and girls when they return thanks this year with their gift of money on their birthdays.

It is a wonderful thing for those boys and girls and their families to have the place of worship and study and fun.: It is equally as wonderful that young men and women going into church work will have had the training to work in the rural areas. They will learn the joys and happiness in the rural world.

There are picture folders, prayer cards and envelopes available as well as leader's guides from our Department of Christian Education at the Church Missions House, New York. Won't you use this yourself and with your family.

MARTHA C. PRAY,

"AND WHO IS MY NEIGHBOR?"

There was a woman of America who stood and said fervently, "Thee, Lord, I love with all my heart and soul and mind and strength." But He answered, "That is not enough. You are also to love your neighbor as yourself." "Who is my neighbor, Lord?" she asked. And the Lord replied:

"There are little children wearing out their lives in factories in every state in your nation." "They are not my children," you say, and you pass by on the other side.

"There is a woman in your town who fell among unfriendly folk who stripped her of her reputation, and lashed her with their tongues, who froze her with scorn and left her half dead in her soul. And all the 'respectable women' went by on the other side.

"There was an intelligent girl trying to get an education in order that she might live more abundantly, and you laughed at her efforts because her skin was different in color from your own.

"There was an industrial girl striking for a living wage for her family and friends, and you yawned over the newspaper account of her efforts and deplored the inconvenience the strike caused you.

"There is a woman in your kitchen who is a human being; a man in your garden; a woman who lives in your street; a church seeking in its way to bring in the Kingdom—but it is not your church!

"There are backward races groping for life and freedom; confused nations great and small, trying dimly to find the way to give their gifts to the common life of the world. Human beings! Neighbors all!"

"And you are to love your neighbor as yourself."

The Words of Administration

After this preliminary sketch of the use and growth of the Sacrament we shall now turn to the development of the words of administration in our present book of Common Prayer, because they illustrate most excellently the quality of breadth in our church.

In the first prayer book of 1549 the original words of the Mass were retained i. e., "the Body of our Lord Jesus Christ which was given for thee, preserve thy body and soul unto everlasting life", and for the cup "the blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, which was shed for thee, preserve thy body and soul unto everlasting life". By the time however that the first revision of the Prayer Book was made, three years later, 1552, the reformers had gone further, and had swung away from the sacrificial idea to that of the Communion as a memorial occasion. So the first sentences were ommitted, and the second clause took their place, i. e, "Take and eat this in remembrance that Christ died for thee, and feed on Him in thy heart by faith, with thanksgiving", and with the wine, "Drink this in remembrance that Christ's blood was shed for thee, and be thankful". But after the reign of "Bloody Mary" and her persecution of the Church of England, when Elizabeth came into power, the value of both the sacrificial and memorial attitude toward the Lord's supper was recognized. So the original words of the Mass were restored, but the second memorial sentences were retained.

So now we have our present wording which is a happy compromise, giving us the benefit of both ideas about the Holy Communion, and leaving it to the individual conscience to place the emphasis to suit the viewpoint of each communicate, or to do, as most of us do taking it both in the sense of the sacrifice of our Savior, and as a source of strength and support to our souls through the vivid remembrance of His love as shown in that sacrifice with the use of the bread and wine, and the whole sacred service, to bring us into His very presence.

R. CARY MONTAGUE.

Message of the World Council

A statement addressed not only to Christians but to all who are willing to hear.

The World Council of Churches, meeting at Amsterdam, sends this message of greeting to all who are in Christ, and to all who are willing to hear.

We bless God our Father, and our Savior Jesus Christ who gathers together in one the children of God that are scattered abroad. He has brought us here together at Amsterdam. We are divided from one another not only in matters of faith, order and tradition, but also by pride of nation, class and race. But Christ has made us his own, and he is not divided. In seeking him we find one another. Here at Amsterdam we have committed ourselves afresh to him, and have covenanted with one another in constituting this World Council of Churches. We intend to stay together. We call upon Christian congregations everywhere to endorse and fulfill this covenant in their relations one with another. In thankfulness to God we commit the future to him.

When we look to Christ, we see the world as it is—his world, to which he came and for which he died. It is filled both with great hopes and also with disillusionment and despair. Some nations are rejoicing in new freedom and power, some are bitter because freedom is denied them, some are paralyzed by division, and everywhere there is an undertone of fear. There are millions who are hungry, millions who have no home, no country and no hope. Over all mankind hangs the peril of total war. We have to accept God's judgment upon us for our share in the world's guilt. Often we have tried to serve God and mammon, put other loyalties before loyalty to Christ, confused the gospel with our own economic or national or racial interests, and feared war more than we have hated it. As we have talked with each other here, we have begun to understand how our separation has prevented us from receiving correction from one another in Christ. And because we lacked this correction, the world has often heard from us not the Word of God but the words of men.

But there is a word of God for our world. It is that the world is in the hands of the living God, whose will for it is wholly good; that in Christ Jesus, His incarnate Word, who lived and died and rose from the dead, God has broken the power of evil once for all, and opened for everyone the gate into freedom and joy in the Holy Spirit; that the final judgment on all human history and on every human deed is the judgment of the merciful Christ; and that the end of history will be the triumph of his Kingdom, where alone we shall understand how much God has loved the world. This is God's unchanging word to the world. Millions of our fellowmen have never heard it. As we are met here from many lands, we pray God to stir up his whole church to make this gospel known to the whole world, and to call on all men to believe in Christ, to live in his love and to hope for his coming.

A Voice and a Home

Our coming together to form a World Council will be vain unless Christians and Christian congregations everywhere commit themselves to the Lord of the church in a new effort to seek together, where they live, to be his witnesses and servants among their neighbors. We have to remind ourselves and all men that God has put down the mighty from their seats and exalted the humble and meek. We have to learn afresh together to speak boldly in Christ's name both to those in power and to the people, to oppose terror, cruelty and race discrimination, to stand by the outcast, the prisoner and the refugee. We have to make of the church in every place a voice for those who have no voice, and a home where every man will be at home. We have to learn afresh together what is the duty of the Christian man or woman in industry, in agriculture, in politics, in the professions and in the home. We have to ask God to teach us together to say No and to say Yes in truth. No to all that flouts the love of Christ, to every system, every program and every person that treats any man as though he were an irresponsible thing or a means to profit, to the defenders of injustice in the name of order, to those who sow the seeds of war, and to those who advocate war as inevitable. Yes, to all that conforms to the love of Christ, to all who seek for justice, to the peacemakers, to all who hope, fight and suffer for the cause of man, to all who—even without knowing it—look for new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness.

Signs of Victory

It is not in man's power to banish sin and death from the earth, to build the Holy Catholic Church, to conquer the hosts of Satan. But it is within the power of God. He has given us at Easter the certainty that his purpose will be accomplished. But, by our acts of obedience and faith we can on earth set up signs which point to the coming victory. Till the day of that victory our lives are hid with Christ in God, and no earthly disillusion or distress or power of hell can separate us from him. As those who wait in confidence and joy for their deliverance, let us give ourselves to those tasks which lie to our hands, and so set up signs that men may see.

Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus, throughout all ages, world without end.

OUTDOOR SERVICE MARKED PLACING FIRST STONE IN NEW CATHEDRAL UNIT

Washington, D. C.—The first stone to be placed in the Patriots' Transept since construction of that unit of Washington Cathedral was arrested in the early 1930's swung into position during a brief outdoor service held on the Feast of St. Michael and All Angels, Wednesday, September 29, at 2:30 P. M. The date marked the forty-first anniversary of the laying of the foundation stone of the cathedral. Since that time, 1907, two-fifths of the great Gothic edifice, which when finished will be the sixth largest cathedral in the world, have been completed, although no construction took place during the war years. The September 29 service will be held at the foot of the transept steps in full view of the site of the present construction operations. The Rt. Rev. Angus Dun, bishop of Washington, will make a short address and the Very Rev. John Wallace Suter, dean of the cathedral, will conduct the service, leading the congregation in prayers for God's continued blessing of the work. The boys of the cathedral choir will sing.

Plans to continue cathedral construction were completed in the spring and throughout the summer preparatory work has been underway: scaffoldings built, derricks erected, guard rails and field offices placed, temporary roofing removed, and final drawings for stone work approved so that quarrying could begin. Now, with all in readiness, actual fabrication will commence.

The unit to be built is the east aisle of the south, or Patriots' Transept, which will be carried to the triforium level. Within it will be the War Memorial Chapel where the National Roll of Honor, recording names and service records of thousands of men and women who have served their country in times of war, will be permanently enshrined. The Chapel will contain three stained glass windows, two in the east wall and one larger one in the south wall, directly over the place where the altar will stand.

Hundreds of the stones which will go into the new chapel have been given in memoriam, or as thank-offerings, by persons from all parts of the country. Many purchase a building stone at the time of a friend's death and a card, signed by the bishop and the dean, is sent to the bereaved family in the name of the donor. It is hoped that as more persons learn of this dignified and lasting remembrance enough stones will be purchased to permit construction to continue across the entrance of the Patriots' Transept, thus adding much-needed seating space, and enabling the work to proceed to the west aisle of the transept. Funds for the latter section are already in hand, but cannot be used until it is possible to build the portion intervening between the work presently being undertaken and the west aisle. To continue building now that equipment and materials are already on the spot would be far more economical than allowing time to elapse between the erection of the two units so that the preparatory work would have to be redone at some future date. For this reason the cathedral plans to conduct a nationwide appeal for the fund $300,000, necessary to carry the work across the transept at the height of the permanent aisle roofs. Mr. William R. Castle, of Washington, is treasurer of the building fund and inquiries regarding building stones should be addressed to him.

PLAN TO REVIVE MISSION WORK

Lexington, Ky.—The Rev. Pomeroy H. Hartman, formerly Chaplain of Margaret Hall School, has accepted the position of Canon Missionary of the Cathedral of St. George the Martyr. He will live in Beattyville, Ky., until such time as quarters may be provided on the Cathedral Domain, and will have charge of St. Thomas' Church. Plans are being made to revive the mission work around the Cathedral Domain, under Canon Hartman's direction. The Eager School House, in which this congregation previously worshipped, has been torn down by the county and the school closed. As soon as funds are available for the construction of a chapel on the Cathedral Domain, this work will be revived. Canon Hartman and Mr. Glenn Adkins, custodian of the Cathedral Domain, are forming plans to start a Sunday school before the construction of the chapel, making use of some of the already existing camp buildings on the Domain.

Canon Hartman has had a varied missionary experience in a number of places in the home mission field. He is a man of strong faith, and earnest convictions. He likes young people, and they like him. Canon Hartman will take up his residence in Beattyville on October 15th.

NOTED INDIAN WOMAN ARRIVES

Will Visit Hospitals In U. S. and Canada

New York, N. Y.—With establishment of self-rule in India, the Indian people are assuming increased responsibility for the improvement of their social and economic conditions.

This was the view expressed here by Dr. Hilda M. Lazarus, noted Indian woman doctor, and newly appointed principal of Vellore Christian Medical College in South India, who arrived September 8 at La Guardia field for a three months' visit to medical centers and hospitals in the United States and Canada.

In assessing the new Indian government, Dr. Lazarus told a press conference at headquarters of the Foreign Missions Conference, that marked progress had been made in literacy, and in the abolition of discriminatory practices against untouchables.

She attributed the work of missionaries and the influence of Gandhi as being of paramount importance in the elimination of untouchability, declaring that "it was the missionaries and Gandhi who proved that untouchables could be lifted out of their poverty and degradation, and converted into self-respecting human beings."

In discussing the role of missionaries in India, Dr. Lazarus warned that "missionaries must demonstrate the value of their work in terms of service to humanity, if they are to play an important part in the development of India."

As an example of effective missionary work, Dr. Lazarus cited Vellore Christian Medical College, which, she said, was supported by forty Protestant denominational boards throughout the world.

"Vellore is a concrete case of how the East and West, and people of all races and creeds, can work together harmoniously under the banner of Christian fellowship," she said. "With an enrollment of 1,919 students and a faculty of 84, drawn from Asia, Europe, and the United States, this is a thoroughly international and Christian institution."

While noting improved conditions in Inda, Dr. Lazarus emphasized that India, with a population three times larger than the United States, has less than one-third as many doctors, while the shortage of nurses is especially acute, owing to the women's view of nursing as a menial profession.

"'The result is that India has the highest mortality rate of any country in the world," she stated. "Three and a quarter million children die each year and life expectancy for Indian women is twenty-six, and for men, twenty-seven, as compared to approximately sixty-eight for people in this country."

Dr. Lazarus will be a principal speaker at a number of church conferences in this country, including the Foreign Missions Assembly at Columbus, Ohio, October 6-8, and at the Biannual Assembly of the United Council of Church Women at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, November 14-18.

WILMINGTON CATHEDRAL APOINTS NEW DEAN

Washington, D. C.—Rev. J. Brooks Mosley, for the past four years director at Episcopal Church House of the diocesan Social Relations Department, has resigned to become dean of the Cathedral Church of St. John, in Wilmington, Delaware.

Like the recently consecrated Bishop William Gordon Jones of Alaska, the new dean is in his early thirties but he enters upon his enlarged tasks with a well rounded background of varied service despite his youth. He was born and educated in Philadelphia, graduating from Temple University in 1937 and from the Episcopal Theological Seminary, of Cambridge, in 1940. That same year he became assistant minister at St. Barnabas Church in Cincinnati. where after two years, he was appointed minister-in-charge. While living in Cincinnati he took a year of graduate study at the School of Applied Religion. In 1942 he was married to Betty Mary Wall of his home town, Willow Grove, a suburb of Philadelphia. They have three children.

Mr. Mosley's special aptitude for personal counseling and work with young people led to his appointment in 1944 as director of Social Relations in the Diocese of Washington. In addition to his departmental duties of giving much personal counsel and advice, he has rounded out his clinical training with two years study at the Washington School of Psychiatry. He also has acted as chaplain at the Episcopal Hospital, been a board member of the Washington Community Chest and Council, and of the Department of Social Welfare of the National Council of Churches.

He has made a definite community contribution as a board member and secretary of the Travelers Aid in Washington and met with outstanding success as a faculty member and lately dean of the last two Youth Conferences of the Diocese of Washington.

His resignation becomes effective November 28. At Wilmington he will succeed Dean Robert M. Hatch who has been called to St. John's Church, Waterbury, Conn.

BISHOP AND MRS. BLOY HONORED

Pasadena, Cal.—On September 20 Bishop and Mrs. F. E. Bloy were honored at a reception at the home of Mrs. George W. Henderson. The affair was sponsored by the Bishop's Guild, an organization made up of women of the diocese, to assist the Bishop in various phases of diocesan work. This garden party is an annual event, but was held in September, rather than June of this year, due to the recent trip the Bishop and Mrs. Bloy made to London for the Lambeth Conference, and was not a benefit, as is customary, but merely a social event to honor our new bishop and his wife. There was a special playground for young children, attended by young women of the Beneficae and other organizations, and women of many diocesan organizations assisted. There were upward of 1,500 Episcopalians present.

DEATHS

CANON CLAUDE E. REMICK

The Rev. Claude Elwood Remick, retired senior canon of Christ Church Cathedral, St. Louis, and for many years the secretary of the diocesan Convention and diocesan Council of Missouri, died in St. Louis on September 14 at the age of 72. At the time of his retirement a year ago, Canon Remick was the senior priest in active service in the Diocese of Missouri.

Widely-known for his work with underprivileged boys in the Cathedral parish house, Canon Remick had served at Christ Church for 44 years at the time of his retirement. The Claude E. Remick Fund for boys was launched in tribute to his work by members of the Cathedral parish.

Trained for the law, Canon Remick turned to the study of theology and was ordained deacon in 1903. After short experience at a mission at West Plains, Mo., he had about made up his mind that he had made a mistake in entering the ministry, when he stopped for the night at the Christ Church clergy house. The then dean, the late Very Rev. Carroll M. Davis, convinced him that his vocation was to work with the

The Rev. George Woodward Lamb, D. D., died at the home of his daughter, near Bristol, Pa., on July 31, 1948.

Dr. Lamb was born in Howard County, Maryland, March 19, 1963. He was ordered deacon in 1890, by Bishop Knight, of Milwaukee, and advanced to the priesthood in March, 1892, by Bishop Nicholson. In 1899 he was married to Henrietta Porter, who survives him.

His first work in the ministry was at St. Luke's, Milwaukee, which he served as lay reader, deacon and priest, from 1887-1894, with the added charge of St. Mark's, South Milwaukee, he was also secretary of the diocese. The next five years were spent in the Diocese of Fond du Lac.

In 1899 he became curate at St. Timothy's, Roxborough, Phialdelphia; St. Mary's Memorial Church, Pittsburgh, 1903 to 1907; St. Paul's, Fairview, and St. Luke's, Georgetown, Pa., 1907 to 1910; Trinity Church, Rochester, Pa., 1910 to 1916; Church of the Advent, Jeannette, and St. Luke's, Latrobe, Pa., 1916-1921; Church of the Advent, Hatboro, Pa., 1921-1037, when he retired from parochial work. In 1944 he received the Honorary Degree of Doctor of Divinity from the Philadelphia Divinity School.

In 1922 he became librarian of the Church Historical Society, and during his retirement he devoted his entire time to this work, with the added duties of treasurer.

Besides his widow, he is survived by two daughters, Mrs. David M. Sheerer and Mrs. Clifford Winner, and two grandsons.

Burial was from St. Andrew's Chapel of the Philadelphia School on August 3.

TUNE IN THE SECOND PROGRAM IN

THE PLAY: "THE CORN IS GREEN" by Emlyn Williams

THE STARS: JANE COWL with RICHARD WARING and a large cast

THE TIME: 8 PM (EST) 7 PM (CST) 8 PM (MST) 7 PM (PST)

THE NETWORK: Over 500 Stations of the Mutual Broadcasting System

AS a loyal Church member it is important that you hear each radio program in the series "Great Scenes from Great Plays." It is doubly important that you invite non-church members to hear each program. Many are arranging listening-in parties in their homes. Others are going through their personal address books and systematically telephoning friends to be sure to tune-in the Episcopalian programs broadcast every Friday evening.

On Friday evening October 8, the beloved American star of "Smilin' Through" and "Lilac Time"—Miss Jane Cowl—will play the difficult role of Miss Moffatt in Emlyn Williams famous drama, "The Corn Is Green." A good woman's courageous thought conquers stubbornness and bigotry, overcoming all obstacles so that she is enabled to bring the light of learning to a little coal mining town in North Wales.

The play was selected to dramatize the importance of teachers and teaching, and how, going a step further, teaching the simple truths of Christianity is one of the most important functions of the Church.

*IMPORTANT NOTE: There are still some parishes not covered by the 500 stations of the Mutual Broadcasting System's coast-to-coast network. Most of these parishes are being specially covered through local stations not affiliated with the Mutual System. In some cases this may mean that "Great Scenes From Great Plays" program will be heard on Thursday or Saturday or at a different time than that shown above. All Clergymen will receive a complete list of stations and times of broadcast well in advance.

THE NEED IS URGENT

Sir: We are desperately in need of a parson for a new Mission Field on the Island of Kauai. We have a new church and a new rectory. The people are begging for a vicar, but we have had no success. It is a grand place for a missionary minded young man or couple.

TIMELY AND IMPORTANT

Sir: Your recent editorial "Converts" is timely and important, and it is unfortunate that those who need it most will not read it and take it to heart. First, it explodes the popular notion that the Roman Caholic Church is sweeping the field by its conversion of Protestants. One of the associate secretaries of the Federal Council recently made the assertion, which he cannot verify by a census, since there is none, that authoritative investigations reveal the fact that for every conversion of a Protestant to the Roman Catholic Church, there are three in the opposite direction. (We have seen in Roman Catholic periodicals complaints that the average pastor makes so few conversions.) And your concluding paragraph is a wholesome and much needed warning against the sacrilegious abuse of the word "Christian." In help wanted ads it is universally used to mean "Gentile." But the last thing that many an employer would tolerate in his establishment is a genuine Christian. Recently The New Yorker printed the delightful tale of a man showing his pious mother from the country through his

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

They Practice What Their Husbands Preach

By JOSEPHINE MURPHEY

In the Nashville Tennessean Magazine

The lot of a minister's wife is not an easy one. The learning of Sappho, the charm of Ninon De Lenclos, and the resourcefulness of Lady Godiva are barely sufficient equipment with which to face her day-by-day problems. She must be a lady in the parlor and frugal in the kitchen; if she is also prepared to tie knots for the Girl Scouts, substitute for the church organist, organize a lawn festival, raise money for indigent orphans, and lecture to the book club, she is well on the way toward adequacy in her role. She can speed her husband or contribute to his mouldering, each by the limits of her capacities. She must not make mistakes.

And yet ministers, even as other men, marry for love rather than practicality, and many a pretty young bride, unprepared for her status as the presumed fount of all ecclesiastical and most secular knowledge, finds herself coping with Altar Guild procedure, schisms among the choir sopranos, and clerical protocol without a shred of background training. She learns by trial and error; if her adjustment is swift and her errors are trivial, her husband has a tremendous boost toward popularity in the parish and prominence in the diocese; her failure to meet the demands of her position may hold him back, can ruin his career.

Episcopal churchmen have long been aware of this problem, and many seminaries have attempted to meet it by scheduling occasional lectures, usually delivered by seasoned and successful wives of clergymen, for the brides of theological students. The first organized course of study offered for wives of theological students by an Episcopal seminary, however, was instituted last fall at the University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn. The results of the first study course, which will reach its conclusion with the Sewanee commencement June 14, are difficult to evaluate while the program is still in its formative stage; wives of graduating theologs have not yet had an opportunity to practice what the lecturers preached. But Sewanee officials are pleased with the start that has been made, and the time seems assured when newly ordained benedicts will be accompanied to their parishes by wives as carefully trained as they.

Impetus for the Sewanee project came from the university's new dean of the theological school, the Very Rev. Robert Fisher Gibson, Jr., a handsome young (fortyish) man with an A. B. from Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., and an M. A. from the University of Virginia, who had 10 years in the business world as a public relations expert before he entered Virginia Theological Seminary, where he received his B. D. degree. He served as liaison man for the National Council of the Episcopal Church and as professor of church history at Virginia Theological Seminary before coming to Sewanee last year. A the Virginia school he had seen in operation the casual unorganized provision made for training student wives and he was delighted when several theolog wives at Sewanee approached him with a request for the very thing he had in mind.

"You have taught our husbands a language and a field of thought that is foreign to us," they told him. "We want to be able to talk to them."

Admitting theolog wives to regular seminary classes was clearly not the answer to the problem. Many had children, others jobs, and few had enough hours left from housekeeping to become full-time students. Too, much of the ordinary curriculum was not relevant to the girls' needs; much of what they did need was not included. After consultation with the 20-odd student wives (approximately half of the 45 theological students at Sewanee this year are married), Dean Gibson settled on a tentative special curriculum for what he calls a "miniature theological education."

The six major courses follow those given theological students during the six semesters of the normal three-year seminary study. This means that a different course is offered student wives each year for three years, the girls take the courses in different order of progression, depending on the year in which their husbands enter the seminary. At the end of three years they have completed a condensed version of everything their husbands have studied, although theologs and wives have not necessarily taken the same course in the same year. Courses include church history, Old Testament, New Testament, theology, and the church's life (divided into two parts, the first dealing with corporate and personal aspects of worship, and training in use and understanding of the church's ministrations and sacraments, the second with practical theology, including organizations, activities, pastoral counseling and the role of the minister's wife).

The actual courses offered this year did not follow the projected pattern to the letter. Instead of beginning with church history, as the perfected plan prescribes, the first semester of the current school year was devoted to practical theology and the second to church history. Mrs. Robert M. Grant, wife of the professor of New Testament in the theological school, was in charge of the first term's work, acting as a sort of program chairman and inviting minister's wives and qualified lecturers to speak at the weekly class meetings. Dean Gibson himself is teaching the second semester's course, since his field is church history. In the future, however, each of the six semesters will be in charge of one of the six professors in the theological school, each man assuming responsibility for the wives' indoctrination into his particular field, and, of course, inviting outside lecturers to speak at his own discretion.

The two-hour class meetings are held on Wednesday evenings in St. Luke's Common Room (St. Luke's Hall is the dormitory for single theological students; most married theologs and their wives live either in Van Ness Hall or in Fertile Acres, the campus name for the barracks village set up for all married students, whatever their department). Wednesday was not an arbitrary choice for the meeting night; it happened to be one evening on which all the theologs would be free to mind their offspring while their wives went to school. All theolog wives are enrolled in the course, although, as Dean Gibson puts it, "Everybody comes, but everybody doesn't come every night." The girls use the same textbooks as their husbands and take copious lecture notes; one ambitious lass is recording every word in shorthand.

Fathers keep the children on Wednesday nights while mothers are at class. Here Merrill Stevens, theological student, studies with a twin on each arm, and his German shepherd dog beside them.

There are no tuition fees for the student wives (or for their theolog husbands either, for that matter), and no scholastic prerequisites except marriage to a man with a B. A. degree (a bachelor of arts degree is required for a candidate for the bachelor of divinity degree, men who do not have the arts degree may be given a certificate of Graduate in Theology on completion of the theological course, and may be ordained). At the present the wives are not asked to do outside reading or to stand examinations, and no certificate has been devised to signify their completion of the course, although Dean Gibson feels that these developments may come later.

The theolog wives are an undeniably serious group of young women; as one Sewanee official has said, "A girl has to be pretty serious to marry a preacher." Already they have busied themselves with the doing of good in their necessarily restricted sphere. The entire group meets each Monday night in one of the various apartments to sew for world relief; they send regular shipments of new and used clothing overseas through the Church World Service center in New Orleans. To every class meeting each girl brings a contribution of food to be sent to an Episcopal minister who is trying to rebuild his church in Germany and exchanges the food for materials and labor there. Three of the wives are taking organ lessons from Max Damron, a theological student, so that they can serve as organists in their husbands' future parishes, if necessary, and a number of others are studying piano. Mrs. David Collins, wife of a graduating theological student, spent a year and a half in the Broadway cast of "Carousel," left it because "We decided that the theater and the ministry didn't mix," and is now studying voice with a retired opera singer living on the mountain, so that she will be equipped to do solo work in her husband's future parish at Mariana, Ark. Mrs. Jack DeForest conducts a weekly music appreciation class for some 20 Negro children at St. Mark's mission on the mountain; Mrs. James P. Williamson, English wife of a theolog, teaches a Sunday school class at Otey Memorial parish, in the Sewanee domain. Four or five of the wives are planning to accompany their husbands this summer on field training assignments in hospitals, prisons and churches; wives as well as seminary students will be serving an internship in the ministry.

Wives are a fairly recent innovation in theological schools. Many seminaries frown on married students; Dean Gibson reports that authorities at Virginia looked askance at him when he enrolled for theological training with a wife and two children. It was not until about 1940 that Sewanee accepted married theological students; they were banned on the theory that a man with home and family responsibilities could not give his full time to the study of the Lord's work, and the ban kept many a good man out of the ministry. After a student had mastered his theology, received his degree and been ordained, it was perfectly all right for him to take unto himself a wife, but a young man who had reversed this procedure got a cold shoulder from Sewanee, which leaned to the idea that drumming up the money for Junior's tonsil operation and filling the grocery list at the university supply store would tend to take his mind off the finer points of, say, liturgics. The number of married veterans applying for enrollment after the war changed the outlook of the seminaries, however, and some of them are even coming to think that a theolog's wife may be an asset instead of a liability. The enthusiasm of the girls themselves and the zeal with which they have applied themselves to the first year's work has been matched by the approval of old ministers' wives, who see in the new project an opportunity by which they would have profited in their earlier, uncertain days. And the church leaders and faculty at Sewanee have discovered that Junior's ailments and the grocery bill are not so distracting as they had supposed. It appears that Sewanee may have pioneered a program which will be of immeasurable value to the ministers and parishes of the future. Believing this, in the far-from-deserted village of Sewanee, the churchmen who came to scoff have remained to pray, with thanksgiving.

The Contest In Europe

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

Having devoted many columns to a report on the Amsterdam Assembly of the World Council of Churches I should like to devote one to the political conditions as one sensed them from interrogating the delegates.

The first point worth noting is that the European Recovery Program is beginning to take hold and is bringing new hope and encouragement to the whole of democratic Europe. It is also giving our own nation a new moral stature in the eyes of Europe.

Europeans recognize that it required a rather high quality of imagination to initiate such a program of help, even though it will prove of long-range advantage to us.

The reformat of the currency in western Germany is also contributing to a general economic revival. Germany has been a morass of economic stagnation and misery. Under the impetus of the new currency, trade and industry are reviving; and new buildings are actually beginning to appear in the vast sea of desolation of a typical German city.

The second most important point in my observation is that Europeans place a tremendous store on our ability and determination to stay in Berlin. Before going to Europe I had rather supposed that Walter Lippman might be right—that our stay in Berlin was neither logical nor tenable once the quadripartite control of Germany had broken down. But this logic does not seem to work on the mind of the democratic peoples of Europe.

They feel that the Russians will use every kind of pressure, strategic, ideological and political, to advance their force over the whole of Europe and that we cannot afford to yield to them at any point, lest we encourage fears and apprehensions in western Europe; and persuade the timid that they might as well come to terms with Russia now, since they will have to do so in the end.

If one asks people of such convictions how, in their opinion, we can stay in Berlin, since the air-lift is hardly a sufficiently powerful instrument to accomplish that purpose, they are rather vague in their answers.

Some of them think that the air-lift will be sufficient. Others believe that the Russians need so many items from the western economy that a threatened counter-blockade might accomplish the purpose. Their inability to give a clear answer to this question nicely defines the dilemma of America. We do not have the strategic means to stay in Berlin indefinitely; yet we ought to stay, simply to give the European peoples the encouragement of the faith that we will not abandon them.

They are becoming increasingly interested in the federation of Europe. But they know very well that even a federated Europe is not powerful enough to determine its own destiny against the giant of the east, if the giant of the west is not available.

It is not exactly reassuring to find that the whole world has become a power vacuum and that only two centers of effective power exist in the world. But that is the situation for good or for ill.

We "Feed the Multitudes" .. -4 pt cap

A friendly critic has nicknamed the Good Shepherd the "Church of the Holy Cafeteria." While this is not literally true, yet we do feed "multitudes" annually.

The Woman's Auxiliary has a special vice-president in charge of all meals. She is Lucille Thompson Brown (Mrs. William T.). Two years ago the Woman's Auxiliary "re-did" the kitchen and its equipment. It was engineered by a hotel equipment company. It is the last word. Think of huge ovens capable of cooking or warming 40 dozen rolls at the same time. Coffee can be made at 360 cups a clip. That is as fast as it can possibly be served to a large group. Then there are preparation sinks, cleaning, disposal and washing sinks. Also large preparation tables and racks. Then there are those wonderful double-deck rolling carts. They are a joy.

But, best of all, there are those blessed women who never say no. They plan cover-dish suppers and make the paying customer and food customer come out even in a most remarkable way. Self-service has become the usual mode of serving a meal with us. It simplifies matters greatly. During the past year we have served many, many meals for 200 and above.

The chief thing we try to do at every meal is to create fellowship. For fellowship is one of the marks of the Christian community.

THE CHURCH AND THE Y WORK TOGETHER

A. Paul Morley, Assistant General Secretary, Jacksonville, Y. M. C. A.

Did you ever hear of a city of approximately 250,000 inhabitants without a central Y. M. C. A. building? Jacksonville had a wonderful building, but it was lost in the Florida "bubble." But that is another story. The Good Shepherd Church, four years ago, invited the Y to use its wonderful facility in its swimming pool and put on a community swimming program.

Here are results. More than 15,000 swim each year. 1,200 children learned to swim. The program follows the progressive tests. A youngster is successively a minnow, a fish, a flying-fish. a shark, a junior, and last a senior lifesaver.

Most popular features: Youth Co-ed Night, Family Night. Various church organizations also have special periods: Y. P. S. L., Choir Boys. Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, Cub Scouts, etc. Water carnivals are also held monthly. The pool enjoys the highest health test rating. Approximately 7,000 spectators watch the swimming annually.

The community at large watches with great interest this joint undertaking. The Jacksonville Y with a loaned building now reports the most extensive swimming program of any Y in the Southeast.

3% For Salaries!

The problem of inadequate salaries for the clergy has been intensified by the tremendous increase in the cost of living during the past year. There has been real suffering among those clergymen who are in the lowest salary group. In several dioceses, there have been proposals to attack this situation by inaugurating a basic salary plan for all clergy, modified only by size of family or other special circumstances. This plan, though it has much to commend it from the Christian viewpoint, has found little favor. There is no likelihood that it will be adopted in the near future.

A second road of attack has been the establishment of minimum salaries. In most dioceses, these in practice only apply to diocesan aided missions. The small, theoretically self-supporting parish cannot meet an adequate minimum standard. In effect, such Churches are self-supporting at the expense of the minister and his family. Further, in most instances, the minimum established is entirely too low. In any case, a minimum salary plan will only work if new funds are found to supplement present income.

A way to achieve this is seen in a suggestion made by a special committee of the San Francisco Presbytery of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A. This committee recommends for that Presbytery a minimum salary of $3,000, plus a manse and plus children's allowances. To make this possible, it suggests that all Churches that pay their minister more than the minimum, contribute 3 per cent of the excess to a common fund which would be used to make possible the minimum.

This is an eminently fair plan. Such a method in our Church would help the clergy in the smaller parishes as well as those in diocesan aided missions. It would not burden any Church, and it would immediately help a situation growing desperate. Granted that any increase in giving would ameliorate the need, this plan has the virtue of tying the new sources of income directly to the problem. If we can give 3 per cent of our whole parochial budget for a radio program, we can give 3 per cent—or more!—of the rector's salary above a specified minimum to aid other Christian ministers not receiving a living wage!

Isaac Watts

They had trouble with congregations singing the hymns of the Church two hundred years ago! More than two centuries ago, a young man returning from Church complained to his father about the hymns the parson had selected that morning.

"If you don't like them, perhaps you could write better ones," suggested his parent. Perhaps he could! Isaac Watts accepted his father's challenge, and wrote his first hymn when only 18. At his death in 1748, he had composed 600 hymns!

In recognition of Isaac Watt's great contribution to modern Church music, the Hymn Society of America has declared 1948 to be "Watt's Year." This fall, religious, choral and historical groups are planning festivals and exhibits in his honor.

Watt's work was a radical change from the Church music of his day. For example, his "Psalm of David" paraphrased the original text whenever he felt that passages conflicted with the New Testament teaching of our Lord. This precipitated strong comment in religious circles. Many clergy objected to Watt's "freedom with God's Word!" But, in spite of opposition, Watt's hymns grew in popularity. Church adopted the new form of hymn, and Watts earned his position as the "father of modern hymnody." His fame continues to this day. Such hymns as "Joy To the World," "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross," and "O God, Our Help In Ages Past" are cherished and loved by all Christians.

We Episcopalians are not noted for fine congregational singing. This celebration offers an opportunity to stress the place of the hymn in worship, and to remind our people that while the words are most important in a hymn, yet sturdy congregational singing is not to be despised as an offering to the Lord.

The Community Chest---A Neighbor's Job

It was the custom in pioneer days to share responsibilities. Neighbor helped neighbor . . . or neither survived. When plague swept a community, those who survived took in the orphaned children. Today we do things differently, more carefully, more effectively. We turn our houses into temporary foster homes. We go to an adoption service and take into our home children who need us as we need them.

The spirit hasn't changed. The need hasn't changed. Life still requires the stretching out of our hand to a neighbor . . . and a neighbor's hand to ourselves. The only change has been the translation from pioneer ways to modern living.

A tradition was born with the first roof-raising on American soil—a tradition which became a symbol of a way of life. Then, the community joined forces to help a neighbor build his home. Today, building is a specialized trade, as are most of the activities to which our forebears lent a volunteer hand. We carry on the tradition of neighborliness in another manner. Helping people has become specialized, too.

The old custom of sharing responsibility has not disappeared. An individual no longer can know the needs and problems of his hundreds or thousands of neighbors, so we have organized social agencies and united them in Community Chests and Councils whose business it is to find out the needs and make provision for attending to them.

The Visiting Nurses, the family societies, the hospitals, clinics and community centers, the settlement houses and day nurseries, the Scouts and Y's and aid for the handicapped—all the Red Feather services of the Community Chest are carrying on the functions formerly assumed by the neighbors. Of course, you will support your Community Chest with generosity.

It's A Crime

By The REV. ROBERT JOHNSTON PLUMB

Rector of St. Mark's Church, Washington, D. C.

The comic books which sell for a dime at the corner drug store are not all funny. We have come down a long road from the "after you my dear Gaston" Happy Hooligan days of the past to the brutal bludgeonings of the present. Parents not in the habit of feeding poisoned candy to their children will do well to examine the reading matter stacked in Junior's room. They may find a hell broth of powerful trouble boiling and bubbling in the nursery which would make the brew in Macbeth's witch's cauldron seem as harmless as jellied consomme.

Not All Bad

The pulps are not all bad. By far the larger portion of them are harmless and many of the animal cartoons are delightful. They have to do with ducks, cats, rats, dogs, pandas, pigs, pigeons, chickens, hawks, bugs, bears, mice, foxes, rabbits, woodpeckers and wolves. (The eight-year-old who supplied me with this list has informed me that it is not complete.) The fantastic unreality of these woodland creatures; the dreamlike quality of their environment and the ridiculous situations in which they find themselves, appeal to all age groups. One of them even goes to the extent of making its script rhyme; a noteworthy achievement in a field where there is little regard for literary merit. Genuine artistic skill is often employed and it is a pity that bolder type is not used in order to prevent eye strain. Although the animals sometimes play shabby tricks on each other, their pigeons do not become stool pigeons; their rats do not become yellow rats and they never stoop to the human level of murder.

Vicious Sadism

It's some of the crime comics that are a crime! It is already big business! Millions of them are on the news stands. The publishers themselves estimate that two million copies of one particular issue will reach twenty million readers because the kids are generous and pass them around. Some of what they will read and see pictured is strong stuff even for beach head veterans.

Woman splits man's head open with a meat axe and drags his body into cellar for burial with words to this effect, "So long, sucker. Hope you stay put. This way you make a cheap boarder." Another murderess bids her husband farewell in this manner as she runs her automobile over his inert body, "Goodbye, George, and don't turn over in your grave when I start to spend the insurance money." Pretty, isn't it? Commando tough gangsters with fingers pressed to triggers threaten with such jargon as "Don't remember what you've seen or we'll hack you into dog meat. We'll spread your rotten brains all over the gutter. Croak, you dirty stinkin' rats, croak!" Child maniac releases baby carriage brake and sends infant to death just to see how fast the perambulator will go. And the hangman tells his fellow mobsters to "lift the rope slowly so she'll know she's croaking'!"

Grapes of Thorns

It's the public that takes the rap because many of these publications have been granted second-class mailing privileges and thus unwittingly tax-paying parents are being victimized by helping to swell the profits of this sordid business. As they vie with each other in sadistic viciousness in their bid for wider markets there is no telling to what further depths they may sink.

"This monstrous thing distorted and soul quenched" put into the hands of children; nourished by the "world's blind greed"; sometimes masquerading as a crime preventive and always posing as innocent, is already having its dire effect in an increase in felonies of maniacal savagery throughout the land. One has only to read the grim headlines. But what else can be expected? "Do men gather grapes of thorns or figs or thistles? God is not mocked; for what a man sows that shall he also reap."

The Lovely Things

Life has loveliness to sell. It is as we recognize and think upon the things that are lovely that we begin at a beginning and work to an end. Our era may consider the poet Whittier old fashioned and out of date but there is good sense in his words, "Close to my heart I fold each lovely thing the sweet day yields." It is every parent's hope to have lovely pictures bloom upon the walls of their children's memories. To bring this about it will be necessary to examine carefully the reading matter in Junior's room—and do it now!

CHRIST FOR THE WORLD WE SING!

As we look out over the world today and view the unhappy conditions confronting humanity everywhere we feel sad and gloomy. Our beautiful dream of One World, A United Fellowship, Peace on Earth, Good-will to Men, seems to have gone with the winds. Our great World Conferences—Lambeth, Amsterdam, the World Conference of Churches—which have just finished their summer sessions discussed World conditions very broadly and from a religious standpoint—the cause and the cure. We must keep in close touch with these world movements through our Church papers, and cooperate heartily with their magnificant leadership, and join their great Circle of World Prayer for God's guidance and strength and help in this new effort of World Reformation.

It would seem to us that a first important step to this goal would best start with ourselves. Let us seek for the beautiful, the true, the good, in all our neighbors and leaders. Let us beware of the false propaganda so ravashing today. Let us cut out the fault finding, and cold harsh criticism so rampant everywhere, which makes for misunderstanding, and creates bitter feelings. Let us follow the Christ in all we say, and think, and do.

Christ for the world we sing!
The world to Christ we bring
With loving zeal;
The poor and them that mourn,
The faint and overborne,
Sin-sick and sorrow worn,
Whom Christ doth heal.

BRINGING OTHERS TO CHURCH

By the Rev. William Paul Barnds, D. D.
Rector, St. Matthew's Church,
Lincoln, Nebraska

When we like something very much we are apt to tell other people about it. If we see a picture show which impresses us we tell our friends about it, sometimes at great length. If we have a favorite radio program we are apt to tell our friends about it and urge them to listen to it too.

Now we ought to tell people about our Church. Some of us do, and we all should. The Church means much in our lives. It would be hard for us to imagine what life would be like without the Church.

Suppose you had never heard of Jesus; that you had never seen the symbol of the cross; that you had never heard any of the carols and hymns of the Church; that you had never in your life said a prayer. We are inclined, sometimes, to take the advantages of the Church for granted without stopping to think about how much they really mean to us.

But when we do think about the joys that are associated with our Church, it makes us want to tell other people about the Church. Our Lord sent people out to tell others the good news of the Christian religion. We can tell people about our religion and the Church.

We send missionaries to other countries and that is fine, but there are people right in our own neighborhoods who do not go to Church. They do not appreciate what the Church can really mean in their lives. They need the Church as much as some people in distant lands. You can be a missionary, in a way, by inviting them to go to Church with you. Why not do that?

GIVING

By the Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, D. D.
Bishop of West Virginia

Once each year during the period from October first to December first our vestries go out on a general campaign, designed to reach each person whose name is on our books in an effort to secure weekly pledges towards the local, diocesan, and national budgets of our Church.

This will be done again this year and I earnestly appeal to you to give more generously than ever.

Two facts should be made clear as to our regular weekly giving for the work of our Church. First, barely more than half of our people make any definite pledge whatever. What of the other half? Are they not Episcopalians? Do they not love the Prayer Book? Do they not claim the services of the Rector? Do they not wish to be baptized, married, buried by the Church? Come forward then and help your more generous brethren who are paying your bills and making possible the work of the Church which is yours as well as theirs. Come forward now and make a pledge.

Secondly, many of us who give are not giving worthily. A recent analysis of giving in a fairly large Parish reveals that the most popular gifts through the weekly envelopes are ten, fifteen, and twenty-five cents. Ten cents per Sunday means five dollars and twenty cents per year! Fifteen cents each Sunday means seven dollars and eighty cents a year! Twenty-five cents a Sunday means thirteen dollars a year!

Such offerings are, for some, generous. But for most of us, they are pathetic. How can we offer them without shame? Will a man rob God? Do we dare give Christ's Church a paltry tip? It is fortunate that God is not as niggardly with us as we often are with Him!

I therefore call upon you every one to make a weekly pledge to the work of the Church which shall bear a worthy proportion to what God has done for you. Thus the Church will go forward and in our hearts will dawn a new peace.

CXLII

These papers perhaps should not include a discussion of possible, or probable changes in our Communion Service, but these alterations are already so prevalent and in such common use that they are no longer theoretical or speculative.

Ever since the terrible influenza epidemic of the fall of 1918 there has been a strong, and growing movement in the church against the use of the common cup at the Communion Service, and now some churches have trays with little individual cups, and more still use some form of intinction.

The latter method is provided for with a shallow silver cup in the middle of the silver plate with a rim around it wide enough to hold the wafers, which are dipped into the wine. By this method the bread and wine are both administered at the same time, thereby shortening the time for administration, because the administrant only has to pass down the altar rail once instead of twice. Also in some small churches rather than have a possible dissension over the procuring of this vessel for the use of intinction some clergymen merely announce that "persons who object to the common cup may hold the wafer in their hand and dip it in the cup when it is passed." Again in some churches the clergyman carries a large cup for those who wish to partake of it, and a small cup for those desiring intinction.

At the present none of these methods has any Rubrical authority, but neither is there any such authority for the variations introduced by the "high Anglicans", such as putting on Eucharistic vestments, elaborate genuflections, and kissing of the chalice and patton.

All of these things will probably come to a head in a revised Rubric inserted by some future general convention, but for the present they are in a very confused state.

R. CARY MONTAGUE.

General Assembly Of The United Nations

PARIS MEMORANDUM NO. 1

Prepared by Walter W. Van Kirk, Secretary of the Department of International Justice and Goodwill of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, accredited observer of the Federal Council of Churches.

The eyes of the world are fixed upon the Palais de Chaillot, in Paris, where the General Assembly of the United Nations is in session. History will be made here. It will presently be determined whether the tensions which currently threaten the peace are to be relaxed, or whether the "cold war" is to be continued for an indefinite period.

The General Assembly got under way in an atmosphere of hope mingled with concern. There was hope that world public opinion would be able to crash through "iron curtains" and make articulate the desire of millions that a way be found to establish an enduring peace. At the same time, there was concern that the forces making for international disorder might get out of hand. The situation was admittedly critical. Count Bernadotte, United Nations Mediator for Palestine had been assassinated. The UN flag flew at half mast over the Palais de Chaillot. Negotiations in Moscow appeared to be stalemated. The "Battle of Berlin" was still in progress. Even as the Assembly met there was violence in Paris precipitated by communists and the follower of General Charles de Gaulle.

As I sat in the Assembly of the United Nations my mind went back to Amsterdam, where another and different kind of Assembly had met a month earlier. It was there affirmed that God is Sovereign, that each state "must accept its responsibility under the governance of God, and its subordination to law within the Society of Nations." That Section of the Amsterdam Assembly which dealt with world problems derlared that the churches "should support every effort to deal on a universal basis with the many specific questions of international concern which face mankind today, such as the use of atomic power, the multilateral reduction of armaments, and the provision of health services and food for all men. They should endeavor to secure that the United Nations be further developed to serve such purposes. They should insist that the domestic laws of each country conform to the principles of progressive international law, and they gratefully recognize that recent demands to formulate principles of human rights reflect a new sense of international responsibility for the rights and freedom of all men."

Here, at Paris, it will be seen to what extent the United Nations is able to fulfill the expectations of the Churches represented at Amsterdam.

Nearly one hundred items are on the agenda of the Paris Assembly. The Russians are reported as having declined to present a single question for the Assembly's discussions. This may or may not reflect a policy of gradual withdrawal from the United Nations. There is some speculation here as to the action of the Soviet Union if, in this as in past Assemblies, that Government is voted down on all important issues. I do not myself believe that Russia will take so drastic a step. But this is an unpredictable world.

The Christian community will be particularly interested in the Assembly's action with respect to the proposed Declaration of Human Rights; the partition of Palestine and the problems raised by the murder of Count Bernadotte; the disposition of the Italian colonies and questions related to the ongoing work of the Trusteeship Council; the Veto; the Korean and Balkan disputes; the so-called "Little Assembly," the control of atomic energy; the Draft Convention on Genocide; the alleged mistreatment of Indians in the Union of South Africa; and refugees.

This is no time to despair of the United Nations. It is needful to be realistic but realism need not yield to pessimism. It is reassuring to know that as the Assembly meets here in Paris, Christians the world over are fervently praying that divine guidance may be given the statesmen as they come to grips with issues of crucial importance to the peoples of every land.

RICHMOND CHOSEN A KEY CITY

Regional Interdenominational Conferences

Richmond, Va.—Richmond has been designated as one of 36 key cities where regional interdenominational Foreign Mission Program of Advance conferences will be held this fall.

The Richmond dates are Oct. 21-22, with a United Service in the First Baptist Church, Oct. 21 at 8:00 P. M. and another United service on the night of Oct. 22.

The denominational groups will arrange their own programs during the daytime hours of these two days.

The regional meetings will follow a Foreign Mission Assembly to be held in Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 6-8 when 3,500 lay and clerical delegate leaders from 66 Protestant denominations will gather.

The whole move follows the action of the Foreign Mission Conference calling for the planning for a larger and more effective witness to the Gospel and to Christ's way of life "on the background of the world's chaos and desperation."

By this means, it is hoped by national denominational leaders to enlist interest, prayers and gifts of life and money in increasing amounts throughout the churches, if Christians consecrate themselves anew to the fundamental Christian mission to the world.

Tragic needs in every land, and challenging opportunities awaken interest and response.

The Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, retired Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church is General Chairman for Richmond. Others also serving are the Rev. Henry Lee Robison, Jr., executive secretary of the Virginia Council of Churches as Executive Chairman; Dr. Walter C. Gum, Centenary Methodist Church, Program Chairman; Rev. G. Curtis Jones, Seventh St. Christian Church, Radio Chairman; Dr. T. F. Adams, First Baptist Church, Arrangements Chairman; Rev. Robert L. House, First Congregational-Christian Church, Attendance Chairman; Rev. Leland H. Waters, Executive Secretary, Baptist City Council, Finance Chairman; Mr. W. A. Mann, Sec.-Treas.; Miss Arimenta Harper, University of Richmond, Student Chairman; Miss Ethel Smither, Employed Women, Chairman; Mrs. Robert L. House, Richmond City Women Chairman; Mrs. Donald W. C. P. C. MEETINGS HELD AT SEABURY HOUSE

New York, N. Y.—The executive board of the Church Periodical Club held its semi-annual meetings at Seabury House, Greenwich, Conn., on October 6 and 7. At this time plans were discussed for the general work and specific projects of the CPC for this final year of the current triennium.

At the Philadelphia meetings in September, 1946, it was decided to undertake a special three-year project of raising at least $5,000 for the library of the Central Theological College, Tokyo, Japan, to replace books destroyed in the war. Mrs. Alexander R. McKechnie, who heads the committee in charge of the Tokyo project, has recently announced that the fund now stands at $3,769.59. With a year left in which to complete it, the board hopes that more than the five-thousand-dollar goal can be realized to help in the work of educating Japanese Christian leaders.

A new extension of CPC work, begun last spring, is the sending of good American periodicals to English-reading individuals and organizations in Europe. This came about as the result of a letter in the New York Times asking readers to send their book and magazine sections abroad. It was felt that the analytical articles on world affairs contained in these supplements could constitute an excellent antidote to communist propaganda. The suggestion was so closely allied to the CPC'S long-established work, that the national office in New York has undertaken to put interested donors of good current magazines in touch with interested European recipients.

This year marks the 60th anniversary of the founding of the Church Periodical Club in 1888. Today CPC members send books, magazines and teaching materials to many parts of the world where they are urgently needed. In calling the October board meetings, Mrs. Eliot Moody, national president, has stressed the need to increase the scope of CPC work to meet the many requests from missions, hospitals and schools for educational tools needed in their work.

SPECIAL SERVICES FOR TEACHERS

San Antonio, Tex.—Three parishes in the Diocese of West Texas held special services for teachers of both public and church schools as the schools opened for the new term. St. Mark's, San Antonio, the Rev. Harold Gosnell rector has pursued this custom for some twenty years. Teachers are present at the service of Holy communion where prayers for educational institutions and for teachers are read and breakfast is served by one of the parish guilds.

At St. Peter's Church, Kerrville, of which the Rev. Henry Getz is rector, teachers of the city, white and negro, were invited to an evening service. The address and the prayers all centered around the responsibility of the teachers for the development of Christian character in their pupils.

The Rev. Joseph L. Brown, rector of Trinity Church, San Antonio, used a special "Litany for Teachers" at the service of Holy Communion at which the teachers of the parish were present.

OLD VAWTER'S REDECORATED

Loretto, Va.—Vawter Church, of St. Anne's Parish, Essex County, Va., was redecorated during August. White walls, and blue tinted grey pews and woodwork, were chosen for the colors, in keeping with the colonial nature of the structure, erected in 1710-31. The women of the parish provided the means for the work. During their campaign the owners of "Kinloch", "Elmwood", and "Brooke's Bank" opened their homes to the public. The Rev. G. MacLaren Brydon, historiographer of the diocese and author of "Virginia's Mother Church", delivered the historical address on September 19 when the church was reopened for services. The Rev. Wilson M. Stitt is the rector.

MOTORCYCLE GIVEN GERMAN PASTOR

New York, N. Y.—Thanks for a motorcycle have been received by the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief. The machine was given to Pastor Schniertshauer of the Old Catholic parish of Ratisbon in Germany. The pastor cares for various parish branches located at considerable distances from Ratisbon, and the motorcycle makes it possible for Mr. Schniertschauer to travel rapidly and to work effectively. He sends "heartfelt and joyful gratitude."

"It is pure chance," he added, "or a disposition of Providence, that a French motorcycle, put to the account of a former French prisoner of war and donated by brethren overseas, is to be used for lightening the work of the Kingdom of God and for Jesus Christ in our homeland? Truly God's Providence works for all men."

MISSIONARY BISHOPS WILL BE SPEAKERS

New York, N. Y.—Participating in the series of regional meetings held under the auspices of the Foreign Mission Conference of North America, are a number of bishops from missionary districts, and clergy who are qualified to speak of overseas missions.

The regional meetings are of two kind; one large interdenominational meeting in each of the selected cities, and this is preceded by group meetings by all the various Church groups participating. The Episcopal Church speakers will address the Episcopal groups.

Among those who will share in the effort are Bishop Y. Y. Tsu, who is in charge of the national offices of the Chinese Church, in Nanking; Bishop Bravid W. Harris of Liberia; Bishop C. Alfred Voegeli of Haiti; Bishop Reginald H. Gooden of the Panama Canal Zone, and Bishop Elwood L. Haines of Iowa, who was formerly a missionary in Liberia. Also the Rev. Edgar R. Neff, rector of Christ Church, Little Rock, Ark., and formerly a National Council Field Officer; the Very Rev. Edward R. Welles, dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Buffalo; the Rev. G. Paul Musselman, of the Detroit Episcopal City Mission; and the Rev. A. Ronald Merrix, National Council Field Officer in the 8th Province.

The purpose of the meetings is to rouse Church members of all denominations to awareness of the needs and opportunities in fields overseas, and to secure their heightened interest and increased support of overseas missionary programs.

TRAVELING SALESMEN SELL EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Camdem, Ark.—William B. Curry, prominent layman of Jonesboro, Ark., has organized some of his travelling salesman friends who are Episcopalians into a band of evangelists. They work by making a list of members of the Church in the communities they visit where there is no Church or Mission station. These isolated church people are then put on the mailing list of the Diocesan magazine and are in course of time made the nucleus of new preaching stations or missions.

THE CHURCH IN WYOMING

Fall Conference Program

Laramie, Wyo.—Bishop Haines of Iowa took as his theme for five lectures which he gave at the Wyoming Clergy Conference, "An Active Clergy." The addresses were both inspirational and practical and were heard with enthusiasm by the clergy.

The Conference was held at St. Mark's Church, Cheyenne, where the rector, the Rev. Charles A. Bennett, was the host. Twenty-one of the twenty-three Wyoming clergy attended. Of the two who were absent, one could not come because of being enrolled in Seminary for his Senior year.

Woman's Auxiliary

Mrs. David R. West of Minneapolis, provincial representative for the 6th Province, on the National Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary, arrived in Laramie, September 21, to speak at a meeting of the women of the southeastern district of Wyoming. It being St. Matthew's Day, Holy Communion was celebrated at St. Matthew's Cathedral. After luncheon, Mrs. Irving E. Corthell of Laramie, state president introduced Mrs. West. Mrs. West stressed the need of urgency in the Church's work. Women must be well informed and lead lives of radiancy and power so that the joy of Christian living may be revealed. She spoke most enthusiastically of the United Offering and quoted Roger Babson as saying, "The United Thank Offering of the Women of the Episcopal Church is the greatest single effort of any group in the world today." During the week of Sept. 21-28, Bishop Hunter, Mrs. West and Mrs. Corthell attended meetings of the Woman's Auxiliary in the other 5 districts of the State.

Laymen's Meetings will be held in Wyoming from October 11-15, the first is scheduled for All Saints' Church, Torrington, on Oct. 11. Mr. Douglas Turnbull, Jr., of Baltimore, will be the leader of these meetings.

KENYON OPENS 125TH YEAR

Gambier, O.—Bexley Hall, the Divinity School of Kenyon College, Gambier, opened its 125th year with a record enrollment of 35 men including 3 nonresident graduate students. More students are scheduled for the second semester, including a missionary priest from Wuchang, China, and the total year's registration will approximate the forty which the Hall can take care of with present facilities.

Seventeen of the students are married and twenty-one are veterans. The Gambier housing available has been exhausted and men are communting from nearby towns. Thirteen dioceses are represented in the student body including Ohio, Western New York, Minnesota, Rochester, Pittsburgh, Erie, Delaware, Western North Carolina, Newark, Michigan, Western Michigan, Idaho, and Indianapolis.

The year began with Evening Prayer, September 23, at which Dean Roach spoke on the nature and function of a seminary.

MICHAELMAS TERMS BEGINS AT G. T. S.

New York, N. Y.—Seventy-five new students entered the General Theological Seminary, on September 22,. the opening day of the Michaelmas Term. Of these, 49 were Juniors or first-year men; two were Seniors, who had already done part of their preparation elsewhere; 13 were graduate students; 9 special students; and two, guest students. These new men, added to those already enrolled in the Seminary, bring the total number of students to a high figure.

CHAPLAIN MILLER RECEIVES COMMENDATION

Washington, D. C.—Major General Luther D. Miller, Chief of Chaplains of the Army, was awarded a Certificate of Commendation by the War Assets Administration, Sept. 29, for his outstanding services in connection with the sale of 615 surplus Army chapels. The presentation was made by Jesse Larson, Administrator of War Assets, in his Washington office.

Chaplain Miller was cited for the commendable manner in which the available 615 surplus chapels were disposed of after 2,127 applications for their purchase had been received. Protestant congregations, representing 40 different denominations plus the YMCA and the Salvation Army, were awarded 466 chapels. Catholic congregations were awarded 108 chapels and Hebrew congregations 6. The remaining 35 surplus chapels were sold to 18 universities and schools, 13 States and communities and to 4 Memorial organizations with the proviso that they be used as houses of worship only.

The sale price of the chapels averaged $1,346.65 each and the majority included pews, kneelers, pulpits and two pulpit chairs, lectern, altar, communion rail, lighting fixtures, heating equipment and plumbing. Each chapel has a seating capacity of approximately 300.

GREATEST STORY EVER TOLD ON AIR AGAIN SEPTEMBER 12

"The Greatest Story Ever Told," the radio program sponsored by the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company as a public service program, was back on the air again beginning Sunday, September 12, after a brief summer vacation. As before, the program was aired over the American Broadcasting Company network, at 6:30 P. M., Eastern Daylight Saving Time.

The resumption of the program followed the first brief break in its continuity since it started in January, 1947. The marvelous reception which the program received when it was first put on the air convinced the sponsor that it should be carried on through the summer period. After such an unbroken period of effort, however, it was felt that a brief vacation for writers, directors, and cast was necessary this summer.

As before, the program will continue to dramatize the teachings of Christ. The production will continue on the same large scale, with the symphony orchestra and full voice choir to add the background music.

The policy of not using any commercial announcements on the program will also be continued, since the purpose of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company in presenting it is to make it a public service offering. Only the mention of the sponsor's name, as required by Federal Communications Commission ruling, will be used.

Much of the success of the program can be attributed to the whole-hearted support of church and educational groups in this country. Announcements about the program from pulpits has added a tremendous listening audience to it. Listening to the program in class groups, and making it part of Sunday School discussion and study, has likewise helped tremendously.

Recordings of some of the programs, suitable for public address systems and for use in school, church, and other educational groups, are still available. They can be secured by writing the Recording Division, American Broadcasting Company, 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York City.

BISHOP PHILLIPS OBSERVES 10TH ANNIVERSARY

Roanoke, Va.—The Executive Board of the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia, at its meeting on September 23, adopted a resolution expressing its appreciation of the way the Diocese has been administered by the Rt. Rev. Henry Disbrow Phillips, D. D., in the ten years of his incumbency. After sixteen years as rector of Trinity Church, Columbia, S. C., and years of useful ministry prior to that, he was consecrated Bishop of Southwestern Virginia in St. Paul's Church, Lynchburg, on September 27, 1938. The same date marked the retirement of his predecessor, the Rt. Rev. Robert Carter Jett, D. D., LL. D., who had served since his consecration on March 24, 1920, as the first bishop of this diocese.

In the discussion of the progress of the diocese during the past ten years, the Executive Board took note of the fact that in forty mission churches of the diocese the total number of confirmed members had risen from 2,009 to 2,525. The contributions to the Field Department (missions) had risen from $4,277 to $8,660 . Contributions by the churches themselves to the salaries of their clergy had inceased from $15,678 to $36,948.

Also of particular interest in the meeting of the Executive Board were reports of the activities of certain departments along Convocational lines. For a number of years the diocese had been divided into two Convocations, until the last Council reduced the size of the areas by setting up four Convocations instead, under the names of Augusta, Lynchburg, Roanoke and Abingdon; these containing respectively 5 counties, and 4, 10 and 13 counties.

The Rev. Van Francis Garrett, chairman of the Department of Religious Education, described a series of "Teacher Training Institutes" that are being conducted in the several Convocations—two in the Abingdon Convocation on account of its larger size. These are being led by Mrs. Mary deG. Rogers, the diocesan director of Religious Education, and Mr. Garrett paid high praise to the work she has done since she accepted her office on September 1st, 1947.

The Rev. Frederick Griffith, chairman of the Field Section of the Department of Promotion, spoke of a series of meetings to be held in each of the four Convocations in preparation for the coming Every-Member Canvass. Bishop Phillips will be one of the speakers at each of these meetings and the Rev. Edgar T. Ferrell, Jr., of Marion, will speak at Lynchburg, the Rev. G. William Beale of Rocky Mount at Lexington and Roanoke, and the Rev. George T. Welsch of Big Stone Gap at Abingdon.

Mr. Earl S. Mattingly of Lexington, chairman of the Finance Department, reported to the Board that a vacant lot has just been purchased adjoining the Episcopal residence, and the addition will contribute much to the attractiveness of the property.

Mrs. Richard H. Lee of Amherst, Mr. John M. Goldsmith of Radford and the Rev. Cornelius R. Dawson of Martinsville were elected by the Board as associate members of the Department of Christian Social Service, and Mrs. Tench Tilghman of Blacksburg was elected as associate member of the Department of Religious Education. "Associate Members" are persons from outside of the Executive Board nominated to the Board by the Chairman of the respective Departments to assist in their work. Incidentally Mrs. Lee and Mrs. Tilghman are Vice-Presidents of the Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary in charge respectively of Christian Social Relations and Religious Education.

Recognizing the value of a number of excellent editorials which have appeared in one of the most important newspapers published in the diocese, the Board unanimously adopted the following:

Resolved: The Secretary is requested to address a leter to Mr. H. Powell Chapman, the Editor of the Roanoke Times, and express to him the appreciation of the members of this Executive Board for the ways in which he is promoting the Christian faith as it is understood in this Church.

SEABURY—WESTERN SETS NEW RECORD

Evanston, Ill.—Seabury-Western Theological Seminary set a new record with this year's enrollment—the total is now seventy-one students. This total was reached with the addition of twenty-seven new men in the incoming Junior class.

The Seminary began the new year with a three day orientation program for the Junior class. This program arranged by the officers of the Student Convocation was planned to introduce the new students to the details of Seminary life. A new feature this year was a week program given by the faculty to all the new students. The purpose of this was to give them a survey of the school program in all of its aspects. The first week was devoted to a series of all-morning lectures by the faculty.

Thirty dioceses are represented by students in the present student body. These are: Alabama, Atlanta, California, Central New York, Chicago, Colorado, Dallas, Fond du Lac, Harrisburg, Indianapolis, Iowa, Kansas, Long Island, Louisiana, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, North Carolina, Northern Indiana, Pittsburgh, Olympia, Rochester, Salina, South Florida, Springfield, and Western Michigan. There are two students from the Armenian Church, one from the Greek Church, and one from the Philippine church, and two Negro students.

Two additions have been made to the faculty. The Rev. Jules L. Moreau is an Instructor in New Testament Literature and Languages. The Rev. William Maxwell, a graduate of Seabury-Western, has returned as a tutor.

PHILADELPHIA DIVINITY SCHOOL OPENS

The Philadelphia Divinity School held its opening Services and sessions on September 23. The enrollment shows an undergraduate body of 42 with 30 graduate students, making a total of 72 persons receiving instruction. This compares with 33 undergraduates and 28 graduates, a total of 61, for the previous year.

New members of the Faculty include the Rev. Thomas A. M. Barnett, A. M., from Yale University and the Berkeley Divinity School, who has become Instructor in Old Testament; the Rev. Danold J. Parsons, Th. M., Philadelphia Divinity School and Temple University, Instructor in New Testament; the Rev. Joseph H. Hall, III, Th. M., General Seminary, University of Pennsylvania, and the Philadelphia Divinity School, Instructor in Ecclesiastical History; the Rev. Maurice A. Riseling, B. A., B. D., Chaplain of Norristown State Hospital, Instructor in Pastoral Theology.

St. Mary's House, 42nd and Locust Streets, has been purchased for the Department of Women and will be opened as a residence early this Autumn. Miss Maude Cutler is serving as Director of the Department of Women and Instructor in Religious Education. A two year course is being offered for women who are college graduates to be trained as directors of religious education, and to receive the degree of Master of Religious Education.

One new feature of the instruction this year will be a course in clinical pastoral training for seniors, given by the Rev. Maurice A. Riseling in conjunction with Dr. Robert Bookhammer, Psychiatrist of the Philadelphia General Hospital. This course will include lectures on Friday mornings and conferences at the Hospital with the opportunity for case work. This will give the Seniors the best training without interfering with the regular courses or making it necessary for them to spend a summer at some institution.

COOPERATION OF CHURCHES

New York, N. Y.—The Rev. Jordan C. L. Liu, who is taking special work at the General Theological Seminary in New York City, wrote recently to Bishop N. Victor Halward of the Church of England, expressing the thanks of the team of Chinese visitors who traveled through the United States recently.

Said Mr. Liu, "This is really the first time in the history of our Church that such a team of different kinds of Church workers, supported by the diocese of Hongkong and South China, has come together to America, since June 2, 1835, when the first American Missionary Bishop Boone sailed for China.

"We recall with great pleasure and appreciation the sincere hospitality of all our hosts or hostesses in Episcopal families in the dioceses of California, Los Angeles, Texas, Southern Ohio, Washington, Pennsylvania, New York, Massachusetts, Albany, Dallas, and other districts, and of the Church members in the different clubs, hospitals, societies or institutions. We are especially grateful to the College of Preachers, Holy Cross and St. John's monasteries, the convents of the Transfiguration and St. Mary's, the Church Army, Calvary House and other organizations under diligent, holy, workers.

"This 'Bishop Halward's Team from China' and its tour of America showed the importance of the real cooperation of the Chinese Church with the missionaries of both the American and the English Anglican Churches."

RESOLUTIONS

MR. EDWIN GRAY LEE

Be it resolved by the Vestry of Christ Church, Charlottesville, Virginia, that in the passing of Edwin Gray Lee from this life, the Church has suffered a heavy loss. As a Vestryman for many years, and as Junior Warden and Senior Warden at different times, he has served Christ Church faithfully and well.

Son of a former Rector, he grew up in it, and all his life bears witness to his devotion to his church and the service of his God. No task was too small or too large for him to undertake for them.

An ardent supporter of its activities in every field, his place will be hard to fill, and in all his relationships he had well earned the title of a Christian man and Churchman.

We who have known him so well and worked so long with him in the Vestry shall miss him and his cheerful, kindly spirit. Charitable and generous, he was considerate in all his dealings, and to those in his employ, most kind and helpful.

To his family goes our very deep sympathy in their greater loss.

Resolved, further, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to his family, and published in the "Southern Churchman."

M. H. URNER, Senr. Warden,
JAMES F. MINOR, Junr. Warden,
Committee of Vestry.

HOLY COMMUNION

Sir: As I look back on my forty-one years as a priest who made frequent use of the altar, it is interesting to recall some of the spiritual experiences I enjoyed. The strange fact is that they came with the chalice in my hands and I have no explanation for these happenings.

I shall never forget the first person to whom I administered the Holy Communion after my ordination to the priesthood. She was a young girl and I cannot describe the sensation that came to me when she received the chalice. This was in Abingdon Church, Gloucester County, Virginia, June 25, 1906.

At the National St. Andrew's Brotherhood Convention in St. Louis, in 1920, it was my privilege to administer the chalice to one known to many as "Daddy Hall." The reality of the Presence was so strong as he and I held the chalice that I came very near letting it fall from my hands. Later, when I asked him about it, he said, "My son, could you not see I was praying with all my might for you to receive the Holy Spirit." There was no doubt about the gift.

On August 3, 1924, I preached a sermon on Holy Communion in Christ Church, Chicago. When I started down the chancel rail for the second time with the chalice there appeared to me a light as a glow of fire and it was all that I could do to finish communicating the people. Quiet inquiry was made but no one had been conscious of this experience except myself and I could only identify the source as one full of spiritual power.

There is also an interesting experience that has always come to me as I consumed the elements. I have been confronted with upstretched hands of lay workers in far off lands, seeking the crumbs that were left.

I could recount other experiences but I do not wish to leave the impression that these things are peculiar to me or that they are particularly outstanding for no doubt many priests have had far wider and deeper experiences at Holy Communion. I have written this just to testify what can happen in such a limited priesthood as mine has been.

CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS

Sir: As you know, the suggestion was made by a group of Christian leaders in America, including a bishop and a seminary dean of our church, that August 22 be set aside as a day of Mourning and Repentance. The observance was recommended in connection with the institution of the first peacetime draft in the history of our country. There are many of us of military age who are planning to register as Conscientious Objectors. Because some might be tempted to come under this classification as the easy way out, I would like to suggest some of the angles of the question which must be considered.

If one is interested in beating the draft by a C. O. registration he is only cheating his own conscience. If he cannot get along with other fellows and feels that the service would cause him moral or physical pain, then I should think that he had better see a priest and perhaps a physician. But— If he is a normal, healthy young American, able to think straight (for himself), able to cooperate with others of all ages, in possession of some intelligence and devout in his religion, then I believe that he is on the right track in following out his convictions.

The next thing to do is to insure himself against defeat from outside attack and to strengthen his position. First: He should consider himself alone from the beginning, regardless of any assistance or sympathy from such persons as his priest and others who plan to take a similar stand. He must remember that he is a part of a small group. Can he weather the storm of public opinion, the sneers of his friends, the possible loss of family assistance and the ridicule of his own churchmen? If he is sincere he cannot turn back, once he has come out in the open as a C. O.

He who plans to register must be clear in his own position. Each person has a different problem. During the past war I permitted myself to be guided by my parents and a sense of what I then considered to be patriotism and registered for the draft. Now I will register as a C. O., but the Draft Board (composed of veterans of both World Wars) will find it difficult to understand my position. Now I am determined that all war for any cause is wrong. I am willing to go to any peaceful end to support my conviction and vigorously oppose in any way, including the receipt of work camp punishment, prison, disenfranchisement by imprisonment, the training required by the government for war.

In order to think this thing through (and it does require a tremendous amount of thought, meditation and prayer) a man of draft age who intends to qualify as a Conscientious Objector should confer with his own rector and with the General Secretary of the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship—the Rev. Sidney Temple, Essex, Conn. He can get valuable advice from both, but his own conviction must determine his action.

RECOMMENDING THREE BOOKS

Sir: "Those of us who reject the doctrine of the Church and the ministry set forth in 'The Apostolic Ministry' reject it, not on grounds of minute differences on points of archaeological interpretation, but because we cannot recognize as Christian the doctrine of God, which seems to underlie this imposing theological edifice." The above statement was written by Bishop Stephen Neill, assistant to the Archbishop of Canterbury, in the little book he edited, "The Ministry of the Church."

Because the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship shares Bishop Neill's convictions, our reaction to the recent recommendation by the retired Bishop of New York that everyone study "The Apostolic Ministry," edited by Dr. Kirk, the Bishop of Oxford, is to point behind these alleged issues of scholarship to the area of religious convictions. In a recent letter to the Church press, Bishop Manning suggested that everyone read "The Apostolic Ministry" and Dr. Cirlot's "The Apostolic Succession—Is it True," as a means of understanding the ecumenical issue. We believe these volumes confuse the issue, not just because of differences in theory about the early Church but because they misunderstand the issue of faith. It so happens that the authors of the books concerned and Bishop Manning were in general agreement in this area before the books were written. One canot separate between presuppositions and findings.

In order that Episcopalian readers may realize that there is a wide variety of literature available today on this subject of the Church and the ministry, and that not all scholarship comes out at the same place, no matter how able and conscientious it may be, the EEF would counter Bishop Manning's recommendation by suggesting three other books, the work of competent scholars and authorities: "The Ministry of the Church," edited by Bishop Neill, and including an article by the Rev. Frederick W. Dillistone of the Episcopal Theological School; "The Reunion of the Church," by the Rt. Rev. Lesslie Newbiggin, Bishop of Madura, the United Church of South India; and "The Coming Great Church," by Canon Theodore O. Wedel. The presuppositions of these volumes on the nature of the encounter of God and man are thoroughly evangelical, and in the Anglican tradition. They are also works of great and recognized scholarship.

The Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship believes these three books to state pretty well what we believe to be the real tradition of our Anglican Communion in the area of Church and ministry with particular reference to our relationships with other churches.

A Message

To The Workers' Conference Of The Archdeacony Of The Blue Ridge

I have got hold of a new idea that I want to work on. This is that we are living in the Spiritual World and this is more important than the fact that we are in the physical world as well. This means that we have the angels as fellow-workers and they are backing us up in what we are trying to do. (Hebrews 1:14). Also there is a spiritual power available to make our work more effective.

Another important thing is that we must have the faith to expect that things will happen to make manifest the presence and cooperation of the spiritual beings and the forces of the unseen world as they are just as much a part of our environment as the merely physical.

I am going to try and believe that I can use each day to do something really worth while for Christ, even though I may be entirely unconscious of what it may be. But I want to expect things to happen which I cannot account for except that they come from my spiritual environment. In other words, Christ is really using me to do things which cannot be accounted for by merely natural means. This, it seems to me, is the way by which we can help to bring in His Kingdom.

BRAINS NEVER MENTIONED

Sir: Please try to have less of education, so called, and more about the separated LIFE in Christ. Do you know that two of the most remarkable Presiding Bishops never attended High School, College or Seminary? Too much emphasis now on the head instead of the heart. Some do not know that brains are not mentioned once in the Bible, but a surrendered life is everywhere urged and emphasized. Rubrics and canons consume so much space and the things that can change the whole face of the world are so rarely mentioned.

Isa. 58:1 and 61:1.

MISLEADING—INACCURATE—?

Sir: Your "Summer Paragraph" concerning the revision of the rubric appearing at the end of the Confirmation service in reference to the proposed new Canons of the Church of England (Southern Churchman, July 17, 1948) is misleading and inaccurate. After reading the "Churchman" for nearly a year I am convinced that you have little regard either for historical or theological facts.

The editorial paragraph says in part: "In recent years, there have been some who would interpret our rubric ["And there shall none be admitted to the Holy Communion until such time as he shall be confirmed, or be ready and desirous to be confirmed", B. C. P., p. 281.] to forbid the Lord's Supper to communicants of other churches (italics mine) who attend a service of the Holy Communion in our Church. Such an interpretation is clearly against the historical context of this rubric. . . ."

First, may I point out that what you condemn as an "interpretation" is not an interpretation, but the observance of the rubric as it appears in every copy of the Book of Common Prayer. The rubric says "None", you say that it doesn't mean "None" but something else which is not mentioned. The Rev. Bernard Reynolds makes this comment upon the rubric: "The first part of this rubric ["And there shall none be admitted to the Holy Communion, until such time as he be confirmed . . ."] dates from 1549. The words 'or be ready' etc., were added in 1662 at the wish of the Presbyterians. We may be glad of the alteration; it takes us back to the rule of the Medieval Church, that no unconfirmed person should be admitted to Communion except in the hour of death 'unless he had been reasonably hindered from receiving confirmation' ". [Reynolds, HANDBOOK To The BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER, p. 404, fn 3.] In 1662 at the Savoy Conference (between bishops of the Church of England and several presbyterian ministers), the presbyterians urged "that Confirmation may not be made so necessary to the

Education For Living

By The REV. RANDOLPH CRUMP MILLER

Professor of Religious Education at the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, Berkeley, California

"It doesn't matter what a man believes, as long as he does what is right." This is a common saying among good people who do not go to Church. And there is a certain amount of truth in it, for the man who does what is right is acting in accordance with truth even though the "top of his mind" does not accept it.

But usually such a statement is a cover-up for hedging on responsibilities of full Christian maturity, for refusing to think things through, for failing to worship God.

It is furthermore a poor bit of psychology. When a man acts, it is the whole man which is involved. His mind and emotions and will are combined in any good or bad act. It may be a poor combination, but all three functions of the personality are involved.

Beliefs are guides to action.

Emotions are consents to action.

Will is action itself.

A chicken with its head off runs around the yard following reflex actions, but it does not know why. It doesn't matter what it believes. It doesn't even matter how it feels. It just runs.

It is of great importance that we should know the truth, that our emotional resources should be properly attuned, and that both should be consistent with our actions.

Education for living must seek to present truth in such a way that men will desire to do what is right with all their hearts and souls and minds.

I.

Our first educational task, then, is to make truth real to those whom we teach. As Christians, we have received a great heritage of revelation as recorded in the mighty acts of God summarized in the Bible and in history.

Our Christian beliefs tell us that we live in a certain kind of world. It is a universe in which moral values are real, in which ethical decisions have significance, in which God is working his purpose out. It is a society in which God is showing us his nature by the ways he acts. God reveals himself as a loving person. He loves what he has created. He loves all men, even you and me. Christian history reveals this in the life and death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, and in the Church which resulted, but it is also evident in our own Christian experience.

But God's love is not indulgent. God is absolutely moral, and he acts according to the moral laws which he expects us to follow. If the New Testament shows us anything, it is that no longer do we think of God as a capricious monarch. A moral God, no matter how loving, must also sit in judgment on us, for God acts through justice. It is only as the Mind behind the universe is both loving and just that history can make sense.

Christian truth tells us one other thing about God which we cannot afford to forget: God values every person. God does not show partiality. No matter how different our endowments, no matter how simple or complex our minds, no matter how skillful or bungling our hands, no matter how far we stray from his way or remain within his will for us, we know this: God loves you and me.

This is not the whole of the Christian Gospel, but within the fellowship of the Church we can be sure of these things. And it makes a difference in our behavior if we know that God is loving and just, that we live in a moral universe, and that God values us as individual persons. It does matter what we believe.

II.

It also makes a difference how we feel. It is the man who does not know and accept Christian truth who is at lose ends with himself. We know what happens to a child who lacks love and security in the home. He is nervous, fretful, suspicious, and on the defensive. His environment brings out his worst emotional reactions and his worst behavior.

It is not strange that adults also are more likely to have emotional upsets, to give in to their appetites and impulses, to seek for recognition, and to satisfy their ambition on their own terms—when they lack the security which Christian faith provides.

The way of our emotions is determined by our knowledge of Christian truth. If Christian truth gives us a world in which men can feel at home, then men can be expected to behave according to God's requirements.

It makes a difference what we believe, because that determines how we feel, and when these are established the results in our patterns of behavior are significant.

Jesus taught that only a good tree could bring forth good fruit. A tree grows in a certain direction, it needs the constant resources from the good earth to keep growing, and its good deeds are the fruit. Take away its pruning and it loses its upward direction, take away its roots and it withers, try to produce the fruit without pruning and roots, and nothing happens. Yet men try to produce good acts without properly developed beliefs or emotions.

III.

Now there are men who believe right and feel right, whose deeds are stillborn. Without will, belief and emotions do not result in Christian living. It is this half-truth about will which leads to the even more dangerous half-truth with which we began.

Just as will cannot be dependable without right beliefs and sound emotions, so right beliefs and sound emotions by themselves cannot save a man. We need all three. The Biblical way of putting it refers to loving God and our neighbors with heart and soul and mind, and we remember that heart was the source of the emotions and soul of the will. It is the whole man who reacts to God and thus to his neighbor.

IV.

This brings us to our topic: education for living. Christian education is for everyone. It is an ongoing process essential for mature persons as well as for children. Perhaps it is more important for adults, because little children cannot possess truth in the same way as adults, and surely adults need to out grow their childish religious concepts and to know mature ones.

One of America's foremost leaders in Christian education, the late Professor Adelaide Case, has described our purpose as follows: "Christian education is the effort to make available for our generation—children, young people, and adults—the accumulated treasures of Christian life and thought, in such a way that God in Christ may carry on his redemptive work in each human soul and in the common life of man" (quoted by Dora Chaplin, Children and Religion, Scribners, p. 136).

This strikes deeper than merely trying to be good. If a man cannot maintain the fruits of good deeds without the roots of religion, surely when it comes to the fundamental meaning of living, he cannot find the answer to the riddle of the universe without beliefs about God.

When we turn to our primary belief that God is love, we discover that God seeks to draw men to himself. This redemption which the Christian religion offers means that we are able to turn from sin, from evil, from impotence, from weakness, from unhappiness, from insecurity, from all that hinders us from the fullness of joy. Through the release which faith provides, we come into a new life.

It matters greatly what we believe if we are to inherit this gift of God to men. It makes a difference if we know the truth that makes men free. It changes our perspective if we have faith in God, who through Christ offered his love to and for us on the Cross.

Our whole intellectual and emotional response to life depends on whether we have been educated for living, or whether we behave without reference to our beliefs.

The educational policy of the local congregation should be to provide this kind of information, guidance, and worship on a distinctively religious level, and to make it available to everyone through a comprehensive program—in church school, in organizations, in sermons, and in every other activity. The local church should cooperate with the parents in order to make education for living a daily rather than a Sunday experience, for our beliefs are related to the whole world and not to the walls of a church building. As the church's program spreads its influence throughout the community, reaching home and school and playground on every age-level, the organic connections between mind and feelings and will can be established on the horizons of all ethical decisions.

This places a severe responsibility upon the teaching staff, for our teachers are not parcelling out knowledge, not giving ethical advice, and not running children through disciplines in either classroom or worship. They are not running a Bible school, but a school in Christian living.

They are using all the heritage of Christian truth, relating it to the level of experience of their particular pupils, and leading them in the direction of the power of God to turn them into the right path. They are making possible the pruning, placing the roots in solid ground, and then waiting for God to provide the good fruits. They are praying:

"O teach me, Lord, that I may teach
The precious things thou dost impart;
And wing my words, that they may reach
The hidden depths of many a heart."

This same responsibility lies on every teacher, every parent, and every Christian who has Christian truth to impart.

"It doesn't matter what a man believes, as long as he does what is right." Can we any longer take these words with equanimity? Is there not a challenge to expose the ignorance of ethical living so implied? The fruits without the roots, the spreading without the pruning, and the result is death.

A whole man needs all the resources which God has given him, which means using his mind, training his emotions, and directing his will, so he will desire to know and do God's will. For then the universe has meaning, his emotional reactions are unfathomed sources of serenity and power, and his actions are consistent with the mind of Christ. It matters that a man believe the truth, or else he cannot ultimately do what is right.

The Religious Life Of Europe

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

One interesting aspect of the religion of continental Europe is that it seems much less creatively related to the events of history today than it was in the recent past.

The heroic opposition of many churches and churchmen to Nazi tyranny gave many people outside of the church a new respect for the spiritual resources of the organized churches. Many people returned to the churches, seeking for the strength which enabled Christian people to defy malignant power with such abandon.

It would be nice to record that this represents a net spiritual gain. But that would not be true to the facts. One has to admit that evidence is piling up of a less hopeful development. Sometimes the churches affront the more sophisticated members of the European nations for a return to Biblical literalism and obscurantism.

This is a rather curious development because continental Europe did not have our type of fundamentalism before the war. Its literalism is a postwar development. It seems to give the Christians who have always belonged to the Christian community a new sense of security. But it is an affront to those who are seeking for truth in Christianity for the first time.

While Karl Barth is himself not a literalist, most of his disciples on the continent are. One has the feeling that Barth has his tongue in his cheek when he makes interpretations of Biblical stories which seem to assume their literal meaning. He cannot quite believe this because he writes very sophisticated chapters in his books, distinguishing between the meaning of "saga" and "legend" in Biblical lore. But the disciples do not note that the tongue is in the cheek. They are, at any rate, bent upon literalism; and they have driven many searching youngsters away from the church.

The other development, which has a similar effect, is that the postwar church so frequently indulges in a new religious fatalism. It assures the faithful that nothing they can do will change the course of history which God has determined. In a day in which the most discriminating ethical and political decisions must be made the German church seems particularly intent upon persuading men that all of these decisions are of no avail.

Barth warned the Assembly of the World Council of Churches against anything like a "Christian Marshall plan" or any suggestion that Christians had an ethical answer for the world's problems. That might be wholesome advice to many American Christians who seem to think that it is Christian to dream up ideal but irrelevant answers for present perplexities. But it is not such good advice for continental, particularly German, Christians, who are already overwhelmed by the tragedies and frustrations of life. It tends to give a religious sanctification for inaction. It is in fact a kind of religious version of mass shell-shock.

It must be gratefully recorded that all continental Christians do not follow along these lines. Sections of the church are in the most creative relationship with cultural and political tasks. It is nevertheless disturbing that so many are looking for a way to flee from the perplexities of history into a premature eternity. (Copyright, 1948, by Religious News Service)

The Earthquake At Fukui

By SAKAMOTO SAN, Layman

A Devoted Member of the Episcopal Church at Fukui

In a 42 second period all the efforts of the three long years after the war devastation in Fukui came to ashes and debris again.

On June 28, our Sei San-Ichi Gakuen (Holy Trinity School) was opened at five in the afternoon as usual, and about 70 boys and girls were attending their English classes. Rev. Uda, our minister, was teaching the Beginners' Class, Mr. Yamamoto, the Middle Class, and I was to take care of the Higher Class. As I had something to do for the kindergarten on my way home, it was a little after five when I got home. I was in a hurry, but to come to the class, I had to get my textbooks, which had been left at my study. With the textboks I was passing my children's room where my children and their friends were playing. Just when I was leaving the house for the class, there came a sudden earthquake, which was, I thought, a very severe one. The first thought of mine then was the terrified children; they must be taken outside. When I returned to their room, some of them had already fled out of the room by the door open to the garden, and two of my children Yoshiko and Yukiko, were groping on all fours on the rolling floor for the way out; we could hardly stand on our feet. The moment I tried to push them out of the door, all the sliding doors facing the garden fell down all of a sudden, and we found ourselves rolled out in the garden covered by the dust caused by the fall of the kindergarten building closeby, which must have made a great noise, but we heard nothing, I imagine.

My wife and Sunada-san, a kindergarten teacher, were standing pale and terror-striken with two of my children at their feet only three feet apart from the collapsed building; they had been in the kitchen of the kindergarten preparing for the supper and had had a narrow escape. Taking my daughters, Yoshiko and Yukiko, to my wife and telling her to take care of them, I asked her, "Where is Takashi?" My question made her remember that Takashi, our oldest son of 12, was in Rev. Uda's class. Takashi might have been buried under the fallen building together with other pupils; my heart was aching. The earth was still quaking so severely that we could hardly stand. "Take the children to the center of the cabbage garden with you, and wait there till I come back!" I was just about to run away, when my wife held me by the arm and said, "Wait! You must put on your shoes!" I had never noticed that I had been wearing socks alone and no shoes. It is a Japanese custom not to wear shoes when we are in the house.

When I got to the front gate of the kindergarten there were some ten boys and girls standing there pale and terrified gazing at the fallen building. "Where is Takashi? Haven't any of you seen him?" "No!" was their answer. He must have been killed. "Are you all that have escaped?" "No, some have run home!" By now they had restored their usual state of mind. "Come boys, and help me save them! And you, girls and little boys, go home! Don't be afraid; no more severe quakes'."

Cries for help from under the fallen porch! A girl of my class is making her desperate efforts to free her head, her arms, and her body out under the heavily pressing roof. "Sensei (teacher)! Help! I'm dying!" "Wait, be a little patient, and you shall live! Come, boys, and hold this up!" But the roof was too heavy. "Some lever! Bring that pole there!" A dislocated broken pole was brought. Mr. Nonome, our neighbor and church member, had joined us by the time; when he came to the spot, he was pale and half naked: his chiefest concern was his daughter Toyoko, who had left home for her class five minutes before the earthquake. When the first quake attacked, he was in the bath tub and could not come out of the bath room.

The levers of the poles worked, one after another they were saved from under the fallen porch. But I could not wait until all had been saved. My class was upstairs. I must know the safety of them all. When I got around the corner of the crushed building, there came cries for help from the holes of the fallen roof. They were the cries of my students, they are living: the thought of the death of some boys and girls squeezed under the heavy beams had been clinging to my mind, with Takashi among them. "Fukuzawa, bring the axe and the saw! We must save them!" Fukuzawa was a fortunate boy who had been thrown out of the window of the upstairs when the building fell down and was a good helper to me then. The hole of the roof was widened, and there appeared some three girls heavily pressed between a big beam and the staircase. "Sensei! Save us quickly or we shall die!" "Lift the thing on my head a little and I can be out!" "My legs are aching! My body will not move!" Each voice cried out from under our feet. The beam seemed too big to saw off, and too heavy to lift up. "Be patient, my girls! You shall not die! Saw off the board of the staircase, Fukuzawa! It may be the easiest way." I shouted.

"Takashi is here, Sensai! "Some cried from my back. Takashi was standing there bleeding from his forehead. "Is Mother safe?" was his first question. "Yes, she is quite safe, and all your sisters are okay. Come with me to Mother!" Taking him to his mother I thought, he must have got some hard blow on the head, so he must be kept calm."

When I took Takashi to my wife, I said, lest she should be terrified at the sight of the blood, "Only a scar and nothing else. He seems to have been surprised. Apply some medicine to his wound and keep him quiet. I have some more to save, I must go!"

Mr. Yamamoto who had just been brought out was lying on a door on the ground exhausted and pale. His daughter who had been buried but saved was attending him. "I thought I should perish", said he, weakly smiling at me; he was very glad to be able to breath the pure outdoor air again. Fukuzawa and some others were working where the staircase was, and the other group were making their desperate efforts to save those under the destroyed porch, while I walked on the fallen roof tapping the tiles with a stick. Then there came a cry of "Help me out, Sakamoto-Sensi!" from right under my feet. "Who is it?" "It's me, Chieko. I'm dying, Sensi; so much pressed! "No, Chieko-san, you shall not die! But have you got some injury?" "No Sensei! but so dark and pressing." Fear caught hold of me that those succeeding minor quakes might make the heavy burden squeeze the little life out of this lovely 14 years girl. How could I bear it if she would die calling my name! I began to make my desperate efforts to make a hole in the roof. But to reach her first the tiles must be removed, then the boards of the roof, next the ceiling of the upstairs, the floor of the upstairs, and last by the ceiling of the first floor. How long did it take we did not know. All the while she was crying. So some time we had to cheer her up and other times we had to scold her purposely to make her bear her pains a little longer. How glad she and her mother were who had anxiously come there a little time before her rescue in search of her, when Chieko was saved with no injuries! She was handed to her glad and grateful mother to return to their homeless family; Chieko's house had been burnt down by the fire which had broken out nearby soon after the earthquake.

By the time Chieko was brought out all the six teachers and students who had been caught under the porch and the five girls who had been pressed between the beam and the staircase had been saved out all safe and sound; some got only scars and nothing else. As for my son Takashi, his was nothing but a scar on the forehead, but he lost his voice for about a week since the day.

Fukuzawa checked all the students of my class in accordance with his memory, and found that all had been saved safely to our great joy. Of the other two classes we had no clue to ascertain of their safety. Rev. Uda was not with us yet. I could not get rid of my thought of his pale dying face. While others were saving Chieko out, I tried the other side of the roof wondering some ones might have made for the back door. As I walked, I shouted, "Isn't there anyone under here?" "Me!" "Whose me?" "Kobayashi, Help me out, Sensei! How painful! I cried and cried, but no one responded. Oh, I'm dying!" "Be patient a little more, Kobayashi-san! I'll bring some hands to help you out. Is there anyone besides you?" "Yes, Uda-Sensei is at the back of me." "Is he living besides you? Oh, glad I am!" "Yes, Sakamoto-san, I am living here, but how unbearable it is! Be quick and help us out!" He groaned weakly from the innermost part of the fallen building. "Be patient and wait a minute! Sensei, and be praying God for the safety of all! Kobayashi-san, worry no more, for Uda-Sensei is praying for you! And you shall be saved!"

Our efforts were concentrated for the relief of these two persons. First we tried to make a hole in the roof, but Kobayashi-san opposed to it, saying, "Please, don't stand there. Your weight is making the pressure the harder, and it will squeeze my life out." So we had to make a horizontal hole to reach her. With a saw the boards, rafters, and the wall were cut through, and after a long effort she was reached and all the pressure on her was taken away, but she could not make herself out by her own hands and legs, for the long pressure had made her arms and legs benumbed. She was helped out and laid on a board to rest herself for a while. To reach Rev. Uda the hole had to be made 6 feet longer. I crept in on my belly, sawing off the boards, rafters and walls again. Then there I found him lying and praying, safe and sound. Fortunately the floor under him had been broken and made him a cavity. His benumbed legs would not move. With his hands in mine I crawled back in the hole with my legs first.

More than two hours already had passed when Rev. Uda was saved, who was the last person to be helped out. By the time the fires broken out soon after the earthquake in the various parts of the city of Fukui had been spreading to the west and the south, making the sky red and black. All the boys and girls of our school must have been saved from under the fallen building; no parents, nor brothers, nor sisters came to us in search of their missing ones. It was a great relief to our aching hearts. Then all the Christian families around the kindergarten—the Nonomes, Yoshidas, Sunadas, Odas and mine—parents and children all gathered together with the minister in the center and offered our hearty thanksgivings to our Heavenly Father who had saved us all from the horrible death.

Though it was dislocated from the foundation, my house was standing inclining greatly to the south, and so was Mr. Nonome's. The three families of the kindergarten teachers who had their homes upstairs of the kindergarten lost their homes, so they have come to live with us for the time being. But as minor quakes shook us continuously and it seemed very dangerous to stay in the inclinging houses, we built a shack in the playground for the common use of the five families.

No houses in Fukui and around the city were sound. The business centre of Fukui city was reduced to ashes and debris again only three years after the war devastation. And of course there were lots of casualities. The wife of the fishermonger on the opposite side of the kindergarten fell in the ditch in front of the kindergarten when she tried to escape from her falling house, and as no one knew it, she was drowned there squeezed by the stones from both sides.

With the collapse of the kindergarten all the church works which had been performed there have gone to naught. In the building there were Holy Trinity School, where English, Mathematics and Architecture were being taught, Holy Trinity Children's Library, Holy Trinity Mission, which had been for the gospel preaching through correspondence and Holy Trinity Children's Health Consultation Bureau, which had been open to the public on free charge; all of them have gone.

It was in September, 1945, that I was demobilized after the surrender and returned to my homeless Fukui, and was standing where a pile of broken tiles and ashes which were showing the site of the kindergarten and my house, when I was at a loss to know what to do. But when I saw some children playing among the debris besmeared with dirt and mud, my first thought was the reconstruction of the kindergarten which had been founded by Miss Cecilia R. Powell in May, 1928. She was very kind to us Fukui people and loved the children of Fukui very dearly. These children of school age would be taken care of by the City, but who would take care of those children under school age? And what was the most important after the war was the education of those young children. But who would take care of these little ones?

Our once very beautiful church had gone all but the concrete walls, the skilton of the tower and the two chimneys. And all the church members had gone out from the city to their respective shelters. To take care of the children playing among the debris I must stay in the city; I must return to Fukui. My desperate efforts and my wife's at last took a form of a shack of 15 x 20 after ten long months, and the first church service in Fukui after the war devastation was observed in our hut on the early morning of the Transfiguration in 1946—in our hut with no window-sashes, nor panes, nor doors, but with only 3 mats on the floor to sit on and to lie down on.

"Now at last we have got a shelter to put our heads in. The time has come for me to make my efforts for the reconstruction of the kindergarten," I said to my wife. Since then all my private time was offered for the purpose. My friends first doubted my success, but I only asked them for their support of prayer. God never leaves us in despair. On November 23, 1946, in the evening dusk Bishop Sasaki of Kyoto Diocese and Rev. Uda were standing with their prayer-books in their hands facing the cornerstone and with some friends, my wife and myself at their back.

Though the construction was greatly delayed by the long snow bound season of the year, on May 11 in 1947, 150 smiling children were received to the newly built two-storied kindergarten with the roof of tiles and chocolate color paint. But it took another year to complete the furniture, and the playthings, and fix the rooms upstairs for the comfortable homes for the teachers. All through the period of one year and a half I visited lots of people who seemed to be interested in the education of the Christian kindergarten all over the northern half of Fukui Prefecture and appealed to them for their contributions to the reconstruction of it.

In April, 1948, an evening school which had classes for English, Mathematics and Architecture, was established under the name of Sei San-Ichi Gakuen (Holy Trinity School) and had 120 students. Then a children's library, a children's health consultation bureau and an organ for the gospel preaching through correspondence were established one after another in order to comply with the need of the day. And through these activities the kindergarten was being supplemented financially and the major means of the support of our minister was being acquired.

But the collapse of the kindergarten building has brought a standstill to all these activities. But the children must be taken care of; getting a loan of an Army tent from the U. S. Military Government Team in Fukui, the kindergarten was reopened on July 10. The tent will be all right for the time being. But here we have a great deal of snow—snow as deep as 6 feet—in winter, and the cold of the winter is very severe. Then the tent will not do. We must have a building for the children by any means before the arrival of the winter—by the middle of November at the latest. This is what we concern most today. The former building was about 3,600 square feet. To have such it will cost more than ¥2,000,000 which is about $8,000. All the former contributors are greatly suffering from the quake disaster and the resultant flood disaster. So I cannot help hesitating to approach them for another contribution. But anyhow we must get it rebuilt. We are now making our utmost efforts for it. This effort of ours for the reconstruction, please remember it in your daily prayer so that our efforts may be fruitful.

Mapsico Church

By EMILY BLAYTON MAJOR

Ruthville, Virginia

The granite memorial shaft which Dr. G. MacLaren Brydon, historiographer of the Episcopal Diocese of Virginia, dedicated at the site of Mapsico Episcopal Church in Charles City County on August 29, does more than mark the spot where a quaint and beautiful "cathedral in the pines" once stood. It commemorates the lives of many outstanding citizens of the county, who are buried in its shadowy churchyard. Among them is Mary Willis Douthat, granddaughter of Chief Justice John Marshall, who for many years made her home at nearby "Weyanoke." The stone moreover, well might serve to designate a shrine to yesterday's way of life, for the old church, closed for services in 1920, and remotely located in a tract of timbered land, remained (until it was torn down two years ago) practically untouched by the "improvements" which constitute such an important part of modern "streamlined" living.

Former members of Mapsico from Richmond, Norfolk and various other sections of the state attended the memorial exercises, which were held at Westover Church in the upper end of the parish. Dr. Brydon, assisted by Dr. J. H. Lloyd, rector at Westover, conducted the services.

Dr. Brydon gave a brief outline of Mapsico's unique history and paid tribute to the men and women who are buried there. He said in part:

"These people received a torch, walked in its light, and handed it on to us, enriched and glorified by all that they learned about Christ, and by the fruit which they brought forth in patience."

After the exercises were completed at the Mapsico site (on Fire Trail No. 1523, one mile from Highway No. 619) the women of the parish served a basket lunch under the trees, which for so many years shaded the arched doorway of the old church.

Mapsico was built in 1856 to replace St. Thomas which was destroyed by fire. It was consecrated by Bishop Johns and given the Indian name Mapsco in memory of "the old brick church which stood about seven miles below the Court House and immediately on the road to Sandy Point, the old seat of the Lightfoot family, also convenient to the Chickahominy neighborhood." As the years passed an "i" was inserted in the old name to make it Mapsico.

The church was noted for its unusual style of architecture.

The two-century-old silver chalice and patten, used in communion services at Mapsico were gifts of a member of the renowned Lightfoot family. Both pieces are inscribed with the donor's name and the date of presentation, "Fran Lightfoot, anno 1727."

Among the rectors who served at Mapsico were the late John Poyntz Tyler, afterwards Bishop of North Dakota, and the Rev. Seawell Chapin who baptized John Tyler, tenth President of the United States.

The interior of the church, with its tall candles, two hundred-year-old communion service, and marble tablets engraved with the Ten Commandments, was in keeping with the quiet dignity of the exterior. The hand-made pews, tinted plaster walls, and the flooring made of boards that were hand hewn on one side and finished with a "buck saw" and plane on the other, revived memories of the time when men "brought forth fruit in patience."

Among the former members of Mapsico, who attended the memorial exercises were 84-year-old Mrs. Sue Holt Woolfolk and Junius Floyd of Richmond. Mrs. Woolfolk's grandfather was one of the first vestrymen of the church. Mrs. Virginia Willcox Strachan and her nephew Thomas H. Willcox of Norfolk also were present.

The automobiles which brought the visitors to the dedication ceremonies looked a bit unusual against the sylvan

PRAISE

O, Most High, Almighty, Good Lord God, to Thee belong praise, glory, honor and all blessing.

Praised be my Lord God with all His creatures, and especially our brother, the sun, who brings us the day; fair is he and shines with a very great splendor; O Lord, he signifies to us Thee. Praised be my Lord for our sister, the moon, and for the stars, the which He has set clear and lovely in heaven. Praised be my Lord for our sister, water, who is very serviceable unto us, and humble and precious and clean. Praised be Thou, my Lord, for our brother, fire; he is bright and pleasant and very mighty and strong. Praised be my Lord for our mother, the earth, who doth sustain us and keep us, and bringeth forth the grass, divers fruits and flowers of many colors.

Praised be my Lord for all those who pardon one another for His love's sake, and who endure weakness and tribulation. Praised be Thou, my Lord, for our sister, the death of the body, from which no man escapeth.

Praise ye and bless ye the Lord, and give thanks unto Him and serve Him with great humility.

A MEDITATION ON CHRISTIAN WORSHIP

Bible Readings: Psa. 63:1-7; I Chron. 16:29

Let us think of:

1. Worship as Energy. It is not a luxury of the spiritual life. Nor is it a sort of nature-mysticism, a dreamy exercise of our esthetic faculties, combined with a touch of gratitude to God the Giver of all good things. Nor, again is it the restful sense of protection from external cares and worries which some feel when they enter a dimly lighted church. Worship is an energy; the very heart of it is an act of giving. We offer ourselves to God with all our imperfections, making effort after complete unity with His will. This is not an easy task.

2. Worship as a gift. The knowledge of God which leads us to worship Him is first and last His gift. We do not seek Him, but respond to His call to us. He desires our worship; He will show us where to find Him. If we put ourselves into daily communion with Him He will in the end make His service our delight and bring us into full communion with Himself.

3. Worship as Intercession. We are troubled on many sides, at home and abroad. Our loved ones need our help. How can we pray for them? It may be that our worship is the greatest act of intercession we can make. If we could kneel somewhere and after a brief pause say, "The Lord is King, be the people never so impatient; He sitteth between the cherubim, be the earth never so unquiet." This offering of adoration and trust may be a ladder between Heaven and earth, helping many others to steadier faith and hope.

"I laid my life down at Thy feet,
That images of fair and sweet,
Might pass to others on it '

How shall we worship? Some suggestions are: kneel down and after a few moments of quiet concentration, say with full intent of heart and mind, "We praise Thee, we bless Thee, we glorify Thee, we give thanks to Thee for Thy great glory." Or we could kneel and try to fix our thoughts on some one aspect of God. Suppose we think first of His wonderful far-reaching life.

"Out beyond the shining,
Of the farthest star,
Thou art ever stretching,
Infinitely far."

From wonder and awe we might pass to thanksgiving; for all He can do and has done; for His gifts to us and all the joys that come to us through the marvel of His creation. Pass from Thanksgiving to Trust. What He has done in the past He will do again for us, for our own immediate circle and for larger groups we may be interested in. Or again, commit to memory Psa. 63:1-7, and say these verses earnestly. Such acts enclosed in longer and shorter periods of silence are one with the adoration of the saints.

Worship is only real when the mind is so filled with the object of worship that it leaves no room for anything else. It is only possible when we forget ourselves.

The leaflet "Christian Worship" from which these thoughts have been taken may be secured from The Forward Movement, 412 Sycamore St., Cincinnati, Ohio.

The Gloria In Excelsis.

In considering the burst of praise that comes after the administration and thanksgiving, we find that in at least two ways it is similar to the Te Deum, i. e., first its antiuity is so great that it is almost impossible to tell its exact origin. One writer has placed its use as far back as the fourth century, but others say it may have been used one or two centuries earlier. One thing is quite certain, that originally it was used more as an early morning hymn than as a part of the Eucharistic service, however it became a part of this service very early in Church history, and has held its place there through the centuries; although its position has been changed from time to time. Bishop Symmachus, of Rome (A. D. 500) directed that it should be used at the beginning of the Liturgy on every Sunday and holy day. "Before the Reformation it was sung at the beginning of the service, before the Collect for the day, and so continued in the Prayer Book of 1549. It was removed to its present position in 1552." (Daniel, The Prayer Book, p. 387).

The second thing that makes it like the Te Deum is that it combines a hymn, a creed and a prayer all in one great rhythmic utterance. An analysis of its wording will show this quite clearly. The first paragraph is a hymn of high praise. Then comes a statement of the nature of God and the relationship of Our Saviour to God. Then follows a prayer for God's mercy and forgiveness. The last paragraph reverts again to a credo statement of the Saviour's equality with God and his unique postiion in the Godhead.

Although the Rubric preceding the Gloria in Excelsis requires no special position for the congregation during its rendering, yet it is the universal habit of our people to stand, whether it be sung or said. The Rubric also permits the use of "Some proper hymn," but these words are so beautiful and so familiar it is almost always used.

JACK OF ALL TRADES

Robert B. Hall, Sewanee student and lay missionary-in-charge of Eureka Springs, Ark., spent part of his summer repairing the pipe organ in the church to such effect that it is working perfectly again after a long period of disuse. In the time remaining he prepared confirmation classes, reorganized Auxiliaries and revived the work generally.

Watered Down Christianity!

"Pastoral Teaching in the Church School Worship Service" is the title of a new pamphlet just issued by the National Department of Christian Education of our Church. This is among the first of the materials to be issued by the department as part of its new program of increased service to the Church. The idea behind the issuance of this pamphlet is excellent. But the execution of the idea is pitiful.

The pamphlet contains thirty-seven instructions which are to be memorized by the children; though they are recommended for adults as well. These thirty-seven paragraphs are a sad explanation of the Christian faith. They are actually a watered-down religion, reflecting an ethical liberalism more than the Gospel of our Lord. We are told that "In the New Testament God teaches us to try to be like Jesus Christ." But none of us can be like the Lord. He alone is Lord. What He did, He did "once for all." He is not our example, but our Saviour. Another instruction states that "In the Apostles' Creed I learn secondly that God came down to earth and as Jesus Christ became a man in order to teach me the right way to live." Here again Christ the Saviour is forgotten. This same ethical insistance upon "the right way to live" appears in others of these instructions. "To follow" is specifically equated with "To be like Jesus Christ!" Here is our fatal modern heresy that confuses ethics with religion and places human morality before the great acts of God. Here is our modern form of ancient idolatry! We are to be like gods! We are to be like the Second Person of the Holy Trinity!

Another strange theological doctrine concerns confirmation as described in this leaflet. It states, "When I am old enough I shall be confirmed. This means that I shall take my baptismal promises for myself and receive from my Bishop the seven gifts of the Holy Spirit." If this be correct, the Book of Common Prayer and the New Testament are false in ascribing the sevenfold gifts to God. Making full allowance for the difficulty of phrasing the faith for children, there are entirely too many ambiguities and errors in this leaflet.

This is not a matter of churchmanship, but of a watered down degenerate religion posing as the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. The tragedy of Christianity today is that too many people think of Christianity in moralistic terms; of Christ the Lord as being merely our example. Let us hope future pamphlets of the Department of Christian Education will be reviewed by competent theologians before they are broadcast to the Church.

Why Large Sunday School Buildings?

Must Churches expend large sums to secure space for their Sunday Schools? Must Churches place a large indebtedness on themselves for decades to provide adequate facilities for the instruction of our children? Undoubtedly many Churches are finding their facilities for religious instruction inadequate, partly because of the influx of war-time babies. The immediately obvious solution is always to build and expand. But this answer faces the present high cost of building, which in turn means a great financial strain upon a Church.

Few Churches seem to consider that we need such large buildings only because we insist upon having all our children come at a single hour on Sunday morning. We must therefore provide maximum space, even though it is used fully only during one hour on one day of the week. This is obviously uneconomic and ridiculous. Why cannot the various departments of a Sunday School meet at various times throughout the week? Perhaps the high school group might meet on Friday evening. After a service in the Church, planned and designed for them, there would be class time. There would be no need to compress everything into one hour. Following the classes, there might be a program of recreation.

The smallest children might well come in the morning, and have the uninterrupted use of the entire building. Other grades might gather in the late afternoon, after public school is dismissed. Sunday morning may well prove to be the poorest time of all to have Sunday School! Released from the need to attend classes on Sunday morning, our children might return to Church attendance with their parents.

Such a program would enable the minister to know all the children far more intimately than he can on Sunday mornings, with all its furious rush and bustle. Best of all, Churches would not be faced with the need of erecting and maintaining large and expensive plants, destined to stand idle ninety per cent of the time! Strange how bound by tradition and pride we are in such matters!

BOOK NOTES

By the Faculty of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific. Edited by Randolph Crump Miller.

LET'S ACT NOW. By Richard Terrill Baker, 128 pages, New York, Friendship Press. 50 cents.

This is the keynote book for the Foreign Missions advance program. The book presents a strong argument for the use of the church in building a better world. It proposes a practical plan of Christian action for individuals as well as organizations. The author believes that there is an answer to the despair of millions of small men who are asking, "But what can I do about the shattered state of civilization? What can any one person do?" He feels that the answer, though neither short nor easy, is simple in its basic tenets. It is the traditional answer of the Christian religion—faith and works.

The author challenges Christians to join in action that will reach the very roots of the social and economic problems that lie beneath the troubled surface of our day. He describes in detail such varied projects of the foreign missions program as technical services, agricultural institutes, hospitals, and literacy classes. He tells the reader how the lives of individuals and entire communities have been lifted and given direction. It is clearly indicated that the progressive program of missions must be continued, extended and multiplied. The church must stand squarely in the center of the one world we envision, creating that world by giving spiritual motivation to industry, education government, the home.

Mr. Baker places great emphasis on the place of the individual Christian in this plan as a unit of his church. He must belong, contribute, work! But first of all he must be enlisted and aroused to action. And this arousing is the place where LET'S ACT—NOW fits in, as part of the great forward movement for a world wide advance in the Kingdom of God. The movement will include great mass meetings in 36 key cities in the United States, beginning at Columbus, Ohio, October 6—the same day as the publication date of this book.

The author wrote this book at the request of the Foreign Mission Conference of North America and with the help of many leaders of the church. Baker's travels in 32 countries as a Christian teacher, correspondent, and writer has prepared him unusually well for the authorship of this book. Among Baker's many books is the recent "Darkness of the Sun," (Abingdon-Cokesbury).

RELIGION THROUGH THE AGES. Edited by Hermon F. Bell and Charles S. Macfarland. Phillsophical Library. $5.00.

This volume consists of excerpts from the writings of thirty-three men and women who reflect a theistic view of the universe, beginning with Fenelon and concluding with Augustine. Each section is preceded by a biographical sketch of the writer, and then follow various selections, some long and some brief. It provides an interesting anthology and reflects the evaluations of the two editors.

THE LOST GOSPEL. By Robert E. Luccock. Harper. $1.75.

Utilizing a new technique of preaching, these sermons are based on short stories. The stories are good ones, but that is only half the picture for Luccock has used his own genius to take these stories and make of them means by which God speaks to the listener or reader. Lay people as well as clergy will find the novelty refreshing and the message relevant.

CHURCH, LAW, AND SOCIETY.. By Gustaf Aulen. Scribners, 1948. $2.00.

This little book of only 111 pages contains the Hewett Lectures delivered in the Spring of 1947 at three Eastern theological colleges, written by the Bishop of Strangas, Sweden, whose Christus Victor is already a well known classic. Here is a treatment of the Church and Society, written with the perspective of a European Christian—a treatment which would be entirely impossible for any American writer to give us. It is a provoking and challenging book—a book primarily for clerical reading—realistic, dealing with living world issues. All who wish to gain a clearer understanding of the place of the Christian Church in our modern world crisis would do well to read it.

POSTLUDE TO SKEPTICISM. By R. S. Meadowcroft. Cloister. $2.50.

Mr. Meadowcroft has done a remarkable job of presenting in clear and understandable terms the present problems and the future challenge with which Christianity is confronted. The book is well-written and is thought provoking. The best recommendation that this reviewer can give of this book is that he read and re read the book, then read most of it aloud to his wife, and now wants a copy for permanent reference. The author feels that this is a period of great transition in the course of the world: we are at the end of an epoch (the age of skepticism). The skentical mind has proved unable to cope with the real problems of life. The skeptical mind, when it is prevented from reaching conclusions by a relativism or denial of truth, proves unsatisfying and unusable. "Contemporary skepticism . . . is not a profound search for truth. Rather, it is an absolute denial of its existence." (p. 17.)

Mr. Meadowcroft has a solid appreciation of history and discusses with understanding the development of the skeptical mind and its weakness.

Evidences of decay in modern life are clear. The two world wars have shaken to rubble the belief in inevitable progress, and man has been left without faith, either in God or in himself. "The 'acids of modernity' have dissolved the secular world even more than the realm of religion." (p. 46.) Man has lost faith in his machines: the materialism of fifty years ago is a dead issue. Skepticism has failed the pragmatic test: it has proved unable to give man a workable philosophy of life.

Lest we rejoice prematurely over the demise of skepticism, and give way to rejoicing over the inevitable return to the fold of the Faith, the author hastens to observe that the essential requirements of a religious reawakening are repentance and faith, and both are lacking as yet. Modern man exists in a vacuum, and it is sobering to remember that there is no human guarantee that Christianity will automatically rise to meet the challenge. Historically, Christianity has failed on several occasions of great promise.

As a civilization we have yet to repent of our sin of man-centeredness, recover a faith by which to live. "If Christianity is not the faith we need, then we are entirely without spiritual illuminations for tomorrow and must wait until a new prophet appears." (P. 89.) The balance of the book is a demonstration that Christianity is the faith which can meet the needs of modern man. Christianity challenges man's best, and it is compatible with scientific truth as man knows it.

Mr. Meadowcroft deals clearly with theology and this book is well worth the sincere study of all people who are concerned with religious life. Chapters included are: The Problem of Evil, The Personality of God, The Divine Family, The Church (this chapter should be required reading for everyone interested in the problem of church unity), and other matters about which we have been guilty of too much foggy thinking. He concludes by reminding us of the opportunity which confronts us. There are signs of progress but the immediate outcome rests on our efforts.

Mr. Meadowcroft has written a stirring, challenging book. It shows his vital Christian conviction in an effective style. He is writing to people out of his practical experience as a parish priest and is never lost in flights of theoretical fancy. It is well worth everyone's study.

THE RELIGION OF PHILOSOPHERS. By James H. Dunham. University of Pennsylvania Press. $4.00.

We often wonder about the religion of philosophers, and eleven outstanding thinkers are dealt with in these critical essays. Plato, Aristotle, Epicurus, Marcus Aurelius, Augustine, Leibniz, Spinoza, David Hume, Immanuel Kant, and Auguste Comte are the philosophers, and each chapter is an individual story. It is good philosophical writing and adds to the total of our knowledge about these men.

TOWARD ONE WORLD IN CHRIST

Sixty-six Protestant denominations in the United States and Canada go forward together in a Foreign Missions program of advance.

Richmond is one of 36 cities in entire nation selected for this major move to be held October 21-22.

The Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., is general chairman; the Rev. Walter C. Gum, D. D., program chairman.

ONE GREAT UNITED SERVICE
Oct. 21, 8 P. M.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH
Boulevard and Monument
Richmond, Virginia

How It Is to Be Done in Thirty-six Cities

As an aftermath of war Protestant Christianity finds itself facing a world situation which calls for something far over and above what has been done before if the Church is to meet its missionary obligation and responsibility.

In an effort to arouse the Church membership as a whole to a sense of the urgency and need for greater participation in the ongoing world mission of the Church, some twenty-six mission Boards are planning simultaneous coordinated meetings.

These meetings will be held in thirty-six selected centers across the continent. In each center the participating Boards —in some cities as many as fifteen— will conduct during a two day period separate denominational meetings according to their own procedures and methods of missionary promotion.

On the evening of the first day the participating denominations will unite in a large interdenominational meeting in which the Foreign Missions program of advance will be presented in its relation to the total missionary program of the Church.

The remainder of the two days will be at the disposal of the participating denominations, to arrange for such meetings as they desire. Leadership for these meetings will be provided by the participating Boards and a program arranged after consultation with their local leaders.

A general committee consisting of two members from each denomination previously appointed by the participating Boards, will be responsible for general arrangements, including the interdenominational meeting, newspaper and radio coverage, etc. This committee will work in closest cooperation with organized church agencies and will have overall direction of the two day program. Arrangements for all meetings not of a denominational nature, will clear through this committee.

These meetings should focus the attention of the entire Christian community on the desperate spiritual needs throughout the world and the responsibility of Protestant Christianity for bringing about a Christian world recovery.

Rev. J. W. Decker Main Speaker

Richmond, Va.—The Rev. John W. Decker, secretary of the International Missionary Council, will be the main speaker at the great united service to be held at 8:00 o'clock A. M., October 21, in the First Baptist Church. This service is a part of Foreign Missions program of advance two-day interdenominational conferences to be held in Richmond, October 21-22.

Before assuming his present position with the New York headquarters of the Council, Dr. Decker served as a missionary in China for 13 years—at Ningpo and Hangchow—doing evangelistc work; followed by nine years as foreign secretary of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, responsible for their work in Japan, China, and the Philippines. He made a number of trips through these countries of the Far East, studying mission work extensively, and in 1938 was a delegate to the International Missionary Council's meeting at Madras, India, so that he has had exceptional opportunity for making the contacts needed in the great missionary enterprise of the Church. He assumed his present duties January 1, 1943, and visited war-torn Great Britain that summer. In 1945 he visited Australia, New Zealand, India and China surveying conditions. He has also made post-war visits to Switzerland, Great Britain, Holland, Canada, the Philippines, China, Siam, Korea and Japan.

This summer Dr. Decker attended the first assembly of the World Council of Churches in Amsterdam.

A native of Virginia, Dr. Decker studied at Richmond College here. Three years later graduated from the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary. In 1917 after two years' service as teaching fellow in Church history, he received a degree of doctor of theology. In June, 1935, his alma mater, now the University of Richmond, gave him the honorary degree of doctor of divinity.

Among those being sent here by their denominational Boards are Bishop Y. Y. Tsu, who is in charge of the Chinese (Episcopal) Church's national office in Nanking; the Rev. Caxton Doggett, secretary of the Department of the Student Work of the Methodist Board of Missions and Church Extension; the Rev. Hyungki Lew, a leading Christian educator, and translator, and author in Korea.

Episcopal Banker Calls for Unity

Thomas C. Boushall, Richmond banker, called upon the Episcopal Church to forget the "petty differences" which keep all denominations from being united in the "cause of Christ."

In the closing session of the two-day conference at Roslyn, W. W. Craigie, of Richmond, was elected president to succeed P. Winfree For, of Culpeper.

"If our 77,000,000 professing Christians were 77,000,000 practicing Christians," Mr. Boushall said, "we would have no fear of communism or the collapse of Western civilization."

He urged the 80 delegates to be practicing Christians and surround themselves with practicing Christians to the end that the world might know the force of Christianity rather than the force of the atomic bomb.

Summarizing the laymen's objectives, Rear-Admiral Morton C. Mumma, retired, of Berryville, proposed a return of the father as the spiritual head of the family and not merely the bread-winner.

The laymen unanimously adopted a program calling for the support of the evangelical program of the Episcopal Church, the improvement of Sunday schools, with special emphasis on better curricular, and endorsed the plan for the proposed Episcopal Home for aged men at Charlottesville.

YOUTH SUNDAY—OCTOBER 17

New York, N. Y.—Youth Sunday this year falls on October 17. Young people of the Church will share in great services dramatically showing youth's part in the life of the Church. The youth offering will be presented. This year it has been designated by the National Youth Commission for aid to AUJE—Acion Unda de la Juventud Episcopal—the infant youth movement in Puerto Rico. The offering will help provide a Church school and recreational center for the young people. The National Council's Division of Youth has numerous suggestion about ways of raising money for the offering, as well as plans for special youth services to be conducted on Youth Sunday.

CHINESE CLERGYMAN SENDS GIFT

New York, N. Y.—The National Council has received a gift of $40.00 sent by a Chinese clergyman doing graduate work in this country at present, as an expression of "the splendid service rendered the Chinese Church and people by the Rt. Rev. Alfred A. Gilman and Mrs. Gilman". Bishop Gilman retired recently as Missionary Bishop of Hankow. The donor of the gift is one of many Chinese boys who studied under the Bishop, and was helped by him on many occasions.

CHURCH HOME FOR MEN

Charlottesville, Va.—More than three years ago an attractive house and lot, costing $17,000, was presented to the Diocese of Virginia for a much-needed object—The Episcopal Church Home for Men—in faith and with the hope that it would be acceptable, and would be provided for by the diocese. It was formally accepted by the Council, but after three years only $1,994.00 has been received from 21 individuals (three of whom were non-Episcopalians), and $22.97 from the branches of the Woman's Auxiliary, or a total of only $2,016.97.

Unless more interest financially is shown within the next few months it may be necessary to return these gifts to the donors.

There are now a number of men in the diocese who are asking about, and waiting to enter, the Home. As the decision rests with the individual members of the diocese, what shall be the answer to their pleas?

Contributions may be given or sent to any of the following officers and trustees of the Home, viz:

Charlottesville—Rt. Rev. W. R. Mason, president, 978 Locust Avenue; Dr. M. H. Urner, vice-president, 1920 Blue Ridge Road; John W. Herndon, secretary, 102 Preston Court; Thomas B. Behrendt, treasurer, care People's National Bank; Rev. Herbert A. Donovan, chaplain, 713 Park Street; Jesse B. Wilson, attorney, 215 Fifth Street, N. E.; Dr. Ivey F. Lewis, dean, University of Virginia, No. 2 East Lawn.

Cobham—Capt. Roswell H. Blair.

Culpeper—Winifree Fore, Box 751.

Fredericksburg—Walter H. Chinn, Jr., No. 2 William Street.

Harrisonburg—Percy Warren, Madison College.

Richmond—Rev. Dr. R. Cary Montague, No. 110 West Franklin Street; Eppa F. Hunton, IV, No. 700 East Franklin Street; Archibald G. Robertson, No. 700 East Franklin Street; D. McC. Thornton, Hotel Richmond.

APPEAL FOR MEN'S CLOTHING

New York, N. Y.—Church World Service is sending out an urgent appeal for men's clothing for use overseas. "CWS receives tons of women's clothing but practically none for men and reports from abroad tell that men's clothing is so scarce and the need so great that attempts have been made to alter women's clothing so that it could be worn by men, in order that they might continue to work."

Church World Service asks that suits and overcoats especially be sent at the earliest possible moment, and that $1.00 shall accompany each suit or overcoat, to pay transportation on the garment and to help feed the recipient.

NEW VESTIBULE TO BE DEDICATED

New York, N. Y.—The dedication of the new vestibule at the Church of the Epiphany will take place on October 29 at 4 P. M. The Very Rev. John Wallace Suter, D. D., dean of the Washington Cathedral, and former rector of the parish, will officiate with the present rector, the Rev. Hugh McCandless.

The vestibule was given in memory of two wardens of the church, Percy R. Pyne and Percy R. Pyne, Jr. It is in the same style as the rest of the building, a modern adaptation of French Gothic architecture.

Present plans for future expansion of the church include the erection of a chapel at the corner of York Avenue and 74th Street and the lengthening of the nave when that becomes necessary.

BISHOP BLOCK'S 10TH ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATED

San Francisco, Cal.—Two thousand people filled the nave of Grace Cathedral to assist their diocesan in the celebration of his tenth year as a bishop in the Church of God. Bishop Block was consecrated on the Feast of St. Michael and All Angels 1938, when he became bishop-coadjutor to the Right Rev. Edward Lambe Parsons. On Bishop Parsons' retirement in 1940 Dr. Block became diocesan. Both Bishop Parsons and Bishop Gribbin, sometime bishop of Western North Carolina, were in the sanctuary.

Evensong was sung by the Very Rev. B. N. Lovgren, dean of California, the choristers of the Cathedral, and some fifty students from the Church Divinity School at Berkeley. The Dean was assisted by Dr. Henry H. Shires, Dean of the Divinity School, and the Rev. John Leffler, D. D., rector of St. Luke's Church in the See City. After the anthem following the Third Collect, Dr. Rifenbark, president of the Standing Committee and rector of San Jose, paid a moving tribute to the Bishop as a friend to all men, a true Father-in-God to priests and people, and an executive of rare ability. But the highlight of this magnificent service was Bishop Block's colorful account of his experiences at the Lambeth Conference.

125 LAYMEN ATTEND

Wilmington, Del.—One hundred and twenty-five laymen, representing all parishes and missions in the diocese of Delaware, attended the two-day meeting of the Lay Conference held recently in St. Andrew's School, Middletown, Del.

Bishop McKinstry made the opening address, following which the delegates divided into seven discussion groups. In these groups the sections of the Lambeth report were studied by the groups who reported their findings at a general meeting later.

The necessity for all Christian communicants to stand together in the fight against communism was stressed by Lieut.-General John C. L. Lee, U. S. Army, Ret., former commander of American forces in Italy, now executive secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in the Episcopal Church, in his address at the Layman's Conference of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Delaware held Saturday and Sunday at St. Andrew's School in Middletown.

General Lee addressed the conference on Saturday evening. He took as his topic, "Action Now." He stressed the need for church unity coupled with tolerance, in the world today.

In the discussion group led by Mr. Theisen where the topic was the Anglican Communion, the group urged Bishop McKinstry to formulate a diocesan program through all the parishes for the recruitment of men to enter the ministry and also recommended the adoption by all parishes of a direct financial obligation to support and expand the seminaries.

This group stressed the responsibility of the Anglican church for leadership in the world today, the need for recruiting more clergy and the strengthening of seminaries which are the training schools of the clergy.

102ND ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATED

By One of Oldest Churches In Detroit

DETROIT, MICH.—St. Matthew's Church celebrated during the week September 19-26 the one hundred second anniversary of the founding of the parish. Services on September 19 began the observance, with the Rev. Norman F. Kinzie, Ph. D., of East Lansing, as special preacher at 11:00.

September 21, St. Matthew's Day, there was a special service of the Holy Communion. On September 26, concluding the anniversary observance, the Rev. F. Rickesford Meyers, rector, preached the anniversary sermon.

St. Matthew's Parish ranks among the oldest in the city of Detroit. It was founded as a mission by the Rev. William C. Monroe, a man of fine talent, attractive personality and good education. He was ordained as a deacon at St. Paul's Church, Detroit, in 1846, by the Rt. Rev. Samuel A. McCoskry, first bishop of Michigan. At that time the parish membership numbered about 25. The early story of St. Matthew's runs concurrently with the turbulant history of the United States. It was about September 26, 1807, that a Supreme Court decision declared that slavery was not admissible in Michigan. Many decisions of this nature acted as an inducement for a number of free colored people to migrate to this state.

For more than 60 years St. Matthew's has stood on its present site. From its membership have gone forth many outstanding clergymen, among whom was the Rt. Rev. James Theodore Holly, late Bishop of Haiti. Other members of the parish now in the active ministry are the Rev. Louis H. Berry, rector of St. Philip's Church, Newark, N. J., and the Rev. Birney W. Smith, Jr., rector of St. Margaret's, Dayton, Ohio.

Parish status was granted St. Matthew's in 1907 under the rectorate of the late Rev. George C. Bundy. Through the years, St. Matthew's has been a force for good in a downtown neighborhood. The parish exerts there an influence similar to that of Trinity Church at the head of Wall Street in New York City.

Plans for the erection of a new building are now in progress and it is hoped that operations will begin shortly. The present congregation numbers about 750 communicants.

PROGRAM OF EVANGELISM UNDER WAY

Philadelphia, Pa.—The fall program of Evangelism in the Diocese of Pennsylvania began with a series of conferences on "What a Layman Can Do To Help His Parish and His Rector." Each of five meetings for different geographical groups was addressed by a layman, a priest, and by Bishop Hart. All the meetings were held within one week: September 28-October 1. Bishop Hart stressed the importance of an atmosphere of fellowship and hearty worship among the people of the parishes if and when persons attracted to the church by the national radio broadcasts on Friday nights enter the doors of our churches. "If they fail to find real fellowship and true lay participation in worship, the Church will lose an opportunity that will never come again," says Bishop Hart.

Beginning Tuesday, October 12, and continuing for six Tuesdays the Department of Christian Education of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, will conduct a School of Christian Education. Classes will include subjects and speakers as follows: "The Church's Faith," Rev. Charles M. Coldern, faculty of Philadelphia Divinity School; "Workshop for Teachers," Miss Beryl M. Newman, Secretary Department Christian Education; "Liturgy and Life," Rev. Stanley Brown-Serman, of faculty of Virginia Seminary; "Epistles of St. Paul," Rev. William H. Dunphy, rector St. Mark's Church, Philadelphia; "How to Use Audio-Visual Methods and Materials," Rev. George B. Ammon, Luthern Publication House; "The Lambeth and Amsterdam Conferences" by various speakers who attended these sessions.

FAVORABLE COMMENTS COMING IN

Stations Carrying National Council's Radio Program Approve Broadcast

New York, N. Y.—National Council has announced the schedule for the second block of three plays to be presented on the radio program, "Great Scenes From Great Plays." They are:

October 22—"Dark Victory," with Celeste Holm and Walter Abel; October 29—"On Borrowed Time," with Boris Karloff and David Anderson; November 5—"Little Women," with Joan Caulfield, Betty Caulfield, Rosemary Rice and Susan Douglas.

One of the responses which have come to the National Council is highly favorable comment from radio stations carrying "Great Scenes From Great Plays." One station director wrote: "I have been interested in religious broadcasting for many years. This particular idea intrigues me because I believe it could possibly have a greater impact on people and better promote the cause of real religion than the conventional type of religious broadcast. I believe the Protestant Episcopal Church will derive a great deal of publicity and benefit from this series of broadcasts, and my only regret is that my own Church did not think of it first."

That came from the South. From the middle west came another letter from the general manager of an important radio station. He said that he is the son of a Congregationalist minister, and is especially interested in the new program. "It will be possible to reach and retain the interest of thousands of people who take their religion for granted. The message will penetrate not only in the Episcopal Church, but in churches of all denominations. Every Church of every faith will owe their gratitude to the Episcopal Church for this program. It is unfortunate that it is necessary to sell the public on religion, but such is a fact. This is far and large the best approach to the problem to date."

From the northeast came a letter from the president of a radio station, explaining that his station has a firm policy against acceptance of commercial religious programs. In this case, however, he said, "We just felt that we could not afford not to broadcast the program and deprive our listeners of top-quality material, direction and acting."

NEW ST. THOMAS' DEDICATED

Trenton, Mich.—During September, the new building of St. Thomas' Church, Trenton, was dedicated and officially opened. The original building was destroyed in a disastrous fire in December, 1946, and was greatly mourned as one of the few remaining landmarks of historical interest among church edifices in this part of the country.

The new St. Thomas' Church was formerly a Martha-Mary Chapel in Macon, Mich., and was purchased by the congregation from the Ford Foundation. It was moved 82 miles to the present site in Trenton—through Clinton, Manchester, Ann Arbor, Ypsilanti, and down the new Expressway.

The opening of the dedication period was a candlelight service on Sunday evening, September 12, at which the Rt. Rev. Richard S. Emrich, bishop of the diocese, preached the sermon and dedicated the building. The Rev. C. Clare Backhurst, rector of the parish, invited former rectors and clergymen of the Convocation to participate in the service, including the Rev. Warner L. Forsyth of Grosse Ile; the Rev. Lawrence E. Midworth of the Church of the Epiphany, Detroit; the Rev. Hedley G. Stacey of Christ Church, Dearborn; the Rev. Waldo R. Hunt of St. John's, Wayne; the Rev. William A. Saunders of Allen Park; the Rev. Ralph W. Parks of Wyandotte; the Rev. Walter B. Williamson of River Rouge; and the Rev. George Backhurst of St. Clair.

The Rt. Rev. Russell S. Hubbard, suffragan bishop of the diocese, made his first official appearance in Michigan as preacher at a candlelight service in St. Thomas' Church on Tuesday evening, September 14, the service being followed by an open house for the people of the community and the diocese as well as the parish. Clergy of the diocese, also the clergy of other denominations in the community were invited to take part in the service.

Many of the furnishings of the new building are of more than ordinary interest. The crystal chandelier is a museum piece from Greenfield Village. The wrought-iron work on the steeple and in the outdoor lamps was made by the village blacksmith at Greenfield Village. The pews and paneling are solid old black walnut. Other old furniture, salvaged from the fire, has been refinished, including the Altar, and the parish Altar Guild has made new tapestry hangings conforming to the English tradition. The walnut riddle posts were made by the Ammidon Company in Baltimore, Maryland. At the top of the posts are carved polychromed figures of saints, imported from England.

CHRIST CHURCH OBSERVED 200TH ANNIVERSARY

York Springs, Penn.—The two hundredth anniversary of the founding of Christ Church was observed by a special service recently at which Bishop Heistand of Harrisburg preached the sermon. Historical addresses were made by rectors of two daughter parishes of Christ Church, Canon Paul S. Atkins, of St. John's, York, and the Rev. Earl M. Honaman of St. John's, Carlisle. The retired Bishop of Harrisburg, Hunter Wyatt-Brown, also made an address.

Schools of religion are being held in seven places in the Diocese of Harrisburg on six successive Monday evenings. Courses are given by clergy of the diocese on church school methods, American Church history, the Bible and the Eucharist.

MAPSICO CHURCH

backdrop of the church yard and surrounding forest . When the church was closed over a quarter of a century ago automobiles had not come into general use in rural areas. The condition of the highways did not encourage motor travel and on such wooded roads as the one leading to Mapsico, even the owner of a Model T had to choose his season if he expected to get to the services on time. The families who lived at "Weyanoke," "Sherwood Forest," "North Bend," "Teddington," "Byrdwood," "Longwood," "Bel Air," "Bush Hill," the "Glebe" and other colonial homes located in the lower end of Westover Parish, were regular communicants at Mapsico, but they came, according to the period, in coaches, surreys (with and without the 'fringe on top'), buckboards, wagonettes, gigs, buggies, or on horseback.

There is a story about one aristocratic gentleman who rode horseback to the church and who seems to have been extremely wary of feminine dominance. even in religious matters (or did he take one julep too many before leaving home on the Sunday in question?). Be that as it may, he arrived early, tied his horse to a tree and joined a group of men who stood talking in the churchyard. The sweet tones of the organ presently reached their ears and one of the good women of the church appeared in the doorway to invite the men inside.

All obeyed her summons except our glowering friend who hurried away to his horse mumbling as he went:

"I won't come in but I'll go home. No woman is going to tell me when to come into my own church!"

Holy Communion as that none should be admitted to it unless they be confirmed". The reply of the bishops was: "There is no inconvenience, and you elsewhere desire this very thing". [Proctor and Frere, A NEW HISTORY OF THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER, p. 185.] In this instance it seems clear that both the Anglican bishops and the dissenting presbyterian ministers took the rubric to mean just what it says. The events of 1662 are the history of today.

In clarification I quote the Rev. Dr. C. B. Moss, a well known Anglican priest: "It is an universal rule of the Church that no one may ordinarily be admitted to communion who has not been confirmed. It was universal in ancient times. . . . The Church of England allows an unconfirmed person to receive communion only if "ready and desirous to be confirmed", which merely contains the pre-reformation rule. . . . The written formularies of the English Church [and as adopted by the American Episcopal Church, see B. C. P. pgs. 281, 299] were drawn up in an age when everyone was a member of the Church, and therefore do not forbid the communion of non-members (though the Canons of 1604 declare those who separate from the Church to be ex-communicated). But they do forbid the communion of those who are neither confirmed nor willing to be confirmed". [Rev. C. B. Moss, THE CHRISTIAN FAITH, pgs. 346, 347.]

I submit that the foregoing excerpts nullify the statements made in your editorial paragraph. Adherence to a rubric of the Book of Common Prayer is no "recent" interpretation in contradiction of history, but rather a loyal observance of a law of the Church which history shows to have been the normal practice of the Church Catholic from the earliest times. The rubrics of the Book of Common Prayer as they now stand, in or out of an "historical context", make no provision for "open communion", i. e., the communicating of people who are not members of the Church and have no desire and intention of becoming members, at Her altars. The rubrics must be drastically changed if there is to be any legal or moral support for such action in them. Loyal Church people (clergy and laity alike) must be alert to prevent such action by the so-called "liberal churchmen".

In closing may I suggest that you read Dom Gregory Dix's pamphlet, Confirmation in Relation To Baptism, for a survey, in historical context, of the rite of Confirmation. This pamphlet shows why the Anglican Communion rightly places such emphasis on Confirmation as a prerequisite for the complete participation of the individual in the Body of Christ, the Holy Catholic Church.

Clergy and Laity Unite in Acclaiming

"Great Scenes from Great Plays"

Sponsored by Episcopal Families

Through the National Council

Church and radio history were both made when "Great Scenes from Great Plays"—the Episcopal radio program—made its debut over nearly 600 coast-to-coast radio stations.

Letters, telegrams and telephone calls from every diocese in the country keep pouring in to National Council Headquarters acclaiming not only the technical excellence of the program but—more important—the spiritual idea behind it.

On the eve of the first broadcast "Cyrano de Bergerac" with Walter Hampden, the Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, Presiding Bishop, sent a long telegram to each of the 87 Bishops warmly endorsing the program and concluding:

"We as Bishops have a tremendous responsibility to see that our clergy and laity are prepared to welcome the many thousands who will seek Christian fellowship through the Church as a result of our radio program, GREAT SCENES FROM GREAT PLAYS. . . . So I ask you in every way to support this program which is in reality a great venture of faith."

"This great venture of faith" can only continue to grow with your financial support.

United Nations Day

London.—The Archbishops of Canterbury and York have issued the following message in connection with the observance of United Nations Day on October 24:

"United Nations Day which, by resolution of the Second Assembly of the United Nations, is to be observed by the peoples of member nations annually on October 24th, falls this year on a Sunday.

"The indispensable place of United Nations and the great responsibility that rests upon it become daily more evident. It can only grow to full stature as an instrument of world cooperation and good government if it has behind it the intelligent support of the peoples which it represents, and, as the Lambeth Conference recently said, it will fail unless it is upheld by the conviction that nations as well as individuals are all members of the one family under the One God and Father of all. We trust that our own Church, along with others, will strongly support United Nations that it may be rightly directed in its work and growth, and we ask that in all our churches special prayer may be offered for it on October 24th."

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

Studies In First Samuel

By The REV. J. SHYROCK

Classical scholars are accustomed to call the Greek writer Herodotus, the "Father of History." But this title more properly belongs to a man who wrote five centuries earlier, and whose historical work is greater in every way than that of Herodotus. He was the author of a history of the Israelites which covers a period of about a century, and which, in our Bible, now appears as the two books of Samuel.

Originally they were only one book, but in the Greek and Latin translations of the Old Testament a convenient division was made which is now generally accepted. The book is named after the great man who dominates the first half of the period, and who personally selected the two leaders who followed him, so that its title is appropriate.

It is now thought that the book has two principal sources, both of which are anonymous. The later, and less important, sections were made about 700 B. C. The earlier, and greater, author probably wrote not long after the death of David, and three even earlier documents are mentioned, but the writer, unlike the authors of Kings and Chronicles, does not say where he secured his material.

Both as history and as art, the Book of Samuel belongs in the highest place. It is so realistic that certain passages could not be publicly read even today, in an age when we pride ourselves on our realism. It covers an important transitional phase of Hebrew history in so masterly a way that it should be studied today for what we can learn of the forces which play upon our own society, since we are in a transitional phase which is similar in many respects, despite the obvious differences in time, place, and culture.

During the lives of Samuel and David, the Israelites changed from a democracy to a dictatorship, and the futile arguments used by Samuel against this change are now being made in our Congress in opposition to the same tendencies. The historical accuracy of the book has never been seriously questioned, but the important feature is the writer's portrayal of the pressure exerted upon the Hebrews of the day. Samuel's gloomy prophecies were fully verified, but we, who face a similar situation, are just as helpless as the ancient Hebrews before the hidden forces which play upon us.

Besides being a great history, the Book of Samuel is also a great work of art. Its stories are immortal, and its simple, graphic style is full of the touch of genius which prints a scene indelibly on the mind by means of a single phrase. The play of forces is not described by abstract generalities, in the manner of so many modern historians, but by means of events and their effect upon the men who took part in them. The character drawing is superb, so that we can learn to know these men in their strength and their weakness, through the problems they faced and the way they tried to solve them, better than we know members of our own families.

When the book begins, the Israelites were still a loosely organized confederacy of related tribes whose government can be called a democracy. Its only central authority was judicial, rather than executive. The confederacy was held together by religion, not by a civil authority, and the opening chapters tell how even the force of religion was seriously weakened by corruption in high ecclesiastical positions, and by false ideas of religion held by the common people. All the weaknesses of democracy are seen at their worst, and the situation may be best described in the closing words of the Book of Judges.

"Every man did that which was right in his own eyes."

To make matters still worse, the Israelites were surrounded by warlike, well-organized peoples superior to them in material culture, and particularly in weapons. They were not protected by any natural barriers, and the spasmodic unity under exceptional leaders which had saved them repeatedly in the preceeding period was no longer sufficiently effective. For the Israelites were now faced with deliberate aggression by a powerful neighbor, the Cretan nation of the Philistines, who were making use of the epoch-making discovery of iron.

When the Book of Samuel opens, the leadership of Israel rested in a Judge named Eli, who was also the High Priest. He was an old man, who lived at Shiloh, where the Ark of God was kept in a shrine. Eli himself was deeply pious, and well-qualified for his office, except for one defect.

He had two sons, named Hophni and Phineas, who were also priests. It is not unuusal for good men to have children whose characters are quite different from those of their parents—indeed, ministers' sons are proverbial in this respect. The reasons may differ in various instances, but all such cases point to defects of some sort in the parents. Eli appears to have been too indulgent, and because he was old, could not control the behavior of his sons. The result was a public scandal, which undermined the one force which held the Israelites together.

When the people came to Shiloh to offer sacrifices, Hophni and Phineas sent their servants, who took the best part of the offering for themselves, when it ought to have been devoted to the Lord. This practice is described with realistic details which mark great writing.

"The priest's custom with the people was, that when any man offered sacrifice, the priest's servant came, while the flesh was in seething, with a fleshhook of three teeth in his hand; and he struck it into the pan, or kettle, or caldron, or pot; all that the fleshhook brought up the priest took for himself. Also before they burnt the fat, the priest's servant came, and said to the man that sacrificed, 'Give flesh to roast for the priest; for he will not have sodden flesh of thee, but raw. . . . Thou shalt give it me now: and if not, I will take it by force."

It is not difficult to imagine what the effect of this would be on the religious feelings of the people. "Men abhorred the offering of the Lord," comments the book. But there was worse than this, for Eli's sons engaged in immoral practices with the women that assembled at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

When there is a revolt against organized religion, orthodox people lay all the blame on those who lead the revolt. They gloss over the corruption of ecclesiastics which is the fundamental cause, and fail to notice that the organization is usually able to prevent any reform from within. In the disasters which follow, they do not see that all might have been avoided if the leaders of organized religion had made some effort to live up to their calling.

The abuses for which his sons were responsible were all told to Eli, and the old man spoke to Hophni and Phineas, using these significant words:

"Ye make the Lord's people to transgress. If one man sin against another, the judge shall judge him: but if a man sin against the Lord, who shall entreat for him?"

But the young men would not listen to their father, and their misbehavior was continued.

In this situation, with the morale of the nation seriously damaged, the Israelites were forced to engage in battle with the Philistines. As could have been foreseen, they were badly defeated.

Then they made a further mistake, of a sort that pious people often make. Their thought ran something like this. Religion comes from God, and the religious organization, with all for which it stands, has been established by God. Surely God will support that which he has established when it is in danger, and not allow catastrophe to befall the faith. If certain religious objects—and practically all religions have such objects—are involved in the danger, then it is unthinkable that God should permit his own to perish. Therefore, let us take our sacred objects with us as we go into danger, and so insure our success.

This is the way Christian authorities argued, centuries later, when they carried what they regarded as the true Cross into a battle with the Moslems on the shores of the Sea of Galilee. Unfortunately, their army was completely destroyed, and no one knows what became of the Cross.

The trouble with this pious point of view is that it is not religion at all; it is magic. God makes no promises that the presence of sacred objects will ensure victory in battle, and the evidence is all to the contrary. When hypocrisy and sin have sapped the vitality of religion, there is no use in falling back on magic, as if symbols and signs and instruments of sacred things had power in themselves, when God's commandments have been ignored.

What the Israelites actually did was to bring the Ark of the Lord into their camp. The thought that this sacred receptacle was with them caused great rejoicing, and even the Philistines were afraid. They rallied, however, and with the cry, "Quit yourselves like men," they fought. The Israelite army was destroyed, the two sons of Eli were killed, and the Ark was captured.

A man of Benjamin escaped the debacle, and ran to Shiloh with his clothes rent, and earth upon his head. Poor old Eli was sitting by the wayside, worrying about what might happen to the Ark, when he heard cries from the city. "What does it mean?" he asked, and the man came in hastily and told him. The army had fled, his sons were killed, and the Ark of God taken.

Eli was ninety-eight years old, and heavy. When he heard what had happened to the Ark, he fell off his seat backward by the side of the gate, and broke his neck.

It is impossible not to feel sorry for Eli, for he was a good man himself, and doubtless he meant well. But he was weak, perhaps because of his great age, but more likely because of defects in his character. His position as judge was too great for him, and if he could not control his own family, he stood little chance of saving his nation in a crisis. He is the type of man who often comes into power in democracies, without the strength of character to wield that power successfully. He could hold services before the Ark acceptably, but he was too feeble to maintain principles in the face of opposition. There are many like him, and his catastrophe is a warning to us.

The Attitude Of Europeans To Americans

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

It is noteworthy that while there is increasing interest in Europe in all aspects of American life, there is also a growing conviction that we are not concerned with the deeper cultural problems of Europe.

We are strangers. We are met with both gratitude and respect. But it is recognized that in some ways we are almost as much strangers to Europe as Russia is. Not that Europe does not make distinctions between us and the Russians. It is grateful that our power prevents the Russians from inundating the continent.

The Europeans recognize, moreover, that we have both the technical proficiency and the will to "get things done." The continent has an immense respect for Britain. It also has a sense of political affinity with Britain; for the mild socialism of Britain is exactly what the continent would like to achieve if it knew how to get rid of its more anachronistic forms of reaction on the one hand and the Communist virus on the other hand.

But it thinks that Britain is tired and fatigued. The French do not trust the British hegemony in the defense plans of Europe. They are afraid that Britain is too insensible to the danger of a quick occupation by Russian forces. The Germans are afraid that Britain wants to destroy their industrial plants for the sake of eliminating a potential competitor.

Despite the statement of British socialists that the continent does not trust us, it does in fact have a greater confidence in our disinterestedness than in that of any other nation. It does not think that we are more virtuous than the others. It merely believes that we are so rich and powerful that we are not immediately involved in the petty rivalries. Above all it has an immense respect for our technical skills.

But the admiration stops at that point. The Europeans think we approach the more significant problems of culture on the continent naively, as indeed we probably do. The French, for instance, have a very unpopular occupation policy in Germany because the occupation army with all kith and kin lives off of the land. But the French cultural program is brilliantly conceived. The basis of it always is the mutual respect which German and French cultures have for each other above the mistrust on the political level.

Into this area we do not enter at all. Our culture is known primarily through our movies and is therefore not respected. Few cultured Europeans have a genuine respect for our institutions of higher learning, mostly because they are completely ignorant of what they have accomplished.

The contact of our army of occupation with the institutions of culture in Germany has frequently been purely formal and military. With the exception of emigre citizens we have above all lacked officers in command of the German tongue or in contact with the great cultural tradition of Germany before Hitler.

America is fated to exercise great political power for a long time in Europe. It will become increasingly important to achieve more than a political relation to a continent, whose fate is so bound to our own.

The Finite And The Infinite

By The VEN. FREDERICK W. NEVE

When I was an undergraduate at Oxford many years ago I heard a remarkable sermon at St. Mary's, the University Church. This sermon was written by Dr. Pusey, the well known head of the original Oxford Movement, but was preached by Canon Liddon for him as his doctor advised him not to preach it himself on account of his advanced age. What deeply impressed itself on my mind was the statement, as far as I can remember, that the Church should carry on its work independently of natural science. Thinking along these lines brought me to the conclusion that the Infinite affords a far vaster field of investigation than the Finite. It may be said, however, that the Finite is far more accessible than the Infinite because our senses bring us into direct contact with the Finite, and we can therefore, derive an ever-increasing knowledge of the world around us, and take advantage of this knowledge to make our lives more worthwhile to ourselves and to others.

How then can we develop the resources of the unseen world as they seem to be beyond reach? The answer to this important question is not so difficult as it may seem to be, because a close relationship has been established between God and ourselves. For God, though our Creator, and the Creator of the world in which we live, together with the Universe of which it forms a part, nevertheless, has condescended to identify Himself with us by sending His Son into the world to become Man and to die for us upon the Cross for our Eternal Redemption.

During His lifetime, Christ revealed to His disciples what it was necessary for them to know about the Father and the kind of life which they were to live here on earth and the future destiny of mankind. He also instructed His disciples in the means by which they could communicate with God, by giving to them the Lord's Prayer which has come down to us as an inheritance from them. Thus we find that the Infinite is more nearly related to us than the Finite because we can realize at any time that we are in the Presence of God and can speak to Him and also have the assurance that we are really holding communion with Him. Moreover, we have a right to feel that by what He has done for us through His Son Jesus Christ, that He must have the deepest interest in our welfare for Time and for Eternity because He is Love and can be relied upon to do everything for our welfare from the Infinite resources which He has at His disposal. "He that spared not His own Son but delivered Him up for us all how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things."

Our chief and abiding interest should therefore be directed towards the Infinite, even God Himself through our Lord Jesus Christ, who has revealed Himself to us as the Way to the Father. We are told by Christ that with God all things are possible and since He has given us exceeding great and precious promises of what God can and will do for us and for the world through us, there is no telling how wonderfully we can be used by Him in fulfilling His purpose with regard to the world and mankind in general.

Perhaps there has been no time since the First Days of Christianity when great leaders were more needed to make manifest to the world what God can and will do through even single individuals who have wholly consecrated themselves to fulfill His Purpose in regard to mankind and the world. It must be remembered, however, that all true Christians by their union with God through Our Lord Jesus Christ, have become possessed of possibilities which should make every one of them a manifestation of the Love and Power of God. Christ Himself has envisioned this transformation when He placed in the Lord's Prayer the words, "Thy Kingdom come Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven". It must not be forgotten, however, that the finite mind is incapable of entering into this close relationship with God without Faith, which is an essential means of bringing the Finite and the Infinite into unison. Because this truth is not sufficiently realized the Christian Faith has been subjected to much criticism and unbelief. To the finite mind without Faith the Infinite is a sealed book.

The promises which Christ has given us as to what God can and will do to enable His Church to bring in His Kingdom here on earth, are so great and wonderful that there is no reason why, by a living faith in them, a great transformation of world conditions should not become possible and actually realized. It would seem as if Christians generally are becoming more and more conscious of the necessity for a great forward and united movement towards this end, since otherwise we may be faced with the threat of imminent annihilation.

The finite mind, in its investigations among the secret forces which form part of this world in which we live has come across a power which lies at the very base of all matter, namely atomic power, which gives to any nation which has come into possession of the secret, a dominant position over all other nations. But the atom is the most minute, when taken by itself, of all forms of matter. What then must be the power of God the Infinite One who is the Creator of the atom.

It would seem, therefore, that the most reasonable thing for us to do, since the Infinite is accessible to us through Our Lord Jesus Christ as the Way to the Father, and we are assured by Christ Himself as the Son of God that God is Love, would be to associate ourselves with God and seek to be used by Him for the fulfillment of His Purpose with regard to ourselves and the world around us. Physical force does not hold the supreme place, for since God is a Spirit and "they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth", to have communion with God raises us above the physical universe into the spiritual world in which spiritual power holds the supremacy over all merely physical forces. We must remember that we not only have a physical nature but we have a spiritual nature as well. We are in fact spiritual beings and as such we can hold communion with God and can receive from Him Spiritual Power which alone enables us to live the Christian life as it should be lived.

Christ instructed His disciples before His Ascension to wait in Jerusalem until they were "endued with Power from on High", which clearly implied that Christianity could not win the world for Christ without it. This is just as true now as it was then; if the Kingdom of God is to come upon this earth men must be inspired with the Power from on High and learn to use it in full measure. What is urgently needed is faith to believe that God has entirely at His disposal an Infinite amount of spiritual power fully capable of transforming this world into an earthly paradise. This faith in the complete possibility of this transformation must be coupled with the unshakeable determination, by God's help, to bring it to pass.

Natural Science has revealed to us the possibilities of the Finite and at the same time its limitations, for it has clearly shown that the forces which it has revealed are in danger of being used for the frustration of future progress, the destruction of civilization and even of man himself. The hope of the world lies therefore, not in the Finite but in the Infinite, that is in God Himself. If the Christian Church would only seek earnestly and diligently to develop the resources of the spiritual world as the Reformation Protestantism and Ancient Catholicism

We Protestant Episcopalians often say that our Church is both Protestant and Catholic. To this historical fact we frequently ascribe the tensions within our communion. Proud as we are of our heritage, we are apt to assume that these two strands are basicly as unable to mix as oil and water. They are antithetical and opposites. We rather expect, therefore, that strain and stress must always be a normal part of life within the Anglican Communion.

That there are such tensions in our Church is all too apparent today. But the very forms this stress is taking reveals that we have not been true to ourselves! For we criticize each other in terms of modern Protestantism and modern Roman Catholicism. Anglo-Catholics are accused of being Romanizers and imitation Italians, interested in the trivialities of ecclesiastical millinery and ceremonial elaboration. Evangelicals are called pan-Protestants. They are said to be the party of intinction, remarriage of divorced persons and reunion with Presbyterians.

Such attitudes make it hard for us to live together in a single Church. Thus we see increasing ill-will, party spirit and party politics in the Episcopal Chuch. Conventions and elections have been tragic scenes of partisan action.

Our tragic error is that we have equated the Protestantism and the Catholicism in our Church with modern, twentieth century Protestantism and with modern Roman Catholicism. Yet neither of these are our heritage! Modern sectarian Protestantism is far from the Protestantism of the Reformation. Modern Roman Catholicism is far from primitive Catholicism. Present day Romanism is Counter-Reformation Catholicism, born in great part out of the Council of Trent. Present day American Protestantism is the result of social and religious forces far removed from Luther, Calvin and Cramner.

Modern American Protestantism is shot through with the philosophy of liberal optimism. There are prophets of a more stalwart faith, but they cry in the wilderness. Modern Protestantism's sense of sin is meager and seldom pierces to the heart of evil. Salvation is mechanical and individualistic. We are to be saved from a future hell and for a future heaven. Christ is viewed as our great example. Or He is a great ethical teacher. Or perhaps He is a social revolutionary. The Church as Church is relatively unimportant. Most Protestant laymen go easily from one denomination to another and see no difference between them. Preaching has become the great sacrament of modern Protestatism, yet much preaching is moralistic and ethical exhortation. An increasing professionalism is seen as boards, executive secretaries and directors of one kind and another multiply. While there is a trend to liturgical worship, most Protestant worship in America is sentimental, subjective and empty of spiritual virility. While Protestant Churches like to boast of their progress in social action, there is more amelioration than solution; and a readiness to compromise rather than to proclaim sharply dissident Christian truth.

But such Protestantism is far from the faith of the Reformation! Reformation Protestantism preached justification by faith in Almighty God. It called men to a salvation that was a resurrected life lived to the fullest in this world as well as in the next. It worshipped Christ as the Divine Saviour. It restored the Holy Scriptures and the sacrament of the Word to their rightful place in the Church, but it also held firmly to the two sacraments instituted by Christ. Those first Protestants were "high Churchmen," to use a modern phrase. The priesthood of all believers was to be exercised within the Church, not in rampant individualism. They kept the riches of the centuries of Christian devotion as the basis for their reformed worship. They saw all areas of life as under God.

This is the Protestantism that is our precious heritage! It was not simply a protest against Rome. It was a witness for essential Christian truth. It was a necessary, God-inspired movement that recaptured many of the original meanings of the Christian faith. This Reformation Protestantism we must cherish!

As present day Protestantism is unlike Reformation Protestantism, so is present day Roman Catholicism unlike that Catholicism of which we boast in our ancestry. Modern Catholicism in its Roman Counter-Reformation form is literally modern. It stresses good works as the way of salvation. One can store up good works unto salvation in a treasury of merit. It has a legalistic conception of sin. In the everyday life of the Church, Christ is distant and forbidding as compared with the saints and the Blessed Virgin Mary. The sacraments, mutilated, smack of magical manipulation in the doctrine of transubstantiation. The mass itself is not in a language understood of the people, while the devotions that supplement it are exaggerated, baroque and sentimental. Preaching the Word of God is not honored except by a few specialists. The hierarchy has seized control of the Church and the laity have been subjugated to impotence and unimportance.

The typical social action of the Church is either as a pressure group or as a political force. This is modern Roman Catholicism. It is not in anyway the Catholicism of our heritage!

That Catholicism is primitive Catholicism. In those early centuries, good works were seen in proper place relative to faith and the grace of God. Sin was no mere error, or missing of the mark. Said St. Clement of Alexandria, "Sinning arises from being unable to determine what ought to be done, and being unable to do it!" Christ was the immanent revelation of God, who came into this world not only as Judge, but as Redeemer, Shepherd and Saviour. Early Catholicism knew no veneration of the Blessed Virgin Mary, though it rightly respected and honored her as the Mother of the Lord. The sacraments were the divinely appointed mysteries whereby His Grace was bestowed upon men. Worship was in the language of the people, and though in every age, some are tempted to devotional excesses, it was generally clean, robust and vital. The laity were given share in the life and government of the Church. The Christian life allowed no compromise with the world. Society was not apart from the will of God!

This was ancient, primitive Catholicism. This is the Catholicism of our Anglican heritage. It mixes well with Reformation Protestantism, for both have common aim. The tensions between such Catholicism and such Protestantism represent the rightful paradoxes of a religion that goes to the depths of life and faces reality there. It is not the bickering, false tensions of modern partisan Anglo-Catholicism or aggressive Pan-Protestants.

We believe that the great majority of Episcopalians stand in this heritage, though often without understanding it. We believe that most Episcopalians are proud that their Church has this dual ancestry of Catholicism and Protestantism. They do not want their Church to deny either strand; to barter ancient Catholicity for pale modern Italianate copies or to give up our own stalwart Reformation Protestantism for watered-down twentieth-century sectarian substitutes. Somehow they sense that this great heritage is the peculiar treasure of Anglicanism. This is the essential genius of our Church. This is the evangelical position in the best sense of that great term, for it brings to us the whole evangel, the full measure of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ!

BOOK NOTES

THE SYMBOL OF THE FAITH: A STUDY OF THE APOSTLES' CREED. By George Hedley. Macmillan. $2.50.

Those who read and enioved Dr. Hedley's Christian Heritage in America will find this new book on the creed even more stimulating and thought-provoking. Dealing with the deepest issues of faith in language suited to his Mills College congregation, he takes the creed phrase by phrase and indicates the difficulties which it poses for the modern man, and then he makes clear that the creed is a "symbol of the Faith" and that this is more important than taking it literally. He admits that in his literal-minded days, he got to the point where he could hardly say the creed at all; and then he began to see that because the creed was the product of the Church and because he believed in th "holy universal Church," he could express his faith through the creed. The reader who is skeptical of creeds will find much help in this scholarly, honest, and Christian interpretation, while those who already accept it will discover new meanings and quite a bit which will bother them. His frank dealing with the Virgin Birth, for example, combines scientific and historical accuracy with religious insight in a way which will be new to most lay people. His chapter on "the surprising silence" (where the life of Jesus is covered by a comma) indicates what Jesus meant to the early Church and to us today. This reviewer is going to place this book in his church library and use it with his adult confirmation classes, for it relates our beliefs to our daily living and gives meaning to life in this 20th century.

LORD, TEACH US TO PRAY. By Paul Claudel. Longmans, 1948. $2.00.

The author, Paul Claudel, is the famous French poet, dramatist, and diplomat of modern France. His earlier religious drama—the Satin Slipper—was a very powerful dealing of a religious conversion. The title of this book is misleading, for the book is really a series of meditations—as unusual as is the author himself—on unusual religious themes. The chapter headings themselves indicate this: The Mysterious Island, The Cellar Key, Under the Stairs, One Lost to the World, At the Ford of Jacoc, and Out of Prison. Written as they are by a convinced Roman Catholic they presuppose acceptance of Roman theological positions. It is not an easy book to read, but it is most rewarding for those who will read it humbly and with docility.

A SERIOUS CALL TO A DEVOUT AND HOLY LIFE. By William Law. Westminster Press, 1948. $2.00.

A Serious Call has long been one of the great religious classics which have been out of print. All of us owe a great debt to Dr. Moldenhawer, who has written a splendid introduction to this volume, and to the Westminster Press for again making available this unrivaled work to the public. Our age needs this book as did the age in which Law wrote it. Here is a book to awaken Christians to the distinction between psuedo-Christianity and vital, deep Christian living. Church Christianity so easily becomes surface religion, and encumbered with the traditions of men. William Law can again serve our generation by convicting us of sin within the Christian churches.

WHEN I SURVEY THE WONDROUS CROSS

Chosen Anniversary Hymn

When I survey the wondrous Cross
  On which the Prince of Glory died,
My richest gain I count but loss,
  And pour contempt on all my pride.

Forbid it, Lord, that I should boast,
  Save in the Cross of Christ, my God;
All the vain things that charm me most,
  I sacrifice them to His blood.

See, from His head, His hands, His feet,
  Sorrow and love flow mingled down!
Did e'er such love and sorrow meet,
  Or thorns compose so rich a crown?

Were the whole realm of nature mine,
  That were an offering far too small:
Love so amazing, so divine,
  Demands my soul, my life, my all.
—Isaac Watts, 1707.

The above hymn was written by Isaac Watts whose Bicentennial is being observed by many Churches in many countries at this time. Isaac Watts died November 25, 1748. He began his hymn writing at the age of 18 years. He wrote many beautiful hymns and after 200 years many of them are being sung today and are very popular. Among them being: "O God, Our Help In Ages Past," "Joy To the World, the Lord Is Come," "Am I a Soldier of the Cross," "Jesus Shall Reign Where'er the Sun," "When I Can Read My Title Clear," and many others familiar to us all. The World Music Committee selected "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross" as his Anniversary Hymn, because it has been the favorite of many eminent men all through history. Watts has been called by some "the father of hymn singing" in the Church. Until his writings the Psalms of David were the Church's only hymns.

Besides his great hymns and his profound works in theology and philosophy, he wrote that beautiful lullaby which has put so many little ones to sleep in days gone by:

Hush, my dear, lie still and slumber,
  Holy Angels guard thy bed.
Heavenly blessings without number,
  Gently falling on thy head.

And then this remarkable Moral Song:

Let dogs delight to bark and bite,
  For God hath made them so;
Let bears and lions growl and fight,
  For 'tis their nature to.
But children, you should never let
  Your angry passions rise;
Your little hands were never made
  To tear each other's eyes.

IS IT JUST "COLD CASH"

By the Rev. Richard G. Preston,

Rector, All Saints Church, Worcester, Mass.

We sometimes hear the expression "cold cash." What a misnomer! As a matter of fact, your money is a part of you. It frequently involves "blood and sweat and tears."

Money is minted life. When you give it, you are giving of yourself,—the time and thought and effort that you spent in earning it. That is why what you spend your money for is so important. It is at least one expression of your estimate of your life,—what you think is most worthwhile, what you believe deserves "priority."

This is why giving to the Church is not just a financial matter; it is a spiritual transaction.

By your pledge, you are giving of yourself to Christ and His Church.

You are proclaiming that among all the legitimate interests and activities which make up your life none is more important than those spiritual truths for which the Church stands.

May your pledge to the Church for 1949 be an adequate expression of your loyalty to Christ and your desire to help carry out His will in our tragic world.

The Rubric providing for the consecration of more bread and wine is rarely used nowadays, because the cup is replenished from the flagon and supplies of wafers added to the patton as the need arises, it being assumed that the first consecration included the entire supply.

Also the Rubric about the elements that are left is very generally disregarded, on the one hand by the Anglo Catholics who now make a regular practice of "reserving the Sacrament," and on the other hand by the low churchman who leave it to members of the Altar Guild reverently to dispose of the remaining elements.

The concluding prayer of Thanksgiving like every other part of the Prayer Book has its origin in the Bible. Thus the "spiritual food" is found in the 6th chapter of John's Gospel, vs. 35, and the fact that we are "members incorporate in the mystical body of Thy Son" is found in the same Gospel vs. 20 and chapter 14, where our Saviour tells us, "At that day ye shall know that I am in My Father, and ye in Me, and I in you." St. Paul tells us in Romans 8, vs. 16-17, that we are "heirs of God and joint heirs of Christ."

The prayer then proceeds to look forward, asking for grace "to continue in that holy fellowship and do all such good works as Thou has prepared for us to walk in." Here is a happy thought for those who are physically handicapped that God will only expect of them such good works, as he knows they are capable of rendering. In some cases a cheerful smile through suffering and limitations is a "good work."

This prayer is found in the first Prayer Book of 1549, and may have been composed by Archbishop Cranmer, although its origin seems to have been more in the Eastern Liturgies than in the Western, and is a fitting conclusion to this beautiful and inspiring service.

R. CARY MONTAGUE.

FAITH IN THE HOLY SPIRIT

It is said that on a tombstone in Essex, England, dating back to about 1440 there are the following lines:

"When pictures look alive with movement free,
  When ships, like fishes, swim beneath the sea,
When men, outstripping birds, shall scan the sky,
  Then half the world drenched in blood shall be".

As we look back on the events of the last ten years it would seem as though the prophecy cut on that tombstone had been fulfilled. Now we live in a period of upheaval and change. The pessimist, the isolationist and the self-centered and selfish live as though there was no hope for the present or the future. Men of faith on the other hand, with the heritage of the Hebrew prophets and the consciousness of the presence of the Holy Spirit, do have hope and are willing to live and act accordingly. Mankind will go forward as we as individuals and groups lay hold on the spirit of God. It is His spirit working in and through us that will give us the strength and the power that we need for the tasks and the opportunities that are ours to further the cause of God. Then we shall know that it is the Lord God that has put His Spirit in us to do His will. We need to open our eyes to see and our souls to feel and our minds to comprehend what someone has called the possibility of insights, beliefs, and values other than our own. E. F. K.

National Council Meeting, October 13-14

By GEORGE LORENZO GRAMBS

Dr. Franklin's Resignation

One of the most familiar, respected, and beloved persons in our Church's life has resigned. Today Dr. Lewis B. Franklin ceases to be the treasurer of the National Council and of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society. But that doesn't mean he has cut all ties with the National Council, for by resolutions adopted he will serve as an additional member of the Overseas Department and until the next annual meeting of the Council as a member of the Committee on Trust Funds.

An executive session was the prelude to the reading of Dr. Franklin's letter of resignation. It was known to Council members and the staff at 281 for some time that this was to be expected, for the Treasurer wanted to resign at the last General Convention, but he had been persuaded by the Presiding Bishop not to resign at that time. Well, the hour arrived after 29 years of good service to the Church, and no less to his Lord and Master. Typical of his absolute honesty he refused to accept the full retirement allowance that veterans of 30 years' service get, but insisted on its being 29/30 of what he would have received with one more year in office, and most of it will be paid by the insurance company.

With the acceptance of his resignation Bishop Sherrill presented to Dr. Franklin on behalf of the Council a period silver inkwell with the remark, "George III, dated 1776." It is actually three inkwells, and in accepting the gift, Dr. Franklin said, "I suppose this one is for black ink and this one for red. It is my hope that both for the Church and for myself the black inkwell will always be full and the red inkwell always empty."

Many fine things were said by the Presiding Bishop and others about his service, but they are all included in the Minute of Appreciation drawn up by Bishop R. Bland Mitchell, the one remaining member of the National Council who was with Dr. Franklin in 1919, Dr. John S. Higgins, and Mr. C. McD. Davis:

"Lewis Bettelle Franklin, Doctor of Civil Law, consecrated layman in the service of Christ and His Church, a spiritual force in the Church's Mission for 29 years as Treasurer of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society and of the National Council.

"Dr. Franklin as a young man attained eminence in the banking world, the fruits of which for over half of his life he has dedicated to the financial guidance of the whole Church. Having been drafted by his country as a dollar-a-year man to organize the Liberty Loan campaigns during World War I, and having successfully completed that work, he returned to New York in 1919 shortly after the Nationwide Campaign for the Church's Mission had been launched.

"As a Churchman, this great forward movement caught his imagination. Bishop Arthur S. Lloyd, then President of the General Board of Missions, which had launched the campaign, recognized in Dr. Franklin the potentialities which the Church has since seen come to such devoted fruition. Dr. Franklin studied the Campaign program, was convinced of its soundness and possibilities, and offered his services as a full-time volunteer.

"In this capacity he directed the organization of the Church's first Nationwide Every Member Canvass. The General Convention of 1919 elected him as Treasurer of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society and he became the first full-time Treasurer of the Society. The creation of the National Council by that same Convention put Dr. Franklin in the forefront of the complete reorganization of the Church's functioning life which that revolutionary action involved. He was one of the pioneers in setting the new National Council on its feet and on its way. And he has been a wise guide in its development from that day to this.

"But it is not Dr. Franklin's great gifts and wisdom in finance and organization that we would place first in his contribution to the Church. Undergirding and inbreathing them is his personal commitment to Jesus Christ and his self-offering as a steward and disciple of the Master. Lewis Franklin is first and last an evangelist, on fire as a bearer of the Good News of Redemption for nations and individuals. He has gone up and down this land and across the seas proclaiming the Gospel as this Church has received the same. First of all, Dr. Franklin has given himself, and God has worked through him.

"And now Dr. Franklin, although still in his physical and spiritual vigor, asks relief from his heavy official responsibilities. His personal witness will suffer no dimunition so long as life lasts. And his influence will extend down years to come. The National Council cannot express to him the love and gratitude of its members for the inspiration which has come from him, for the fellowship with him, and for his demonstration of what the ministry of the Christian layman can be.

"May the Lord richly bless him and Mrs. Franklin with many years of health and happiness in the release he has so worthily earned."

Dr. Franklin responded to the adoption of this minute by recalling how Bishop Lloyd had invited the unemployed banker to lunch and bluntly asked him to serve in an office which hadn't been created, for which no salary had been provided in a non-existent organization, for the National Council had not yet come into being. Shortly after a banker invited him to lunch—most welcome to an unemployed man—and pointing to a desk in his office, told Dr. Franklin he wanted him to take that desk with the promise that in a short time he would be a millionaire. Dr. Franklin attributes it to Bishop Lloyd and the Holy Spirit's guidance that he turned down the second offer and accepted the Church's draft of his services when he entered a 28th Street office, unpretentious, smoke-filled, and occupied by R. Bland Mitchell and his co-workers in shirt-sleeve pursuance of their big task. It wasn't long before the rejected banking firm was bankrupt and all twelve partners under criminal indictment.

Mr. Russell E. Dill, member and former vestryman of Christ Church, Bronxville, N. Y., was unanimously elected Dr. Franklin's successor by the National Council.

Radio Hour

The National Council authorized the Department of Promotion to enter into contracts for the second thirteen weeks of the Church's radio program, "Great Scenes from Great Plays," at a cost of $250,000. With no knowledge of the response of parishes to the appeal for the additional 3% to support this evangelistic effort via Hertzian waves, the action was necessary because the option on the radio time would be lost if the contract isn't made at least thirty days prior to the end of the present thirteen weeks, December 31.

Mr. Robert D. Jordan, the Church's publicity dynamo, reported that as a result of the first program, over 8 000 cards had been received from inquiring listeners by 60% of the radio stations. It is estimated that the first program was heard by two to two and a half million listeners. Listening audiences build up over a period of time, and the estimate runs to ten million in the audience at the end of the first thirteen weeks. About $150,000 has been received in 1948 pledges and he feels assured that the balance needed will come in before the end of the year. "Financially, the response is going to be good in this year's campaign," reported Mr. Jordan on the basis of enthusiastic communications received at his office from all over the country. But, he warned the Council, only 20% of its success depends on the program itself, the other 80% depending on the local diocese and parish. It is the largest single network ever used for any continuing program.

Church World Service

Mr. Jordan's services have been enlisted by the 23 denominations in Church World Service to supervise the presentation of a United Appeal for World Relief in March. The resolution of the Department of Promotion expressing its confidence in Mr. Jordan, tendering to him its enthusiastic support and congratulations, and recommending to the Council its approval of the program, was made an act of the National Council.

This wider appeal to be made Saturday and Sunday, March 19 and 20, will include that of the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief, the third $1,000,000 to be raised by direction of the last General Convention. In outlining the plan for the 1948 appeal, Mr. Jordan reported that the proposed budget of the 23 denominations will be $10,000,000. They are working for an all-inclusive network program to be broadcast from 9 to 10 A. M. presenting the most dramatic incidents in Church World Service from Asia, Europe, and among Displaced Persons. Telephoned messages from nationally-prominent persons will follow the dramatizations.

Advance Program

The Council adopted a resolution directing the heads of the several departments and divisions to cooperate under the direction of the Presiding Bishop in the preparation of such programs for their respective Departments and the consolidation of them all into a single integrated Advance Program for the work of the whole Church covering the next Triennium, for presentation to and consideration by, the next General Convention. This program is to be prepared for presentation at the April Council meeting.

Salary Increase

In recognition of Mr. William E. Leidt's faithful service for more than 25 years and of his able editorship of "Forth" plus the supervision of the publications of all Departments, his salary has been increased $500 because he carries a responsibility equal to that of a Division head.

Curriculum Development

The Council passed a resolution authorizing the Department of Christian Education to create an Editorial Board, with separate budget, for the purpose of producing materials for the new curriculum, the Board to be responsible to the Department. The appointments by the Presiding Bishop to this Board were approved, including the temporary appointment of Mrs. Dora Chaplin as an associate editor at a salary not to exceed $4,800. The Episcopal Editorial Board is competing with more attractive offers for Mrs. Chaplin's valued services, including an offer from the Presbyterians.

The Department has undertaken to carry out General Convention's injunction to develop a new curriculum for our Church Schools. The problem of financing the undertaking is a serious one in the National Council, not because its importance isn't acknowledged but limitations are set by the giving of Episcopalians toward the needs of all Departments in our Church. It is operating on a budget that is pitifully small in the light of its great task of preparing new lesson material. It cost the Presbyterians no less than $3,000,000 for their new curriculum, and other denominations have expended comparable amounts. From now on this need will loom larger than ever if the program of the Department of Christian Education is to be put through.

Much of Thursday's session was devoted to this great problem of finance. Dr. John Huess, Jr., stated that the Department stands at the end of the tooling-up period, and pointed out that many of the Church's problems will find solution in a better educational program, the aim of the new curriculum.

There is apt to be a delay of from three to six months by the necessities under which the Curriculum Board has to work now. And the impatient Church cannot afford that. Re: the strivings for solution of this thorny problem of finance, Bishop John Boyd Bentley, taking the chair for the Presiding Bishop, who was recovering from the grippe that he endured the first day, warned that the Council could not make a decision in the last hour of the meeting that would do something to the morale of national headquarters. Dean J. W. F. Carman stated that the Promotion Department could say the money can be raised, and Dr. John S. Higgins suggested that they stay there until it was settled. "I've seen rabbits pulled out of hats before for special projects," he said. Mr. J. Taylor Foster said that the trouble with the Council was that it starts out with its sights at a certain level, which ought to be raised to get out of the doldrums. He suggested that a real attempt be made to get departments to put before the Council what they really need to do a good job. "It will be a grotesque thing," he added, "if the program of this Department can't be put through." Dr. Robert A. Magill said it was unfortunate to let one salary item hang up on a technicality. Enough money is in the budget: it is simply a question of category. Much of this was on the question of an adequate salary for Mrs. Chaplin.

Blueprint for the New Curriculum

The specifications of the new curriculum had been in the hands of the Council members by the time of the meeting, and only a brief synopsis of its 26 pages can be passed on to the readers. Canon G. Gardner Monks presented the Board's commentary on it:

Christ's Church has always been a teaching Church. The eternal Gospel must be interpreted afresh for each age, and set forth in ways and with methods that are relevant to the times. But the Church's present influence falls far short of men's needs, or the magnitude and worth of what it has to give.

A broad religious education program is vitally concerned with at least three different agencies: The Church, the Church School, and the home. Properly these three should be bound together by the closest of ties in their common undertaking. (1) More often than not the Church School is the poor neglected orphan, coming into the picture only after the needs of adults have been fully met. Financially speaking, many Church Schools are left to cover their own costs of operation through the offerings of their children, and are even expected by their contributions to reduce the missionary quota or other operating costs of the parish. While still in Church School, the children must be familiar with the Church, feel a loyalty to it, and think of themselves as already belonging to it. Education is also a necessary adult activity, and worship a need of children. (2) While parents have a vague feeling that their children would benefit from religious instruction, they are seldom aware of what goes on, except for occasional attendance at a pageant. And on the other side, the teacher is unfamiliar with the home situation of her pupils, of the environment whence they come. An adequate program must close this gap. . . . Children coming from homes where the father is abusive or neglectful find it hard to turn to a Heavenly Father in awe and love. (3) No longer are family pews the custom. Sometimes the Church School may have the unfortunate effect of dividing families which formerly were united in a common worship. It is essential that some common experience be re-established. (4) Ideally there should be the same close coopertion by the public school, but this is seldom possible.

The cardinal emphases of the curriculum are: (1) Factual knowledge. Armed by assured knowledge, the Christian can with confidence converse about his faith with the men of the marketplace, be able to defend his position against the attacks of others, and to commend it to non-believers. But a too exclusive emphasis on knowledge is likewise dangerous. (2) Christian character. Christian education will seek so to prepare a child in advance that he may make right judgments when the time comes. An educational program ought to be judged on the basis of its fruits. (3) Church fellowship. The Church is a man-made institution, though much of its work depends on men energized by God's Spirit. The Christian will, therefore, gladly give of himself, of his time, and of his means to further its mission. This giving will go far beyond the so-called generosity which starts only after all other demands have been met. It is on earth that God's will is to be done, and as he prays for it, he works for it. These three emphases are like the three plates of color printing, each secured by looking at the picture through its own appropriate filter.

The Church has a right to ask for good tools, has a right to look for help as to how to use them, but in the last analysis it is in each parish and home that the tools must be put to work.

All material must pass a threefold test of being (1) sound, (2) adequate, and (3) relevant, applied from each of the following angles: (1) Everything taught must be in accordance with the doctrine of the Church, and it is importantt hat nothing be taught that will later have to be unlearned or discarded. It is only against the background of assured theological knowledge that terms like "good" and "bad" come to have any fixed meaning. (2) There must be adequate recognition of the nature of the child who is being taught. (3) The two foci will be God and the child. (4) Biblical material is to be presented in such a way as not to conflict with the best Biblical scholarship. (5) The other influences beside home and school must be realistically appraised with the examples of conduct they set forth and the subtly suggested standards of value which advertising proclaims. (6) In practice contact with the complete curriculum will seldom occur because of population changes. Many children do not start at the beginning; most drop out long before the end.

The major areas of Christian knowledge are the following: (1) God's self-revelation and mighty acts as recorded in the Bible, (2) the historic life of the Church, including its present day work, (3) the beliefs of the Church, (4) the Prayer Book, liturgy and worship of the Church, and (5) the world in which we live and the Christian's duties problems, and opportunities in it. No one will be studied to the exclusion of the others for as long as a year.

It is not the task of Christian educators to give the increase—that is for God alone—but it is their task so to plant and so to water that the eternal divine purposes will not be hampered or frustrated through what they have failed to do.

The National Council approved the above report and told the Curriculum Board to proceed along the lines laid down.

Speakers

Three speakers appeared before the National Council at this meeting. Bishop Robert F. Wilner told the Council that, while reconstruction is going on, it is too slow to suit the missionaries. Outstanding in the Philippines is the work in the Seminary. The relationship of our Church with the Philippine Independent Church is good as evidenced by the sincerity of Bishop de Los Reyos, who says gratefully, "The Episcopal Church has given us Apostolic Succession." Bishop Wilner stated that there is nothing to support the idea that since the Philippines now have their own Independent Church, our Mission can be withdrawn. That cannot be done for a long time.

Bishop Bravid W. Harris said that Europe has turned to Africa since the War in a way that it never did before, and is investing money. "Our problem," he said, "is to develop human resources, and you can't develop men as fast as you can develop natural resources." He stated that we have the best high school in Liberia, in which country much of the education is superficial. His aim for Cuttington College is to train our own clergymen, our own teachers, and Liberia's leaders. He said he doesn't have a single clergyman under the age of 55. For $750 he salvaged 25 to 30 thousand dollars' worth of material from the Pan American installation for construction purposes.

Bishop William F. Lewis described his work in Nevada, where the communicant strength is 2,000, about equal to one large size parish. His loss of workers is serious in a rural field where often the Episcopal mission is the only Church in a community. His emphasis is on Christian education, much of it through his "Church School of the Desert," a correspondence program. Baptisms and Confirmations are proportionately higher than in most areas of the Church's work, but with people on the move because of isolation, his loss in communicants is compensated for only by the knowledge that Episcopalians of Nevada become the assets of other dioceses. He said that only the Roman Catholics and Mormons outnumber Episcopalians in his field. The principal failure of teaching by mail he summed up by saying, "The thing you can't put in an envelope and put a stamp on is the family experience of Christian Fellowship."

Army-Navy

Reporting for the Army-Navy Division, Bishop Oliver J. Hart reported that the Wartime order permitting our boys to register as Episcopalians instead of the more general term, "Protestants," has been rescinded by the Army. Such registration would enable the Church to support them more effectively, although they couldn't expect to have an Episcopal chaplain with every unit. The reason given by Washington is, "The government has no right to expect a man to reveal such an intimate, personal matter." The Division, however, is working for the right of Episcopalians to register as such as hard as it can.

The election of a suffragan bishop for the armed forces has to be approved at the next General Convention, the matter having passed one Convention.

Fifty-seven of our clergy are serving as chaplains in the armed forces and Veterans' Administration. Probably not all of its $72,350 budget will be spent unless there is war. There are no appropriations in diocesan budget unless absolutely necessary.

Bishop Henry I. Louttit was recommended as a member of the Division.

On his recent trip to Germany, where he was received as a "dip" (important person), he found that the great problem was that of soldiers marrying German women. He found that the chaplains' deepest, self-expressed need was to come together for a retreat to maintain their self-respect as priests of the Church and get away from the feeling that they are nothing more than assistant adjutants.

Other Items of Interest

Two new members took their seats at this Council: Mr. W. Theodore Gannaway, from the 4th Province, succeeding Bishop E. Hamilton West; and Mrs. David R. West nominated by the Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary. Mrs. West is from Minneapolis, and succeeds the late Dr. Adelaide T. Case, whose death brought sorrow to the Council members.

Bishop Elwood L. Haines was absent because of an operation undergone on Thursday. He was remembered in the prayers at Holy Communion and at midday.

A communication from the Synod of the United Presbyterian Church, signed by the Rev. R. C. Fullerton, of New Alexandria, Penna., as clerk was laid on the table. He asked for the National Council's support of "The Christian Amendment" to the Constitution of the United States. Bishop Norman B. Nash termed the project as "perfectly fantastic" because of the effect it would have on the citizenship status of Jews and other non-Christians. "As a Christian," he said, "I object."

There will be no change in the schedule of meetings of the National Council, although some members felt that the April and September meetings are too far apart, the present quarterly meetings occurring in about seven months of the year. May diocesan conventions stand in the way of changing the April meeting.

There was an overdraft in the China account due to the War and the fluctuating or spiraling inflation in that country, amounting to $116,240.38. By saving $50,000 from the R. & A. '48 appropriation of $75,000 and using undesignated legacies prior to 1948 in the sum of $66,240.38, this overdraft is wiped out. Mr. Budd's report is as near final as the Council will have.

Subject to the approval of counsel, the maximum amount of loans authorized and outstanding to be made from the Rental Construction Account is increased from $100,000 to $300,000, and further appropriations will be made under the condition that the approval is by National Council action only and that the loans will be repaid in 15 years by annual installments. Bishop Malcolm E. Peabody had raised the question as to the legal justification for making loans from money given for specific purposes. The Finance Department took the above action with the advice of the legal members present, the General Counsel of the body not being available.

Bishop John B. Bentley, the Council's Vice-president, announced his plans to visit Japan in December, then go to China, the Philippines in the Spring, and finally to Honolulu for six weeks in the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. M. M. Millikan, for the American Church Institute for Negroes, reported that much planning and some construction work had been completed. And in order to stay within appropriations the Institute is again using student labor. A new dormitory for 100 boys has been completed at Voorhees, and the floor of another building reconstructed to accommodate 20 girls. Okolona Industrial College is to achieve an A rating among the colleges. Saint Paul's is to have a new trades building.

Bishop Angus Dun, for the Adult Division in his Department, announced the Epiphany study program of "Successful Marriage and the Christian Family" and the Lenten program, "The Prayer Book Speaks in Our Uncertain Age."

The Rev. William K. Crittenden's report on the Youth Section of the Amsterdam Conference and Mrs. Arthur M. Sherman's Woman Auxiliary report have already been sent to the Church's press. Well, anyway, this isn't being paid for by the inch.

Dr. Magill stated that nine dioceses have asked for surveys, and that our Church has taken the position of leadership in the area of Homes for the Aged. The Urban Conference's resolutions were received with approval by the Council.

Mr. Gannaway made his maiden before the Council, and reported that the South "is just before fixin' to get a little religion," in many areas intending to double Church membership in twelve months.

The Hon. K. C. Wu, of Shanghai, requested through the rector of Saint Peter's, Shanghai, permission for three Chinese to come to this country to raise funds for the rebuilding of Saint Peter's. The Council's reply, in summary, is that such a visit could not be made with profit at this time.

Bishop Frederick D. Goodwin's telegram from the Diocesan Council's meeting asking for more careful editing of the National Council's publications with regard to doctrinal statements was referred to the Department of Christian Education. Their Council had particular reference to a passage in "Pastoral Teaching in the Worship of the Church."

The final adjustment of the 1949 budget is to be deferred until the February, 1949, meeting, the officers of the several departments being instructed to study the "Askings" so that they can advise the Council at its next two meetings as to how the askings may best be reduced to come within the income expected for 1949. Heads of departments, missionary bishops, and other beneficiaries of budget appropriations are not to enter into any commitments for 1949 except as specifically authorized by the Council, in excess of the appropriations contained in the 1948 budget.

MRS. KINGSLAND ELECTED PRESIDING OFFICER

National Executive Board of W. A. Holds Meetings

Greenwich, Conn.—The national executive board of the Woman's Auxiliary at its meeting in Seabury House October 8-11 elected Mrs. Roger L. Kingsland, of Fairmount, W. Va., and Mrs. Alfred M. Chapman, of Washington Crossing, Penn., to be presiding officer and assistant presiding officer at the coming Triennial Meeting of the women of the Church, to be held in San Francisco next September. The elections, according to the by-laws of the board, are held well in advance so that the officers can share in preparation of the program.

Mrs. Kingsland served two terms, 1940-46, as a member of the board. Mrs. Chapman has been a member since 1943 and has been chairman for the past two years.

New board officers for the coming year are: Mrs. William R. Taliaferro of Edgewood, Penn., chairman; Mrs. Rollin T. Chamberlin, Chicago, vice-chairman; Mrs. Francis O. Clarkson, Charlotte, N. C., secretary.

Continuing its study of the Church by provinces, the board heard detailed reports of Province IV from Mrs. S. W. Tate of New Orleans and Province VII by Mrs. Edward G. Lasar of St. Louis. These reports deal not only with specific activities of Churchwomen but with the condition of the Church's work as a whole. The board feels that when all eight provincial reports have been heard they will provide a valuable background for future field policy of the Woman's Auxiliary. The board is also studying the overseas missionary districts and heard a presentation of Alaska by Hrs. John F. Heard of Atlanta.

The board acted on various recommendations of its standing committees, voting funds for repair and equipment of mission buildings, for equipment of women missionaries, and for scholarships, and recommended several appointments for action by the Council. Among the dioceses or districts with missions or missionaries aided by appropriations were the Philippines, Brazil, Alaska, China, Japan, Costa Rica, Utah, Wyoming, Nevada, Virginia, Idaho, North Dakota, Montana, Eau Claire Spokane, Upper South Carolina. One of the mission buildings to be repaired in Wyoming is the residence of the Rev. Dr. John Roberts now ninety-five years old who worked there among the Shoshone Indians from 1883 until his retirement. The house has been in great need of repair.

The amount now in hand for the United Thank Offering to be presented at the Triennial Meeting on 1st September, 1949, is $1,807,181.86. At the same point in the previous triennium the comparable amount was $823,717.89.

The board interrupted its Friday evening session to hear the Church broadcast, "Great Scenes From Great Plays." Several members brought in reports of its enthusiastic reception in their part of the country.

WORLD COMMUNITY DAY, NOVEMBER 5

Ten Million Women Plan To Pray For Peace

New York, N. Y.—More than ten million women throughout the United States will gather at their radios November 5 to join in prayer for world peace.

Ted Malone, Westinghouse Roving Reporter, in cooperation with the United Council of Church Women, will devote his broadcast that day to a special program on World Community Day. Malone is heard regularly Monday through Friday at 11:30 A. M., EST, of the ABC Network.

With Malone on the program will be Mrs. Harper Sibley, noted church woman, from Rochester, New York, and president of the United Council of Church Women. Mrs. Sibley will lead the prayer in which millions of churchwomen gathered singly and in groups at their radios will read with her.

The United Council of Church Women will ask all who are able to listen to the program and join the prayer. Plans call for UCCW groups to hold discussion meetings immediately after Ted Malone's broadcast.

The ten million members of the UCCW are scattered throughout the United States. Home offices for the Council are in New York City, with branches in forty states and more than thirteen hundred local interdenominational councils. Organized only seven years ago, the Council is built on the principle that "ten million women working together can change the world."

The UCCW has sent thousands of food and clothing parcels overseas, and this year they are sponsoring a "Pack-A-Towel" campaign in which cloth, socks, soap, toothbrush, and other items for teen-agers will be sent to DP's in Europe.

The bundles will be collected at churches on the day of Ted Malone's broadcast—November 5, World Community Day.

BERKELEY DIVINITY OPENS WITH RECORD

New Haven, Conn.—The Berkeley Divinity School, New Haven, Conn., opened on September 27, with a record enrollment of 55 students, including an entering class of 21 and two graduate students from the Greek Orthodox Church. The Rev. Elmer J. Cook, Ph. D., has come into residence as Professor of New Testament and the Rev. A. Gabriel Hebert, S. S. M. as Visiting English Lecturer for 1948-49. Other new members of the staff include the Rev. Thomas Sparks Cline, D. D., as Assistant Librarian and Lecturer in Moral Theology, and Professor Wilbur Marshall Urban, Ph. D., as Visiting Professor of Apologetics. The offices, library and classrooms are now established in the recently acquired former English House and Williams Hall provides additional accommodation for students. At Evensong on the opening night Dean Urban preached on the opportunities and dangers confronting the theological student. On October 7 the Rev. Harold Jones of the Cheyenne Agency, South Dakota, preached at Evensong and spoke after dinner under the auspices of the Mission Society of the School.

FOREIGN MISSIONS ASSEMBLY MEETS

Columbus, Ohio—The element of surprise accompanied 2,500 delegates to the Foreign Missions Assembly at Columbus, Ohio, October 6-8, from the moment that Bishop Henry W. Hobson, of Southern Ohio, concluded the opening service. Previously unannounced speakers that first morning were Dr. Tauko Matsumoto, president of Hiroshima Girls' High School and College, and Mrs. Vera M. Dean, of the American Foreign Policy Association. Dr. Matsumoto began: "I come in penitence, asking your forgiveness that we Christians in Japan were not strong enough to prevent the militarists from pursuing their senseless policy." Then he gave an eye-witness' account of Hiroshima's destruction; thanked Americans for their generous gifts of food, clothing, money, and told of plans for recreating Hiroshima as a Christian city. Mrs. Dean followed with such comments as: "Some day national sovereignty will be as obsolete as witchcraft." Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam urged that the whole Church set itself the total task of evangelizing the whole world, and meeting concrete needs and issues with concrete means and methods. Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin stated that 1947 saw ten times as many applicants for admission to Christian schools and colleges in China as in prewar years; in 1948 from fifteen to twenty times that number.

In three days the platform was occupied by forty speakers from Africa, Arabia, Argentina, Canada, China, Egypt, Europe, India, Japan, Korea, Mexico, Okinawa and the Philippines. Eighteen months of cooperative studies by area committees, in consultation with denominational representatives and native leaders in all countries concerned, had resulted in a 48-page report for presentation to American churches and congregations. "We are dealing," the report states, "not with a North American enterprise, but with North America's share in a world enterprise."

From the Columbus assembly, teams of speakers are visiting 36 cities in Canada and the United States between October 19 and November 19. In each center, denominational meetings are held, with speakers selected for the purpose, in addition ot an interdenominational mass meeting. As Harold E. Stassen said on the last day, "We are entering an era in which opportunities are greater and more open than ever before, and implementing the work of Christian missions may well hasten the way to ultimate peace and justice with honor."

More than sixty Anglicans and Episcopalians attended, including Bishops Bravid W. Harris, of Liberia; Henry W. Hobson, of Southern Ohio; Y. Y. Tsu, of China; Michael H. Yashiro, Japan; Canon Leonard A. Dixon, Toronto, Canada; J. Earl Fowler and the Rev. A. Ronald Merrix, staff representatives of the National Council.

BISHOP OF JAPAN GUEST OF LOS ANGELES

Los Angeles, Cal.—Bishop Yashiro spoke to the Woman's Auxiliary at All Saint's Church, Pasadena, at luncheon, on October 12.

He also spoke to a general meeting at St. Paul's Cathedral, Los Angeles, on October 13. He is returning from the Amsterdam Conference which was his subject.

Bishop Yashiro was tendered a reception in his honor at St. Mary's Church, the Rev. J. H. M. Yamazaki, acting as host. St. Mary's Church is located at 960 South Mariposa Ave., Los Angeles. The reception will begin at 6:30 P. M. While here Bishop Yashiro is to be guest of the Rt. Rev. C. S. Reifsnider of Pasadena, former Bishop of Tokyo.

The Rt. Rev. Michael Hinsuke Yashiro is Presiding Bishop of the Nippon Seikokwai (Holy Catholic Church in Japan), having been elected to that office in August, 1947. Bishop Yashiro was born in 1900, the second son of the Rev. Kinnojo Yashiro, late rector of St. Augustine's Church in Kobe.

Even as a child, the future bishop was conscious of his calling and advanced into the way of ministry. For a short time he studied at St. Paul's University in Tokyo, an Episcopal Church school, was ordained to the diaconate in 1925 and advanced to the priesthood in 1927.

His unusual talent was recognized soon and in August, 1927, he was honored to study abroad in England at the Kelham Theological College. Returning to Japan he became rector of St. Michael's Church, Kobe, in 1931. Among many other responsible positions he also held at this time was chairman of the Standing Committee of the Kobe diocese, chancellor of the Department of Missions of the National Council of the Nippon Sei-Kokwai, and director of the Bible Society in Japan.

In 1940 he became assistant Bishop of Kobe; and when Bishop Simpson died the following year, Bishop Yashiro succeeded to the diocese.

Subject to military call when his country was at war, Bishop Yashiro, with rank of captain, served in Manchuria. During the long evenings of blackout he gathered his men around him and talked to them of Christianity. Returning to Kobe he found all but one of his twenty or more churches destroyed in the American bombings or by fire. He rebuilt his cathedral as a miniature chapel of boards and tin, and has been working to relieve the poverty of his clergy and to rebuild the churches.

BROTHERHOOD PRESIDENTS TOURING COUNTRY

York, Pa.—Samuel S. Schmidt, president of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and member of the National Council, attended the meeting of that body in New York City October 12-14.

He will journey to Richmond, Va., to attend several meetings of the Brotherhood in that city on October 17 and to be the principal speaker at St. Paul's Church, Richmond, at the opening of the School of Religion there the following day.

General John C. H. Lee, executive vice-president of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, is making an extensive trip through the middle west and along the eastern seaboard.

He attended the Third Province meeting of the Church in Erie, Pennsylvania, on October 6, flying the following day to Des Moines, Iowa, where he received the degree of Doctor of Science at the Homecoming Convocation of Still College of Osteopathy and Surgery.

On the 7th and 8th he attended area dinner meetings in Tampa and Bradenstown, Florida, flying to Boston for the Sunday meeting of the New England Branch of the American Church Union. Leaving Boston on October 11, he returned to Florida, where he resumed his speaking tour.

At Rocky Mount, N. C., General Lee will speak October 16 to the Men's Club of the Church of the Good Shepherd.

On October 22 he will address the Camden, New Jersey, Kiwanis luncheon, to which the clergy of Camden and Philadelphia are invited.

The Bronx Convocation dinner in New York City October 26 will feature General Lee as its speaker.

After a brief pause at the National B. S. A. office in York, he will leave for St. Louis to attend meetings of the Seventh Synod on October 27.

All expenses of these trips are borne by the host churches or assemblies.

CAROLINE HILL DAVIS

Miss Caroline Hill Davis, daughter and sole surviving child, of the late Dr. John Staige Davis and Caroline Hill Davis, died September 9, 1948, at the University of Virginia. She had been an invalid for many years, and a devoted member of Christ Episcopal Church of Charlotetsville from her earliest years. This writer had the privilege, along with others, of seeing her nearly every Sunday afternoon for a good many years. She had many callers among her numerous friends and relatives, and it was characteristic of her never to speak of her own condition of health, and, if asked how she felt, would says with a smile, "I am as well as usual." Never a word of complaint of her disability, which confined her to her arm chair or wheel chair as she had not walked for several years.

As a young woman she was at home with her brother, Dr. John Staige Davis, and his wife, at "Arlie," University of Virginia, where her mother for years always had prayers after the evening meal as long as she was able—a saintly lady she was. Many a student of the University was made to feel at home ther, and Miss Carrie Davis was a delightful hostess and entertainer to all who called, and they were many.

Later, she left this home, after her mother's death, studied for a librarian, and was on the staff of the New York Public Library and of the Columbia University Library for a number of years. Illness of two brothers brought her back home, taking the position of Librarian of the University Medical School, about twenty-five years ago. There she made a home for one of these brothers and his two children after his death, until they married and left home. It was an inspiration to be with her, to see her cheerful acceptance of the failure of health which came upon her in a paralytic stroke at an unduly early age. Her recollection held many stories of bygone days and people, which she related in a most interesting way. Surviving are two nephews, Dr. John Staige Davis of New York, and Robert H. Davis of Richmond, Virginia, and three nieces, Mrs. Lawrence Phillips of Altheimer, Arkansas; Mrs. John Harris of Galveston, Texas; and Mrs. Daniel Sargeant of Charlottesville, and her two sisters-in-law, Mrs. John Staige Davis and Miss Stella Staples. Interment was in the University Cemetery in her family section.

"A MINISTER'S WIFE"

Sir: Regarding the article, "They Practice What Their Husbands Preach" (October 9), may I express what are to me two self-evident truths: (1) A "minister's wife" owes to her faith and Church the same devotion which is expected and required of any lay churchman worthy of the name, and (2) She owes to her husband the same loyalty, support, and trust which are expected of any Christian wife worthy of the name (according to the Prayer Book, Holy Matrimony per se is a "pretty serious" business). But his priesthood is not hers to imitate or meddle in, and to suggest that she do so can only weaken the already shaky prestige of man's highest vocation. A capsule theological education indeed! As soon give a doctor's wife a capsule medical education in one class period a week.

BRINGING FIGURES UP TO DATE

Sir: Many thanks for the space and attention which you have given to our efforts here at Sewanee in reprinting the Nashville Tennessean article on Student Wives.

I do, however, have a request arising out of your goodness in reprinting the story. Although it featured Sewanee in comparison with the brief reports of the opening of the other seminaries, it, of necessity, used facts and figures that were a year out of date and, therefore, did not correctly present our present situation in comparison with the other seminaries. Perhaps you will find space to bring our figures up to date. To me, they are revealing and significant of the continued trend towards a more adequate number of clergy in the Church. We have begun the new year with a student body of fifty-seven and turned away applicants. The reason why this increase has been possible with a plant built to accomodate a maximum of thirty-two students is that thirty-three of our present student body are married and we have found outside quarters in various and sundry ways. This makes by far the largest student body and seminary family ever here on the Mountain, the family also including 30 student children. The men come from twenty-one different dioceses and all but eight of them are veterans of the late war. The program for the wives, as outlined in your article, is continuing unchanged this year and with the same enthusiasm, cooperation and support of the girls themselves.

Changing Country Life And Its Church Implications

By W. E. GARNETT, Ph. D.,

Rural Sociologist, Virginia Agricultural Experiment Station

I.

Rural life is being gradually transformed by the impact of many forces. One of the most fundamental country life changes of recent years is the increasing application to farming of scientific knowledge and modern inventions. As a result John Jones gets more eggs per hen, more milk per cow, more corn per acre—or a total output on the same acreage of nearly three times as much as did his grandfather, and with less hard work. From this change spring a number of consequences. Two of the most important are: (1) the growing commercialism of farming; and (2) a declining number of farm people needed to produce the nation's foods and fibers. Commercialized farming is at times more profitable, but more subject to the hazzards of world-wide influences over which the farmer has no control, thus increasing the need of large scale farm organizations to defend farm interest. Furthermore, the mechanization of farming with high cost machinery tends to absorb much of the profits, especially when price levels are not so high as at present. Commercialized farming also tends to a more materialistic spirit—a condition of much concern for churches.

With increasing farm efficiency less than half of Virginia farm boys are needed in farm work when they reach maturity. This condition, together with the restlessness of youth, supposedly better opportunities in urban employment and dissatisfaction with country life conditions are producing a decline of the Virginia farm population. From 1940 to 1945 the loss amounted to approximately 181,000, which is the equivalent of about 45,000 families. The farm population declined in 90 counties. The total rural population, however, increased by about 75,000, but much of this was in a few counties. Eighty counties actually lost in total rural population between 1940 and 1945, and 79 of them in white population. From 1920 to 1940 there was a loss of rural population in 54 counties.

Churches are affected by both big migratory movements, and by local family shifts such as the dying of old people, who have long been pillars of a given denomination, and their property passing to others with different denominational connections. Marriage connections of children often bring denominational shifts. In the country such changes are frequently very serious to a weak church. New population concentrations brought through road changes, or other causes, also frequently result in the church of one denomination being strengthened, while those of other denominations in adjacent communities are weakened.

Improved roads and auto transportation is another rural life change of the last several decades of far-reaching significance. The school consolidation movement, a major factor in the general breakdown of rural neighborhoods and small communities, is, in part, an outgrowth of changed transportation facilities. The disappearance of large country stores and country people doing most of their buying in towns is another outgrowth of changed transportation facilities. Incidentally, the prosperous country merchant of a generation ago was usually one of the chief financial supporters of the local church. Under the changed conditions profits on country trade do not help support open country institutions, except to a limited extent through a re-allocation to counties of state and federal taxes on such business.

With the improved transportation conditions, an increasing number of country people not only trade in town, but also go there for work and recreational activities. Thus, the churches are frequently the only neighborhood institution or interest center left. The persistance of many small churches, in spite of changed conditions, is one of the chief forces retarding the recrystallization of disintegrating neighborhoods and small communities into more effective larger community units.

Of all the many country life changes new recreational habits are perhaps of most church concern. Increasing dependence on commercialized amusements which are dominated by the profit motive without concern for youth development and welfare is the outstanding change in this field. This is a problem of many ramifications of which only a few can be touched on.

A study now being made by the writer on the use of time by older adolescents indicates that we have scarcely begun to appreciate the significance of the devotion of youth to the daily paper comic strips, comic books and radio and motion pictures. Taken by themselves, certain types of radio and motion picture programs and comic strips, to which the study in question showed the majority of youth to be very devoted, may be harmless or even of value, although many parents and educators are inclined to doubt it. However, considered from the use of time angle alone, the cumulative results of one of these things plus another plus another is most serious. In many cases little time is left for desirable types of reading, and there is less time available for parental companionship and discussions, especially when youth organizational activities and other numerous calls on youth' leisure time are taken into account. Several college deans, with whom this subject was discussed, and others in a good position to observe said that the conditions and trends in question are apparently having a decided effect on the idealism and ambition of youth, or the qualities and attitudes which normally come from the right type of reading in the adolescent period. Psychologists also point to an arrested development of inner resources as one result of youths' dependence on commercialized recreation, and to the effects of such lacks in later life. So much time spent on comic strips and radio jazz programs to the exclusion of reading about current affairs has a definite bearing on the quality of citizenship.

The growing patronage of nickelodeon dance and beer establishments and other entertainment places, frequently some distance from their homes and away from parental and neighborhood restraints, is another recreational practice common with many of the present youth generation. As a partial offset to such items a relatively limited number of the more priviledged, the camps and short courses provided for agricultural and home economics students, 4-H club members, Boy and Girl Scouts, Hi-Y members and various church groups afford constructive recreational outlets unknown to former generations.

Chuch Challenging Rural Conditions

Churches are not only affected by rural life changes such as those outlined, but they also have a large stake in many other conditions. The 1940 census, for instance, reported 2,045 children as having been born to each 1,000 white farm women aged 15 to 49 as compared to 1,092 children to parallel urban groups. Since the country is the great population seedbed, many rural conditions, especially those affecting homes and child welfare should be matters of applied Christian citizenship concern. Space limits permit only a brief summary of a few such conditions.

A recent check of school records showed only about half as large a proportion of Virginia white country boys graduating from high school or going to college as of urban boys. This means a competitive disadvantage for migrating farm youth, as well as a lowered cultural level in the country, and other drags. In 1940, 28 percent of the Virginia men age 25 and over engaged in farm work had only a fifth grade education or less, while 59 percent of the white farm boys and 44 percent of the white farm girls age 21 in 1940 had stopped school at the seventh grade or below.

A recent study showed that in 1940 ten Virginia farm children were being reared in houses valued at $700 or less to one being reared in houses valued at $3,000 and up (pre-war values). A count of Virginia farm houses in 1940 showed:

90,381 or 43%—with 4 rooms or less.
46,986 or 22%—with 3 rooms or less.
197,255 or 94%—lacked bathtub or shower.
189,964 or 91%—lacked flush toilets.
203,020 or 97%—were without central heat.
123,985 or 59%—were without refrigerators.

In 1945:

160,949 or 79%—lacked running water.
134,178 or 68%—lacked electricity.
68,289 or 40%—had no radios.
90,014 or 52%—of the farm families had no automobiles.

These conditions are improving but slowly. When the home is lacking in labor saving conveniences, mothers tend to be overworked and child training is neglected. Lack of income was found to be the major reason for poor farm housing and equipment. Even with the relative prosperity of recent years, the net farm income of Virginia farmers averaged less than $1,000 in 1944, while more than 75,000 farm families had an income of less than $750.

Although recent years have seen marked improvement in this field, adequate medical care is still one of the big rural needs. A check in 1947 showed nearly half of Virginia counties with fewer doctors than five years earlier and a little over one-fourth of the doctors were over 65 years of age.

A live church under the leadership of a strong pastor can do much to improve all of these conditions.

In the light of the rural life changes and challenges which have been presented, a second article will present certain church trends, conditions and possibilities.

Women In The Church

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

One of the most interesting smaller sectional discussions at the Amsterdam Assembly of the World Council of Churches was concerned with the place of women in the church. Several noteworthy facts emerged in this discussion. One was that the modern liberal-democratic society undoubtedly has given a larger place in its life to women than has the church in that same society.

Whatever we may say about the Christian basis of democracy we must humbly admit (those of us who are Christian) that the religious community is much more tardy than the secular community in granting equal rights to women. Equality between the sexes must be regarded primarily as a secular achievement.

It is also apparent that the more sacramental the religion and the more priestly the church, the greater is the difficulty for women. One very shrewd Bishop from Sweden remarked that though Scriptural authority is sometimes used to restrict the place of women in the church, it was rather interesting that most churches did not object to women speaking in the church (a practice which St. Paul prohibited); but did object to their serving at the altar (about which St. Paul said nothing).

The contrast between the rights of women in the church and in civil society is much more obvious in continental Europe than it is with us. This is due to the fact that women are actually even more active in politics than they are in this country; but have a much more inferior position in the church.

Christian women of the continent, who are interested in advancing the status of women in the church, are inclined to place their primary emphasis upon the right of women to be ordained. American women have not been as interested in the right of ordination, possibly because they do not feel nearly as frustrated as the women of the continent. The great women's organizations in all American denominations, and their influence particularly in the missionary activities of the church, are practically unknown upon the continent.

This does not mean that the problem of ordination for women ought not to be considered seriously in this country as well as in Europe. The continental women may well be right in suggesting that our lack of interest in the problem derives from the fact that the position of women in our churches is an inferior one, but not so inferior as to arouse the resentment which it does on the continent.

Two events of special interest preceded the discussion in Amsterdam. One was that the Lambeth conference of Anglican Bishops disavowed the policy of the Bishop of Hong Kong, who had ordained a Chinese woman evangelist. The other was that the Danish parliament had made the ordination of women permissive in the Danish State Church. In Denmark this step was taken, not so much because the church women demanded it, but because a powerful women's movement in the nation did.

CHANGES HIS MIND

New York, N. Y.—"A Layman Changes His Mind" might be the title of a story which reached the National Council as one prompt reaction to "Great Scenes From Great Plays." This layman, usually a mild-mannered man, when first told of the radio program, said that it was a disgrace to the Episcopal Church to squander in such a way, money "squeezed in nickels and dimes out of the people."

This conscientious objector was fair enough to hear the program on October 1. The person who sent the story to the National Council reported: "next morning after the program I purposely said nothing when I came into the office. He walked over to my desk and his praise was even greater than his condemnation had been. He called the whole program superb. Realize that this man is intelligent, liberal and broadminded. He had made the protest to a fellow-Episcopalian because he was conscience-stricken at his Church's seemingly entering the 'commercial' field.

"In my own church yesterday my rector who was not previously opposed to the idea of a radio program announced that he had wondered what religious significance could be pointed out from Cyrano until he had heard the program himself and the splendid way in which it was done."

Studies In First Samuel

By REV. JOHN SHRYOCK, Philadelphia, Pa.

SAMUEL

ARTICLE II

The great man who gave his name to the two books of Samuel functioned in three capacities among the Israelites. His father was a Levite, and even while a child, Samuel ministered before God in the tabernacle at Shiloh, dressed in the simple linen vestment which was worn by ordinary priests, and even by laymen.

He was also the last of the Judges, for after him the Israelites went under the authority of a king by their own wish, and never returned to their early form of government. In the discharge of his judicial duties he went annually in circuit to various parts of the country —three places are mentioned—besides his residence at Ramah, where he built an altar to the Lord. The old democratic structure of Israelite government was proving inadequate, and Samuel may have instituted these trips about the country in order to make it more efficient, for they do not seem to have been made by earlier judges.

But Samuel found the greatest opportunity for leadership in his recognized position as a prophet, and in this he was the first of a long, continuous line which ended with Malachi. There are few, if any, groups of men to whom the world owes so much as it does to the great prophets of the Old Testament —men of the highest caliber, who would be the glory of any religion.

A prophet was an authoritative and infallible teacher of God's will. His utterances began with the words, "Thus saith the Lord;" and that was final. He did not inherit his office, nor receive it by human appointment, but was called by the Spirit of God, often by a soul-searching experience, and specially prepared for his work by God.

This conception of a man called in a peculiar way to do the work of God has been of enormous importance in later religion, and is still found in Christianity, where a man is assumed to be called to the ministry in much the same manner, although ordination by a religious organization, and years spent in a seminary, have somewhat compromised the Israelite idea. Yet candidates for the clergy are still supposed to have a call, and Samuel's example is still cited as to what may be expected.

Unfortunately, men have sometimes mistaken some other noise for the voice of God, and this happened in ancient Israel, as it does among us. Accordingly, three tests of a prophet's genuineness were used. The most popular and sensational was what the Bible calls signs; extraordinary events coincident with the prophet's efforts. This did not always operate well, even in Biblical times. The second was the fulfillment of what the prophet had said, and this is still the final verdict. The last was whether the prophet agreed with the past experience of the group, and among Israel, with the Ten Commandments and other Mosaic ordinances. There were false prophets in Israel, as among us; some of them hypocrites, and some mistaken; but time invariably shows which are which.

Samuel's father had two wives. The one he loved most, Hannah, was childless, and was forced to endure the taunts of the other woman on her condition, after the manner in which respectable women sometimes treat each other. On a visit to Shiloh, where the Ark was kept, she prayed for a son, and her prayer was answered. She had vowed to give her son to the Lord, and after Samuel was weaned, she brought him to Eli, and placed him in the priest's charge. After that, once a year she went up to Shiloh to sacrifice, and to see the son she had lent to God, and each year she made him a little coat, which she took to him. That was the only contact she had with the boy. Surely no mother could do more for religion.

So Samuel ministered before God, growing in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man. But meanwhile the scandals of Eli's administration as judge and high priest increased, and Eli did nothing effective to stop them. When he was about twelve, God called to him one night. Thinking the call came from Eli, the boy wakened him, but when this happened twice, Eli told Samuel that it was God's voice, and to answer appropriately. When it had happened the third time, Eli forced Samuel to tell him what God had said. It was a grim message.

"Behold, I will do a thing in Israel, at which both the ears of everyone that heareth shall tingle. In that day I will perform against Eli all things which I have spoken concerning his house: when I begin, I will also make an end. For I have told him that I will judge his house for ever for the iniquity which he knoweth; because his sons made themselves vile, and he restrained them not . . . the iniquity of Eli's house shall not be purged with sacrifice nor offering for ever."

It must have taken courage for a boy of twelve to give such a message to his master. Samuel was reluctant to speak, but he told the truth, and Eli was great enough to say, "It is the Lord: let him do what seemeth him good."

It is always so with real prophets. God does not call his messengers to pleasant tasks that appeal to them. When his command comes, it is to a work from which the man shrinks, and which he does only because he feels there is nothing else he can do. We should beware of supposed messages from God which tell us to do what we want to do anyway. God does not deal in that way with his prophets.

Shortly after, Eli's two sons were killed in a defeat by the Philistines, the Ark was captured, and Eli himself died by accident. The result for Samuel was, that he was universally recognized as a prophet, and as the religious leader of his people.

What a position for a boy in his early teens. The nation was disorganized and defeated, while its existence was threatened by a neighbor far stronger than the Israelites at their best. Religion had been undermined, and the chief symbol of religion captured by the heathen. The Ark was soon restored, after some remarkable events, but was kept in seclusion in a private house, and all Israel lamented that they were deprived even of their religion.

The way in which Samuel slowly mastered this situation and established himself as the undisputed leader of his people we do not know, for when the narrative is resumed, twenty years have passed. Then Samuel spoke to the house of Israel.

"If ye do return unto the Lord with all your hearts, then put away the strange Gods from among you, and prepare your hearts unto the Lord, and serve him only."

In response, the people gathered at Mizpeh, where Samuel sacrificed and prayed. But when the Philistines heard of the assembly, they realized it was the first step in a rebellion, and even as Samuel was making his offering, their army was seen approaching. At that point occured one of those unpredictable phenomena which sometimes change the fate of nations, and which we still call an "act of God." A terrific thunderstorm descended on the Philistine army, and while it was in confusion, the Israelites attacked, winning a complete victory. This triumph, and even more, the manner in which it was

The Unpardonable Sin

By REV. FREDERICK W. KATES,

Rector of Christ Church, Oswego, New York.

Wherefore I say unto you, All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men: but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men. And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him: but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come. —St. Matt. 12:31-32.

There we have it, in the Master's own words: The unforgivable sin is the sin against the Holy Spirit; other sins will be forgiven and other blasphemies, even sinning against the Lord Himself, but the one sin that will not be forgiven in this world or in the life to come is the sin against the Holy Spirit. Our message would be simply this: a warning against our committing the unpardonable sin, the sin against the Holy Spirit.

As I understand it, the sin against the Holy Spirit is denying the continuing, beneficent activity of God in the lives of men as individuals and in the world at large. Any warning against drifting into it is timely and in order at any time, and for three reasons.

Because it is so frightfully easy in times like these in which we live to commit the sin against the Holy Spirit, we must be doubly on our guard. Whether it is with regard to our own personal lives and fates and fortunes or the state of the world as a whole, each time we throw up our hands in despair, each time we allow our spirits to sink into and to wallow in the mud of black pessimism, each time we say in our hearts if not with our lips that "the game is up," that we are "done for," and that all efforts to remedy our present situation are futile and bound to defeat—each time we do any of these things, we are guilty of the sin against the Holy Spirit. To believe that God doesn't care any more about ourselves as individuals or our world, to say that God has washed His hands of the whole business and is quite content to let the world go ahead and destroy itself, to say that God is no longer active in the world—is not this to be guilty of the unpardonable sin? To lose faith and to surrender hope, to lose faith in our times, to believe that God is not today, in the midst of our generation's turbulent events, active and moving in the affairs of men—is not this to commit the sin against the Holy Spirit?

Not only because it's so terrifyingly easy to slip into that outlook and attitude which mark the person who sins against the Holy Spirit must we be on guard these days, but also because of the devastating and disastrous effects upon our own lives and those of all we associate with of succumbing to this sin. As it is ever preferable, from every angle, to be working on the construction gang and not with the wrecking crew, so it is true that to live happily, efficiently, and with joy to ourselves and our fellow-men one must live affirmatively. The pessimist and defeatist are ill-equipped to live well in this day or any day, and certainly they are not the people our confused, battered world looks to for guidance and courage as it wrestles with the problems of our century. To believe in God's control and power and care, and to act consistent with one's belief, is to be the kind of person mankind needs now.

The third reason why a warning against committing the unpardonable sin is in order is the seriousness of so doing for a Christian. We Christians believe that "God is working His purpose out, as year succeeds to year," and that God is doing this very thing even now in our personal lives and in the bewildering events of our years. We Christians are called upon nowadays to demonstrate our belief in the Holy Spirit —in God alive and active in the lives of men and in the mighty affairs of our generation. Of all people, we Christians should be the last to deny God's concern for, His interest in, His direction of, and His control over, the lives of men and man's world. Apostasy is an ugly word, but denial of the Holy Spirit's presence and activity is to render ourselves guilty of it.

Three reasons suggest themselves to me why we are apt to fall guilty of the unpardonable sin, if we aren't vigilant; and the first is that it's ever hard to detect, when we are so close at hand, God working in one's own age. It's easier to see His working in times past. With longer perspective on events, we are able to trace out His curious ways of operation and to observe how His Spirit strangely moves in and among men. Being so close to all the momentous events and mighty stirrings of our generation that cause our hearts to tremble with anxiety and fear, it is admittedly difficult for us to see God's hand at work in them, His Spirit moving across the storm-tossed waters.

Again, most of us are dazed by a numbing and paralyzing disillusionment. We were brought up to think that peace and prosperity and comforts and luxuries were somehow always to be ours. We were taught the inevitability of progress, that the world was automatically getting better, people nobler and finer, and so on. We were led to believe our Western civilization, built on the foundations of Greek art and wisdom, Roman justice and law, Judaeo-Christian morality and theism, Germanic vigor and Anglo-Saxon political traditions, and glorified by the new knowledge of our times and Science's marvelous achievements, was strong and stable and secure. But now after two colossal wars in our own lifetime we behold with chagrin and dismay the disconcerting fact that our civilization and culture, so dearly-won, is fighting for its life, and that its bitterest enemy is a crassly materialistic outlook on life—Marxism—that is its own fruit and child. We're sadly disillusioned these days, for we have been betrayed and misled and we have grievously deceived ourselves.

And not only are we disillusioned that all is not as we expected it to be, we are scared to death. And we are principally scared because we know there are forces and powers and instruments in our world that spell our doom, unless a miracle somehow happens—and soon—that will convince thoughtful men that the future will be fair.

Put all these factors together—our entirely normal inability to perceive God's hand at work in events close to us, our disillusionment and our nervous, half-hysterical anxiety over what the future is liable to bring—and it's easy to understand why, unless we're stedfastly on our guard, we drift into the pessimistic and defeatist attitude which marks him who sins against the Holy Spirit. Put all these factors together and you can readily see why it's tragically easy nowadays to lose faith in our times, in ourselves, in our leaders, even in our ideals and standards and values, and maybe even in God. It's mighty easy these days to sin against the Holy Spirit and to say, not fully realizing the import of our words, that God is dead; or at least that God is not interested in the world any longer; or that God, even if He still cares, is no longer actively concerned with the affairs of men.

Now if we appreciate why we are apt to fall into the unforgivable sin, the next step is to discover how we can fortify ourselves against committing it.

The first thing is to remember that always it has been so, that always when man's world goes astray and is agonizing through critical times, some men have

Lewis B. Franklin

The resignation of Dr. Lewis B. Franklin as Treasurer of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society and of the National Council will be received by the Church with mingled feelings of regret and yet appreciation for the service which Dr. Franklin has so notably rendered the Church for nearly thirty years. The Church has had the uttermost confidence in Dr. Franklin's financial competancy in the technical aspects of his work, but its respect for him has gone far beyond this. The Church has cherished his personal Christian devotion, his sense of vocation, and his unflagging zeal for the missionary work of the Church. For twenty-nine years he has given himself to the Church without reserve. As the Minute of Appreciation of the National Council states, "He has gone up and down this land and across the seas proclaiming the Gospel as this Church has received the same." He typifies the tremendous service a layman can render in the Church. He exemplifies for us the New Testament ideal of the priesthood of all believers. He has been a minister before God in our fellowship. Though Dr. Franklin has resigned his immediate responsibilities, the Church surely will continue to avail itself of his mature wisdom in the days that are ahead.

For at this time of his resignation, the Church is faced with a situation remarkably like that which existed in 1919 when Dr. Franklin became our national treasurer. His service in the Church has spanned an era, and the cycle seems now about to begin again! Once more we are at the end of a tragic war. Once again we face a period of international uncertainty and turmoil. Once again the opportunities of the Church are great and apparently cannot be met through the conventional channels which we have been using.

In 1919, the Church found an answer in the Nation-Wide Campaign. That campaign was a great stimulus to all the work of the Church. For it not only provided new financial strength, but it caught the imagination of the Church and gave new impetus to all our work. In many ways, after thirty years we are still coasting on the results and benefits of that Campaign! Many of our financial plans have not been radically changed, nor have their premises been seriously challenged in the light of new conditions.

This type of evaluation is needed immediately in the Church. For despite surface similarities to 1919, the actual situation in this atomic age is quite different. Moreover, the present financial situation in our national Church is not a healthy one. We have cut our basic budget for this present operating year, because it was not subscribed by the dioceses. We made a half-hearted appeal to meet this cut, but this appeal was not successful. Then we went ahead and raised over a million dollars in one day for world relief, outside the budget! We further went ahead and asked every parish to give 3% of its budget for the new national radio program, again outside of budget. Sufficient was raised apparently, though the actual amount has, so far as we know, never been announced, to pay for this program for thirteen weeks. At the moment, the Department of Christian Education is preparing—and quite rightly!—to ask the Church for a vastly larger appropriation. Will the other departments be content to sit back and let Promotion and Education alone ask for needed increases? Meanwhile, there is nothing whatsoever for a department of evangelism; little to care for the greatly increased cost of living which pinches every missionary; and advance work is almost non-existent.

All of which means that our financial system and planning has been outgrown. It is in chaotic shape. It needs complete overhauling and reconsideration. Piecemeal patching will not do. Surely the diocese will not accept quotas for the next triennium large enough to cover all the proposed increases, if this year's experience be considered typical. The quota system has apparently reached its limit, not simply in funds, but in its appeal to the imagination of the Church.

We need a totally new approach that will match our needs and opportunities with Christian stewardship that will tap the great resources of our Church, not only financially, but in man-power and talent. The Episcopal Church needs to hear the sound of the trumpets once more as it did in the days of the Nation-Wide Campaign. We are delighted therefore that National Council at its recent meeting discussed the need for a real program of advance. The resolution, however, seems to suggest that this be outlined by the heads of the departments at Church Mission's House. May we suggest that the Church be consulted also! Let clergy from the west and south as well as from the metropolitan east; members of the Woman's Auxiliary who are afire with zeal; and laymen of consecration and executive ability from all over the Church be brought together to plan an Advance Program, bulwarked by sincere Christian stewardship. We have the utmost respect for the integrity and loyalty of the leadership at "281," but this is a task for the whole Church!

"Great Scenes From Great Plays"

We have purposely withheld both editorial comment and letters from our readers relative to the new national radio program of the Church until a sufficient number of programs could be broadcast to give us a true taste of this new type of evangelistic approach. With this issue, we print in "Post Haste" several letters which are critical of the program. Its supporters have not as yet hastened to write to us! Nonetheless, we feel that it is still too soon to make any final judgment about the usefulness of this program to the Church. The results so far seem good. The programs are improving in technique and content. The use of a local clergyman at the end of the half-hour was a stroke of inspiration. The announcement that nearly ten thousand letters were received by the Church after the first two programs is most encouraging. Mr. Robert Jordan is to be congratulated particularly upon the fine publicity issued to aid local promotion of the program.

Now the program must have a chance to see if it can build up a listening audience, and if they can be touched by the Church. Thirteen weeks was scarcely a fair opportunity to do this. We are glad therefore that the National Council has authorized the continuance of the program for another quarter of a year. While the Church must be grateful to the Mutual Network for its willingness to sell time for this new type of religious program, we hope the Department of Promotion is facing the fact that many Mutual stations are low in power and therefore give very poor coverage. Some consideration should be given to the use of another network in the future. Even in the populous east, there are many blank areas where the program cannot be heard with clarity.

The clergy must continue to coordinate their own work to the approach of the program. There ought to be not only special announcement of the programs week by week, but also carefully planned arrangements to welcome newcomers and visitors who may be led to come to our services on Sundays as a result of the Friday night broadcast.

The criticisms thus far simply dislike this particular method of reaching the unchurched. For ourselves, we are pragmatic. If it will help the Church to reach America's millions of pagans who cannot be touched by the usual type of religious broadcast, we are all for it! Our Lord did not disdain to use parables and stories to win men to God! Why should we?

STUDIES FROM FIRST SAMUEL

won, added enormously to Samuel's prestige. He maintained it ably, both at home and abroad, and the nation prospered under his administration for many years.

But Samuel eventually grew too old to attend to the work that crowded in upon him, and appointed his two sons as judges. Like the sons of Eli, they were unworthy, and accepted bribes. Then the elders of Israel called on Samuel and spoke very frankly. They told him he was too old for active work, that his sons were unfit, and they demanded that he appoint a king to rule them, in the manner of neighboring nations.

The Israelites had hitherto been a democracy, with little central authority save that of religion. It was religion which gave the tribes what unity they had, and in a real sense, the head of the nation was God.

But the Israelites were under constant pressure from surrounding nations, all of which possessed governments which appeared more efficient. Samuel was more able than the leaders of the Book of Judges, but even that was not satisfactory to men who looked longingly at the armies, the officials, and the kings of rival countries. Was a democracy, even when headed by God, as efficient as a dictatorship, and could a loose federation like Israel survive under such conditions? To make matters worse, the nation seemed to be slipping back into its old disorganization under Samuel's sons. There is a good deal to be said for the elders.

Samuel was displeased, naturally; for the request was more a rejection of God than it was of Samuel. But the old man obeyed God and promised to select a king who would go before the people into battle.

First, however, he talked to them as frankly as they had spoken to him. He gave them a picture of what would happen under their king—of compulsory military service, of forced labor in the king's fields and in his factories, of an autocratic bureaucracy, of the seizure of land, of the conscription of servants and domestic animals, of increased taxes—all the results of a dictatorship, as familiar then as today.

So Samuel chose a king for the people; in fact, before he finished, he was forced to choose two kings, for the first was a failure. In nothing he did was Samuel's greatness more conspicuous than in his voluntary relinquishment of power, in the continued loyalty and assistance he gave to the man who replaced him, and in the discernment he showed in making his selections. Saul failed, but he was certainly a great man, and his failure could not have been foreseen by Samuel. David was a brilliant success, the favorite hero of his people, and his influence continues to be felt even today. Surely the man who, under God's guidance, chose them both, was equal to them in ability, and superior to them in character.

From his childhood he was devoted to the service of God, and he never departed from it. To us, with our Christian point of view, it seems that Samuel was mistaken in some things he believed to be the will of God. Surely God does not want a whole group of people to be destroyed, we say. And having said this, we proceed to wipe out a great city with a single bomb. Samuel at least was honest about it.

He was hard; but he was a great and a good man, who put God first all his life, no matter what the circumstances. There have been few like him.

ARMY OFFICER IMPRESSED WITH MISSION

Dallas, Texas—The Very Rev. Gerald G. Moore, D. D., dean of St. Matthew's Cathedral, Dallas, wrote the National Council recently in connection with a gift made to the work of the Rev. Edward Jacobs at Bontoc in the Philippine Islands: "About six months ago one of our young men, a medical officer in the Army, was sent out in an ambulance to rescue some Army fliers who had parachuted down in the mountains near Bontoc. When he reached Bontoc he found that they had all been brought to the mission station and were being cared for by Fr. Jacobs. He was so impressed that he wrote his mother and asked our parish to do something for them."

A RETREAT FOR A GREATER ADVANCE

Early one morning during Lent, I was one of six women who approached a small, but lovely church. Perhaps some of us remembered that the minister had told us this would be like a strategic retreat in the army, when soldiers fall back to gain a better stand and make a greater advance.

When we entered the church some of us read the gilt letters on the wall, "The Lord is in His Holy Temple," for we were silent before Him.

The minister began the meeting with a short talk and prayer. He explained that no one was to speak except to God. Several times during the morning he led in prayer. He always used the words,

"Come, Holy Ghost, our souls inspire,
And lighten with celestial fire.
Thou the anointing Spirit art,
Who doth Thy sevenfold gifts impart.

"Thy blessed unction from above,
Is comfort, life, and fire of love,
Enable with perpetual light
The dullness of our blinded sight."

The minister told us to relax, to pray, to read in books he had provided, and to meditate. I chose "The Imitation of Christ" by Thomas a'Kempis and a booklet on the preparation for Holy Communion by Bishop Tucker.

This beautiful service was the very center of the retreat.

When I returned to my pew after receiving the sacrament I sat still to meditate. I kept looking at the altar and it seemed to be infused with a deeper meaning than I had ever known. I took paper and pencil from my purse and wrote:

The Completeness of the Altar

"The altar in St. Paul's Church represents life—past, present, eternal.

"It contains symbols of food for the body—wheat and grapes—which can also be used for the soul.

"The words, "Alleluia, Alleluia," remind us of the joy of praise and thanksgiving, which cannot be fully known until they are translated into deeds of humble, loving service to others, in imitation of Christ.

"The glow of the candle stands for the light of the world.

"The cross in the center indicating the darkest hour of time, because of later events, has become also the hope of mankind, the sign of immortality.

"The prayer book speaks of the frailty and sin of human nature and of the power and love of God.

"The Blessed Sacrament placed upon the altar contains the means of the extension of this power and love through the lives of consecrated Christians.

"Just as a person who receives a transfusion of blood receives the qualities of the blood of the doner, so those who partake of the sacrament in the true spirit receive the qualities of Christ.

"Henceforth they are of one blood, heirs and so-heirs of the Kingdom of God through the love and sacrifice of Christ."

When I read the meditation that night I knew I had written something I could not have written alone. During that quiet half day I had come (not near, oh, not anywhere near an adequate conception of God but) somewhat nearer to a realization of the reality, the availability, and the power of the Holy Spirit.

CXLV

THE GLORIA IN EXCELSIS. This great chant like all parts of the Prayer Book has its background and origin in the Bible, but even, in a way, it is more striking than most in that we find its source in such a variety of different books of the New Testament.

Thus the opening sentence comes from St. John's Gospel, 1:14, "And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us, (and we beheld His glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father), full of grace and truth." Also nearly this same wording is found in John 13:31, and again in St. Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians, 5:20, "Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ"; and again we find the same thought in the Second Epistle of St. Peter 1:17, where in referring to the transfiguration he says, "For He received from God the Father honor and glory." Thus for this one sentence we have a background from three different authors in four separate places in the New Testament.

Of course the use of the title "Lamb" for our Saviour is found in places too numerous to mention throughout the New Testament.

The expression, "For Thou only art holy; Thou only art the Lord," leads us into the final Book of the New Testament, Rev. 15:4, where the wording is almost identical with that of the Prayer Book.

When we remember that the great event of the Saviour's birth as announced by the angelic choir and recorded by St. Luke (2:14) is the very basis for this great chant of praise, we see that another author and another book join the large group that stand behind this part of our Prayer Book service.

Here it should be noted that the translation of that first Christmas Carol varies somewhat in ancient manuscripts. The words "And on earth peace, good will toward men" are sometimes changed to read, "Peace on earth to men of good will." The difference is not very great in sound, but does change the whole meaning, in that it puts the prospect of peace as a produce from the hearts of men, rather than as a gift from God.

R. CARY MONTAGUE.

TAKE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

When our Lord said take no thought for tomorrow, He could have meant for us to take thought for today. Indeed no provision is made for the future unless we do take thought for today. Present, past and future follow with such rapidity that we do well to fulfill the obligation—and privileges—of the present. We hear of the golden future, its high hopes, its assured victory, the continuous and unimpeded ascent on the golden stair of opportunity. This is alluring. These will be realized only as we put to use and with good courage the days, the hours, the moments of the golden present. It is golden and it is ours. The future belongs to no man. The present belongs to everyone. The present is short, only now. The hour of praise this morning (was it praise?) is in the past, the noon hour will soon be here and gone, and when approaching night takes up the last ray of sunset, that sunset will be as truly in the past as the one our parents gazed on in the Garden of Eden. We have no claim on the future, and if we use the present we must do it today, now. Only the past is ours, and glorious or ignominious it is ours forever. No friend can obliterate its ignominy, no enemy sieze its glory. The past is indeed a heritage. For this we may give humble thanks and high praise to the Giver of all good, or sink in despair.

An unhappy and bitter heritage requires little effort to build. The cruel look and the unkind word that pierced an innocent and believing heart, the scattering to the wind of real wealth (maybe unearned) that could have been used for divine glory, deafness to the call of God, blindness to the need of man are handy material for such building. Another is the ox-like oblivion for the hopes of others, self-absorption in ambition that puts the wish of self and the vanity of the world before the will of God. This may include the sacred ministry of the holy Jesus—"Whosoever

SYNOD OF THE FOURTH PROVINCE

Augusta, Ga.—The Rt. Rev. Edwin A. Penick, D. D., bishop of North Carolina, was elected president of the Province of Sewanee at the 22nd Synod held in St. Paul's Church, October 6. As senior active bishop in the Province he was acting president on the death of Bishop Jackson, elected president a year ago. He will serve the remainder of the three-year term. Other officers of the Province were reelected. Mr. W. Ted Gannaway, provincial chairman of laymen's work, was elected provincial member of the National Council, succeeding Bishop Hamilton West, coadjutor of Florida.

Bishop West, who had been rector of the host parish until October 1, had to substitute for Bishop Barnwell of Georgia as host, for the bishop was ill.

The Presiding Bishop preached at the opening service the night of October 5. He declared that the parish is the primary unit in the work and life of the Church, but its program must be world-wide in scope and vision. He made a strong appeal for "men and means" with which to do the work of the Church, and listed the elements of hope in the world which should make Christians thankful to be living today.

The Presiding Bishop also addressed a joint session of Synod and Woman's Auxiliary the morning of the sixth.

Instead of listening to reports of the several departments of Provincial Council, members of the Synod heard noted speakers on Christian Education, Social Relations, and College Work. They were: the Rev. Vesper O. Ward, editor-in-chief of curriculum in the National Council's Department of Christian Education; the Rev. Dr. Almon R. Pepper of Christian Social Relations; and the Rev. Thomas V. Barrett, formerly of National Council's Division of College Work.

The Rev. J. W. Kennedy, Lexington, Ky., addressed the Synod on the meeting of the World Council of Churches, which he attended. Dr. Harold L. Trigg, president of St. Augustine's College, Raleigh, N. C., spoke of the work of his school. Dean Robert F. Gibson of the School of Theology, University of the South, made an appeal for better recruiting plans for the ministry.

Some of the results of the excellent addresses were shown in resolutions presented and adopted. A layman presented resolutions calling for more adequate support for seminaries by parishes, dioceses and the general Church. The Department of Christian Social Relations presented a resolution affirming Lambeth Resolutions 6, 7 and 43, dealing with interracial matters. A resolution appealing for the opening of American missionary work in India was passed.

The 1950 Synod will meet in St. Andrew's Church, Tampa, Fla.

BISHOP'S MEN HOLD AREA MEETINGS

Daytona Beach, Fla.—Addressing more than 700 laymen in area meetings of Bishop's Men and other interested laymen throughout the Diocese of South Florida, Lt. Gen. John C. H. Lee (retired), executive vice-president of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, offered the challenge of active participation in the life of the Church. Said he, "We face the godless in opposition to the Christian cause. Only by our unity in work together can we overcome them. The Presiding Bishop's program of evangelism calls us."

His simulitudes to army life were striking in view of his own experience in World Wars I and II. "The world looks to us for help," he stated, "and if we are going to be worthy, as soldiers in Christ's army, we must produce, continue to give, and sacrifice as a means of maintaining our own strength."

In reference to draftees in the last war he said, "Records show that when men were asked their preference as to religious belief, 94% requested Christian. Allowing for 2 or 3 per cent Jewish, you see that few men were actually scoffers toward religion. Basically, American men are believers; the war taught us that. It is our task to reach them and put them to work for Christ."

Bishop-Coadjutor Louttit continued the thought of evangelism and strengthening of the Church's work. "We must continue to grew together in our diocese, for if one fails, all fail, and when one church succeeds, all succeed," he said. Bishop Louttit, a member of the National Council planning committee for the Episcopal broadcast, emphasized the purpose of the "Great Scenes from Great Plays" and the necessity for local cooperation. "This is our first effort," he stated, "in such a definite way. Authorities assured us that such a program is tops in radio. It must have your interest and active participation when we beginning getting results of it, as we shall."

Chairman of the Bishop's Advisory Committee on Laymen's Work in South Florida and chairman at the area meetings, Albert Roberts told of the increase of interest among laymen. "Four years ago the total attendance at the first of these area meetings was 250. This year we have met with more than 700 men," he said. "That is evidence enough how this thing is taking hold in South Florida."

He outlined the diocesan program of action for 1948-49 as planned by the laymen at the annual laymen's conference. A definite activity is laid out for each month from September to June within the scope of laymen.

The last of the seven area meetings was held in the new parish house of St. Timothy's Church, a growing Negro mission in Daytona Beach. The Rev. M. Bartlett Cochran is vicar of the host mission. This was the first gathering of this nature to be held in the new building consecrated by Bishop Wing late last spring.

EVANGELISM PROGRAM AT ST. JOHN'S IN THE VILLAGE

New York, N. Y.—In an attempt to reach the lapsed and unchurched in the immediate community (the Greenwich Village area of New York City) St. John's Church has engaged Brother Giles, of the Order of St. Francis, to canvass every apartment and house in the neighborhood. For the past four weeks Brother Giles has called at every house four blocks in every direction around the Church. Over two hundred families have been thus discovered. His work continues throughout October. A follow-up has already begun by the rector, the Rev. Charles H. Graf, the associate, the Rev. E. J. M. Nutter, and the lay assistant, Mr. Carrel Dakin. Then the new families will be invited, by members of the parish, to attend services.

BISHOP HUBBARD ATTENDS ANGLICAN YOUTH DINNER

Detroit, Mich.—The Rt. Rev. Russell S. Hubbard, suffragan bishop of the Diocese of Michigan, was the speaker at a fellowship dinner of the Anglican Young People's Association of the Essex (Canada) Deanery, held on Wednesday, October 6, in the Church of the Ascension, Windsor, Ontario. Nearly 200 were present, including ten Canadian clergymen. The Essex Deanary A. Y. P. A. hold frequent fellowship meetings similar to gatherings of Episcopal young people, and it is hoped that some means may be worked out of having joint meetings between the youth of the United States and Canada from time to time.

DIOCESE OF VIRGINIA ELECTS SUFFRAGAN

Richmond, Va.—The Rev. Robert Fisher Gibson, Jr., D. D., Dean of the School of Theology of the University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn., was unanimously elected Suffragan Bishop of the Diocese of Virginia, at a Diocesan Council held at St. James Church, on Oct. 27.

This action followed the third ballot which resulted in 56 out of 97 clerical votes, and 70 out of 108 lay votes.

Notified immediately by telephone while the Council was still in special session, Dean Gibson said that he would have to consider the matter for some time, due to the situation at Sewanee at this time. However, he told the Committee that he would visit the Diocese soon and consult with Rt. Rev. F. D. Goodwin, Bishop of the Diocese of Virginia.

CONFERENCE OF CHURCH WORKERS MEETS IN PHILADELPHIA

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Nineteenth Annual Conference of Church Workers among our Negro brethren of the Province of Washington was held at St. Barnabas' Church, Germantown, Pa., the Rev. E. Sydnor Thomas, D. D., rector of the parish, from October 6 to 8, respectively. The Rev. Edgar C. Young, Th. D., S. T. D., of the Bishop Payne Divinity School, Petersburg, Va., is its president, the Rev. Aston Hamilton, D. D., its vice-president (of Richmond), the Rev. David H. Croll of Annapolis, Md., its secretary, and the Rev. Jesse F. Anderson of Philadelphia, Pa., its treasurer.

The Provincial Conference opened on Wednesday night with a Service of Solemn Evensong conducted by Dr. Thomas, and welcome addresses were made by the Revs. Dr. J. M. Niblo (representing the Bishop of the Diocese), J. Quentin Jackson of the Mt. Zion Baptist Church (representing the Community), and the rector of the parish, and the response was made by the Rev. William D. Turner of Philadelphia. The conference sermon was delivered by the Rev. Richard D. Martin, B. D., rector of Grace Church, Norfolk, Va.

Thursday and Friday were given over to the many sessions of the Conference agenda, the theme of the meetings being "Stewardship in Action." The conference president in his annual address spoke of the many needs of Church—more clergy, more young men from all of our parishes to study for the priesthood, a greater need for individual evangelization, more opportunities for the use of our manpower, more increased self-support, and that we had made satisfactory contribution of members to the missionary field. Addresses were also made by Mrs. L. Cheatham, president of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Conference, by the Rev. Joseph W. Nicholson, Ph. D., of the Bishop Payne Divinity School, on "The Call of the Ministry; also by the Rev. Dr. Tollie Caution, our secretary of Negro Work on "The Status Quo of our Negro Work" showing its growth all over the country; by the Rev. William Jefferys, Jr., of the Society of the Reconciliation on "Our Need of Fellowship", and also by Mr. Reuben Clay of St. Phillip's Church, Richmond, Va., on "The Use of Laymen in the Church"—all of the addresses calling for much discussion on them.

The Conference was doubly favored with two helpful addresses by bishops; one by Bishop Remington, suffragan bishop of Pennsylvania and the other by Bishop Bravid W. Harris of the Missionary District of Liberia and who spoke of his work.

All the officers of the Conference were reelected, except the secretary and the Rev. Charles W. Fox, Jr., of Baltimore, Md., was elected in his stead.

IOWA TO WAGE $1,000,000 CAMPAIGN

Des Moines, Iowa—As a result of action taken by the Diocesan Convention in Iowa last May a $1,000,000 campaign is being launched late in October by the Episcopal Advancement Corporation of Iowa. The diocese will observe its centennial in 1953, and the full amount for support of its activities is expected to be in hand by that time, Bishop Elwood L. Haines has announced.

To meet most pressing needs, the 1948 phase of this effort is concentrating upon the achievement of a $500,000 goal, with accent on youth indicated by a total allocation of $240,000 for the establishment of adequate student centers at the State University of Iowa, at Grinnell College, and at State Teachers' College.

The remainder of the 1948 objective is allocated to St. Katharine's School in Davenport, which was established by Bishop Perry in 1863, as a non-profit school for young women; to St. Monica's School in Des Moines, which operates as a receiving home for girls who come to it from broken homes; to the School of Nursing at St. Luke's Hospital in Davenport, to Bishop Morrison Lodge, at Clear Lake, which operates as a training center for both youths and adults, and for expansion activities, including new churches and the training of a native ministry.

In presenting the program to those of the diocese, Bishop Haines says:

"Our land is God's land. We are but stewards. Here in Iowa the Episcopal Church will soon complete the first hundred years of its stewardship. Much has been accomplished, but the record is only a prologue.

"We must enter upon a new century of service strong in faith and spirit . . . and with full understanding of the opportunities and responsibilities ahead.

"The program of the Episcopal Advancement Corporation of Iowa represents practical planning for tomorrow. By accepting its challenge we shall justify our stewardship."

DESPERATE NEEDS FOR MISSIONARY PERSONNEL

The attached statement by the Overseas Department of the National Council points out present desperate needs for missionary personnel in the Philippine Islands. Bishop Binsted has said repeatedly, and Bishop Wilmer while in New York recently said the same thing, . . . that "There is an unparalleled opportunity for development of the Church's work in the Islands."

The Overseas Department statement makes two important points: the need for increased missionary giving, to be reflected in the results of this year's Every Member Canvass, and the need for consecrated men and women to volunteer for missionary service.

Future Personnel Needs of the Philippine Episcopal Church

Bishop Binsted has notified the Overseas Department that he should have the following new workers as soon as possible. It is to be hoped that the missionary giving of the Church will be large enough so that they may be provided.

There is an unparalleled opportunity for development of the Church's work in the Philippine Islands. Not only is the work of the Episcopal Church expanding, but also cooperation with the Philippine Independent Church promises great things. The Concordat with the Philippine Independent Church at the time of their receiving historic Orders of the Church, called for the training of their candidates for the Sacred Ministry in the seminaries of our Church. Most of them will receive this training in St. Andrew's Seminary, Manila.

The war left the Philippines a place of devastation. Slowly, Church buildings, hospitals, and other properties are being rebuilt. The communicants of our Church in the Philippines are enthusiastic, and their morale is very high.

To meet these opportunities we are sure that there are scores of Episcopalians who will want to respond to the call and go out to assume positions of leadership.

MEETING OF THE EXAMINING CHAPLAINS OF THE SEVENTH PROVINCE

Camp Crucis, Texas.—The Diocese of Dallas, through the Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Avery Mason, was the host to a meeting of Examining Chaplains in the Seventh Province at Camp Crucis, Texas, September 7 and 8, 1948. The chairman of each Diocesan Board or his representative, was invited by Dr. Claude A. Beasley, the Provincial Representative on the Joint Commission on Theological Education. The following Dioceses and Missionary Districts reported:

The Diocese of Texas, The Rev. Lawrence L. Brown; the Diocese of Arkansas, The Rev. Roland Moncure; the Diocese of Oklahoma, The Rev. Joseph S. Ewing; the Diocese of Dallas, the Rev. Claude A. Beesley, the Rev. C. Gresham Harmion, the Rev. William H. Fox; the Missionary District of Salina, the Rev. Charles E. Wilcox; the Missionary District of North Texas, the Rev. Galen H. Onstad.

The purpose of the meeting was to discuss problems of common interest and to consider suggestions made by the Joint Commission on Theological Education. Dr. Beesley presided at the meetings and the Rev. Joseph Ewing was appointed secretary. This was the first of these meetings to be held in accordance with the desires of the Joint Commission. The chaplains present were all impressed with the unanimity of opinion that was expressed. They resolved that it was time well spent.

The following resolutions and suggestions were adopted unanimously:

1. That the resolution of the Joint Commission on Theological Education regarding the ordination of deacons before the completion of their theological studies be upheld. And that we further resolve that Canon 34, Sec. 5, Par. 5, be rigidly enforced so that no candidate shall be recommended for ordination to the dioconate before the completion of his seminary course or its equivalent.

2. We do not favor the formation of a Provincial Board of Examining Chaplains, but do see great value in corporate consultation. We therefore resolve that the Provincial Representative on the Joint Commission for Theological Education call a conference of the Examining Chaplains of the various Dioceses and Missionary District in the province at least once every trienium.

3. In regard to the examining of candidates for Holy Orders, we resolve that the emphasis should be placed upon the candidate's ability to interpret in terms of preaching, teaching and pastoral care, the knoweldge he has gained from his theological education as the basis for determining his fitness to become a priest in the church.

4. Inasmuch as the Board of Examining Chaplains must pass on the intellectual qualifications of candidates for Holy Orders before ordination, and may be asked by the Bishop to supervise his studies, we feel that the Board of Examining Chaplains should have an early personal contact with each postulant before he begins his theological education.

5. In regard to the time for holding examinations, we feel that it is impractical to set up a uniform schedule. The distance from the seminaries makes it impossible to hold examinations during the school year in this Province.

6. Owing to the fact that many mature men who have been successful in professional life are offering themselves and their time to the ministry of the Church, we request that the Joint Commission have published a course of study and a reading list for older men unable to take a full course of study in the Seminary.

7. We request that the Joint Commission reissue the pamphlet "Admission to the Ministry" which we feel to be very valuable.

8. It is the experience of the Examining Chaplains at this conference that the greatest weakness in the academic preparation of the candidates for Holy Orders is their ignorance of the Bible.

9. We resolved that the New Syllabus for theological study should include in accordance with the canons a reading knowledge of the New Testament in Greek, together with special knowledge of two Gospels and three Epistles.

10. We resolve that the format of Sec. C of the Syllabus on the History of the Church in America should be changed in order to bring it in line with the other section on Church History to stress the importance of the American Church, and that a sub section be added requiring a knowledge of the high points in the history of the candidate's diocese.

11. We recommend that the following electives be added to the Canon: 1. Church Architecture. 2. Ecclesiastical Art. 3. Advanced Canon Law.

12. The Conference of Examining Chaplains in the Seventh Province wish to commend the Commission on its excellent work on the revision of the Syllabus for Theological Education, and feels it is a distinct improvement over the previous syllabus.

13. The Conference resolved that the secretary be instructed to send to Bishop Mason its gratitude for the hospitality of the Diocese in offering the facilities of Camp Crucis for the place of meeting and for his interest in the work.

14. The Conference resolved to extend to Dr. Beesley a vote of thanks for his work in making this meeting a success.

LAY MISSIONARIES AT WORK

Bessemer, Ala.—The official diocesan journal of the diocese of Atlanta has on the front cover of the September number a picture of the newest diocesan congregation at Hartwell, Georgia. Charles and Mary Eleanor Kidd and their three children form a large part of this little flock. The formation of the mission is due almost entirely to the interest and zeal of this family, who loved their Church so much that they were unwilling to be separated from it when they moved to a locality where there was no Episcopal church. So they got busy and rounded up a few others and formed a congregation.

The same story has recently been repeated in south Alabama. Richard and Elizabeth Cobbs moved to Andalusia, where we have no church. They were determined to have one, so they exerted strenuous efforts by which a congregation has been organized, a lot has been purchased, and there is $1,400.00 on hand towards a church building. There are about 27 members of the congregation, and an active branch of the Woman's Auxiliary has been formed.

The most interesting feature of the two incidents is that in both cases the missionaries were former communicants of the same parish, the Church of the Holy Comforter, Gadsden, Alabama. Here is real Evangelism.

"GREAT SCENES ALL NAME IMPLIES"

New York, N. Y.—Magee Adams, radio critic of the Cincinnati Enquirer, headed a column last week, "Great Scenes All That Names Implies; Sponsors Praised." "The drama lineup," Mr. Adams said, "has gained handsomely by the addition of a newcomer, GREAT SCENES FROM GREAT PLAYS.

"In its way, the production may be one of the most unusual of the season. Although stars alone cannot make it that, GREAT SCENES has its full share of them. Dramatically the newcomer is exceptional for being what its name suggests. That was shown in the premiere. Instead of trying the usual, compressing Cyrano into a half hour, the dramatization was limited to two scenes. That wise emphasis, plus Hampden's acting, netted a performance eminently satisfying in itself, that had the flavor of the complete play.

"For the familiar material with which radio drama abounds, GREAT SCENES points to an admirable solution of the chronic problem of adaptation. Certainly, choice of significant scenes is a treatment that promises to lift radio drama out of its compression straitjacket.

"Just as unusual as the dramatic handling, is sponsorship by the Protestant Episcopal Church. 'Promotional' may be too harsh a word for the objective of the series. At any rate, it is intended to direct the attention of listeners toward sources of spiritual help. It does that in dignified and broadly human 'commercial' text. Something truly unusual has been added to radio when a religious body can so skilfully combine fresh dramatic treatment and spiritual promotion."

"WHY THE BACK DOOR"?

on a National Radio Hookup. For many weeks now we have been prepared to listen to "The Church Speaks," and the result is the old story of Balaam and his ass. We as churchmen have been told that the people on the back streets, the unchurched who need a religious program will turn it off as soon as they realize it is a religious program. What then about the Lutheran Hour and the Catholic Hour? And many other religious programs such as "The Greatest Story Ever Told" and many local religious programs? These people listen intently, week after week, to these programs. They are not smeared by great scenes from secular plays. The preaching and the teaching has to do at once with the salvation of people in a time when we are saying that Christ and His Gospel is the way out.

We ought to know ere this that the kind of diplomacy used by politicians and statesmen is not the diplomacy that appeals to people spiritually hungry. There are great preachers among our Bishop and clergy who, if they had opportunity, would appeal to the unchurched and the indifferent, and make them want to listen.

Does the Episcopal Church really believe that the present radio program will reach the unchurched, or is it just our cut and try policy again? A family of average intelligence from the hills of Kentucky has just said "slush, we read thet story in its entirety and what has it to do with our going to Church next Sunday"? A Presbyterian clergyman calls it a colossal failure and poor judgment. A Roman Priest just smiled and walked away. And yet just as I write, a stenographer from one of our great offices has just called and asked me to dictate, over the telephone, a grace to be used before meals. She had tried the various libraries in the city to get one. Maybe the Church should broadcast a few good "Grace Before Meals." Yes, great religion is just as simple as that. And the thing that people are asking for. They do want to know about the Church, her ways and her teaching, but the ways of the Church are not found in a secular play with a plug at the end "Come to my Church next Sunday." Is the Friday night program designed to fill the Episcopal Churches, or is it the means to present the Church as an instrument to save people's souls and give them comfort in these trying and difficult days. It looks as though we are trying an end run when a plunge through the middle would reach the goal. People are no more deceived by an invitation to enter the Church through its back door, whether that be a parish house, a Men's Club or a Radio Program.

would be great let him be your servant." A ministry may lose much of its charming power through self-absorption. Labor in the Master's vineyard is not for the advancement of laborer, rather for the good of the vineyard and the Lord's glory. Neither Episcopal robes nor priestly robes, nor yet the garb of the nun will insure the proper use of the golden moments of this golden today. If our heritage is bitter we will remember it is our own building—and day by day. A bitter memory may lead to poignancy and remorse and these to the office of the psychiatrist—sometimes the home of the insane is not far away.

A worthy, priceless heritage is possible for all because today belongs to everyone. No one would despair because he does not have his neighbor's material. For a heritage to be one's own it must be built with one's own material—not another's. Many a beautiful and worthy heritage has been built with material that was skimpy indeed. However narrow the environment one may live loftily. In the long years such builders have been high on the list of unknown heroes and heroines.

How do we go about it? Well, there must be no evil tongue, no lying and slandering, no advantage taken of another's ignorance or misfortune—hourly honesty, "on the square" with both foe and friend. And there must be the regal quality of loyalty, loyalty to parent and child, husband, wife, neighbor, God, country. This is the routine as tomorrow becomes today. Thus will the memory store house of yesterday be that much enriched. The richer it becomes the greater the incentive to increase its wealth. Such wealth is priceless and imperishable. Moreover it is part of one's self and becomes abiding joy.

What else may we do? Submit the human will to the divine will. This submission must be complete—and today, ever continuous. To what this submission may lead the human mind is not given to know. It matters not how dark the night and how rough the way if the human hand is in the divine hand. Sorrow may be sufficient to divide asunder, but all is well if the soul is cleansed and sanctified and thus brought nearer the great Presence. That great and worldly ambition that has for years been an idol may have to be sacrificed on the altar of loving obedience; but the pain of the sacrifice is forgotten and lost in the joy of the new birth.

NEVILL JOYNER.

lost heart and have lost faith in God's control and power and beneficent purpose. It happened many, many times in the experience of the people of Israel. Indeed, one of the primary functions of Israel's prophets was to keep faith, was to keep hope alive, among the people. And the challenge the spiritual leaders of ancient Israel faced and discharged so creditably is the identical challenge thrust upon the spiritual leaders of the people today.

Ninety-nine years ago Queen Adelaide of England solemnly declared: "I have only one desire: to play the part of Marie Antoinette with bravery in the coming revolution." In 1848—one hundred years ago—Lord Shaftesbury opined, "Nothing can save the British Empire from shipwreck." A year later Disraeli declared: "In industry, commerce, and agriculture, there is no hope." In 1851, the year before he died, the Duke of Wellington remarked, "I thank God I will be spared from seeing the consummation of ruin that is gathering around." Note these statements, and then recall that within the space of a few years England entered upon her period of most resplendent glory, the Victorian Era, when the Union Jack mantled the globe and the sun never set on the flag of England.

So it has always been. Always in trying times some men, even prominent and great ones, have lost faith in the age in which they lived. But remember this as well, that invariably in the same difficult and trying times, other men have remained stedfast and unshaken in their conviction that God was still master of the universe, was still powerful to effect His will, was working in and through the events of the stirring years His purpose to achieve. It was often only a faithful handful that didn't lose heart, that kept the faith when faith was hard to maintain. But ever and again one finds in history that the faith and hope of the faithful remnant, the handful of souls who dared to believe in God's continuing interest and power and control, were justified and proved to be true.

So, I'm confident, it will be for us, if we will be but true. Though in all truth the days ahead present ominous prospects, the Christian man is girded and sustained by the unshakable conviction that God is still sovereign and that God is working His purpose out, in His own way and at His own self-chosen tempo, even now in our faith-testing times. Men may make history, but the Christian knows that God directs its course. No blue-sky, fair-weather creed, the Christian's faith is designed precisely for such anxious days as these in which our lives are cast. And we who call ourselves Christian men shall be true to our faith and acting with sanity and sense if we hang on tenaciously to God who at all times is hanging on to us; if we align our lives with His invincible purpose—a fair world for all men; if we come to Him seeking His own strength for living our days with equanimity and grace and poise; and if we pray Him to grant us wisdom to view the disturbed and unsettled scene about us with faith and courage and not with stupid, blind optimism on the one hand or with equally fatuous pessimism on the other.

On the eve of the First World War as one by one nations took up arms against each other, Sir Edward Grey, the British Foreign Minister, said with infinite sadness, "The lights are going out over Europe." Now if you think in some downcast moment that the lights are going out nowadays all over the world, our word to you is to do the manly and the Christian thing: pull yourself together and get hold of yourself and, in the words of St. Peter, "gird up the loins of your mind", lest you fall into the unpardonable sin, the sin against the Holy Spirit; the sin which will not be forgiven either in this life or the world to come. If these days you are inclined to wax faint in heart, brace up and be of good cheer and be not dismayed, for God, not Evil, is sovereign and king, God's good purpose is unalterably fixed, His will is undefeatable, His power is invincible, and His love for mankind is sealed and sure. Be not guilty of the unpardonable sin by denying God now when we need His wisdom and guidance, His power and help, more than we need anything else. Instead, remember the radiant words written on a scrap of paper found in the pocket of the battle-soiled uniform of a dead Australian soldier:

"Ye that have faith to look with fearless eyes
Beyond the tragedy of a world at strife,
And know that out of death and night shall rise
The dawn of ampler life:
Rejoice, whatever anguish rend the heart,
That God has given you the priceless dower
To live in these great times and have your part
In Freedom's crowning hour,
That ye may tell your sons who see the light
High in the heavens—their heritage to take—
"I saw the powers of darkness take their flight;
I saw the morning break."

GOD HOLDS the key of all unknown,
And I am glad;
If other hands should hold the key,
Or if he trusted it to me,
I might be sad.

What if tomorrow's cares were here
Without its rest!
I'd rather He unlocked the day;
And, as the hours swing open, say,
"My will is best."

The very dimness of my sight
Makes me secure;
For, groping in my misty way,
I feel His hand; I hear Him say,
"My help is sure."

I cannot read His future plans;
But this I know;
I have the smiling of His face,
And all the refuge of His grace,
While here below.

Enough! this covers all my wants,
And so I rest!
For what I cannot, He can see,
And in His care I saved shall be,
For ever blest.

TO GIVE BALANCE OF VIEWPOINT

Sir: It is not often that I find myself in fundamental disagreement with either the editorials or special articles in the Southern Churchman. In the case of your editorial of October 2 on "Parish Communions," however, I feel that some comment is essential in order to give our people who read the Southern Churchman the balance of viewpoint to which they are entitled.

The expression of honest differences of this sort seems to be wholesome and helpful. I am therefore enclosing a reply to your editorial which I hope you may see fit to publish in the "Post Haste" or other column of our much beloved Church paper. Should you care to use the foregoing as an explanatory introduction to my comment, you are of course welcome to do so.

Re: Parish Communions

Your editorial on "Parish Communions" (issue of October 2) seems to suggest the sort of controversy which used to characterize THE CHRONICLE, rather than the traditional soundness of the SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN. Certainly its over-all picture of lost idealism in the Blessed Sacrament does not apply to the parishes and dioceses in which the Southern Churchman is chiefly circulated. Where, in our Virginia midst, for example, are "restrictions unknown to the Book of Common Prayer placed upon reception of the Sacrament, so that customarily only the priest makes his Communion"? And do let's be a little more accurate when referring editorily to the Church's doctrine! It is substantially true, of course, that the priest and people "do celebrate and make here before Thy Divine Majesty, with these Thy holy gifts, which we now offer unto Thee, the memorial Thy Son has commanded us to make"; and pleading the merits of "His one oblation of Himself once offered," we offer and present unto Him (as the necessary reciprocation of our own fidelity) "our souls and bodies, to be a reasonable, holy, and living sacrifice" unto Him. But it is NOT true that "the congregation and the priest together consecrate the Bread and the Wine," for that power and authority has been given to the priest alone, in his Holy Orders. Otherwise there would be no reason for confining the celebration of the Holy Communion to those in priests' Orders, and, indeed, no meaning to the title of "priest" itself.

There is no need to minimize the sacrificial sanctity of the Holy Communion in order to stress the corporate act of fellowship and worship inherent therein. Indeed, without the sacramental Presence of the atoning Christ the Holy Communion would have no more corporate meaning or value than that of any other religious service. It is this very failure to discern the peculiar sacredness of the Blessed Sacrament, I think, which causes what you refer to as "tragically many of the congregation" to leave the 11 o'clock service before the Sacrament is administered. Incidentally, of course, this is an act of thoughtlessness which may be easily corrected by a well worded explanation and request from the rector. However, those who thus leave the family Table before its sacramental Guest arrives, are not usually those who have communed earlier in the day, as you seem to infer. Certainly, no one should be criticized for receiving the Blessed Sacrament according to his own conviction and need, and those who find special inspiration in the early morning hour and fasting Communion, do so in the goodly fellowship of saints and centuries past.

Your editorial is presumably concerned with the possibilities and essentials of a more complete corporate Communion of our people. It is a concern which every thoughtful priest and layman shares. But if the sort of "Parish Communion" suggested is to be taken seriously, it must surely challenge the mental agreement of even the most liberal Churchman! The vestry, according to your picture, are seated in the choir stalls (since the value of a musical setting is questioned), or else within the Rail, where chairs are placed in the considerable space which is non-existent in most sanctuaries. The bread and wine are brought in from some outside room at the psychological moment by the wardens, the Credence or Holy Table not being a logical prerepository at this Parish Communion.

But why all this ado over the ceremonial of the Lord's Supper—for that is what it amounts to. Why must the people be "represented" within literal arm's reach of the Altar, when they are their own representatives within sight and sound of all that is said and done in a building carefully arranged for the purpose? After all, the liturgy is authoritatively assigned to priest and people by the Prayer Book itself, and the spiritual reality of our fellowship in Christ is neither affected nor determined by a few feet of psysical space!

The Four Duties Of A Christian Today

THE PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS TO THE CONVOCATION OF YORK

By The MOST REV. C. F. GARBETT,

Archbishop of York

Since we last met the Lambeth Conference has assembled and dispersed. In some ways it was the most important which has yet been held. It had larger numbers, and was more representative of different races than its predecessors. And at a time of crisis, after an interval of eighteen years, it had to deal with a number of exceptionally urgent and difficult problems. The resolutions and reports which come from it call for careful study. I propose that in due course many of them should be brought before the Convocation. I think it will be an advantage if the more important are discussed in full Synod, so as to enable the bishops both of the Upper and Lower Houses who were members of the Conference to make their contribution.

The resolutions and reports are practical, there is nothing very exciting or world-shaking about them, but because of this they are morely likely to be of permanent value. They attempt to give practical Christian guidance on actual problems in the Church and the world. I hope they will be read and discussed at Chapters, Ruri-decanal Conferences, and spoken and preached about in the parishes. I am certain that all bishops present at the Conference are unanimous in their conviction that this six weeks of prayer and counsel at Lambeth made us all feel that in the Anglican Communion we are members of a great worldwide fellowship.

The Church and War

During the last few weeks the nation has realized with a great shock of surprise that a third world war is a horrible and ghastly possibility which cannot be ignored. The extension of the period of national service, the launching of a campaign for recruiting, the plans for defense, and the warnings uttered by responsible statesmen have brought home the danger to all. When Germany surrendered three and a half years ago even the least optimistic were confident that many years would pass before the world was again menaced by war, that during this interval Europe would recover from its wounds and strong international defenses would be built against another ruinous conflict. But now it seems possible that this period of peace may be far shorter than we had anticipated.

Once again, therefore, the Christian is called upon to think out and to restate his attitude to war. He hates and abhors it. He can make his own the affirmation of two Lambeth Conferences that "as a method of settling international disputes it is incompatible with the teaching and example of our Lord Jesus Christ." But he cannot stop with this. For he has to decide what he ought to do if all that is most valuable in civilization and in his own nation is threatened with destruction.

Pious resolutions will not deflect by an inch the will of a state bent on violence. William Temple wrote in the last war.

"Though you cannot advance the Kingdom of God by fighting, you can prevent Christian civilization, or a civilization on the way to becoming Christian, from being destroyed, and that is what we are now engaged in. If you look at the New Testament carefully, there can be no doubt that there is a theology of the state as well as of the Church, and that it is our duty to do as citizens in support of the state things which it would be inappropriate to do as Churchmen in support of the Church and its cause."

The Christian, therefore, must ask not merely what he ought to do as an individual Christian, but what he ought to do as a Christian citizen with responsibilities to the community of which he is a member.

The Changed Nature of Modern War and Defeat

The question is more difficult to answer than it would have been in the days when war was the sport of kings and was often waged without any serious interference with the everyday life of the ordinary people of the belligerent nations. Jane Austen was able to write her novels with the barest of references to the Napoleonic wars then being fought. War is very different now from what it was in the middle ages or in the nineteenth century. Its purpose is always the same—to bend or break the will of the enemy. It is now seen that this can be done by means other than by brute force, so we have the cold war as distinct from the shooting war.

In the cold war physical force is always in the background; it is threatened, but not used. The weapons are neither bombs nor bullets, but lying propaganda, slander, abuse, threats, the sowing of suspicion between allies, a whispering campaign conducted by fifth columnists. It is a psychological offensive against the nerves of a whole nation. When it is successful the people against whom it is directed break under the strain, they distrust their leaders, they become suspicious of one another, they lose their resolution and confidence; and then undermined with doubt and fear, they abandon all resistance, and retreat from position to position in panic, until at last the enemy, without firing a shot or losing a man, is able to occupy their country.

If the shooting war should have to supplement the cold war, it is very different in character from what it was in the past. It is directed not only against the armed forces, but against the whole population. In totalitarian warfare there is no distinction between the soldier and the civilian. Weapons now used cannot discriminate. The atomic bomb which killed or injured 180,000 in Hiroshima made no distinction between men, women and young children. Obliteration bombing wipes out whole cities. And we are told that since the war the destructive power and range of weapons of death have been greatly increased.

Realization of the horrible bestiality of modern war tends to make some feel it is better to surrender, and to accept any terms however ruinous, rather than suffer the ordeal of war. But against this we must remember that the fate of a defeated nation today is immeasurably worse than it would have been in the past. Then it would have meant humiliation, loss of prestige, the payment of large sums of money, the temporary occupation by the army of the enemy, and probably some surrender of territory; but when the fightng was over most of the citizens were secure from harm, and the defeated nation was left with good hope of recovery.

But today the result of defeat by a totalitarian Power would be very different, the nation would lose its freedom, its leaders would be shot or sent to concentration camps, its able-bodied men carried off to forced labor, its children taken from their parents to be brought up in the homes of their enemy, its industries dismantled, and the remnant of the people left in the country starved and terrorized into submission. Victory by a cold war results in a more gradual and camouflaged degradation of the conquered; victory through a shooting war brings immediately and nakedly the consequences of defeat. But the end is always the same—the ruin and enslavement of a people. This was the fate of the countries occupied by the Nazis, this was what Hitler intended for England, and this is what would fall on any country which in the future becomes a victim to totalitarian aggression.

The Duty of the Christian

In view both of the nature of modern war and of the results of defeat, it is more easy to see what the duty of the Christian should be:

(1) First, in accordance with the will of his Lord, and mindful of the horrors of modern war, the Christian must do his utmost to preserve peace and to remove the causes of war.

Whether the war of aggression is cold or shooting in nature, it is sinful as against the laws of love, truth and mercy. The Christian will always refuse to speak of war as inevitable; to regard it as such brings it nearer. I can think of at least three occasions in my lifetime when many spoke of war as inevitable, but the danger presently passed away. The Christian must never give up hope of peace; he will support the continuation of negotiations, however, exasperating their length, while there remains any chance of a settlement. He will do his best even at the cost of great sacrifice, to remove legitimate causes of grievance.

He will try to see and appreciate all that is good in countries other than his own. He will do all in his power to remove the suspicion and fear which lead to war. And as a Christian he will do his utmost to strengthen the bonds of fellowship with Christians in other nations, so that united in loyalty to the One Master together they may seek for peace and ensue it.

(2) Secondly, the Christian sees in the unbridled sovereignty of nations one of the chief dangers to peace. The danger of war will always be close as long as each nation claims absolute sovereignty, with no regard to any law except that of its own self-interest. Against this the Christian asserts the sovereignty of God above the nations and of His law of righteousness, which all should honor and obey.

The Christian, therefore, should support the United Nations as an attempt to limit national sovereignty. The frequent and unforeseen use of the veto in the interests of national sovereignty has gravely jeopardized both the work and influence of United Nations. Unless the veto is restricted the United Nations will fail, as the League of Nations failed, to preserve peace. So far its achievements have been disappointing, but the Christian must continue to support it as the only existing check on the claims of aggressive and unrestrained nationalism.

(3) While never losing sight of the goal of universal peace, the Christian should support all proposals which may remove or reduce some of the worst horrors of war. He must, therefore, press strongly for the outlawry of the atomic bomb. This weapon stands apart from all others in the extent of the ruin and devastation it can cause in the shortest time. Its use in war may result in the end of our civilization and the reversion of those who survive to primitive conditions of existence. When a nation possesses it the temptation to use it without warning will be very great, for victory may thus be assured before moving a ship or a soldier.

A competent Commission has produced a plan for atomic control, but so far all progress has been hindered by Russia, whose representatives objected to the international inspection so absolutely essential to security and confidence. There are grave doubts whether the latest Russian plan would give the proposed Atomic Development Authority effective control. But whether Russia agrees or not, the setting up of the Authority should not be delayed. This is a matter of extreme urgency; soon it may be too late. There are a sufficient number of nations ready to join the proposed Authority to make a strong deterrent to any state which proposed to use the bomb. Russia could always join later on if she so wished, but on the terms laid down by the Authority.

The Christian also should press for some international agreement which would forbid obliteration bombing, a form of warfare which causes untold ruin and agony, followed by years in which the homeless herd together in shelters and cellars.

(4) But the Christian, with all his hatred of war and passionate desire for peace, must recognize that war is not the worst of all evils. The utter degradation of man, the loss of human rights, and the trampling under foot of all that is righteous and true is an evil worse than war. The Christian must, therefore, be ready to resist to the last the unjust demands of an aggressive totalitarianism.

This means that in an armed world the democratic state must also be armed. Without arms it can neither defend itself nor make its influence felt on behalf of justice and freedom. Mr. Wheeler Bennett, in his remarkable book, "Munich: A Prologue to Tragedy," summing up the lessons of that unhappy time, writes that if war in the future is to be avoided "disarmament must follow and not precede the establishment of an effective system of security; that never again must any peace-loving power become so weak that either individually or in alliance with others, it is unable to say 'no' to a political aggressor at the earliest symptom of his aggressive designs; that it should have it within its power to insist that disputes be settled with equity and justice"; and in his closing chapter he returns to this, pointing out that because of Britain's weakness she was compelled "to condone chicanery, aggression, and injustice, and to become an accessory to these outrages." Weakness and timidity encourage an aggressor, while protests and arguments excite his contempt unless behind them there stands the resolution of an armed people ready to fight, suffer and die, rather than passively submit to the murder of their nation and the enslavement of its citizens.

Berlin

Berlin today is a symbol of the cold war now being waged with deadly and ruthless determination by an aggressive police state against democracy. The cold war must be defeated by the cold and steady nerves of a people convinced of the justice of their cause. Grave moral issues are at stake. If the allies withdraw now from Berlin they will betray the people who have trusted them, their solemn promises in future will be regarded as of less value than scraps of paper, and their retreat will lead to further demands and surrenders, until all Europe is under the power of militant communism, and then the hour of our own doom cannot be long postponed.

That is why a peace-loving Labor Government is now calling upon the nation to prepare to resist aggression, and that is why it is the duty of Christians to take their place with their fellow citizens in defending their heritage of Western civilization, which has so largely come from Christian sources and has been influenced so profoundly in its development by Christian ideals.

In supporting the Government in taking all necessary precautions against attack, we shall do so without hatred for any nation. We want friendship with Russia as well as with those who once were our enemies. We hope the

The National Election And Race Relations

We have purposely waited until after the national election to write of the muddied waters that have been stirred up in our country this past summer and fall. Whatever one's choice of political party or candidate, surely all right thinking men and women must feel that race relations in America were tragically harmed by this campaign. The anti-Negro venom has been scarcely concealed in many speeches. Good will stored up over decades has been dissipated. The earnest, though slow, work of fine men and women of both races looking forward to growing inter-racial tolerance and understanding has crumbled. Recent difficulties over housing in Detroit and Chicago show that this is a national problem, not just a sectional one.

Now that the election is over, we must face the fact that we still have to live together in America. Negroes and whites, Latin-Americans and Texans, Orientals and Californians, Roman Catholics and Protestants, Jews and Gentiles—all are Americans. We live here! We live in community!

It is also obvious that even apart from the politics of the past months, the ideal of Christian brotherhood is far from having been attained. That is not strange. America is not yet a wholly Christian land. Even the fellowship and practice of the Church is influenced and conditioned by the impact of the paganism all about us.

What shall the Church say and do in this present situation? It must face it with deep concern. It must ever proclaim boldly the ideal so succinctly stated by St. Paul, "There is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision or uncircumsion, barbarian, Scythian, bond or free, but Christ is all and in all." Yet even in stating the Christian ideal of brotherhood, the Church must not let people forget that this ideal has not been attained. Our task is to work towards its ultimate attainment.

In the present reality, the Church must recognize that the ideal will not be attained by law, but by the grace of God. Men's attitudes are concerned, and they need conversion, not agitation. Therefore the Church will begin its work with its own membership, seeking to convert them to the ideal of brotherhood which is so close to the heart of the Christian gospel.

Yet the Church must not stop here. There are fields for proper activity by the Church. Dr. Douglas S. Freeman in an editorial in the RICHMOND NEWS LEADER states these areas:

"We believe most of the fair-minded and intelligent Southerners are prepared to say, in effect—

"We have proceeded too slowly in recognizing the basic rights of Negroes and we have erred in failing to realize that while millions remain backward, many individuals have attained a standing that entitles them to much greater consideration than they have had.

"We admit the status of the Negro as a citizen of the United States and we will not deny or impede his access to Federal courts to establish his rights under the Constitution of the country.

"We recognize and shall respect these essential civil rights—that the Negro have the full protection of the law against mob violence, that he be treated in court precisely as the white man is, that he serve on juries when drawn from lists that represent both races, that he participate in public service where this can be done without pronounced social contacts, and that he have exactly the same rights to qualify, to register and to vote in primaries and in general elections that a white man possesses and without any sort of secret discrimination.

"We of the South will see to it, honestly and consistently, that the Negro gets equal pay for equal work because this is the foundation of economic security on which the development of the Negro depends. Involved in this is regard for Negro housing, which in many parts of the South is shameful. We believe if these things are assured economically, much of the agitation will end.

"We Southerners affirm, also, that equal school facilities must be equal in fact and not in theory. This puts upon the white population a heavy load, for the reason that the percentage of Negro children in the school population is much greater than the corresponding percentage of gross taxes paid by Negroes; but we are willing to meet this expense."

This fine statement is made, of course, from the viewpoint of the situation in Virginia. Dr. Freeman, indeed, draws the distinction between attitudes and problems in Virginia and in other sections of our country. But there is one area in which the Church in the entire nation can work. The Church must cooperate everywhere with all groups that seek to increase understanding between races and religious groups, and to break down prejudices, hatred and discord. At this moment when many passions are still inflamed by the past year's political maneauvering, this is perhaps the field that most immediately needs our attention. The viciousness of the past months consists in the bitterness aroused. Let us as Christians work and pray that God will heal these angry attitudes and replace them with brotherhood.

The Power Of The Law

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

Readers may remember that some time ago a Negro was admitted to the University of Oklahoma, in obedience to a decision of the Supreme Court that the state is bound to provide equal facilities for Negroes in its educational institutions.

A state court in Oklahoma has just decided that this precedent does not require that a second Negro be admitted. For the second applicant was a candidate for a degree now offered in a Negro college and is therefore presumably able to secure "equal" opportunities with white students.

The first Negro was a candidate for a degree not now offered by any Negro college in the state. It must be mentioned also that the first Negro is now permitted to attend classes in the white university but must sit in an antechamber. Thus the policy of segregation is guarded, while the court's decision in favor of equal opportunity is also obeyed.

These instances nicely reveal both the power and the limits of law in affecting public morals. There are always a number of people who imagine that every ill could be cured if only the right law were passed. The fact is that the efficacy of law is strictly limited.

It is able to give non-legal customs and moral standards a precise definition and to add legal sanctions to the general sanctions by which a community punishes those who do not conform to its standards. But laws are not able to create standards beyond the conscience of a community.

No law can be enforced by legal sanctions if a total community insists on violating it. Legal sanctions are effective against only a small minority of recalcitrants.

It will be remembered that federal prohibition laws were ineffective in local communities (particularly in our large cities) where local sentiment tolerated or even enjoined the violation of the law.

We are witnessing in a similar fashion that federal laws have only limited power in changing standards on race relations. The Oklahoma case proves that a decision of a federal court is able to force a state to go slightly, but not very far, beyond the moral sentiments of the community.

This does not mean that we ought not try always to achieve a general acceptance of national standards even against the wishes of states and communities. But if we go too far in that direction we merely involve ourselves in confusion, due to community sanctioned lawlessness.

It is interesting that in Europe, Great Britain is able to maintain rigorous standards of rationing food, whereas even the most rigorous laws do not prevent "black markets" in continental nations. The difference is that in Britain there is a very high standard of civic honesty which is lacking in most continental countries.

Indeed a great many ills in such nations as France on the one hand and China on the other, which are attributed by the thoughtless to the absence of this or that constitutional machinery, are actually due to a simple lack of responsibility to the total community which no law can inculcate.

Laws are necessary instruments of the conscience of a people; but they do not create that conscience. The well-springs of morality lie deeper than law.

The Curate's Column

"COME WHENCE IT MAY"

In the small county seat where we were raised, it was the custom every Sunday evening in the summer time to hold Union Church Services on the Court House green. The ministers of the various churches in the county took turns conducting the services, and preaching the sermons. One Sunday evening, came the turn of the minister from the Cotton-Mill District of the neighboring industrial town, to preach. He ministered to a congregation of unskilled laborers, who were for the most part illiterate. His education was scarcely better than theirs.

We went to the services from a sense of duty, but, knowing the limitations of the preacher, we didn't expect to get too much good out of the sermon. From the very beginning, he seemed to justify our suspicious.

"I ain't got no eddycashun," he said, "an' I don't claim to have none. Still, you hear some o' these preachers what's eddycated 'way up in the Greeks an' the Latins, an' when they gits done, all you know is that they is right high learned, and has a good speakin' voice."

We settled back in our seat to close our ears and take a much-needed rest. How such a man could say anything worth our notice was beyond our understanding. Yet, in his next sentence, he brought us wide awake. "Howeversome little eddycashun I got," he said, "there is one thing I kin do. That is, preach the love of God."

From that point on, that is exactly what he did. In his own ungrammatical language, and in his own crude speech, he drew for us the clearest, most understandable picture of a loving Father which we have ever heard. It could only have come from a deep, understanding experience. He went even farther to apply that love most practically and directly in a plea for opportunity, understanding, and love for all men—however great, however small. His words were simple, direct, compelling.

We have heard—and forgotten—hundreds of sermons since that time, but we have never forgotten that one. We have thought of it often, and have come to the conclusion that we remember it because we have never heard greater truth from a more unexpected sourc.

That makes us think even more. We can't escape the conclusion that there is no one whom we can meet but who can teach us a little more of truth, and bring us closer to God, and to the people around us. It just doesn't do to despise anyone.

As we recollect, it was Peter, who, when his brother told him: "We have found the Messiah, Jesus of Nazareth," answered, "Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth?" Andrew answered: "Come and see." Peter came, saw, and was convinced—as have been millions of men since his time—that the carpenter of Nazareth brings the greatest of good to all mankind.

U. T. O. INCREASE

New York, N. Y.—Recent reports of the amount now in hand for the next United Thank Offering have given the impression of a large increase over the amount at the comparable period in the previous triennium. The national office of the Woman's Auxiliary calls attention to the fact that the increase, about $263,000, is actually not keeping pace with the increase in living costs. It is hoped that a considerable gain in this last year of the triennium will enable the Offering to meet the largely increased demands to be made upon it.

Reviews and Ratings of Current Films

By the PROTESTANT MOTION PICTURE COUNCIL

THE SECRET LAND

MGM's initial notification of the preview screening of "The Secret Land" was, we must admit, something short of exciting. It simply described the film as "the condensed pictorial record, in technicolor, of the U. S. Navy's 1946-47 expedition to Antarctica, commanded by Admiral Richard E. Byrd."

Very little "come-on" in that. Of course, sitting in an air-cooled studio on a hot summer's afternoon while the screen depicted scenes of glistening snow and assorted icebergs might be one way to forget the heat. And, if one stayed awake, he might see something educational. But enthralling entertainment? Exciting drama? Rollicking humor? Well, hardly!

If such were the musings of the PMPC's reviewers as they filed into the preview studio that hot September day, they were in for a delightful surprise—as you will be if you decide to take the family to see this thrilling motion picture. For here is one of those miracles of strictly "amateur" (by which we mean non-Hollywood) photography which, expertly assembled and edited, has been developed into one of the most exciting dramas you will see on the screen in this or any other year. Filmed by service cameramen, without plot or screenplay, without cinematic direction and without a single "glamor name" to enhance box-office appeal, "The Secret Land" nevertheless succeeds in providing more genuine satisfaction for filmgoers than 99% of the glossiest of Hollywood's productions.

The cast of the picture are the personnel and ships of the U. S. Navy, the 4,000 hand-picked men who sailed with Admiral Byrd on what the Navy termed its "Operation Highjump." The villain of the piece is Mother Nature herself, and the unexpectedly adventurous action develops when the men pit themselves and their ships against her persistent attempts to entrap them in her icy design for death. Spine-tingling narration supplied by Robert Montgomery, Robert Taylor and Van Heflin, war veterans all, helps to keep you on the edge of your chair while you witness such things as the sudden discovery of a warm oasis in the desert of ice, men turning to prayer amid peril, rescues at sea in the killing sub-zero waters, hurrican-driven snow that cuts like a thousand razors, and, for contrast, the shipboard humor of Uncle Sam's seadogs and the antics of those natural clowns of Antarctic, the penguins.

When Admiral Byrd returned from this scientifically significant expedition and turned over to the Navy his 300,000 feet of color film, he probably had no idea that he had here the kernal for one of the truly great pictures of the year. But somebody was smart enough to see its potential for popular screen fare. And MGM, ably assisted by the Navy's own editors and writers of commentary, have taken from the astronomical footage enough to give you 71 minutes of absorbing entertainment—to say nothing of a heap of gratuitous education!

Appropriately scheduled for release on or about Navy Day, October 27, "The Secret Land" should be put down on your must-see list when it comes your way. And be sure to take the whole family! A, Y, C.

OTHER CURRENT FILMS

Audience Suitability Ratings:
A—Adults; Y—Young People 12 to 18;
C—Children under 12

(Films starred (*) were regarded as exceptional by our reviewers.)

*AN ACT OF MURDER (Universal-International). Not at all the kind of story the title implies, this treats of the problem: Is "mercy killing" ever justified? Faced with this question in an intensely personal way is Fredric March as a strictly letter-of-the-law judge who learns from the family doctor that his beloved wife must soon die, and in great pain. The husband-and-wife relationship is beautifully portrayed, the acting superb, and the manner in which the problem is presented as absorbing as it is ethically satisfying. A.

RACHEL AND THE STRANGER (RKO). Based on the novel "Rachel" by Howard Fast, this is a tale of early American hardships, told with excellent feeling for the mood and spirit of the story. The wild wilderness, filled with equally wild Indians and animals contesting every step of the homesteaders, all give a graphic impression of life on the frontier. The pioneer flavor is produced without artificiality. An Indian attack is realistic but not overdone. Acting is good. Some folk music, woven in as a background, is highly pleasing. A, Y, C.

THE GENTLEMAN FROM NOWHERE (Columbia). A night watchman, coached by an insurance detective to impersonate a business man who absconded years before with a hugh sum of money, causes many complications in business and the home. Suspense and a surprise ending make this an entertaining mystery film. A.

ISN'T IT ROMANTIC? (Paramount). Maybe the answer is yes, especially for those who can remember 1905 in Indiana. Take three pretty daughters of a father too proud to work, three rather harmless young men and a villain who almost gets away with one of the girls and a share of the town's money, and you have the story. Will do the whole family no harm. A, Y, C.

JULIA MISBEHAVES (MGM). Good comedy, based on Margery Sharp's novel "The Nutmeg Tree." Greer Garson and Walter Pidgeon, ably assisted by Peter Lawford and Elizabeth Taylor, head a cast which makes the most of the improbable situations. Julia's misbehavior is all too evident, but it is all verbal, never immoral or harmful. It is regrettable that the leading characters so often are holding glasses of champagne, a superfluous touch of would-be worldliness that is both offensive and unnecessary. A, Y.

LARCENY (Universal-International). A tense and unpleasant drama of intrigue, swindling and racketeering in which reputable trusting people are fleeced, youth athletic centers are used as headquarters to cover up the operations of criminals, and the emotions and loyalty of a war widow are betrayed. A.

THE LOVES OF CARMEN (Columbia). When Prosper Merimee wrote "Carmen," he could not have imagined what Hollywood and Rita Hayworth as the gypsy would do with the story. The film version lacks Bizet's music, and in spite of the lavish production it turns out to be a garish, dull picture. A, Y.

THE LUCK OF THE IRISH (20th Century-Fox). Whether or not you believe in leprechauns and the pot of gold, this whimsical story would have been better with a lighter touch and much less drinking. Tyrone Power, as a foreign correspondent, goes to Ireland and there meets Anne Baxter, a lovely colleen. The Irish girl and the leprechaun come to New York and the correspondent's life is changed, we imagine, for the better. A, Y.

LUXURY LINER (MGM). This technicolor musical is a modern fairy tale of a young girl who runs away in search of her fondest dreams and finally realizes them. Jane Powell turns in some excellent singing and acting, with Lauritz Mechior, Marina Koshetz, Xavier Cugat, and the Pied Pipers all contributing generously. Light, amusing and inconsequential, this is good entertainment for the family, particularly if the children understand that it is make-believe and not a suitable pattern for them to follow in everyday life. A, Y, C.

A SOUTHERN YANKEE (MGM). Red Skelton fans will like this slapstick farce-comedy in which he poses as a spy during the Civil War. There is a pretty heroine, some attractive scenes of old Southern homes and hospitality, pleasing tunes and many laughs. A, Y, C.

AN INNOCENT AFFAIR (United Artists). As a comedy of matrimonial misunderstandings, this gives Madeleine Carroll and Fred MacMurray a chance to show one way of coping with an alluring female client and a potentially dangerous "other man." Clever dialogue and skillful direction, but the lack of unselfish motives in both husband and wife leaves little hope for permanent peace. Many scenes are in night clubs, with much drinking. A, Y.

FOR THE LOVE OF MARY (Universal-International). Those in this film who love Mary (Deanna Durbin) include quite a lot of people. Although the picture involves the President of the United States, the Supreme Court Justices and practically everybody else in the government in superficial nonsense, it is clean fun. Some may protest that good taste should not permit the highest officials of our land to be used for such satire. But the acting is uniformly superior, the technical qualities of the production excellent, and the music beautiful. A, Y.

BLACK EAGLE (Columbia). An exciting wild-west story of a beautiful horse and some human beings who do not measure up too well in comparison with the animal. The acting is wooden, the ethical values confused, and there is cruelty to men and beasts. A, Y.

BODYGUARD (RKO). A plain-clothes officer becomes a bodyguard for a woman who owns a meat-packing plant. The officer soon learns that his own life is really in danger. The suspense is sustained almost too long and gets more than a bit gruesome at times. Right and wrong are pretty well scrambled. This picture proves again that gansterism as a film subject is being overworked. A, Y.

TEXAS, BROOKLYN AND HEAVEN (United Artists). Between drinks, a bartender tells this story about a girl and boy from Texas who live a while in Brooklyn. It is difficult to imagine a more boring film. A.

TWO GUYS FROM TEXAS (Warner). Dennis Morgan and Jack Carson are "two guys" who find a dude ranch in Texas all done up in technicolor. There are pretty girls, pleasing songs, a rodeo, Indians, gangsters, several romances, some comedy—what more can a western have? Good family entertainment. A, Y, C.

URUBU (United Artists). The Matto Grosso jungle of Brazil is the setting for most of this adventure story about the Urubu Indians, sometimes called "the Vulture People." Two explorers go to the jungle in search of Colonel James Fawcett, who went to the Matto Grosso some years ago. Breath-taking are many of the scenes, especially those of battle with the Chevantes. However, the filming of the native dances, the jungle life, and modes of transportation are excellent. A small plot is used to move the action along. If children see this, the significance of the story should be explained to them. A, Y, C.

VARIETY TIME (RKO). As its name suggests, this is a variety show with comedy sketches, dance routines and musical numbers. Jack Paar takes the part of a radio comic and introduces the acts. Very tedious. A, Y.

THE MAN FROM COLORADO (Columbia). An absorbing action story of the Civil War, romance and insanity, done in technicolor. A young Union Army colonel, temporarily insane, orders a small band of Confederates shot, ignoring their white flag. The war over, the colonel becomes a judge, marries the prettiest girl in the town, but his insanity deepens until he is killed. Nothing much is proved by the film. A, Y.

NIGHT WIND (20th Century-Fox). Johnny's father was killed in the war, but he does have his dog Flame, a veteran of the K-9 Corps who had seen action with his father. The boy's love for the animal shuts out every other affection until a tense dramatic situation teaches him love for his understanding stepfather. The family situations are well handled. A, Y, C.

ONE TOUCH OF VENUS (Universal-International). An entertaining, often amusing combination of the Cinderella fairy-story idea and the Greek myth "Pygmalion." The story here is given a modern touch. A statue of Venus, treasured possession of a department store head, comes to life and disappears, causing great confusion in the store and both pleasure and trouble for the young store employee who awakens her and whom she trails around. Good acting by a cast headed by Ava Gardner and Robert Walker, plus attractive settings and costumes, evolve into good entertainment of the lighter variety. A, Y.

SINGIN' SPURS (Columbia). Consists of a dude ranch, pretty girls, Hoosier Hot Shots singing catchy songs and American Indians fairly portrayed. A marriage ceremony used for comedy is never funny, and is especially objectionable here. A, Y, C.

STATIONS WEST (RKO). Set in the days when the Wells-Fargo Express was the lifeline of a settlement, this is a rugged story, well told. Excellent photography and well-sustained suspense. Marred by drinking, gambling, and sudden death. A, Y.

THE CREEPER (20th Century-Fox). Undoubtedly to be listed as a "horror picture," this is a melodramatic film with Jeckyl and Hyde twist. It is a story of scientific experiments in an attempt to reach supernatural results. Terror is built up through sleep-walking, mental distortions, and brutal murders. The "horror" involved is partly the viewer's horror that it should ever have been produced, let alone shown to the public. A.

ROPE (Warner). Alfred Hitchcock, British producer-director, has used many interesting devices in this psychological melodrama, but the suspense and horror of the film will overshadow everything else for most people. Revolving around a murder committed by two intellectual but degenerate college men to prove they are above moral concepts, the story has a morbidity seldom surpassed on the screen. A.

"MOST FAVORABLY RECEIVED"

New York, N. Y.—From St. Paul's Church, Newport News, Va., a report to National Council said that GREAT SCENES FROM GREAT PLAYS is being most favorably received. The Rev. Theodore V. Morrison, rector wrote: "Can't tell yet just how effective the broadcasts are, but in so short a time there is definite evidence of widespread interest.

"A teacher in the English Department of our High School (not an Episcopalian) tells me she assigns listening to the program as part of home-work for both literary and moral influence, and that the head of the drama department insists that her pupils listen to the 'finest and most wholesome example of radio drama.' Some of us are planning to run a paid advertisement on the Friday radio page calling attention to the program and listing all the Episcopal churches with their addresses."

THY NEIGHBOR

Who is thy neighbor? He whom thou
Hast power to aid or bless,
Whose aching heart or burning brow
Thy soothing hand may press.

Thy neighbor? 'Tis the fainting poor
Whose eye with want is dim.
Oh, enter thou his humble door
With aid and peace for him.

Thy neighbor? He who drinks the cup
When sorrow drowns the brim;
With words of high sustaining hope
Go thou and comfort him.

Thy neighbor? 'Tis the weary slave,
Fettered in mind and limb;
He hath no hope this side the grave.
Go thou and ransom him.

Thy neighbor? Pass no mourner by Perhaps thou canst redeem
A breaking heart from misery.
Go share thy lot with him.

TEN COMMANDMENTS FOR GOOD TEACHERS

1. The good teacher is punctual. He rises early, is always present, and in place a little ahead of time. Once there was a little man who lived in Konigsberg. His name was Immanuel Kant. He left his house each day for his walk and returned with such exactitude that the townspeople set their clocks by him. No wonder he wrote his great Critique of Pure Reason. Perhaps he had not mastered the mystery of time. But he did master the secret of keeping time his servant, and not of killing time.

2. The good teacher is regular. Constancy is a great virtue. Semper fidelis is high praise. Nothing is sadder in a Church School than to see a class of boys or girls who sit like orphans because their teacher has failed to come. It can be said of a good teacher, as St. Paul said of love, He never faileth.

3. A good teacher is cheerful. Why is it that so many Christian people look as if God were dead. Children, like all normal people, respond to a cheerful face. There was a woman who had a formula for looking cheerful. She fixed her lips as if she were going to pronounce the word spruce. Another woman tried it. She mixed up the trees and pronounced instead hemlock. The result was depressing. The only true way to have a cheerful face is to have a cheerful heart.

4. The good teacher is earnest. He takes his teaching seriously. He has not forgotten that Jesus said, That it were better that a millstone be hanged about one's neck and that he be cast into the sea, than that he should offend one of Christ's little ones. He prepares his lesson with great care.

5. The good teacher is prepared. There is a well-known rule to all writers: Easy writing makes hard reading. Hard writing makes easy reading. When Theodore Roosevelt went to Africa to hunt big game, he could enjoy his holiday because his coming lectures at the Sorbonne and at Oxford had been completed before he sailed. There are no shrewder people in the world than children. They soon know whether or not the teacher is prepared.

6. A good teacher is imaginative. Some teachers know their subjects but cannot make them interesting. To be imaginative one knows not only the lesson, but the pupil too. A Scotch preacher once told young students for the ministry, Do three things in your sermons, Prove, Paint, and Persuade. It is not enough to prove; the preacher must paint.

7. The good teacher is definite. Children are bored by abstractions. Too much Church School teaching is vague and wooley. We are members of a Church which has definite ideas about God and religion. There is nothing vague or wooley about the faith or the sacraments of this church. But there is much vagueness among many who represent the church about these vital things. Any one can learn these definite ideas of our religion with a little effort. They are all found within the pages of the Prayer Book.

8. The good teacher is personal. He is not teaching a class. He is teaching human beings. All are different. The aim of teaching is to help each realize his own life in terms of beauty and strength.

9. The good teacher is missionary. He is reaching out for fathers and mothers through the children in his class. Jesus said a little child shall lead them. Many parents are ready to listen to the church, when their children are in Church School. They will offer particular friendliness to the Sunday School teacher of their child. Andrew brought his brother Peter. So it has always been. A good teacher can be as authentic a missionary as was Bishop Brent.

10. A good teacher is devout. To be devout does not mean to be extremely reverent. To be devout means that a teacher has a good prayer life. It means that he makes his communions regularly. It means that his own soul is growing under the teaching of the Church's life.

CXLVI

In Conclusion: The Holy Communion service concludes with the Benediction which is pronounced by the Bishop, if he is present, otherwise by the officiating clergyman. It consists of two parts, the "Peace" and blessing proper. The former comes down to us through the centuries from the ancient Latin greeting "Pax Vobiscum", which has its origin in Paul's Epistle to the Philippians (4:7). The concluding words of the Benediction give us the sense of fellowship through the Holy Trinity. In its entirety it has been a part of the Communion Service from the first Prayer Book in 1549 to the present day.

The Rubrics and Exhortations that follow have been transferred by the last revision of the Prayer Book from the beginning of the service to its conclusion, and they are so rarely used now that it is hardly worthwhile to give much space to them.

It is sufficient to say that the instructions about repelling "Evil livers" from the Holy Communion is altogether too dangerous and delicate a matter to be used by any sensible person. This is recognized by the fact that it was originally provided that when it was used a report of the whole matter was required to be made to the Bishop within fourteen days.

The Exhortations lay such a heavy stress upon the repentance necessary for coming to communion that they often prevented over-conscientious people from taking the sacrament, thereby defeating the very purpose that St. Paul had in mind in his warning to the Corinthian Church when he used the words that are the basis for these Exhortations, namely, "For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to his soul, not discerning The Lord's body," (1 Cor. 11:29). The very heart of this warning is in the concluding phrase, because the Corinthian Church was using the Lord's Supper as a means to get a drink of wine, "Not discerning the Lord's body" in that solemn service; and those who refrain from taking the communion now because of its solemnity are the very ones who do "Discern The Lord's Body," and consequently are the most worthy.

R. CARY MONTAGUE.

GOD IS EVERYWHERE

There's not a tint that paints the rose,
Or decks the lily fair,
Or marks the humblest flower that grows,
But God has placed it there.
There's not a star whose twinkling light
Illumes the spreading earth;
There's not a cloud, so dark or bright,
But wisdom gave it birth,
There's not a place on earth's vast round,
In ocean's deep or air,
Where love and beauty are not found,
For God is everywhere.

WHAT IS IT TO BE A CHRISTIAN?

Some years ago a youth named Wray entered Princeton as a volunteer for foreign missionary work. Once in the mission field, he simply lived the Christian life before the natives. And one day, according to the custom of the country, some of these natives were seated in a circle on the ground, listening to the instruction of one of their teachers, when the question was brought up, "What is it to be a Christian?" And no one could answer. Finally, a native pointed to where this young worker sat, and replied, "It is to live as Mr. Wray lives." Not one of them could read the Gospel according to Matthew, Mark, Luke or John, but every one there could read the Gospel "according to Wray."—Emile Gaillet, in The Beginning of Wisdom (Revell).

DR. GIBSON ELECTED SUFFRAGAN

Virginia Council Names Dean of Sewanee

Richmond, Va.—The Council of the Diocese of Virginia, meeting in St. James Church, asked the Rev. Dr. Robert Fisher Gibson, Jr., dean of the Theological Seminary of the University of the South, in Sewanee, Tenn., to become suffragan bishop of Virginia.

If Dr. Gibson accepts the post it will mean that he will serve as aide to Bishop F. D. Goodwin in supervision of an expansion program aimed at providing adequate facilities, during 1949 and 1950, for the thousands of Episcopalians that church leaders say have moved recently into metropolitan areas of Richmond and Arlington.

It might mean, Bishop Goodwin pointed out to the council before it adjourned that Dr. Gibson, who is only 42 years old and has been elected suffragan for an indefinite period, may some day be elected to the bishopric.

Dr. Gibson was notified by telephone of the action of the council but declined to say whether he would accept. He did say he would visit Virginia and give careful consideration to the offer.

Dr. Gibson received 56 of 97 clerical votes and 70 lay votes out of a total of 108 to be elected on the third ballot. Eight other clergymen had been nominated for the post.

The suffragan-elect is a native of Williamsport, Pa., but attended the University of Virginia and Virginia Theological Seminary at Alexandria. He has held a parish in Alexandria and once served as associate professor of history at the Seminary. He is married and has three children.

His father, the Rev. Robert F. Gibson, is a former rector of Christ Church in Charlottesville, and still lives in the Virginia city. His mother was Miss Harriet McKenny, a Virginian.

High Praise

Dr. Gibson's name was placed in nomination by a special nominating committee who described him as a man "who knows how to get along with the clergy and the people; a man of attractive, dynamic personality; a man acquainted with the tradition and character of people of Virginia, and one who commands respect of all who wish to follow good leadership."

Dr. Gibson apparently was the leading candidate from the first ballot, although the Rt. Rev. John Boyd Bentley, vice-president of the National Council of the Episcopal Church, had a strong following. Dr. Bentley was the only other candidate whose name was placed before the group by the nominating committee. Others who were nominated from the floor were:

The Rev. Frederick J. Warnecke, rector of St. Mark's Church, of Richmond and Editor of The Southern Churchman.

The Rev. W. Leigh Ribble, rector of Grace and Holy Trinity Church of Richmond.

The Rev. Dr. Moultrie Guerry, rector of St. Paul's Church of Norfolk.

The Rev. Dr. Churchill J. Gibson, rector of St. James' Church, son of the late Robert A. Gibson, Bishop of Virginia.

The Rev. Samuel B. Chilton, executive secretary and treasurer of the diocese.

The Rev. B. B. Comer Lile, rector of Christ Church, in Alexandria.

Also nominated from the floor was the Rev. Dr. Theodore H. Evans, rector of St. Paul's Memorial Church of the University of Virginia. He asked that his name be withdrawn, and it was.

The council voted a first-year salary of $6,500, plus lodging and expenses, for the new suffragan. The diocese has a present suffragan, the Rt. Rev. W. Roy Mason, of Charlottesville, but Dr. Mason, the only suffragan bishop in the history of the diocese, has announced that he will retire at the end of next year.

FINAL REPORT PUBLISHED ON ANNIVERSARY FUND

Hartford, Conn.—Gifts to the 125th Anniversary Development Program of Trinity College totalled $1,500,565.50 from 4,058 individuals, it was revealed in the final report on the drive published by the college October 24.

The Anniversary Fund furnished the college with a major increase in scholarship funds, an endowed field house with sports annex, a dormitory, and the principal part of funds needed for a library-administration addition.

The fund was raised by committees of more than 1,000 alumni and friends of the college, headed by A. Northey Jones, of Trinity's class of 1917, a New York City investment banker and college trustee.

President G. Keith Funston said that in subscribing the entire amount sought by the college, alumni and friends "expressed tangibly their faith in Trinity when many similar campaigns were falling short of their goals."

The campaign's success was marked by two large gifts: one of $330,000 for the library, and one of $300,000 for scholarships. An additional $30,000 was given specifically for scholarships and $29,000 for the library. Expenses of the drive were at an unusual low of 3.2 per cent or $49,000, leaving a total of $762,000 to be distributed at the discretion of college trustees.

The Field House is costing $450,000 and the dormitory, $380,000. The Trustees have appropriated from the Development Fund the full cost of the Field House, $150,000 for field house endowment and $162,000 for the dormitory. Bank loans provided needed additional funds for the dormitory, which is now housing 106 men. The Field House will be ready for use next month.

During the 18 month campaign period, the college received an additional $176,000 in gifts and bequests which were not counted toward the Development Fund.

Alumni broke every record in the history of Trinity financing. Sixty-six per cent of graduates of the college, and 39 per cent of non-graduates contributed an average gift of $248 for a total of $504,908. The alumni campaign was headed by Robert S. Morris, of the class of 1916, Hartford. Students also set a new participation record with 625 men, or 82 per cent of the student body, making an average gift of $30 per man.

A total of 1,171 friends of the college in the Hartford area expressed their recognition of Trinity's value to the community by contributing $194,-101. Friends in other parts of the nation gave two large gifts of $630,000 and 97 other gifts which totalled $113,-733. Francis S. Murphy, publisher of the Hartford Times, headed a citizen's committee which conducted the Hartford campaign.

DIOCESE OF LOS ANGELES ELECTS SUFFRAGAN

Los Angeles, Cal.—The Very Rev. Donald James Campbell, dean of Christ Church Cathedral, Springfield, was elected Suffragan Bishop by a simple 2/3 majority at a special Convention of the Diocese held on October 21. Dean Campbell was born in Collingwood, Ontario, Canada, January 1, 1903. He attended Ridley Hall, Cambridge, Mass., from which he received a B. DR. ALEXANDER GUERRY DIES

Sewanee, Tenn.—Dr. Alexander Guerry, vice-chancellor and president of the University or the South and an outstanding lay churchman, died suddenly of a heart attack on October 19 at Knoxville, Tennessee, where he had spoken at St. John's Church there. Dr. Guerry was 58 years old.

A predominant figure in the field of education in the South and in the Episcopal Church, Dr. Guerry had served as president of the University of Chattanooga and as headmaster of Baylor School in Chattanooga before beginning a ten-year term of service as head of the unique Episcopal-owned enterprise on the Cumberland plateau. In his work for the education of the country's and the church's young people he was a champion of liberal arts training and ever sought to make the church's life an integral part of college life. He upheld the principle of amateur student athletics by opposing "subsidization" of college sports and by maintaining at Sewanee strict observance of volunteer sports programs.

As a Christian layman, Dr. Guerry served on the Committee on Approaches to Unity at the last General Convention, presenting the report of the majority group at that convention. He was chairman of the Council of Laymen of the Province of Sewanee. Dr. Guerry participated actively in civic programs in Chattanooga, serving in every Community Chest campaign during his residence there, and three years serving as general chairman of the drive. He was active on the Chattanooga Chamber of Commerce, working in that capacity with the Young Men's Christian Association and the American Red Cross. In the service of the Diocese of Tennessee, Dr. Guerry was at one time president of the Diocesan's Laymen's League and a member of the Bishop and Council.

Church ties were always strong with Dr. Guerry. His father was the Rt. Rev. William Alexander Guerry, bishop of South Carolina, and his three brothers are priests of the Church, the Rev. Moultrie Guerry, of Norfolk, Va.; the Rev. Sumner Guerry, Cleveland, Miss., and the Rev. Edward Guerry, of Charletson, S. C. Dr. Guerry was born at Lincolnton, N. C., on October 17, 1890.

Death came to Dr. Guerry in the midst of his active work on the five million dollar endowment and building fund campaign, which will add three million dollars to the endowment of the university and enlarge the physical plant of the school with two million dollars in buildings. Shortly before his death he announced that over one million dollars had been raised.

Dr. Guerry is survived, in addition to his three brothers, by Mrs. Guerry, the former Charlotte Holmes Patton; two sons, Alexander, Jr., and John Patten, and a sister, Mrs. James Y. Perry, of North Carolina.

Funeral services were held Thursday morning at All Saints' Chapel, Sewanee, by the Rt. Rev. Frank A. Juhan, bishop of Florida and chancellor of the university, assisted by the Rt. Rev. Edmund P. Dandridge, bishop of Tennessee; the Very Rev. Robert F. Gibson, dean of the School of Theology at Sewanee; the Rev. Richard H. Wilmer, chaplain of the university, and the Rev. Ellis M. Bearden, chaplain of the Sewanee Military Academy. Other members of the Boards of Regents and Trustees present at the funeral were the Rt. Rev. Charles Clingman, bishop of Kentucky; the Rt. Rev. R. Bland Mitchell, bishop of Arkansas; the Rt. Rev. John Moore Walker, bishop of Atlanta; the Very Rev. John B. Walthour, dean of St. Philip's Cathedral, Atlanta; the Rev. Girault M. Jones, secretary of the Board of Regents and rector of St. Andrew's Church, New Orleans, and others.

Following the Order for the Burial of the Dead at Sewanee, the body was taken to Chattanooga for interment in Forest Hills Cemetery. The committal was read by Bishop Dandridge and the Rev. Thorne Sparkman, rector of St. Paul's, Chattanooga. Wednesday morning in St. Augustine's Chapel at Sewanee, Chaplain Wilmer celebrated a requiem of the Holy Eucharist.

DEATHS

MRS. AUSTIN BROCKENBROUGH MITCHELL

Mrs. Bessie Aylett Mitchell, widow of the Rev. Austin B. Mitchell died early Sunday morning, August 29 in Charles Town, West Virginia. She had been in failing health for eight years, but had been seriously ill for only two weeks.

She was born in Aylett, King William County, Virginia on April 29, 1873 and was the daughter of the late Alice Brockenbrough and Colonel William Roane Aylett. Mrs. Mitchell was the great-great-granddaughter of Patrick Henry.

The Rev. and Mrs. Mitchell were married in 1903 and resided in Parkersburg, W. Va. until 1913 where he was rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd. In 1913 they moved to Middleway, W. Va., when Mr. Mitchell assumed the rectorship of Nelson Parish. Before her health failed Mrs. Mitchell was very active in parish and diocesan work, particularly in the Woman's Auxiliary. She was the chairman of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Eastern Convocation and organized its work. At one time she was secretary of the Auxiliary for the Province of Washington. Her interest extended to civic affairs, having been one of the founders of the Charles Town Woman's Club.

She is survived by a son, Austin B. Mitchell of New York City, and a daughter, Miss Patty Aylett Mitchell of Charles Town.

MRS. FONTAINE DAVISON

Mrs. Eva May Everett Davison, devoted member of the Episcopal Church, entered Life Eternal, September 1, 1948, at Arlington, Virginia.

She was born on July 11, 1877 at Wye Mills, Maryland, the youngest daughter of the Rev. William B. and Ellen Whitten Everett. Her early years were spent in Rectories on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, Southern Virginia, and in the vicinity of Winchester. In 1900 she came with her family to Washington, and it was from a suburban home nearby that she was married to Mr. Fontaine Davison, a Virginian by birth and education, but then residing in Baltimore. During the early years of their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Davison resided in Baltimore and Philadelphia; but after Mr. Davison became a lawyer, they settled permanently in and near Washington, where he was engaged in legal work for the Government and maintained a private practice in Virginia. He died in 1945.

Mrs. Davison was a vital personality in her home, church and community. She carried on her various activities with unflagging zeal and a cheerfulness that was contagious. Some who knew her chiefly in the community have lately remarked, "She was the first to call on me", evidently cherishing the memory of a visit which led to more and more friendly contact. The impulse to help wherever she could, of late years, found expression in regular visits to the local jail—to those whom she feared were too often forgotten. Before this and for many years, her chief interest outside her home was the conducting of an adult Bible class which seemed a natural outcome of her life-long diligent study of the sacred Book.

At the time of her sudden death, Mrs. Davison was Chairman of one of the Circles of the Woman's Auxiliary of St. George's Church, Arlington, was a member of the Council of Church Women, and an active member of the Red Cross.

She is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Lellie W. Merritt, two grandsons, and a sister and brother.

"ASTOUNDED"

Sir: I am astounded at your excited editorial of October 16, accusing the pamphlet "Pastoral Teaching in the Church School Worship Service" of being watered-down Christianity and ethical liberalism. It was my privilege at one time to work under the Rev. Dr. John Heuss in his former parish in Evanston, Illinois, and we used these instructions in the Church School Worship Service. To me, it is down right laughable to think of Dr. Heuss as promoting watered-down Christianity and ethical liberalism.

These are merely little things that a Churchman ought to know so perfectly that he can have them as part of his knowledge without having to focus his attention on them. We all ought to know, without focusing our attention on the matter, that the four Gospels are St. Matthew, St. Mark, St. Luke, and St. John; that the three books used most in the Church are the Bible, the Prayer Book, and the Hymnal.

These instructions are not meant to constitute a full—or even adequate—explanation of the Christian Faith. Taken by themselves, perhaps they would give one a watered-down religion; but they are not meant to be taken by themselves. In learning to drive a car, one must learn that the three pedals on the floor are the clutch, the brake, and the accelerator. One must learn this, but more than this, also.

While none of us can be like Jesus (in this world), we can try to be like Him, and hope for the "fulness of the measure of the stature of Christ." And many who are not ethical liberals believe that one of the purposes of the Incarnation was to teach men the right way to live. The instruction you quoted does not say that was the only reason. While ethics cannot be confused with religion, ethics is inseparable from the Christian religion. And if our goal includes complete union with God, how can this be attained without perfect holiness and perfect harmony with Him, at some time to come? We are indeed, we hope, eventually to be like the Second Person of the Holy Trinity. Are we not part of His Body? How can we be part of His Body and be utterly unlike Him?

you seem to state that the Holy Spirit is not God. If the gifts are called the "seven gifts of the Holy Spirit," and if the Holy Spirit is God, your paragraph on Confirmation is pointless.

The pamphlet does not pose as the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. Do not accuse it of being something it does not pretend to be.

Your last sentence implies that Dr. Heuss is extremely hazy in his theology. This is not the case. While matter put out by the Department of Christian Education should certainly be subjected to some review by "competent theologians," one should be careful not to suggest that Dr. Heuss is theologically incompetent.

Your point that many people think of Christianity in moralistic terms is one that all must agree with. Jesus is certainly much more than merely our example. But on the other hand, you can not remove morals from Christian teaching, and we should all try to follow the example of the only perfect human life.

DUTIES OF A CHRISTIAN TODAY

day may yet come when Russia will be our friend in peace as she was our ally in the grim years of war. But in quiet confidence the nation must take an uncompromising stand for what it knows is just. In doing so we must call upon our people to pray for the preservation of peace. Steady, persistent, intelligent prayer in private and public worship is more important than the special days of prayer for which so many ask in days of crisis.

With unshaken faith in God we shall pray that the threat of war may pass, and that all nations may dwell in unity, peace and concord.

Lord, who shall sojourn in Thy tabernacle?

Who shall dwell in Thy holy hill?

He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness,

And speaketh truth in his heart;

He that backbiteth not with his tongue,

Nor doeth evil to his neighbor,

Nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor;

In whose eyes a vile person is condemned;

But he honoreth them that fear the Lord.

He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not;

Nor taketh reward against the innocent.

He that doeth these things shall never be moved.

TO THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY

The White House
Washington
October 4, 1948.

I am glad to note that in addition to the observance of Universal Bible Sunday on December twelfth next, the American Bible Society is again this year urging worldwide Bible reading during the period between Thanksgiving Day and Christmas Day.

This new activity bears eloquent witness to the determination of your venerable Society to go forward with progress. Bible reading could therefore be made to tie together two great Christian days—one of them, Thanksgiving Day, as indigenous to America as Plymouth Rock on the rugged Massachusetts coast or Independence Hall in Philadelphia.

The age in which we live is a troubled one and one beset with perplexing problems, domestic and international. But above the din of discord and ill will is heard a still, small voice, saying: ". . . what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?"

Again when the sages and the scientists, the philosophers and the statesmen have exhausted their studies of atomic energy, one solution and one alone will be left. That solution lies in the application to twentieth century life of the plain teaching of the Sermon on the Mount—the substitution of conscience for force in the government of man.

May God bless and prosper your purpose to make knowledge of His Word worldwide.

HARRY TRUMAN.

"WORTHY"

Sir: Let me be one of the first to proclaim my deep congratulations for the Editorial in the Southern Churchman for 23 October. It is an article worthy of this magazine.

While I deprecate the quotation you gave from St. Clement of Alexandria, yet all the rest of the editorial is magnificent—and well controverts the paragraph in Reinhold Niebuhr's article in the issue of 6 October, that in Amsterdam it was Protestant vs. Catholic in recognition of sin within the Church.

Last year I had a Good Friday article refused by the editor of our local paper, because I labeled myself a "Catholic Evangelical." It seems to me, the editorial I am now praising would also be refused for the same reason.

With "Reformation Day" and "Catholic" services abounding this week, your editorial would make good sermon material for all of us.

TO THE "READER'S REACTION COLUMN"

Sir: Enclosed is a "Letter to the Editor" which might contribute a touch of interest to the readers' reaction column.

I admire very much your handling of The Southern Churchman. The old paper has undergone a transformation, and the former valley of dry bones is now animated with the breath of life. I hear many comments to this effect.

"Maintain The Truth Of Both Natures"

Your Editorial of October 16 on "Watered Down Christianity" states of Jesus Christ that "He is not our example, but our Savior". This seems contrary to Prayer Book teaching, which declares Him to be "both a sacrifice for sin, and an example of godly life." There are a number of Scriptural passages of the import of I John II:6: "He that saith he abideth in Him ought himself also so to walk, even as He walked."

In time past, the true Humanity of Jesus, together with His Divinity, was cherished as one of the most precious teachings of the Church, and its highest challenge to men was the kind of life to which it called them after His example. The way to relate His Divine and Human Natures has of course remained the standing enigma of Christian thought. The current emphasis in theology centers itself overwhelmingly upon His office as Divine Mediator. But to place Him beyond our effort at imitation does not seem very different from rejecting His true Manhood, or from denying the reality of the Incarnation. It is the Prayer Book view that He truly "took our nature upon Him." In disallowal of the Master as our example, we do not like to see our Southern Churchman verging upon Docetism. Just as it is bad strategy in morals to assure a man that he is going to sin, so to remove Jesus Christ as Example must have a vitiating effect upon the Christian's warfare under His banner.

Surely it is the part of wisdom for us to maintain the truth of both Natures, in accordance with the stable thinking of the past, however little we may be able to comprehend the manner of their

THE TWENTY-FIFTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY
THE COLLECT

O God, whose blessed Son was manifested that He might destroy the works of the devil, and make us the sons of God, and heirs of eternal life; Grant us, we beseech Thee, that, having this hope, we may purify ourselves, even as He is pure; that when He shall appear again with power and great glory, we may be made like unto Him in His eternal and glorious Kingdom; where with Thee, O Father and Thee, O Holy Ghost, He liveth and reigneth ever one God, world without end. Amen.

Great Scenes From Great Plays

A SERMON BY THE REV. C. LESLIE GLENN,

Rector of St. John's Church, Washington, D. C.

To some people, broadcasting plays seems a strange way for the Christian Church to come before people. We don't ordinarily associate the theater with the Church. There are many of our fellow Christians who disapprove very much of attending a play or movie. Historically, the theater came into disrepute at the time of the Restoration in England, when the stage was corrupt. The popular religious revivals in England, in the nineteenth century, spread among poor people who couldn't afford to go to the theater. And partly because of the bad reputation which the theater had, and partly because it was associated with the vices of the rich, the average Christian has frequently looked with disfavor upon the theater. For social reasons more than for religious reasons the theater has been suspect.

My grandmother said to me the other day that she met my grandfather at the theater, and she always thought the better of the theater for that reason. She had been brough up a strict Episcopalian and this was her first visit. So it wasn't so long ago that it was looked down upon even in our own Church. And yet we remember that after the Dark Ages the theater started again in the churches. It was the plays which the priests and the monks put on—when they began to teach the people by popular methods—it was that, really, that brought the theater back again after the Greek dramas had been given up.

One reason for choosing plays for this evangelistic effort is because other efforts are difficult on the radio; preaching frequently is not good on the radio (it is bad enough in church); it is often very poor unless some great one like Fosdick is talking. We cannot sustain sermons Sunday after Sunday over the radio. Hymns and prayers and Bible readings have never been effective. Dispassionate, friendly people, who believe in the Church, give us that as a proved conclusion—that we cannot get many listeners for that kind of broadcasting. If a particular parish service is broadcast it helps the people who belong to that Church or who like that Church, and they listen to the radio when they are home and unable to go to church because they remember what it was like when they were there. But it usually does not reach the people on the fringes. So this radio program which began October 1st and will continue all winter is an effort to reach the 70,000,000 people in our country who don't go to any church.

Now we might suppose that the plays have been chosen because there is a moral in them; and there has been some effort to find the moral in these plays. But that is hard to do. We put ourselves to great effort when we try to find some helpful little lesson that these great artists and dramatists have put in their plays. Perhaps we think the plays are being given because the public may be grateful to the Episcopal Church for sponsoring such a program, and therefore we can tack the "commercial," so to speak, on at the end because they will be so thankful to us for having broadcast such a fine public service—as a tire company might broadcast an opera. Opera has nothing to do with rubber tires, but if a manufacturer gives the opera then people will listen and enjoy it and be kindly disposed to such and such a brand of tires. And so it may be they will be kindly disposed to the Episcopal Church if we provide fine cultural entertainment on Friday nights. But that is not the motive.

We might say also that it is a way to get people to think about the Church without its being too direct. Oftentimes French churches will have a wine shop in the porch, so if a man is seen going across the street toward the church he may be going across to pray, but he would rather have you think he was going across to get a drink. That's sound. Most people would rather not be thought as religious as they are. It's partly why we like to keep our churches wide open all the time and easy to get into. People can stand inside from the rain; they can wait on the porch to meet others. And then sometimes they go inside to pray. There is nothing worse than going up a flight of stairs to a church and finding the door locked, and in embarrassment coming all the day down the stairs again. Everybody knows you went up there to pray. And they can all see that you couldn't get in. Now it's better if you can slip in without anyone being very much aware of it. And so we might think of these plays as providing a sort of oblique path into religion.

All of these may be motives for the broadcasts, but there is one overmastering reason and that is that art is one of the great approaches to God; the aesthetic is one of the roads to reality in religion. We will not appreciate this effort which our Church is making unless we have that clearly in our minds. Unless we can explain this, I do not think we will be able to help some of the people on the fringe who may turn to us in the Church after listening to these Friday night broadcasts.

There are four great avenues to faith; or there are four great strands, you might say, if you think of it as a rope, each one of which is necessary for a mature faith. One is ethical; religion as the creation and conservation of values: one is mystical; religion as divine communion: one is philosophical; religion as an integration of thought and experience: and one is artistic (and that's the one on Friday nights); religion as an imaginative achievement of the human spirit. Even if it is not called religion—pictures, music, poetry, the theater, good movies—all of that is a pathway to God.

Each of these four avenues is distinct from the other, and each one has its place. All great religions must be a weaving of these four strands. Some people say: "Art is my religion. What I like is pictures. What I love is to listen to music; that's all I need." Well, good, but that's not enough. That's only one quarter. There are three other great things which are left out of your experience. Or others will say: "Morality is my religion. I live by the Golden Rule and that's all." No art, no mystical experience; it is a truncated thing to live only for morality. Or some say: "Thought is my pathway to God. I like to puzzle out the nature of things. I love a philosophical argument; I like to reason 'why is this,' and 'what happened here,' and 'what causes this thing historically.' It is in that kind of thinking that I draw closest to eternal matters. I have no use for morality; I don't care about music; those other things are nothing to me." Or a person may say: "Mysticism is my only form of religion. I practice communion with the Infinite and that's all for me." This is a curious thing (very strong in contemporary society), the direct leap from this world to the next, disregarding ethics, disregarding any form of art, disregarding any effort to integrate experience rationally. Any one of these partial things is good, but it is partial, and in a developed Christian we try to have all four of them. One reason we believe that Christ is the final revelation is because in the faith which comes from Him there is the most perfect synthesis that the world has ever seen of these four things.

Mysticism without morality is dangerous. How dreadful it is to read in the newspaper about a "religious" murder; somebody with an axe killed someone else because God told him to do it. The mistaken one did have a sense that God was speaking but that sense was not corrected by the elementary knowledge of what is right and wrong. On the other hand, morality or ethics, without mysticism, is impossible. We cannot keep going on and on trying to be good with no sense of divine help. Of if we do, (some people with extraordinary will-power do succeed), life becomes more and more sad. The writings of Marcus Aurelius illustrate a kind of noble pessimism that comes to the Stoic over the long years when right and wrong is the only thing he clings to. No effort is made to reach God or to be sustained by Him. So, also, faith is difficult if it makes no effort to explain life intellectually. Thoughtful people cannot believe if their intelligence is insulted, and that is as it should be for religion must make sense intellectually.

In our Episcopal broadcasts we have the strand which is often neglected—the artistic one. The purpose of art is not to moralize or to philosophize or to send us into a mystical trance. Music and painting and poetry and the theater stand on their own feet. They are final expressions of the truth not reducible to other terms. No play can be propaganda alone and a good play. That is why the Soviet government's efforts to control art are unsound. Whenever the theater is twisted to teach something it becomes didacticism which is the attempt at the coercion of another's free mind. As Thornton Wilder says, "In all matters beyond logic, beauty is the only persuasion." Euripides' final play has this final chorus ending:

There be many shapes of mystery
And many things God makes to be past hope or fear,
And the end men look for cometh not
And the path is there where no man thought.
So hath it fallen here.

When you listen to Cyrano you might say to yourself, "It teaches us we ought to be unselfish." But that isn't what Rostand wrote down! What you might think is, "How can some ugly people be so glorious in their spirit? How can there be that terrible lack of correspondence between the spirit of a man and the face of a man?" Or you might say, "How terrible it is that sometimes one is outwardly fair and inwardly stupid; and how is it that people are so mixed in their disposition and in their bodies and in their souls? And how is it that life takes what happens to them and mixes it?" I wouldn't venture to tell you what Cyrano means. No one can say what it means; because if there is any other way of saying it you would not have to act the play at all. You could put it into aphorisms. But the fact is that you have to see it on the stage, or you have to listen to it on the radio, and then it speaks to each one of us and opens up the puzzles of life. "The end men look for cometh not." It is as though God said to us, "Look! Look at this. Look at this picture. Look what has happened to these people on the stage. Think of this." There is no easy answer here. As Isaiah said, "There is no searching of His understanding."

This radio series started near St. Michael's Day. Michael, I am fond of saying, means Who is like to God? It is St. Question Mark's Day, St. Michael's Day. That is often the purpose of art, to raise a question. The purpose of the dramatists is to state the problem. He gives no answers. Pictures, music, plays, the whole thing raises a question mark in our minds. The old legend says St. Michael cast the devil out of heaven. St. Michael divided good from evil. Question marks divide good from evil. When the uncertainty comes to you, that's when you begin to see the difference between good and evil. We have a cliche that fear brings religion, and like most cliches it ought to be exxamined. It is fear that brings it, but not the fear of death, or the fear of illness, or the fear that we won't be taken care of. Those are fears that we all are bothered with, but they are not the essential thing that draws us close to God. That fear is—the overwhelming conviction that the little easy answer we had is no good. That is what draws us close to God. That is what St. Michael is—Who is like to God? It's the misgiving. We have the little atheism, the little agnosticism that's so easy and pat, and the thing is broken by Cyrano. Or it is broken by Hamlet. Or it is all mixed up by the Fifth Symphony, and you say, "What I thought is no good. It's so trivial. It belongs to last year when I was younger." St. Michael, St. Interrogation Point, casts out the devil.

That is the effort we are going to make these coming Friday nights to reach the 70,000,000 people who don't care anything at all about faith or about coming to church. This broadcast is our opportunity to explain to these others. People will turn to us if they become interested in Friday nights and will say, "Well, what about you? You go to church. What is it that you're going for?" And there is our chance—when the question mark comes into the other person's mind, when the interrogation point arises, there is the moment to speak for our Church, and to speak for our Lord.

$5,000,000 Campaign Designated Memorial to Dr. Guerry

Sewanee, Tenn.—Responsibility for the completion of the work which Dr. Alexander Guerry had called the most important task of his life has been assumed by the Board of Regents of the University of the South. The Board designated Sewanee's five million dollar campaign a memorial to their late leader, according to the Rt. Rev. Frank A. Juhan, chancellor of the university.

Said Bishop Juhan, "The building and strengthening of this university, standing in so many ways unique in Christian education, will constitute the most worthy tribute which alumni of Sewanee and friends of Dr. Guerry can pay to his memory. The importance which he, himself, placed upon this brilliant undertaking, should be our guide in determining how we may best perpetuate in some tangible way his great spirit and his extraordinary sacrifice."

Bishop Juhan pointed out that the Sewanee effort to raise its endowment to five million dollars was more than the mere appeal of a school for money. Few realize, he said, the magnitude of the undertaking. The successful completion of the Guerry Memorial campaign will place Sewanee among the top dozen institutions in the nation in terms of endowment per student. This is a position which has never before been occupied by any southern institution.

Our Southern region, said Bishop Juhan, must have Christian institutions of higher learning which will rank with the best anywhere, and it was Dr. Guerry's dream, his determination, his life's work that the University of the South should be such an institution. We upon whom has fallen the heavy responsibility of carrying on his work are determined to place our emphasis where he placed his. He would have wanted it so."

Studies In First Samuel

Saul

By The REV. JOHN SHRYOCK, Philadelphia, Pa.

ARTICLE III.

When the elders of Israel demanded that Samuel appoint a king over them, and Samuel acquiesced, the decision had greater consequences than the men of that day imagined. Never again would the old democratic government exist in Israel. The king was regarded as the representative of God, but the history of the united kingdom, and of its successors, shows that God seldom dealt directly with the rulers, and that those rulers were not the kind of men with whom he could deal directly, as he had with Samuel. Their interests and their problems were worldly, and it might be said that even the best of them were only as religious as they had time to be. This is just as true today as it was in Biblical times. The leaders of nations, who are what we like to call practical and realistic men, put God, and God's will a distant second to other interests. Does history show that they have had such signal success that they deserve the names we give them?

The change from a democracy to a dictatorship is a gradual, and not completely smooth process. The first step is for men to lose confidence in democracy, by comparing its disorganization and inefficiency with the unscrupulous and quickly-mobilized power of a centrally-organized state. The evils of a dictatorship are ignored, while the difficulty of securing a united decision in a democracy, the tendency of the people to follow demagogues, and the initial inefficiency of a democracy, particularly in such a crisis as war, are emphasized. This step had already been taken by Israel.

The next step was to secure a man who would command general support, for at the beginning, the masses are not trained to follow a king simply because he is king. Samuel did the best he could—indeed, he did remarkably well. The two chief tribes were Ephraim in the north, and Judah in the south, and it was necessary to find a man who would have the support of both. How important this was became apparent somewhat later, when the kingdom was split between the two. Samuel selected a man from the tribe of Benjamin, which was a small group, unimportant in itself, but on the border between the two large tribes.

Samuel chose a relatively young man named Saul, tall, and of commanding presence, who must have already had some reputation. Even so, Samuel made his first move secretly, for in democracies, no important decision can be made without what we today call a "build-up." Saul, knowing nothing of the plan, had gone in earch of some lost animals, and was directed to Samuel, whom he had never met. He came across Samuel at the city gate without recognizing him, was informed that the animals had been found, and invited to dinner. The dinner turned out to be a sacrificial feast, at which Saul was given the place of honor, greatly to his surprise. The next morning, as the guest was leaving the town, the prophet took a vial of oil, poured it upon his head—a custom still used in crowning a king—kissed him, and said,

"Is it not that Jehovah has annointed thee to be prince over his inheritance?"

Saul was directed to keep the matter secret, and to wait at a certain place for a week until Samuel himself should arrive. At the end of the week, having summoned the people to an assembly, Samuel arrived and drew lots, by which Saul was selected. Saul himself was so embarrassed that he hid, but when eventually he was brought out, his towering stature and fine appearance caused great enthusiasm, and a large company of men escorted him home.

But decisions of this kind are seldom unanimous in democracies. Doutbless there were men who wondered why Saul had been chosen instead of them, and what he had that they did not have. Doubtless there were men who had known Saul since he was a boy and remembering this or that small incident, could not understand why he had been selected for honor. At any rate, we know that a considerable number of men were dissatisfied, and Saul was obliged to retire once more to private life, until personal jealousies were overcome.

Then the Ammonites, who lived to the east of the Jordan, made a raid, and besieged an Israelite city. At the request of the inhabitants, they scornfully granted a week's truce on the slim chance that other Israelites might come to the city's aid, but threatened at the end of the armistice to put out the eyes of all men of the city.

When Saul heard it, he was seized with fury, and cutting up a pair of oxen, sent the pieces throughout the nation. This was an old custom which summoned the people to meet a crisis. The Israelites responded, and under Saul's leadership, completely defeated the Ammonites. This was the occasion Saul needed, and when he returned victorious, the people wanted to kill those who had opposed him—after the manner of mobs. However, Saul took no vengeance, and from that time was firmly in power.

The dates of Saul's reign are not known exactly, nor his age, but when he became king, his oldest son was capable of holding a military command. Saul soon established a small standing army, which the Israelites had never had before. Its need immediately became apparent, for the Philistines decided to crush the young king before he could gather strength.

Samuel, who had loyally supported Saul, took this occasion to test him, and for the first time, a weakness appeared in the king's character. When Israel was a democracy, its head was God, and even though there was now a king, God was still assumed to be head, with the king as his servant. Samuel's test was to discover whether Saul would put worldly considerations before religion.

The Israelites were still religious enough to feel that they could not fight until they had sacrificed. We have gone a long way since those days, until our army chaplains are relegated to a very minor place in the military scheme of things, but primitive people felt that prayer and worship had an important place even on the field of battle.

Saul was a practical, realistic man, who worried at delay, and when Samuel, who was to offer the sacrifice, did not come immediately, he performed the sacrifice himself and got it over with. Perhaps he was afraid the morale of his troops was deteriorating. But when Samuel came, he rebuked Saul for his lack of faith, and for breaking the command of God, and told him frankly he would not be able to found a dynasty.

Saul was what would generally be considered a religious man, now as then. He kept the rules carefully—until they interfered with what he wanted to do, and then he broke them. His religion was not founded on real faith in God, but rather on expediency. Even in his reliance of rules and customs he was not consistent, any more than the Pharisees were later.

Most of us ought to be sympathetic toward Saul, because most of us are like him. Our religion consists of rules, not principles; and because our rules are not founded on principles, we keep our rules when we ought to break them, and break them when we ought to keep them.

When the battle actually took place, it was begun in spite of Saul by his own son, with a brilliant feat which threw the Philistines into confusion, and resulted in a victory for the Israelites. Saul, who had not hesitated to break God's command about the sacrifice, now wanted to kill his son, to whom the victory was due, because in ignorance he had broken a taboo against eating during the battle. Fortunately the army refused to permit it, but the incident illustrates Saul's defect of character, which is typical of a familiar type of religion. As Jesus said later, such men strain at gnats and swallow camels.

The same defeat appeared even more strongly shortly after, Samuel, in the name of God, commanded Saul to exterminate the Amalekites, who were a people to the south, and traditional enemies of Israel. Doubtless Samuel was mistaken about God's will, but the times were rough and hard. When Saul had defeated the Amalekites, however, he saved the best sheep and oxen, and spared the Amalekite king.

When Saul met Samuel, he lost his nerve—which in itself is a considerable tribute to Samuel—and began by lying. Then he blamed his failure to destroy everything on the people, who, he said, kept the best things to sacrifice to God. Samuel's reply was brief and to the point.

"Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, he hath also rejected thee from being king."

But the best instance of Saul's inconsistency and weakness of character came at the end of his life, the day before he was defeated and killed by the Philistines. The book of Samuel (28:3) says that Saul had banished all wizards from Israel. But when Saul saw the army of the Philistines, he was afraid. In his extremity he called on the Lord, but received no answer. Then Saul asked his servants to find him a wizard, and they led him to the witch of Endor.

Yet before we hastily condemn this amazing instance of standing for one thing and doing another, we should examine ourselves carefully. Are there many of us who have not done much the same? We pose as righteous and condemn certain practices in others, but when we are in need ourselves, we resort to them. How many people talk scathingly about the American government and about corruption in politics, and then go out to buy in the Black Market? The worst we should say about Saul is that he was not better than the rest of us.

But a defect like this, common though it is, may be fatal in a leader like Saul. He was unquestionably an able man, brave and vigorous, and he gave real leadership to Israel when the nation needed it badly. Though he died fighting against overwhelming forces, he was, on the whole, successful in war.

Yet he was a failure as the representative of God to his people. His religion, though real, was not deep enough, and he was too much of an opportunist. Unlike Samuel, he did not put the will of God first, and this caused his ruin. He has plenty of company.

Religion In The State Of Israel

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

A religious journal in this country has accused the new state of Israel of being a "Godless" nation. Arthur Koestler, on the other hand, reporting to the New York Herald Tribune, expressed fear lest Israel develop into a clerical state.

The reason for the first charge is that the Declaration of Independence of the new state makes no mention of God. It does mention the "Rock of Israel" which can be interpreted theistically or not, according to pleasure. Koestler charges the state with being clerical because the Israeli army observes both the dietary and the Sabbath laws of orthodox Judaism. Evidently some of the secular members of the army have protested these rules.

Outside observers may well withhold their criticism of this new state on either one or the other ground. The religious quality of a national life is neither proved nor disproved by what is written in the constitution.

If explicit reference to God were the criterion, then Spain is certainly a more Christian nation than the United States. Officially our country is the most secular of all great nations.

The same editor who criticizes Israel for being a secular state is very intent upon increasing the official secularism of America. He believes that there ought to be an "absolute wall" of separation between Church and State here. Why then not praise Israel for having established it?

Actually the new state has not done this. The fact is that the governing alliance of parties in Israel is made up of two chief groups. One is a predominantly secular labor party, most of the members of which hold to Marxist views of life. The other is an orthodox religious group.

The practices of the new state seek to arrive at a not too happy compromise between the two groups. In this Israel faces a problem not completely different from that which faced our founding fathers who had to satisfy the strong puritan convictions of New England Puritanism on the one hand, and the deism of Virginia on the other hand. This Virginia deism was not quite as secular as the Marxist secularism of the new Jewish state. But the difference is not too great.

While the state of Israel is neither consistently secular nor consistently clerical it may be worth observing that from the standpoint of a really vital religion a secular state is preferable to a clerical one. Not only are clerical states constitutionally intolerant, seeking to destroy all but the one official religion, but they also tend toward an atrophied religion.

For nothing destroys religious vitality and profundity so easily as to make it the source of political power and make adherence to it the basis of political preferment. We hope Israel will not be either consistently secular or consistently clerical. But if it must choose, the first alternative would be preferable to the second.

CHURCH EXTENDS HEALING MINISTRY

San Diego, Cal.—Recently returned from a three-months' trip to Britain, the Rev. John Gayner Banks of the Fellowship of St. Luke, reports surprising progress there. He spent ten weeks investigating the work of the various societies and centers of Spiritual Therapy in Great Britain, integrated through the Committee of the Archbishop of Canterbury and known as "The Churches' Council of Healing." Dr. Banks says the greatest center is at Milton Abbey in Dorset, started by Fr. John Maillard in 1936 and now conducted by the Rev. Geoffrey Harding, M. C., former R. A. F. chaplain, with a large staff to assist him. There are five other healing centers in Britain. The British Medical Association has recently endorsed the Church's Ministry of Healing in Britain. It is hoped that the American Church will so integrate its work as to earn a similar endorsement and cooperation from the A. M. A.

Dr. Banks is now engaged on a two-months' itinerary of healing missions. He will tell of the marked advance in Britain and offer a plan for extending this Ministry in the U. C. and Canada. This Mission tour includes Owensboro, Kentucky; Elmhurst, III, Syracuse, N. Y., Minneapolis, Minn., Winnipeg, Man., and Sackatoon, Sask. Active Advisers of the F. S. L. include the Bishops of Chicago, Pittsburgh, and Los Angeles, respectively.

"God And The American People"

Polls of public opinion are currently nursing the wounds received in the presidential election. But a most interesting one has appeared in The Ladies' Home Journal, entitled "God and the American People." It is a profoundly discouraging poll to the man of faith. It reveals terrific spiritual complacency in the midst of tremendous religious ignorance.

The obvious questions concerning belief in the existence of God were answered as we might have expected in the affirmative by large majorities. But when those questioned were asked to state in their own words what they believed about God, answers included, "I just know and feel there is a God, that's all." Or, "I can't answer that." For roughly half the people questioned, prayer "seems to be a plea or petition for some kind of spiritual benefaction." Only 4% thought of prayer as "an act of worship and testimony of their love of God."

Even more shocking were the answers to the questions which related religion to life. People were asked, "Thinking over the last twenty-four hours, can you think of a time when you yourself might have acted differently if you'd been able to follow this rule (the ideal of love) all the way?" 62% of the people said, "No!" Only one person in four thought that they had in any way fallen short of the ideal of love in the past day! Then a further question was asked, "Among the people you come in contact with, how far would you say most of them go in following the idea of love of fellow-men?" 82% said that other people went only part of the way! Approximately eight out of ten Americans feels that they obey the ideal of love completely, but that their brothers do not!

The extent of the gap between what Americans think they do and what they actually do is revealed in the answers to the question, "Would you say your religious beliefs have any effect on your ideas in politics and business?" 54% said, "No!" As the compiler of the poll states, there is "a profound gap between America's avowed ethical standards and the observable realities of national life".

The poll was reviewed by Dr. R. Niebuhr, Rabbi Simon Greenberg, of the Jewish Theological Seminary, and the Rev. George Ford, rector of Corpus Christi Roman Catholic Church, New York City. These agreed that the basic impression they received was one of national self-satisfaction. "The American," they observe, "individually and collectively has an easy conscience. Involved in foreign hostilities, torn by social hysterias, imperiled by the dissolution of his family life, his plunder of national resources and the menace of atomic war, the American clings to his good opinion of himself". Dr. Niebuhr further comments that among the ultimate causes of America's easy conscience is the tendency to assume that man lives up to his ethical standards simply because he endorses them.

The poll is bitter reading for the Churches. It is also a challenge to the Churches. We need a prophetic evangel desperately!

Personalized Missions!

The booklet I Serve Throughout the World, issued by the national Church for use in this fall's Every Member Canvass, is an admirable piece of work. It attempts with good success to bridge the gap between the member of the parish Church and the on-going work of the Church throughout the world. It does this, in the main, by the simple use of the personal pronoun, "I". "I serve through my pledge to the Church". "I serve in China". "I serve in the Philippines".

But the final two pages carry this one step further. They tell exactly what a gift will support in the missionary work of the Church. "In Haiti, I insure the mission jeep for thirty weeks".

We wish this approach could be developed. The missionary giving of our Church lacks the warm personal touch. We give "quotas". We see financial figures and problems rather than men and women at work around the world for the Lord Jesus Christ. We scarcely know the great missionaries of our Church. The average Episcopalian couldn't name ten missionaries of our Church if his life depended upon it!

Meanwhile other Churches have personalized their missionary work with great success, financial and otherwise. In these Churches, a parish becomes directly responsible for the support of one or more missionaries or mission projects. There is correspondence between the home Church and the missionary in the field. Interest is aroused and developed. The need for missionary work is focussed, made immediate and vital.

This is by no means a new idea. It has often been suggested for adoption by our Church, but it has always been scorned. There are, of course, obvious pitfalls. Overhead and administration have to be cared for. Administrative problems might in some instances be heightened. But surely these matters could be worked out. For this method has great advantages. It would solve much of our problem of adult missionary education. It would make increases in giving exciting and meaningful for the parish. There isn't much thrill today, despite all explanation, in increasing a quota payment. There isn't any incentive, beyond the ideal, to go beyond a quota. But there could be real excitement in a Church about adopting another missionary. Different fields would be studied. Salaries would be known. Problems would become vivid. We think of a Presbyterian Church that has in its vestibule framed pictures of the four missionaries supported by that Church. Beside their portraits, there is an empty frame. Under it is the caption, "When can we send out another missionary for the Lord Christ?"

Zeal, stewardship and evangelism are emphasized by this plan. We hope the Church will seriously consider it in planning for advance in the next triennium.

Changes In Country Life And Their Church Implications

By W. E. GARNETT, PH. D., Rural Sociologist
Virginia Agricultural Experiment Station

ARTICLE II

In a previous article some church implications of several important country life conditions and changes were summarized. The present discussion will consider certain related church conditions and trends.

Significant Church Trends

Probably the most significant church changes within the past several decades have been: (1) an increasingly high level of ministerial training; (2) increasing attention to youth work; and (3) growing denominational cooperation. These trends are all forward steps in needed adaptations.

The forces springing from the Reformation and the individualism of pioneer times tended to give rise to separatist church movements, and to emphasize denominational differences. The Civil War still further complicated the situation. Thus, of the 256 denominational groups reported in the United States by the 1936 religious census, 61 are found in Virginia. In recent decades the tendency has been for actual union between some church bodies, and cooperative effort between many others. Beginning with support of the old Sunday School Association, organized in 1876, which later evolved into the Council of Religious Education; the Inter-denominational Religious Work Foundation, the work of which has been going for more than a quarter of a century; and church support of the Virginia Commission on Interracial Cooperation Virginia denominational bodies have had increasing cooperative effort. Most cities and many counties now have ministers' associations or church councils. Although not acting officially responsible representatives of eight denominations joined in 1926 to sponsor the Rural Church Survey made by the Virginia Agricultural Experiment Station. As an outgrowth of this survey, representatives of ten denominations formed the Rural Church Conference Board and have supported the V. P. I. Rural Pastors' School under the auspices of this Board for about 20 years. All of these lines of effort helped prepare the way for the Virginia Church Council, which was launched in 1945. Now supported by 16 denominational bodies, this State Council is carrying on a constantly expanding program of united church effort.

The eyes of the whole world have recently been focused on the meeting of representatives of 150 church bodies at Amsterdam and their efforts for united church action to help a tortured world. The Amsterdam Conference raises questions of further united effort on the part of Virginia churches on a State and local basis, as well as the hope of unity in world action. In his last public statement Woodrow Wilson said: "Our civilization cannot survive materially unless it be redeemd spiritually." The challenge of Wilson's words is not likely to be successfully met on a world scale unless it is also met closer home. There are many problems in Virginia, especially rural problems, needing more vigorous united effort by all church forces. As long as we have so many weak struggling churches they will not give the aid society has a right to expect.

Over-Churching

So far denominational bodies have made little attempt to unitedly face the question of over-churching, a problem made more acute by some of the rural life changes outlined in the first article. Two years ago the Virginia Methodist Conference created a Commission on Consolidation and Relocation of Churches. This Commission has found that one denomination acting alone can do little in a fundamental way about the problem of over-churching and its long trail of consequences—weak, struggling, poorly equipped churches, difficulty in holding strong ministers qualified to meet the many needs of their people, and drags on many aspects of community life. In this connection, the words in an article in the June, 1948, American Magazine of a distinguished minister, Dr. Norman Vincent Peale, are of interest. He said: "At a period when the need of religious action is more desperately urgent than ever before, the most formidable obstacle to a united world and world peace lies in the tragic divsions of religion, the church rivalries, creedal prejudices, and spiritual snobbery which separate millions of people who worship the same God. . . . All people of faith believe in fundamentally the same thing. . . . There is no sound reason why the many different groups within the Protestant and Orthodox Christian faiths should not unite at once. Their present disunity is often so ridiculous that it would be funny if it were not so tragic."

Since certain beliefs and procedures of particular denominations seem desirable to some people more than those of other denominations, we are probably not yet ready for complete denominational unity. However, differences in denominational beliefs and observances do not appear to be so important to many as to prevent a change of denominational affiliations when circumstances demand. The attitudes of several groups on this question are indicated by figures or figures of Table 1.

Notes as in Table 2.

The 1935 religious census reported 4,532 white rural churches in Virginia which would be, on the basis of the 1940 population, approximately 283 white people per rural church. Church authorities say a population base of at least 1,000 people per church is needed for an efficient organization. We have an average of 3.5 churches per 1,000 people. Less than half of the people age 13 and over are church members.

The Virginia white rural churches have an average membership above 13 years of age of 120. However, from Tables No. 2 and No. 3 it will be seen that of 2,361 white rural churches reported in the latest annuals of several denominations, two in five have less than 100 members and one in eight less than 50 members. Church members generally include less than half as many families, the usual income unit as well as unit of church financial support. There are more weak struggling churches in the small sect denominations than in the major denominations covered by Tables 2 and 3.

Table 4 shows that many rural churches make relatively small payments on their pastors' salaries, about one in three less than $300 and one-half less than $500.

Source: Denominational reports as in Table 2.

By having ministers serve several churches, or through Home Mission Board supplements efforts are made to provide pastors of small churches with a fair salary. Although Home Mission Board expenditures of the several denominations for this purpose (and to keep alive weak churches which might otherwise close) are well over $100,000 per year, many rural ministers find their salaries inadequate to maintain a fair standard of living. The 1936 religious census reported an investment of $21,955,514 in Virginia white rural churches and an annual budget for such churches of $3,778,765.

There are also other difficulties besides financial ones which prevent weak churches from having needed programs. For instance, 710 out of 958 rural Baptist churches were reported as without young peoples' organizations, while 747 out of 970 rural Methodist churches lack such groups. In a rural out-of-school youth survey in 1939 covering about 3,000 young people 48 per cent of the boys and 54 per cent of the girls reported Sunday School membership, while only 7 per cent of the boys and 12 per cent of the girls said they belong to church young peoples' organizations. Apparently, we are willing to pay rather dearly to have churches of the several major denominations within reach of all the people. In addition to other costs, it involves an investment of several million dollars in church property which would not otherwise be needed. Denominational pride, local cemetery complications, family sentiment or devotions to sincere beliefs are responsible for perpetuating a situation in which changing conditions seem to demand some adjustments. Are we ready for another step in denominational cooperation—withdrawal of weaker churches in favor of the stronger in some areas, or federation of weak churches in others?

CHILDREN AND RELIGION. By Dora P. Chaplin. Scribners. $2.50.

This is a book which many of us have been waiting for. It will make happy those who want Christian education to be theologically based, those who want the best modern teaching methods, and those who want children to be normal Christians according to the capacities of their own age-level. It is realistic, factual, and sound. But it does not give an easy answer. There is no book with which parents and educators can make Christians out of children in ten easy lessons: it is a challenge to adults to present the Christian religion in the light of the capacities of children to appropriate the Christian faith for themselves, and this can never be easy. Mrs. Chaplin, as a successful mother and religious educator, is not writing from an ivory tower. She is a director of Christian education, and associate editor of the new curriculum for the Protestant Episcopal Church. Her book is a Religious Book Club selection and was summarized in TIME.

Subject: Hindrances to Worship.

Bible Readings: Acts 20:32; I John 5:4, 5; Rev. 3:12, 21.

Let us consider first external hindrances; those which may be summed up under the head of difficult circumstances: poor health, domestic worries, lack of time. These are real hindrances but they are not insuperable. Indeed those who through much suffering have overcome their difficulties to know Him may well attain to the stature of the greatest of saints. They know through personal experience, "My grace is sufficient unto thee: for my strength is made perfect through weakness." I Cor. 12:18.

But there are deeper hindrances, within ourselves, which are of the spirit.

Divided Prayer. Most of us are divided in our prayers. Our lips say one thing, our hearts another. "Where thy treasure is there will thy heart be also," St. Matt. 6:21. God always answers the heart. If we really wish to worship Him in spirit and in truth, we must set to work to find out which of our treasures is separating us from Him. These treasures may be of two kinds: ones that are good in themselves but are taking up too much space in our hearts; or they may be actual sins which must be rooted out. Here we must choose for ourselves. We must face the questions: how much do we really want to worship God? how much are we willing to give up in order to be near Him?

Again there are many people who have become dissatisfied with themselves and their contacts with the world. We hear a great deal about "a new orientation in our lives," "finding a new center in our personalities." The phrases are modern but the idea is as old as Christianity. The new center which our life needs is God; "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God" . . . St. Matt. 6:13.

Ignorance. Still again many feel helpless, a great ignorance in following the Christian life; in desperate need they do not know where to find Him. This is probably one of the greatest hindrances to Christian worship today, but it is quite inexcusable. Abundant help is available, suitable for every age and level of intelligence, and prepared by scholars of culture and sympathy.

Fear of having to go too far. Another hindrance which sometimes lurks behind our unwillingness to come into closer fellowship with God is a fear "lest having Him I must have naught besides." Here again is a difficulty in which the individual must come to terms with God Himself. He alone can help us.

Does all this seem too much for us? It need not be so. "While he was yet afar off his father saw him." St. Luke 15:20.

CXLVII

Collects, Epistles and Gospels. We have now finished the regular services of the Church and as we come to this portion of the Prayer Book the nature of these papers will change somewhat, for in considering the Collects, Epistles and Gospels it is hard to keep from sermonizing, since the very meat of the New Testament is in these portions of Scripture, and they contain such splendid messages that it is often difficult to refrain from pointing them out.

We shall begin this portion of our Prayer Book consideration with some generalities.

There are sixty-eight collects in the course of the regular Christian year and thirty more under the heading, "Holy Days."

In fact, this word collect appears so often in this portion of the Prayer Book that the following incident has been related concerning a lady of another denomination who was contemplating joining the Episcopal Church. The rector lent her a Prayer Book and told her to study it and he would return later and talk it over with her.

On his return he was surprised to hear her say, "I don't think I can afford to join your church." When he said, "What do you mean that you cannot afford to join the Episcopal Church?"

"Well," she replied. "Of course I expect to give to the Church when I join it, but I find the word collect on almost every page, and I don't believe I can stand being dunned to that extent, even for the Church."

This leads us to a consideration of the origin of this word, which in this case was so wofully misunderstood.

The best authorities differ on this subject. Some think it means a prayer to be said by the whole congregation collectively.

Others hold that it is a collection of the principal thoughts in the Epistle and Gospel that follow. There is such good authority for both these views that one may decide either way, and be in excellent company.

HOMES CONTINUING ON "FAITH, HOPE AND CHARITY"

Ellsworth, Kansas.—Doubling in size, the St. Francis Boys' Home here has expanded this fall in opening a second unit of the Boys' Home near Salina, 30 miles from the original unit. The Ellsworth unit was established in September, 1945; the Salina unit was opened in August, this year.

Both units of the Boys' Home are housed in buildings formerly occupied by County Old Peoples' Homes. The Ellsworth union comprises the main building, farm buildings, and 80 acres of land; the Salina unit, main building, farm buildings, and 40 acres of land. The Salina property was purchased recently; the Ellsworth property is being leased from Ellsworth County. The County Commissioners of Ellsworth County are requesting the electorate this fall for permission to sell the property on closed bids. Request for the purchase has been made by the St. Francis Boys' Home.

The Ellsworth and Salina Homes are unique in the Church in being interested primarily in boys who have faced the police and who are often, therefore, ineligible to other Church schools or homes. The boys are retained in public life, attending the nearby public schools. No endowment or designated form of financial backing has been achieved by the Boys' Home.

The Kansas City Star speaks of the St. Francis Boys' Home as continuing on "faith, hope, and charity."

HEARD AROUND THE WORLD

New York, N. Y.—"Great Scenes From Great Plays" is being heard around the world. The initial broadcast went to a considerably larger number of Mutual and independent radio stations than was originally believed possible. The total was 579.

Now arrangements have been made to send the programs by short wave to all Army Posts in the United States, all military hospitals in the United States, to the Army of Occupation in Europe and to the Army of Occupation in Japan and Korea.

THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH HOME FOR MEN

Charlottesville, Va. — At a recent meeting of the Board of Trustees of The Episcopal Church Home for Men, the offices of secretary and treasurer were combined, and Mr. J. Leigh Hawkins, of Charlottesville, was elected secretary-treasurer, and former secretary John W. Herndon, as founder, was thereupon appointed a member of the Board of Trustees.

A committee was appointed to draft a resolution to the Diocesan Council to consider the advisability of the trustees of the funds of the diocese allocating the recent legacy of the late Judge Niven towards the erection of the necessary addition to the present home in order to accommodate more men .

A resolution was adopted providing that appeal for $250,000 be made to those interested in the establishment of such home and of the endowment fund to provide an income for its future maintenance.

The Membership Committee, of which Mr. Walter N. Chinn, Jr., of Fredericksburg is chairman, was authorized to issue an appeal for annual members. The amounts received from this source will be used to provide for any deficit which might accrue incident to the running expenses of the Home.

Having received several "memorial flower gifts", the suggestion was made that instead of sending to deceased friends and relatives flowers, which fade in a day, that a donation be made to the "Memorial Flower Endowment Fund" of The Episcopal Church Home for Men, which will provide comfort and a home for some elderly man. Amounts received from such gifts will be added to the regular endowment fund of the Home. Such memorial gifts should be sent to the secretary-treasurer, Mr. J. Leigh Hawkins, Peoples National Bank, Charlottesville, Virginia.

ARIZONA CLERGY HOLD CONFERENCE

Hear Reports on Lambeth and Amsterdam

Phoenix, Ariz.—A full attendance of the clergy of Arizona greeted Bishop Kinsolving for the annual two-day conference at Trinity Cathedral recently. The Bishop presented a detailed account of the Lambeth Conference which he attended. Some of the principal debates and resolutions of Lambeth were outlined, not only with their reference to the present world situation but also as touching upon local conditions. His enthusiasm over the results of Lambeth were contagious and the clergy felt that this local conference was well worth attending. Bishop Kinsolving had the pleasant experience of introducing Ambassador Lewis W. Douglas, a native of Arizona, to the American bishops and others. "Ambassador Douglas", said Bishop Kinsolving, "is one of the most active and highly respected representatives this country has ever sent to England."

Still further high-lighting the Clergy Conference was a report on the Assembly of Churches at Amsterdam given by the Rev. W. Don Brown, rector of Trinity Church, Los Angeles. Mr. Brown had attended the Assembly as an unofficial observer. He spoke in high praise of the work of this Assembly which was made against a background of frightful devastation and disorder, with the tension of the Berlin crisis pulsing in the very streets of Amsterdam.

The second day of the Clergy Conference was devoted primarily to mapping plans for the ensuing year and the discussion of the Every Member Canvass to be held in all of the parishes and missions in the District in November. The clergy approved of an increased quota and budget which will be presented to the next Convocation in February for final action. Gradually, the district is assuming more and more of the expense of witnessing and maintaining the Church in Arizona.

REGIONAL VESTRY MEETINGS A GREAT SUCCESS

Cleveland, O.—For the tenth year, the Rt. Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, D. D., has conducted a guest Missionary Bishop as speaker to the various regional meetings of vestries in the Diocese of Ohio, to note that this not only encourages full attendance of clergy and vestries, but also spurs activity and missionary giving throughout the diocese.

This year Bishop Tucker, together with the Ven. Donald Wonders, D. D., the archdeacon, and Mr. Clifford C. Cowin, bursar of the diocese visited eleven regions. At each of these meetings a dinner was served by the host parish. The cost of the dinner was paid by the diocese. In some of these regional gatherings as many as fourteen parishes were represented by their clergy and vestrymen.

Bishop Tucker concluded each of the regional vestry meetings by advising the respective parishes of the 1949 quotas as a goal for the Every Member Canvass, and asked the vestries to present the goal to their parishes as a fair share in the total program of the Church. A period of recess permitted each of the vestries to gather to discuss the proposed quota for their parishes, and upon call to order again by the Bishop, a spokesman for each vestry reported on the acceptance of the assigned goal.

The visiting speaker who accompanied Bishop Tucker this year was the Rt. Rev. Lane Barton, D. D., from the missionary district of Eastern Oregon. His message thrilled those who heard him as he described the challenge to all for witnessing and stewardship in "the greater work of the Church"; and, "here in Eastern Oregon as in so many other areas in which the Church is at work, the fields are 'white already to harvest'."

The success of these visitations is proved when we see statistics for the Diocese of Ohio and note that in 1945 the total proposed budget was $87,-865.00, and in 1949 the proposed budget is $149,676.00.

GOOD PROGRESS BEING MADE

Liberia.—Bishop Bravid W. Harris of Liberia was able to make his first official visit to the Holy Cross Mission at Bolahun recently.

Down the trail he was met by the boys of the school, singing, then a service of thanksgiving was held in the church. Several days were spent in conferences, meetings, visits to the various schools, hospitals and other activities of the mission. On a Sunday afternoon, the Bishop confirmed 82 persons.

Word comes that good progress is being made on construction of Cuttington College and Divinity School. It is planned to open next February. Bishop Harris says they do not plan to do any work below the college level or to accept students in the Divinity School who are "not prepared to do the work."

REV. GABRIEL HEBERT KINGSBURY LECTURER

New Haven, Conn.—The annual Kingsbury Lectures at Berkeley Divinity School, were delivered by the Rev. A. Gabriel Hebert, S. S. M., of Kelham, England, on October 18. The Bishop of Connecticut presided and two societies of Connecticut clergy and several visitors from Yale Divinity School were among those attending. Dr. Hebert took as his subject The Doctrine of the Church and Christian Unity, and spoke first on The Biblical Doctrine of the Church:

We have substituted for the idea of "the Church" that of "denominations." In the New Testament the Church was first of all regarded as a "nation"; the Israel of God, reconstituted by the saving work of Christ and enlarged to include people of all races: hence the name ecclesia. But the ecclesia, though it is God's creation, is always imperfect, so that salvation can be worked out only through the Remnant. Such is the Church always; when our Lord was crucified he was the faithful Remnant; in his death and resurrection judgment and salvation are seen as being worked out at the same time, and we are baptized into his death. Because we men are sinful and our deliverance from sin is being worked out in the Church, the Church is necessarily a complex fact; and while the divisions of Christians are shameful and scandalous, it is not any greater problem to faith that the Church should be divided than that it should be sinful.

Resuming in the afternoon, the lecturer spoke on The Way of Christian Unity:

The Church of the early centuries had the task not merely of converting individuals, but of redeeming and transforming the whole civilization of the Greco-Roman world. It did not come through its conflict unscathed; the mediaeval Church was so distorted and one-sided that the efforts of the Reformers to return to the pure Gospel resulted in further distortions and in schisms on a scale hitherto unknown. In our day a great movement towards Christian unity is taking place; what is on the way is a deep inner understanding between the Catholic and the Protestant sides of Christendom. True reunion will come only through this, and cannot come by that ecclesiastical diplomacy which assumes that sufficient doctrinal agreement can be taken for granted. The result of this would not be Christian reunion but only an amalgamation of denominations.

"WAYSIDE MISSION" IS STUDENT PROJECT

C. D. S. P. Notes

Berkeley, Cal.—The "Wayside Mission," descriptive of the sidewalk preaching by the students and faculty of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, is being conducted for the second successive year in West Berkeley. Sponsored by the student body as a missionary project, listeners on the sidewalk, in front of a cocktail bar, those waiting for a bus and taxi drivers, hear the message of the Gospel, with an invitation to attend the Church of the Good Shepherd, a mission under the control of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific and operated by students.

Field work for students has been arranged, so that men are on the staffs of many of the parishes and missions throughout the Diocese of California and the district of San Joaquin. With five seminarians on their teaching staff, Christ Church, Alameda, has the largest number. Responsibilies of the students include in some cases preaching and pastoral calling, in other responsibility for youth work or the church school, and in many the teaching of a class. The men are supervised by the various rectors, and are also assigned to faculty advisors who help them with this practical application of what they are learning in the class room and in campus activities.

The first visiting speaker of the fall term was Bishop Block, who spoke in chapel concerning his experiences in England and at the Lambeth conference. The Bishop remained for dinner and an evening with the students.

OVER 1,000 VOLUNTEER FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS

Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship Planning Intensified Activity

Chicago, Ill.—Well over one thousand new missionary volunteers responded to God's call during the past year through the ministry of the Foreign Missions Fellowship, missionary arm of the Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship. And this dead-in-earnest, far-sighted group of young people is planning greatly intensified activity—prayer, Bible study, missionary conferences—to encourage all evangelical Christian college and university students to give themselves to world evangelism.

First on the program is the unusual Convention for Missionary Conquest to be held over the Christmas holidays, December 27-31. Nearly 1,200 student delegates from the United States, Canada, and a number of foreign countries are expected to gather at the University of Illinois at Urbana to hear eminent Christian and missionary leaders present to them their personal responsibility in Christ's command to world evangelism, and to face realistically the various problems of the missionary enterprise.

One of the most practical features of the program will be the opportunities provided for students to meet and talk with fifty missionaries, representing mission fields all over the world. Discussion panels will cover such down-to-earth topics as The Missionary and His Servant Problem, The Place of Missionary Wives, The Missionary and Oriental Taboos, Personality Adjustments and Moral Problems, What Is a Missionary Call? What are Missions Trying To Do? How are World Politics Affecting Missions? Other meetings will investigate the situation on the respective fields around the world and the kinds of missionary ministry called for by the urgency of the present hour.

Among the speakers at the convention will be Bishop Frank Houghton, veteran missionary and general director of the China Inland Mission; Dr. V. Raymond Edman, president of Wheaton (Ill.) College; Dr. G. Allen Fleece, pastor of the Westminster Presbyterian Church, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Dr. William Graham, president of the Northwestern Schools, Minneapolis, Minn.; Dr. Harold S. Laird, president of the Independent Board for Presbyterian Foreign Missions; Dr. J. B. McLaurin, secretary of the Canadian Baptist Foreign Mission Board; Dr. W. Robert Smith, professor of philosophy, Dubuque University, Dubuque, Ia.; Bishop Elam Stauffer, missionary of the Mennonite Church to Africa; Dr. Frank C. Torrey, pastor of the Calvary Independent Church, Lancaster, Pr. Dr. Homer Hammontree, widely known song leader and composer, will have charge of the musical program.

Other highlights of the program will be the testimonies of foreign students; realistic missionary exhibits; and a challenging New Year's Eve Watchnight Service.

Forerunner of this conference was the Convention for Missionary Advance which met at the University of Toronto at Christmas, 1946. It was at this meeting, attended by 600 students, that 150 college men and women volunteered for foreign mission service. Since that time, missionary interest and zeal have gained momentum among college and university students, who have gained a vision beyond the limits of their own campuses.

Directing the 1948 convention will be Dr. T. Norton Sterrett, missionary secretary of the Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship, who plans to return to the foreign fields early next year.

DR. PEPPER WILL SERVE C. W. S.

New York, N. Y.—At a meeting of its Board of Trustees, Church World Service accepted the proposal that the Rev. Dr. Almon R. Pepper should serve as executive vice-president of CWS until the end of 1948. National Council has granted Dr. Pepper leave of absence for this period. During his absence the work of the Department of Christian Social Relations will be under direction of the Rev. J. Arnold Purdie, assistant secretary.

COLLEGIATE-FORTH NEWEST EDITION

New York, N. Y.—Newest variant from the established pattern of Diocesan Editions of FORTH is Collegiate-FORTH, which made its appearance with the October magazine.

For the present it will be edited by the Rev. Thomas V. Barrett, chaplain of Kenyon College, and until recently executive secretary of the National Council's Division of College Work.

Collegiate-FORTH is an eight-page supplement bound with the regular edition of the magazine. It contains a letter from Mr. Barrett, an article on student conferences, a story of the Canterbury Club at Ames, Iowa, by the Rev. LeRoy S. Burroughs, and a story of Canterbury Club progress at Carnegie Institute, Pittsburgh, Pa.

There is a piece about the Student Lenten Offering, which this year was designated for St. Theodore's Hospital, in the Philippines, another about student work at the Ohio State College. Other stories carry information about college work at the University of Maryland, at Utah State College, and at Tulane. Information is given about the national organization of "Faculty Episcopalians" and of student participation in an Oregon work camp last summer.

DR. COWAN HOLDS DISCUSSION ROUPS

Sweet Briar, Va.—Under the auspices of the Y. W. C. A. Dr. Thomas B. Cowan, minister of Everybody's Church, Lexington, Ky., spent three days on the Sweet Briar College campus, beginning with the Sunday morning service on Oct. 10. In addition to scheduled discussion groups Dr. Cowan, who has paid several visits to Sweet Briar in past year, held individual conferences with students.

Born in Scotland Dr. Cowan attended public school in Dunfermline and served in World War I in the Black Watch and the Royal Engineers. Coming to America he worked in steel mills and coal mines in the Pittsburgh area before receiving his A. B. degree from Cumberland University. Work for his B. D. degree was done at Yale and Vanderbilt Universities, and for nine years Dr. Cowan was minister of the Norris Religious Fellowship, Norris, Tenn., a community church including in its membership representatives from twenty denominations.

Since 1946 Dr. Cowan has been minister of Everybody's Church, and in addition is chairman of the Fellowship of Southern Churchmen and editor of its publication, "Prophetic Religion." He is active in University Christian Missions and in summer conferences and work camps throughout the South.

COLLECTIONS ON BUDGET QUOTAS

To October 1, 1948

Some Signs of Slipping.

The report of collections for this quarter is not as good as that of July 1, nor as that of October, 1947.

We allow one full month for collection and remittance and with this period of grace every one of the 99 dioceses and districts should be in the 100% column. That the total is over 100% at this time is due to the large over-payment by quite a number. The record shows:

Date	Dioceses and Districts 100%	% of Amount Due Collections
October 1, 1947	75	104.5%
July 1, 1948	77	113.3%
October 1, 1948	61	100.8%

Since the 1948 Budget was adopted costs have been increasing in all parts of the world. Many appropriations in the Budget are now entirely inadequate. A large over-payment of expectations is needed.

Above all, our missionary pledges for 1949 should be very much larger.

WORK FOR AND BY LAYMEN DEVELOPING

New York, N. Y.—Upon his return from a rapid and busy visit to the Missionary District of Honolulu, the Rev. Arnold Lewis, executive director of the Presiding Bishop's Committee on Laymen's Work, reported that the District is working earnestly in the development of its work and by laymen. Also that a diocesan chairman has been appointed, in the person of Mr. Richard C. Ching of Honolulu.

Mr. Ching is a vestryman of St. Elizabeth's parish, president of the Men's Club and adviser to the Young People's Fellowship of St. Elizabeth's.

He is president of the Provision Company, dealers in ice cream and dairy products. His community interests include membership on the board of directors of the Honolulu YMCA since 1939; member of the board of directors of the Honolulu Den of the Lions' Club; past president of the Hawaii Chinese Civic Association; past Commander, Kau Tom Post #11, American Legion; member of the Chamber of Commerce, Honolulu; and franchise owner of the Tiger Baseball Club in the Hawaii Senior Baseball League.

"PLEASED TO SUPPORT"

New York, N. Y.—The vestry of Trinity Church, New York City, has notified the Presiding Bishop that it "is pleased to support the national radio program" (Great Scenes From Great Plays) and that it accepts the 3% plan. The amount contributed will thus be $6,294.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Austin J. T. Ecker, of the staff of the Detroit Episcopal City Mission, has accepted a call as rector of St. Peter's Church, Detroit, Mich. Mr. Ecker will succeed at St. Peter's the Rev. Henry J. Simpson, who resigned recently to engage in private psychiatric practice. Recently the Vestry of St. Peter's decided that the main job of the parish in future must be to take an active role in fighting juvenile delinquency, and to care for children in every way possible. It is planned in the near future to add a social service worker to the staff, who will devote much time to neighborhood and parish work. Mr. Ecker is the director of the Big Brother and Big Sister work at the Juvenile Court. At St. Peter's, he will use the parish as a base of operations for a continuance of that work.

The Rev. Allen O. Birchenough, rector of St. Mark's Church, Des Moines, Iowa, will become the rector of Grace Church, Ravenna, Ohio, on November 28.

The Rev. David M. Talbot, curate at the Church of Our Saviour, Akron, Ohio, will become the rector of Trinity Church, Coshocton, Ohio, on December 1.

The Rev. Arthur Hume Cox of Grace Memorial Church, Lynchburg, Va., will become rector of Nelson Parish December 16, with residence at Arrington, Va.

Mr. Cox was born in Richmond, Virginia, and is a graduate of the University of Richmond (B. S. 1932) and Virginia Seminary at Alexandria (B. D. 1938). He was ordained to the priesthood in 1939. He served the churches at Columbia and Bremo Bluff in the Diocese of Virginia prior to going to Lynchburg in 1941.

In Nelson County Mr. Cox will have Trinity Church at Arrington, Grace Church at Massies Mill, Christ Church at Norwood and Christ Church at Schuyler.

The Rev. Samuel Janney Hutton, at present rector of Kingston Parish in Mathews County, in the Diocese of Virginia, has accepted a call to the rectorship of St. John's Church at Glasgow, Christ Church, Buena Vista and Grace Church near Buchanan, all in the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia, with residence in the rectory at Glasgow. He will be returning to the diocese he had formerly served; he plans to take up his new work early in January.

A native of Maryland, Mr. Hutton attended Earlham College (B. A.), Columbia (M. A.), Kings College, Cambridge, the General Seminary, New York (S. T. B.). He was ordained priest in 1923.

Mr. Hutton served as Chaplain of the Gilman School at Baltimore, Virginia Episcopal School at Lynchburg, St. Paul's School at Baltimore, and Salisbury School, Connecticut. He has been rector of Christ Church, at Big Stone Gap, Va., and the Church of The Good Shepherd, Richmond, Headmaster of Christ Church School at Christchurch, Va., and since 1946 has had his charge in Mathews County.

Meade's, however, but those of an anonymous correspondent whose letter is included in the Bishop's book, in spite of the fact that it contains a fictitious account of the division of Charles City County into two parishes, Westover and Mapsco, which is in direct conflict with the Bishop's own correct account of this division, earlier in the same chapter.

Contrary to this statement, Mapsico Church was not "given the Indian name Mapsco in memory of 'the old brick church which stood about seven miles below the Court House . . . on the road to Sandy Point' ", for the simple reason that the colonial church in question was not named Mapsco and there never was either a colonial Mapsco Church or Mapsco Parish, since there is no existing colonial record which mentions either one.

The fact is that both the Mapsico Church built in 1856 and its predecessor, built on the same site in 1834 and burned in 1854, were named Mapsico because they stood near Mapsico Creek, whereas the "old brick church" stood on Kennon's Creek and was built as the Lower Church of Westover Parish, about 1738, after that parish had been enlarged to include the whole county. The county had originally been divided into Westover, Wallingford, Wilmington and Wyanoke Parishes, which were combined as Westover Parish by Acts of Assembly of 1720 and 1724, which make no mention of any Mapsco Parish, and Bishop Meade states this correctly earlier in his book.

The truth about the "old brick church" is far more interesting than this persistent but erroneous legend, for the foundation of the Lower Westover Church of 1738 still lies in the ground near that of its predecessor, the first Wallingford Parish Church, built perhaps as early as 1645 and therefore one of the pioneer churches of colonial Virginia.

Even though "Great Scenes from Great Plays" has only been on the air for a short time its effects are being felt with constantly increasing strength. Clergymen throughout the nation are reporting increased congregations as the result of the program. Newspapers and magazines acclaim this new program for its excellent presentation as well as its magnificent objectives. Already its audience is counted in the millions and the seeds of religion are being sown among the unchurched where they are needed most.

No doubt your church, like most Episcopal Churches througout the nation, is taking special measure to make sure that Sunday visitors brought in by the program are given a warm welcome, not only by your Rector, but also by all members of the Congregation.

You can be sure that the value of this program to your Church will increase steadily with each passing week. That's why it can and should become a vital part of your Church. Whether it does or not will depend on church members like yourself.

You have to vote "Yea" or "Nay" whether or not "Great Scenes from Great Plays" shall continue. You cast your ballot for "Yea" by increasing your pledge in the annual Every Member Canvass by only three percent.

Isn't it worth 3% to you to continue this outstanding series of plays on the air! Quite apart from the excellent entertainment offered by them, the fact that you are introducing uncounted millions to a new concept of Christian thought should provide fresh incentive for your continued support.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

My Twelve Years in Fresno

REACTIONS TO THE MINISTRY

Summary of Sermon Preached at St. James' Cathedral, Fresno, California

By The VERY REV. JAMES M. MALLOCH, D. D., Dean

I begin this address with a heartfelt expression of gratitude to all who have stood by me during the years. A small but loyal remnant of the old and fretful days and a large group of strong new leaders have made the Cathedral what it is today. During my time, the population of Fresno has doubled, the membership of the Cathedral has trebled, while its financial strength has increased about six times.

I am deeply indebted to Rabbi Greenberg, Monsignor Dowling, my fellow members of the Fresno City Board of Education, my fellow members of the Kiwanis Club, Radio Station KMJ, and to certain leaders in welfare work for the place I occupy in the community at large. I am indebted more than I can say to the College of the Pacific for academic recognition. I owe a very great deal to Methodism.

I am also very grateful to the Berkeley Baptist Divinity School for many cordial invitations to address its faculty and students.

I. SURPRISES

Most of my ministry has been spent in Fresno, and I have experienced some notable surprises.

I have been surprised by the ministerial turnover in Fresno. During the past dozen years, nearly all of the churches in Fresno have had three or more pastors. The pastors have usually been shoved out by personality clashes, a strange commentary on Christian love. The ministerial turnover has been great enough to make impossible the development of a strong ministerial association or church council. Ministers, as Marcus Bach has said, do not become citizens of the community. That fact is a financial and a social tragedy. Ministers feel that their profession is insecure and that their congregations have a very tenuous hold on religion.

I have been utterly amazed by the lack of personal religion in many Episcopalians. Coming out of a very conservative Presbyterian Church, I had no idea that there were church members with no sense of personal responsibility for their own religion, church members who could neglect church going indefinitely without qualms of conscience, and even ministers and "preachers kids" practically devoid of piety. I had no idea that I as a minister would be expected to endure their boorishness in polite silence. I have also been naive enough to be surprised by the fact that women can be as impious as men.

I have been astonished by the proselytizing that goes on between churches, and I have been particularly surprised to find most of it on a purely social and sensational level, a theologically meaningless level. People go to the church which offers them the biggest time for their money. It is still true, however, that churches are built and sustained more by beliefs than by fellowship. Even the most liberal churches have dogmas which rule out all contrary points of view. Converting people to convictions is at least legitimate. When the Protestant ministry becomes as ethical a profession as medicine, social proselytizing will disappear.

I have discovered that spiritual problems seldom exist in the pure state. Most people who come to ministers for spiritual help also want financial assistance, a job, a house to live in, or something else of a practical nature. It is just as necessary to feed the stomach as the soul.

I have discovered, s u r p r i s i n g l y enough, that many people call on the clergy, not to confess their sins, but to get approval of their badness. Some of them come to confess the sins of the clergy. The one thing the clergy can't take is criticism. Some of them, as a distinguished organist said to me, are peacocks. In dealing with people, however, the clergy must be as professional as physicians. They must never let prejudice or resentment keep them from being as helpful as possible.

I have discovered that some people regard their lodge as a religious sect. They should be expelled from the lodge. There are too many sects in the U. S. A. already. Fraternalism should be religious to be sure but never a religion. A lodge is not a church.

The willingness of many Protestant ministers to perform marriage ceremonies for all comers and to make a racket out of wedding chapels has completely floored me. I feel sure that a very large part of the blame for the breakdown of marriage in our time can be laid at the feet of the Protestant ministry.

I have been surprised to find how few husbands and wives cooperate in religion. No wonder the family is disintegrating. It is weak at its very foundation.

The worship of Alcohol in modern society bewilders me. Modern men worship alcohol even when it kills them and their loved ones, or drags them through divorce courts and bankruptcy. Why is taking a drink so virtuous?

I have been astonished at the number of people who, although they have no use for churches themselves, except possibly for weddings and funerals, want the churches to support all their pet community projects, favorite political theories, even their business ventures. They seem to think ministers are completely gullible.

I had not anticipated when I entered the ministry that I would find the vast amount of religious illiteracy I have encountered. Sheer ignorance accounts no doubt for much of the religious maladjustment of our time. Religious education is the primary religious need of our age.

II. POLICIES

It has been my policy to cooperate with Jews and Catholics in promoting good will through understanding. I find other faiths interesting and other religionists human. Most people don't agree with me in this. I have had little encouragement in my good-will work from my fellow religionists. Religionists believe that the best way to build up a church is to be intolerant of all other churches. They seem to be right. They should not forget, however, that Jesus said, "All who take the sword will perish by the sword." I have had a great deal of encouragement in my good-will work from community leaders.

Many Protestants worry a great deal

Inaugural Sermon

OF THE REV. ARTHUR C. LICHTENBERGER, D. D.

Professor of Pastoral Theology.

Delivered in the Chapel of the General Theological Seminary, New York,

October 18, 1948

This is how one should regard us, as servants of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God. 1 Cor. 4:1.

When a man is ordained priest in the Episcopal Church the bishop says to him, "You have heard of what dignity and of how great importance this office is, whereunto you are called". Then, as the service proceeds, it becomes quite evident where the dignity and importance of the office are to be found. Not in the person of the priest, in his abilities or his achievements; certainly not in his pretensions. The ministry is so weighty an office and of so high a dignity not because of what we bring to it or make of it but because of Him who has called us—called us to be His servants and stewards.

In the deepest sense we are here, either as students preparing for the ministry or as men ordained, not because we have chosen this work but because we could not do otherwise. It is unthinkable that any man should say, casually and offhand, "I am going to be a servant of Christ and a steward of God's mysteries". When we offer ourselves for the sacred ministry our offering is a response. That is what vocation means. The initiative is not ours but God's. And when we are persuaded in all seriousness that we have been called by God to the ministry, then we answer because we are compelled; that pressure upon us is, the pressure of God's love. In the days of Frederick Denison Maurice a clergyman's life was very different from what it is today, but even then he spoke of "the responsibilities" and "the terrors" of the ministry. No man can make the effort to meet those responsibilities or live serenely with the terrors unless he has unshakeable conviction—not only on the luminous day of his ordination but on the dark days of his failure and his disappointments—the unshakable conviction that he did not choose Christ but that Christ chose him.

With that conviction we are here. Some of us preparing for the ministry, some of us guiding and directing that preparation. The Seminary is, in a common phrase, a place where men study for the ministry. To study for the ministry, obviously, does not mean only to study. There is much more in a three year seminary course than the work in lecture-room and library and tutorial hour. But to study for the ministry does mean to study; to study the Bible, Church History, Dogmatic Theology, Apologetics, Christian Ethics, Liturgics —to study Pastoral Theology.

From the earliest days in this place, as in all seminaries presumably, there have been courses called Pastoral Theology. In the General Seminary catalogue of 1834-35, which is the earliest bulletin preserved in the Library, there is printed this requirement—"All classes on one day each week . . . and as often on the day appointed as he may require, attend the Professor of Pastoral Theology and Pulpit Eloquence, for the performance of the services of the Church, the delivery of original sermons, and the instructions and recitations, or other exercises, to which he may think proper to call their attention". In 1854 the catalogue states that "The design of the course in this department (Pastoral Theology) is, specially to prepare the Student for the duties of the Desk and Pulpit, and for all other Pastoral Offices." Fifty years later the Professor of Pastoral Theology and the Dean were having an uneasy time. "Fortunately or unfortunately in the old days of the Seminary", we read, "The demands upon the incumbent of this chair were not as great as they are now, or as they ought to be and must be in our later day, provided the chair is not lumbered up with those various ephemeral educational experiments of our period which threaten to take up its time and which deal with very small matters and and matters of very questionable ultimate value.

The present incumbent of the chair of Pastoral Theology is also somewhat perplexed. Coming to the Seminary from many years in the parochial ministry I will not presume in this inaugural sermon, after four weeks of residence to give the proper specifications of the chair! There is no doubt it could easily be adorned with excess lumber, much more easily than in 1904. Everybody has an idea or two about what should be taught in Pastoral Theology and how to teach it. Experiments are in process in many places. Both the content and method of teaching the courses are under careful scrutiny. What, precisely, should be taught in the department of Pastoral Theology? How much field work should be required of students? How can such field work be supervised effectively? Can clinical training properly be part of the three year course? Every seminary in the country is asking those questions and seeking the answers. And that is good. It would be better if we had found the answers, but since we haven't it is good that we are determined to press the search.

We must, therefore, be very critical of what we teach in this department; critical of how this part of a man's training for the ministry is given. Without such criticism we are likely to find ourselves dealing with the subject in a way which is quite unreal, quite irrelevant to the historical situation in which we stand. There is a constant change in the social and cultural patterns of life, in our day such change moves at a rapid pace; we must be aware of this process as we train men to be pastors. Pastoral Theology as taught in 1948 can bear little resemblance to Pastoral Theology as taught in 1900 and in 1958 another approach may be required. This does not cause confusion and uncertainty. This makes for order and definiteness. Only in this way can we train men adequately for the pastoral ministry and such training, certainly, is a necessity which must be met if the Church is to be the redemptive community.

Now whatever explorations and experiments we may make we shall have one fixed purpose; to enable the men who go from here into the ministry to relate the given element of the Faith to the life of a Christian community so that the Christian community can be an effective witness of the gospel of the world.

This is implicit in the title of the Department. It is Pastoral Theology. The emphasis is upon both words. It is not Pastoral Care nor Practical Theology, for pastoral care in all its aspects finds its ultimate reference in theology, and theology that is of any use to the pastor is bound to be practical which means it is applicable to life. We do not study theology without being involved personally, for theology is the study of the living faith of the Church. So why speak of practical theology? I should not want to be asked to teach that, for the overtones of such terminology are that the theology taught in the other disciplines in a seminary is impractical, academic, abstract; and that since such subjects as counseling, parish administration, preaching and Christian education are practical, therefore they are only accidentally and remotely connected with theology. Terminology here, as often, is important: we have a department of Pastoral Theology.

So we are concerned both with the faith by which the Church lives, the given, and with men and women, social beings in this present day. The task of the minister in this situation is an extremely difficult one, requiring as Kierkegaard put it, the introduction of Christianity into Christendom.

When we think of what it means to do that we think first of all, I suppose, of the great numbers of men and women who cannot see how Christianity has any relevance for their lives. We think of the people who cannot see where Christianity matters at all. They live in one world, the Church lives in another. In one of the reports presented at Amsterdam the question is asked, "What does the World see, or think it sees, when it looks at the Church?"

Answer from the World. "It is a Church that has largely lost touch with the dominant realities of modern life, and still tries to meet the modern world with language and a technique that may have been appropriate two hundred years ago." Whether that be true or not, that is what many people think of the Church. Between them and us there is a great gulf fixed. If that gulf is to be bridged the clergy must have a real grasp of the meaning of Christian faith and a profound understanding of people where they are.

The priest then must know theology but he must also have a working knowledge of the psychology of personality and an understanding of social structure. He must know people and he must know what happens to people in our secular culture, our "demonically distorted" secular culture. It is quite useless for a priest, no matter how orthodox his theology and how sound his churchmanship, to stand on one side of the gulf which separates him from perplexed and needy people and tell them that they have no business being over there, they should be where he is. Our Lord cannot be served in that manner. The servant of Christ, the pastor, meets people where they are in their predicament and helps them find a way. He walks with them in a rediscovery of the way made for us all by the Lord Christ.

But when we ask what it means to introduce Christianity into Christendom, we cannot think only of those outside the life of the Church. Christianity must be i n t r o d u c e d into Christian churches. There are of course many devoted men in the ministry, there are great numbers of faithful lay people; but if we are going to take seriously the words which everyone used so freely a few years ago—"let the Church be the Church"—then the parishes of the Church must be rebuilt.

Dr. Visser 't Hooft has said that the rebuilding of parishes in continental Europe means three things. 1. "To help each parish overcome the spirit of the bourgeois secularism and to rediscover its specific calling as part of the body of Christ. This means realizing anew the fundamental difference between the Church of Christ and an association to promote the religious interest of its members." 2. To bring lay people into a full, active share in the tasks of the parish. 3. To create a real fellowship within the parish. Are not those the essential needs of every one of our parishes here in America? It is required of a faithful steward of the mysteries of God in our day that he do at least this: lead the people in his care toward those goals.

We cannot conserve the Christian faith and the tradition of our Church if we use this heritage as a comfortable refuge for ourselves and the faithful few gathered about us. That is to bury the talent with which we have been entrusted. You will remember what our Lord said about that kind of stewardship. One has the impression at times that we Episcopalians think we may escape his condemnation because of the careful and orderly way in which we preserve what has been given us. It was remarked long ago that "the Episcopal Church embroiders the napkin in which it lays away its talent". But we are still unfaithful no matter how we bury it.

Clergy and people must use what has been given them, use it to make the parish a center of Christian faith and witness in the midst of common life.

Can a man in his theological course learn how to be that kind of a pastor? Can he learn how to care for individuals and "to provide for the Lord's family"? To minister to persons and to lead in rebuilding the life of the parish? To stand, as Dr. Temple said, "To stand for the things of God before the laity that the laity may stand for the things of God before the world"? I believe he can. That of course is the end to which all he studies and does here is directed. He will not emerge from Chelsea Square on graduation day with a diploma and a burning conviction and a complete set of perfected techniques. We trust he will have the diploma and we pray God he will have the burning conviction. What else? This, I think: enough understanding to know that he is only a beginner and has much to learn. A man with that equipment will be a good pastor. He will never cease to learn. He will seek in the diaconate, in the exercise of his priesthood, in clinical courses or wherever it can be found. further training. For if a man learns here that he enters the ministry as a disciple, a learner, and that he goes among people not as a master but as a servant, not as a ruler but as a slave, a slave of the Lord Christ and their servant for His sake, then he understands the true dignity and importance of his office. Then he will be indeed "a servant of Christ and a steward of the mysteries of God."

MY 12 YEARS IN FRESNO

about the progress of Roman Catholicism in America. The only thing for them to do is to attend church as well as their Catholic brethren do.

I have used advertising and publicity of all kinds to promote church attendance, and I have often been criticized caustically for doing so. I agree with my critics. I don't believe in sensationalism in religion. Neither do I believe in empty pews. But why worry about empty pews? Church publicity should "sell" religion, not pews. Church services should be worship-centered rather than sermon-centered. This does not mean that they should be prayer-book-centered. Words in themselves no matter how eloquent do not make worship. My best contribution to church publicity was the inauguration of the plan of diocesan editions of FORTH. I got the idea from the Denver Register system.

III. CONVICTIONS

I am sure that religious "indifferentism," including poor church going, is part and parcel of the great secular revolution of our time, of which Communism is the most notorious manifestation. Secularism is a pseudo-religion in itself, and man-made gods are dangerous. America is more influenced by the religious philosophy of Communism than by the economic philosophy of Communism. There are more religious reds than political reds in this country.

I believe that religion is inevitable and should be regarded as such. It is silly to try to coax and coddle people into recognizing a God they can't escape. People who have no religion make a religion out of irreligion. That must amuse the real God. Church people make themselves ineffective as well as silly in acting as if people could ignore God either sanely or successfully. In the academic religions of our time, God is either subpersonal or limited by other uncreated forces but still inevitable.

I believe with all good Christians in the whole Gospel, which is both individual and social, local and global, in its application and power. The biggest social task of the Church in our time is to teach humanity to use natural science for human welfare, not for the destruction of civilization.

I believe in the Judaeo-Christian tradition of religion. I accept the Faith of Christendom. I believe in the Church. Within its sacred walls, I can hear the rustle of angel wings and catch a glimpse of the rainbow round the throne of God. I come from a Scottish-Irish ancestry which took pride in its loyalty to the Faith.

I believe that man's hope lies in his acceptance of God, Who is the Author of all life, mortal and immortal.

Studies In First Samuel

By REV. JOHN SHRYOCK, Philadelphia, Pa.

Jonathan

Article III

Among all nations there are proverbial examples of friendship and love between men, and in our culture, if we were asked for such an instance, most of us would immediately think of David and Jonathan. In using this phrase, we reverse the right order of the names, for we ought to say, Jonathan and David. Jonathan is the finer character of the two in a number of ways, although he was not so great a man as his friend. He was the elder, and the initiative lay with him, for David would never have dared to claim friendship with him. His life is not marred by the defects which brought so much tragedy to David. But most of all, Jonathan should be mentioned first because, while the friendship between the two was always of great advantage to David, for Jonathan it meant trouble of all kinds, estrangement from his father, and the defeat of his own personal ambitions.

If ever there has been a friendship between two men—a friendship that should be called by the stronger word, love—that reflected credit on both, it was this. Friendship seldom survives rivalry in other interests, but in the case of Jonathan and David, every force except love acted to make them enemies, yet without success. We say that the course of true love never runs smoothly, but there are few, in any, instances, where it overcame greater difficulties than here.

David himself said—and he said it at the right time, in his beautiful lament over the death of Jonathan—that the friendship between Jonathan and himself surpassed the love between men and women. David had plenty of experience with the opposite sex, and ought to have known what he was talking about; and yet we feel there is something wrong with his statement. The truth is, that the friendship between Jonathan and David shows what love ought to be, while David's relations with women show what love frequently is, when it falls short of the ideal. That this was true of the friendship is even more creditable to Jonathan than it is to David. David's love of Jonathan—next to his love of God—was the finest thing in his life. David's love of women, because it was the wrong kind of love, led him to murder and adultery. There was no necessity for this, except that David had the right attitude toward his friend, because of the fineness of Jonathan's character, while he did not have the right attitude toward women.

St. Paul, in a passage we all know, describes the nature of love; and that passage might be summarized by saying that the right kind of love is unselfish. It is the essense of love that it is interested in someone other than ourselves. But often our love of another is motivated only by a desire for personal, selfish gratification.

The manifestations of selfish love are so like those of true love that it is extremely difficult for the person himself to tell which is which, until a certain point is reached. The test comes when the selfish welfare of the man conflicts with the welfare of the one he loves, so that he must give up one or the other. Then, and only then, will he be sure whether his affection is really unselfish, and whether his desire to help the one he loves is greater than his desire to have his way.

With this test in mind, let us examine the career of Jonathan.

When his father, Saul, became king of Israel, Jonathan, as the eldest son, became the heir apparent. He was placed in command of a division of the army, and at once distinguished himself by a successful attack on the Philistines. Later, when the Israelite and Philistine armies waited for battle opposite each other, Jonathan, accompanied only by his armour bearer, climbed the steep gorge of Michmash, and slew the twenty men in a Philistine outpost. The tumult in the outpost started a panic in the Philistine army, and when Saul came to attack, he found the enemy fighting among themselves, so that he won a great victory.

Saul had pronounced a curse upon any Israelite who ate during the pursuit, but Jonathan, who was ignorant of the order, refreshed himself with a little honey. Saul, who never knew when to keep, and when to break, rules, ordered him put to death; but Jonathan was the idol of the army, which would not permit it.

Then came the struggle in which David made his sensational appearance as a hero by his conquest of Goliath, and from that moment, Jonathan's star began to set. People have short memories, and the heroes of last year are hardly remembered. David became the darling of the Isrealites; a rival, not merely of Jonathan, but of Saul himself.

Samuel had told Saul that God had put him away from being king, and had secretly sought a successor. He had found him in David, who was then a youth, ruddy, of a beautiful countenance, and goodly to look to. Already he had a reputation as a musician, and when Saul was attacked by some nervous depression, David was selected to play the harp to him. Saul was soothed, and took a great liking to the boy.

But after David's victory over Goliath, it soon became clear that all Israel looked to him instead of to Saul, and as Samuel had openly withdrawn his support, Saul could not help but be suspicious of anyone who might become a candidate for the throne. In spite of Saul's real liking for David, which he never entirely lost, jealousy and fear gained the upper hand in Saul, especially in moments of depression, until fits of rage would come upon him, and several times he threw his spear at David while the youth was playing the harp before him. Finally David was obliged to flee from the court in order to save his life.

In this situation, Saul naturally looked to his oldest son for support. Jonathan's future was jeopardized by David's success even more than Saul's, for it was apparent that while Saul might be able to maintain his position during his life, Jonathan's chance of succeeding him on the throne was becoming increasingly precarious.

To his surprise and indignation, Jonathan remained loyal to David, and even worked secretly in opposition to his father. Saul could not understand it, and finally pointed out to his son that self-interest and even self-preservation, not only for himself, but for his family, required that he break with David. Jonathan still refused.

Apparently Jonathan had never seen David until the youth was led before Saul, carrying the head of Goliath in his hand. The Bible describes the beginning of their friendship in these words.

"And it came to pass, that the soul of Jonathan was knit with the soul of David, and Jonathan loved him as his own soul. And Jonathan and David made a covenant, because he loved him as his own soul. And Jonathan stripped himself of the robe that was upon him, and gave it to David, and his garments, even to his sword, and to his bow, and to his girdle." (18:1-4.)

A covenant of this sort was taken very seriously in those days, and both men fully lived up to it. When Saul became bitter against David, Jonathan kept him informed of the king's moods and purposes. Finally Saul, angered by what he considered Jonathan's unfilial conduct, threw a javelin at him, although

Share Your Thanksgiving

Out of the limbo that exists in the war-ravaged countries of Europe and Asia, out of the dangerous, unnatural vacuum which has sucked in every kind of forbidden thing, comes the desperate cry of a boy fighting for life:

"Send us books! That is as important as bread. Send us God, the Truth, beyond which nothing is . . . for nihilism and moral collapse assume enormous proportions, and who will feed this hunger in our hearts?"

They seek Him in the twilight lands where millions await redemption! Yet seasoned veterans in the Christian crusade know that filling hearts with God's love, even under normal conditions, is a back-breaking, heart-breaking process calling for patience, ingenuity and a buoyant faith. To get that kind of leadership calls for special tools. To get such training and tools costs money!

Many years ago in America November was chosen to give thanks for the harvest's final yield. Now, with a harvest of souls waiting to be gathered in across the world, can we not most truly give thanks by turning back to the Lord's work a part of the bounty with which we have been blessed?

You can make a special Thanksgiving offering through your church or through Church World Service, that the overseas churches may rise from the ruins and breathe the living spirit of Jehovah into the valley of very dry bones!

Before his recent death, Rufus Jones said:

"Our political leaders are working out plans to feed the starving populations in war-ravished areas of the world. But they cannot infuse spiritual hope and faith into the hearts of men. They cannot revitalize despairing souls. They cannot rebuild the invisible bridges that link person to person, and form individuals into happy communities. They cannot break the material drift of the times and create in the minds of men a new philosophy of life that liberates and lifts, and—under God—makes a new spiritual world. They cannot restore souls. That is the mission of the church!"

The Next Fifty Years

Just a year hence, thirty-six American Churches will begin a cooperative program entitled "United Evangelistic Advance." While the program will vary within each Church, there will be common purpose, common planning, and, where possible, united action. The program is planned to begin with World Communion Day, October 2, 1949, and to continue throughout all of 1950. The time was picked partly because 1950 is the last year of the tragic first half of this twentieth century. These fifty years have seen two ghastly world wars, hunger, suffering, depression, and the ruthless killing of millions. It has seen the discovery of controllable atomic fission. It has been a troublous fifty years. Yet Bishop H. St. George Tucker often remarked in speaking of "Forward in Service" that there was still time to redeem this twentieth century. Half of it still remains to us. But if the second fifty years are not to be years of war and evil, then America and the world must be lifted at once to new and higher spiritual levels.

So it was that under the leadership of the Federal Council of Churches, a committee to formulate plans to this end met last April. Dr. E. S. Homrighausen was elected chairman. A second meeting was held in September. We understand that our Church was represented at both these meetings, but no information has been officially given to the Church, nor has there been any hint that we propose to join in this movement. Yet the period selected is particularly beneficial to us. The beginning of the movement will coincide with the opening of our General Convention. The program fits in well with the suggestions of Bishop Sherrill at the last National Council meeting for an advance program during the coming triennium. It would be a superb inspiration to the General Convention and to the whole Church if at San Francisco we could begin our part in a great advance movement that would include almost every great Christian body in America. It would be a demonstration of Christian solidarity to our nation. Under God, it might be the beginning of the redemption of our times.

Frederick W. Neve
Called To A Higher Service

The Venerable Frederick W. Neve, D. D., archdeacon emeritus of the Blue Ridge, Diocese of Virginia, died at his home at Ivy, Albemarle County, on Tuesday, Nov. 16. He had been ill several weeks.

Funeral services were conducted at 3 P. M. Thursday, at St. Paul's Church, Ivy. Archdeacon Neve was born Dec. 8, 1855, at Berenden, Kent, England, and was educated at Oxford University.

After his ordination in 1881, he served as an assistant in the Church of England for several years and in 1888 came to Virginia to serve as rector of a parish in Albemarle County, which included St. Paul's Church, at Ivy, and Emmanuel Church, at Greenwood.

In 1890 he built a church for the use of the residents of the foothills of the Blue Ridge Mountains—known as the St. John the Baptist Mission.

In 1900 Dr. Neve opened a mission at Simmons Gap, in Greene County, and this work soon expanded so rapidly that he was made an archdeacon. Years of service, on horseback and on foot, in the mountains in time resulted in the establishment of a chain of mission stations extending through seven counties of Virginia.

In 1920 Archdeacon Neve founded the "Order of the Thousandfold"—which has since spread to many parts of the world.

He was Associate Editor for many years of The Southern Churchman, and his Thousandfold Page was a weekly and welcome feature.

Post-Election Meditation

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

Everybody is engaging in post-election analyses and trying to determine why the predictions were so completely wrong. I heard a conversation between two humble serving women, one a Negro and one an Irish Catholic, which if I had heard before the election might have given at least one person a better view of the possible results.

The tone of the conversation was very religious and was based upon the Scriptural idea that "God resisteth the proud and giveth grace to the humble." Both women were certain that God was on Mr. Truman's side because he was a humble man and that Mr. Dewey was defeated because he was too proud.

I have no doubt that this impression was widespread and may have affected the election, though I would not want to hazard the rather perilous conclusion, at which the two good women arrived, that it was God who determined the result.

Beyond the personal impression which the candidates made upon humble people it is more important to recognize that Republicanism is generally regarded as the creed of the wealthy. Insofar as this is true Republicanism will have to change radically before it can become again the creed of the American people.

Perhaps one of the most important aspects of the election upset was that it discredited the "polls" which predicted or pretended to predict the outcome by sampling typical opinions. The general meaning of these polls was deterministic. It reduced human beings to automata of economic interest. The polls assumed that if you knew how 5 people in a given income class would vote you could predict how 5,000 would vote.

They did not take into account that the first five might possibly change their minds or that the 5,000 might be actuated by other motives than those which determined the action of the five.

We would be very wrong if we thought that men's actions are not partly determined by their interests, including their economic interests. Broadly speaking, political opinions are derived from economic interests. But human personality is a complex unity and human actions spring from a bewildering mixture of motives.

It is therefore wholesome to be remined that men still are, in a sense "free agents." Their actions and decisions are not altogether predictable; and insofar as they are predictable they do not furnish a clue to the decisions of their neighbors. Democracy will be the healthier for the destruction of this deterministic myth.

all Jonathan was doing was to try to make a reconciliation possible.

By this time, David was in hiding, and in order to see him, Jonathan, who could not trust any of his servants, was obliged to use a strategem. He went hunting with a retinue of attendants, having arranged by means of arrows to give a sign to David. Finding that suspicion had been allayed and that he was no longer observed, he sent the boy who carried his arrows back to the town.

"And as soon as the lad was gone, David arose out of a place toward the south, and fell on his face to the ground, and bowed himself three times: and they kissed one another, and wept one with another, until David exceeded. And Jonathan said to David, 'Go in peace, forasmuch as we have sworn both of us in the name of the Lord, saying, the Lord be between thee and me, and between thy seed and my seed for ever.' And David arose and departed: and Jonathan went into the city."

The two friends saw each other only once more. David was hiding in a wood, and Saul sought him every day to kill him. The Bible says that Jonathan went to David into the wood, and strengthened his hand in God. His final words were these:

"Fear not: for the hand of Saul my father shall not find thee; and thou shalt be king over Israel, and I shall be next unto thee; and that also Saul my father knoweth." And they two made a covenant before the Lord.

Jonathan was right, except in one detail; he was never to serve under David. Had he done so, it would have been the best thing that ever happened to David. But he returned to his father, obeying him in everything except the one matter. In Saul's last battle on Mt. Gilboa, Jonathan was killed, fighting for his country against the Philistines.

Surely we are right in using this man as a model for friendship, though friendship is too weak a word. As we read the Book of Samuel, Jonathan stands before us as a hero, without a single blemish on his character. In a book so realistic that the defects of even the greatest men, like Samuel and David, are shown in all their ugliness, Jonathan alone is spotless.

He had every reason to break his friendship with David, as the motives of men usually go. His own popularity and personal success were overshadowed by David; his future and the future of his family were endangered; his duty to his father seemed to demand a break with his friend. It would have been easy to have found a dozen reasons for betraying David which would have justified him in the eyes of his public.

But he loved David as few men are capable of loving. And he loved his country, knowing that David was a greater man than he was, and the right man to be king. He was brave enough, and unselfish enough, to put those things first. Let David finish the story.

"I am distressed for thee, my brother Jonathan . . . thy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of women. How are the mighty fallen, and the weapons of war perished!" (2 Sam. 1:26-27.)

CHRISTIAN SERVICE IN MY OWN STEPS FORWARD (Forward Movement Guide)

Bible Readings: Psa. 85:73; 119: 133; Jer. 10:23; I Peter 2:21.

The Disciples' Way

First step—I must Turn. Yes, right about face to Christ and leave my old self behind. Note how the Prayer Book helps us to turn. The General Confession in the Holy Communion and in Morning Prayer and Evening Prayer the Collect for Ash Wednesday, the Penitential Office, the Litany and so on.

Second step—I must follow my Pilot and never let Him out of my sight. Could I follow a pilot automobile through streams of traffic if I lost sight of it? Christ is alive. Unseen He is leading me on to the work He is doing. Where He plants His feet there I must plant mine.

Third step—Learn. Have I given the Bible a fair chance today? Have I read what Christ said, or His apostles? Do I know even five of the twenty-seven parables so as to tell them accurately and with meaning? If not, I must forbid myself the newspaper, the magazine, and the novel until I have kept the rule to learn. This will lead me far afield, into Church doctrine found in the Prayer Book, history of the Church, the heroes of the Church, the Saints, our present missions. I must learn until I can say "I know Him."

Fourth step—Pray. On waking I could say the Sanctus: Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Hosts, Heaven and earth are full of Thy glory; Glory be to Thee, O Lord Most High. Then kneel and say the Lord's Prayer slowly and ask God to rule my thoughts, words and acts for the day. At meal time say a Grace. All through the day send up little "arrow prayers." Noon time is a time for prayer if only "Thy kingdom come, on earth as it is in heaven." At bed-time a brief review of the day with thankfulness, penitence, and intercession for others.

Fifth step—Serve. "I am among you as He that serveth," said our Lord. I must be willing to do any work even "menial" as cheerful service to God.

"Cleave the wood, and thou shalt find Me;
Lift the stone and there am I."

Sixth step—Worship. Besides our individual worship there is corporate worship. How often do I make communion? Do I really pray in church and make the prayers my own by a hearty Amen? Do I sing and make the words of the hymn my own? A spirit of worship can pass from person to person welding the whole congregation into one.

Seventh step—Share. To follow Christ I must share all that I have, not only my money but my time, my influence, my friendship, talents, strength. Some people are willing to share material things but not the intangibles. Others are willing to share the intangibles but not the money. To follow Him I must want to share all that I have and all that I am.

These, then, are the seven steps to be taken daily: Turn, Follow, Learn, Pray, Serve, Worship, Share.

Can I, weak and erring, take them? Not by myself, but—

"Lo, I am with you alway . . ." (St. Matt. 28:20).

"O Jerusalem, Jerusalem . . . how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings but ye would not!" (St. Luke 13:34).

THEY STILL LEAVE HOME

As we approach the holidays we should think a good deal more than we have of those still leaving home. There is a great increase in the boys and girls returning or going into the Armed Services. These boys and girls are being greatly neglected.

Not so long ago I heard a Bishop tell a group of lay people and clergy that it was most important that we remember those in our parish in occupied zones and others serving in our armed forces. It is hard in peace time to gear ourselves to remember them. There is no reminder; there is no pressure; or encouragement.

As I journey over the roads I am seeing more and more convoys along the roadside. Traveling on the trains and buses I see them also. This is a reminder to me that we must do more than we are doing. They feel it also.

Let us remember to send them our church papers, our church bulletins, our letters to the young people and adults in our church, and just friendly, newsy letters. This is important to them. People must be remembered and know that they are "loved."

As the holidays come we are more prone to think in terms of others. Let us start now to do it and then continue on throughout the time we need to do so.

It is important to help build and keep morale. There has been much written about it. We have to do something about it. Let it not be said that we have failed our young people. Too often we are not too kind in our terms of them but have we done our part?

The reason that many men and women lost hope in World War II was that they went away without a sustaining faith. We must try to see that they carry with them a faith. We must try to send them books to read. We must write to the Chaplains so that they can have a personal background of the men and women under their guidance and care.

Let us remember them continually in our prayers, at our Altars and in sending them a word of friendship and love.

Consultant of Christian Education

CXLVIII

The Collects, Epistles and Gospels. In continuing to generalize on this subject we find, as is so often the case in our book of Common Prayer some amazingly interesting things.

In the first place this section of the Prayer Book connects us with two very different groups of Christians between whom there is not much love lost.

The Roman Catholic Missal contains Collects, Epistles and Gospels for every Sunday, and in many cases they are identical with our own, as we shall see later when we come to consider them Sunday by Sunday.

Also the various Lutheran books of worship contain this type of use of the Holy Scripture, and in many cases also the passages used are identical with our own.

Probably the Epistles and Gospels go further back in antiquity than the Collects. From the most ancient times portions of the scripture were read at the services of the early Christians, and as far back as St. Jerome, (A. D. 342-420) we are told that a table of scripture from the Epistles and the Gospels was arranged for each Sunday throughout the Christian Year, and also for the Holy Days. It is quite probable too that in arranging this lectionary he used material compiled before his time, so that the fourth century may not be the earliest date to which we go back, but certainly this practice has been in the Church for at least fifteen hundred years.

Probably none of the Collects have quite such an ancient origin, but they certainly include a lot of territory, and centuries of time.

For instance, undoubtedly some of these prayers were composed by Leo, the Great Bishop of Rome, from 440 to 458. While others were written by Cranmer in England in 1549.

Still others were composed as late as 1927 for presentation to our General Convention at Portland, Oregon, thus bringing us up to the present time.

R. CARY MONTAGUE.

NEW PRESIDENT OF HOBART AND WILLIAM SMITH INDUCTED

Geneva, N. Y.—Dr. Alan W. Brown was indructed on October 23 as the president of Hobart and William Smith Colleges. In his inaugural address he called upon college-trained men and women to assume the responsibilities of citizenship for which their education has fitted them.

"It will indeed be a bad day for the colleges and a worse for the future of our democracy, if college graduates turn the blunt edge of their disdain upon the kind of activity which led to the founding of our country and which has made it great," he declared.

The new president of the Geneva colleges pointed out that there has been a gradual dvelopment of a false concept of th social role of the educated man. "It is increasingly assumed," he said, "that knowledge and understanding are in some sense a substitute for social responsibility, political activity, or creative enterprise.

"We have done a magnificent job of teaching the social studies during the last 25 years—in spite of the voices of many critics—but the average college graduate is less likely to join an active political club, to run for public office, to write for the papers or the magazines, or to take an active part in social and civic causes than was his father. Knowledge seems here to have bred contempt."

Dr. Brown was inaugurated as the 17th president of 126-year-old Hobart College and the sixth president of 40-year-old William Smith College.

MORE MEN GOING INTO THE MINISTRY

New York, N. Y.—The Rt. Rev. Charles K. Gilbert, bishop of New York, has announced from his office in the Synod House, Cathedral of St. John the Divine, that there has been a great increase in the number of men who wish to study for the priesthood of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of New York. He said he regarded it as "a matter of deep significance to know that during the past year I have interviewed fifty-six young men who wish to study for Holy Orders, and this comes at a time when the Episcopal Church throughout the United States is faced with a pressing need for additional clergy. This also comes at a time when young men are supposed to be under the influence of the prevailing secularism."

Eleven of these men are veterans, seven of them having served in the Army and four of them in the Navy. Three of these men have been fully ordained ministers in other religious bodies; two of them with splendid educational backgrounds have held important posts in the Methodist Church. The parishes of the Diocese of New York from which these men come are widely scattered.

During this present year those young men who so far have been accepted will continue their studies in various colleges and seminaries. Five of them have not yet completed their college course.

At the Seminaries they are distributed as follows:

Two at the Berkeley Divinity School, New Haven, Conn.; two are at Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass.; fifteen are at the General Theological Seminary, New York; one is at Nashotah House, Nashotah, Wis.; one is at the Philadelphia Divinity School; two are at the Virginia Theological Seminary.

At the recent Lambeth Conference of Anglican bishops from all over the world, the Conference proclaimed:

"Far more priests are needed, and if the supply of men called and equipped for the ministry is lacking, all Christian strategy must, humanly speaking, fail."

21ST ANNUAL SYNOD-PROVINCE OF THE NORTHWEST

Columbus, Nebr.—The 21st annual synod of the Sixth Province met in St. Luke's Church, Billings, Montana, on October 26 and 27, with the Rt. Rev. Howard R. Brinker, president of the Province, presiding. Eight bishops of the Province, one visiting bishop and the presiding bishop of the national Church were in attendance.

The 270 delegates and visitors heard the inspiring message of the Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, presiding bishop, at the opening session.

Bishop Sherrill compared the present world turmoil with that of the early Roman Empire. In that era the Christians brought integration out of the turmoil by their thinking, living, and dying. He declared, "We must outthink the pagan world around us. We must, as Christians, not only outlive the pagan world with its Godless ideologies, we must if necessary be willing to die for the truth if need be, if we are to have anything like peace for our times or a Kingdom for Christ on earth." "The great fault I find with our Church is its littleness—often its willingness to enter into controversy over unessentials. We need to mobilize our forces to meet the world's great needs."

Speaking later in the day at the Synod dinner, Bishop Sherrill surveyed our worldwide missionary undertakings and pointed to the present crucial necessity of support of the Church's foreign missionary work during the present world crisis. This isn't a question of sending another denomination into the far-off places, but a question taking Christ and Christian principles to the rest of the world. "If the Church caught the vision of a new Christian world, the Church has the necessary resources to reach any goal it might set." And reiterated the necessity of mobilizing our forces on the level of the parish—which is the center of our whole Church.

Bishop Keeler, Minnesota, presented a paper on "Recruiting for the Ministry" in which he stressed the need for more clergy. He declared we must raise up our own ministery and recommended better teaching techniques to attract young men to the ministry.

The Rev. Stanley Fullwood, field officer of the National Council, presented a report on the radio program and forthcoming plans for the raising of the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief.

The Rev. Wm. Crittenden, executive secretary of the division of youth, presented a detailed report on the expanding program for youth in the Church and described the developing techniques which are making for a better and more vital youth program.

Resolutions

Recommended to the Department of Christian Education of the National Council, that they give immediate attention to the production of materials for the Church School by mail.

Resolved, That the Provincial Department of Christian Social Relations be instructed to study specific cases of mixed marriages where one of the contracting parties has been forced to sign a paper with respect to the religious upbringing of possible children of the intended marriage to discover whether or not the promise was made under duress, and (2) if made under duress, if it violated the Constitution of the U. S.

Resolved: that intensive parish calling be the emphasis in the program of evangelism of the several jurisdictions for the coming year.

The synod accepted the invitation of the Missionary District of Wyoming to meet in Wyoming in 1950 and in North Dakota in 1951, place of meeting to be designated later.

The synod sent greetings to Bishops Haines and Ziegler, who were unable to attend because of illness.

COMMITTEE TO STUDY CHURCH PENSION FUND

St. Louis, Mo.—The Presiding Bishop was asked to appoint a special committee to study and analyze the Church Pension Fund and the adequacy of its proceedures by a unanimous resolution adopted by the Synod of Province VII, the Province of the Southwest, meeting at Christ Church Cathedral, St. Louis, on October 28 and 29.

The resolution, introduced by the Rev. W. W. S. Hohenschild, of St. Louis, was the result of the discussion of the missionary problem of the general Church in the session of missionary department chairmen with the Rev. George E. Wieland, secretary of the Home Department. The Synod felt particular attention should be given to protection to the widows of clergymen. Bishop Scarlett told the gathering that he felt the present provisions very inadequate.

The Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, the Presiding Bishop, told the Synod that the national church would need greatly enlarged income if it is to be able to meet the real demands placed upon it—both in the field of education and missions. "It is not either missions or religious education," he said, "It must be both if we are to measure up to our opportunities."

The Presiding Bishop was the preacher at a mass service in the Cathedral as well as speaker at the opening luncheon of the Synod. At the service he gave a strong plea for a quickened sense of evangelistic responsibility. He used as his theme a passage of Prof. Whitehead, "Some day the smouldering unhappiness of mankind may burst into flame and attempt to take seriously the experiment of the early Christian Church, and in a day of sudden change attempt to apply it."

Lieut. Gen. John C. H. Lee, executive director of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, was the speaker at the luncheon the second day of the Synod. He urged a growing appreciation of the possibilities in the laymen's movement in the church as enabling the church to do its job and freeing the clergy for their more specific duties.

The Synod was attended by the Presiding Bishop and the heads of the Home Missions, Social Relations, Promotion and Christian Education Departments, by Mr. James Whitney of the Department of Finance, Mrs. Arthur Sherman of the Woman's Auxiliary, and the Rev. Arnold Lewis of the Committee on Laymen's Work.

The Synod voted in the future to meet only once every three years, approximately one year before General Convention. It voted to request the Presiding Bishop and departments heads to attend all future meetings on this basis.

Bishop Everett M. Jones, of West Texas, was elected president of the Province; with Bishop Hines, co-adjutor of Texas, vice-president; the Rev. Harold C. Gosnell, rector of St. Mark's Church, San Antonio, secretary; and D. C. Howard of Kansas City, treasure. The Rev. C. Gresham Marmion, rector of the Church of the Incarnation, Dallas, wa elected representative on the National Council.

CHARLES W. SHERRIN MEMORIAL FUND

New York, N. Y.—Plans for the Charles W. Sheerin Memorial Fellowship Fund were discussed at the National Board meeting of the Episcopal Service for Youth on October 20. Dr. Sheerin was president of the Episcopal Service for Youth until his death last April. A sponsoring committee has been formed, under the chairmanship of the Rt. Rev. Henry St. George Tucker. Among the sixty sponsors, representing every part of the country, are the Rt. Rev. Karl Morgan Block, San Francisco, Calif.; the Rev. Beverley Boyd, New York City; the Rt. Rev. Frederick G. Budlong, Hartford, Conn.; Mrs. Nelson Burroughs, Cincinnati, Ohio; the Rev. John Crocker, Groton, Mass.; Mrs. Kendall Emerson, Norwalk, Conn.; the Rev. Don Frank Fenn, Baltimore, Md.; John M. Glenn, New York City; the Rt. Rev. Elwood L. Haines, Davenport, Iowa; Mrs. R. Keith Kane, New York City; the Rev. E. Felix Kloman, Philadelphia, Pa.; the Rt. Rev. W. Appleton Lawrence, Springfield, Mass.; the Rt. Rev. C. Avery Mason, Dallas, Texas; the Rt. Rev. Arthur R. McKinstry, Wilmington, Del.; the Rt. Rev. Malcolm E. Peabody, Syracuse, N. Y.; the Rev. Almon R. Pepper, New York City; Walter W. Pettit, Ridgefield, Conn.; Mrs. ZeBarney Phillips, Washington, D. C.; Mrs. Clinton S. Quin, Houston, Texas; William Ramsey, Cincinnati, Ohio; the Rev. Jonathan G. Sherman, Bellerose, N. Y.; Mrs. R. Brinkley Snowden, Memphis, Tenn.; Mrs. Perry B. Strassburger, Montclair, N. J.; Mrs. George Trowbridge, Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia; the Rt. Rev. Vedder Van Dyck, Burlington, Vt.; Mrs. Theodore O. Wedel, Washington, D. C.;

The Episcopal Service for Youth has set a goal of $50,000 for the memorial fund. The income is to be used for the award, each year, of a fellowship for graduate study of social work. These will be available, on a competition basis, to young Churchmen and Churchwomen who are college graduates, who have shown interest in social work, and who show promise as future social workers. Candidates will be free to select any accredited school of social work.

The Episcopal Service for Youth is now inviting contributions to this fund, and hopes to be ready to make the first award for the next academic year in the fall of 1949. There will be no high pressure campaign, but personal appeals will be made, and the sponsors want, through letters or the Church press, or other means, to make this know to the many people who shared Dr. Sheerin's vision. Although no requests have been made until now, a number of contributions have been received, ranging in amount from five to twenty-five hundred dollars. Donors have commented on the appropriateness of this type of memorial, because of Dr. Sheerin's gift for helping troubled souls everywhere, and because of his belief that social work and psychiatry are necessary tools for the Church's work today.

WOMEN SPONSOR INTER-CITY GATHERING

Miami, Fla.—"We are a disillusioned people," affirmed Bishop Louttit, coadjutor of South Florida, when addressing more than 300 representatives in an inter-city gathering sponsored by the Council of Church Women in Miami. The occasion was World Community Day, November 5, with the theme of Peace Our Responsibility. Episcopal, Roman Catholic, Jewish, and all the Protestant churches of the area were represented.

Speaking on peace and the responsibility of bringing peace in a torn world, Bishop Louttit referred to the post-war period after World War I when "it was generally felt we had entered an era of peace. But we are a disillusioned people, for a far greater war has taken place."

He reviewed briefly the days of Darwin and evolution, with the old theme that "every day in every way we are getting better and better." Then, humanism came to the fore and man decided that man can solve all problems. Science advanced from step to step until the atomic energy theory—and we used it for destruction, he declared.

"We shall find no way of dealing with Russia until we realize it is beyond economic and political conflict. It is a struggle between nations, a conflict of philosophy diametrically opposed to our philosophy of life. Communism alone is a heresy of the Judeo-Christian belief, but Communism with Russia is a potent political force."

Since Communism has no belief in God, it has no belief in man and we see the rise of the police-state again, he said. "Communism will not be defeated in battle; it will only be defeated by us who also have an apocalyptic vision and will fight for it."

He pointed to three things that we, in our day, might do and reaffirm in our efforts for peace: (1) Strengthen our belief in God and His righteousness; (2) strengthen our belief in man and his dependence on God; (3) be something. "Too many people are running around doing good, but are not good, so it results that they just run around. Be something; stand for the right; stand for peace."

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY MEETS AROUND

Roanoke, Va.—The women of Southwestern Virginia are having a most helpful and interesting "Fall Auxiliary Day" in each of the four Convocations; two in Abingdon Convocation on account of the fact that it is larger than the others.

A good sample is the one held at St. Peter's in the Mountains near Callaway in Franklin County on Thursday, October 14.

Ninety-six people were present, nearly all women, from four counties in Roanoke Convocation and two counties in Lynchburg Convocation.

The Rev. G. William Beale, of Rocky Mount, celebrated Holy Communion, being assisted by the Rev. Thomas Lawson Cox, of Blacksburg. Mr. Cox made an address on "The Christian Family" and was followed by Mrs. Richard H. Lee, of Amherst, diocesan vice-president, who spoke on "Christian Social Relations."

CANTERBURY GROUP MEET IN OREGON

Corvallis, Ore.—On October 31 the Rev. Frank Titus, from the Overseas Department of National Council, was the featured speaker on the subject of Christian Vocations to an assembly of over eighty college students at the Church of the Good Samaritan, Corvallis. Mr. Titus spoke in detail on the nature of the Church's work in Latin America and illustrated his talk with technicolor slides taken on his trip there last winter. The Canterbury group from Oregon State College was host to delegations from Canterbury groups at Williamette University in Salem, Linfield College in McMinnville, the University of Oregon in Eugene, and Oregon College of Education in Monmouth.

Chaplain Titus' visit to this Northwest area afforded a real opportunity for these various groups to meet jointly. The meeting began with a student led service of Evening Prayer, at which Mr. Titus gave a brief meditation. Supper followed, and after the ensuing talk and films there was a social hour. Among those present were a number of students interested in preparing for vocations within the Church. This was the first area meeting of Canterbury groups in Oregon, and the hope has been expressed that such be held at least twice a year.

The group from Willamette was headed by Dianne Arpkee, president; Miss Jean Quickenden, advisor, and the Rev. George Swift, rector. The presidents from the University of Oregon and Linfield College are Pat Morgan and Frank Morris. From Oregon College of Education came President Barney Stadius and the vicar at Dallas and Monmouth, the Rev. C. Hanney. The Canterbury group at Corvallis is headed by Charles Hefty, president; Miss Helene Schnurbush, college worker, and the Rev. Charles S. Neville, rector.

DEATHS

THE RT. REV. JAMES MAXON DIES

Memphis, Tenn.—The Rt. Rev. James M. Maxon, 73, retired bishop of the Diocese of Tennessee, died Nov. 8.

He had been under an oxygen tent since Sunday night when he suffered a severe heart attack.

He was elected chancellor of the University of the South (Sewanee) in 1942 but later retired. He also was president of Margaret College in Versailles, Ky., from 1910 until 1917.

Bishop Maxon gained recognition in national affairs in 1934 when he introduced to the national convention the Forward Movement of the Episcopal Church—which urged a "step-up" of the church's spiritual life.

Before being named bishop coadjutor, he had been rector at Grace Church in Galesburg, Ill., at St. John's Church in Versailles, at St. Mark's in Louisville, Ky., and at Christ Church, Nashville, Tenn. He was born in Bay City, Mich.

Are you helping the

Outreach

of your Episcopal radio program?

Of course you are listening every week to GREAT SCENES FROM GREAT PLAYS, The Episcopal Radio Program, but what are you doing to interest your non-Episcopal friends in the program? Have you held a "listening party" in your home? Do you talk about the program with your business associates? Have you sat down with your personal address book and written to at least ten friends to listen?

There are 70 million Americans, approximately one-half of our total population, who have no Church home. According to the Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, Presiding Bishop, it is these 70 million we want to reach and offer them the friendship and spiritual help our Church can give.

Remember, it is your privilege to keep this program on the air. You can do it without any financial burden, merely by subscribing an additional 3% to the Every Member Canvass pledge. Thus you can give tangible help to the Outreach of your Episcopal radio program.

MEMO: TO CLERGYMEN

Re: Great Scenes from Great Plays

IS your publicity chairman making the fullest possible use of the news releases and mats sent from National Council headquarters? Are you making the chancel announcements every Sunday? Only by the greatest use of publicity can we hope to have our radio audience grow locally and nationally.

Serenely apart in its lovely garden amid surrounding tall buildings, the famous Little Church Around the Corner in New York City, is plainly seen from the observation tower of its giant neighbor, the Empire State Building (in far background). The garden is entered through the quaint lich-gate, one of the few in this country. The interior is enriched with beautiful windows, carvings, and paintings. Special features are the Brides' Altar in the Chapel of the Holy Family, St. Joseph's Mortuary Chapel and the Victory Shrine. It is the first Episcopal Church in this country to be named The Church of the Transfiguration.

The parish was founded in 1848. A Festival Service observing its Centennial was held on October 10, 1948. The Rev. Dr. Randolph Ray, the Rector, who recently observed his own 25th anniversary, conducted the service.

COLLECT FOR THE FIRST SUNDAY IN ADVENT

Almighty God, give us grace that we may cast away the works of darkness, and put upon us the armor of light, now in the time of this mortal life, in which Thy Son Jesus Christ came to visit us in great humility; that in the last day, when He shall come again in His glorious Majesty to judge both the quick and the dead, we may rise to the life immortal, through Him who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, now and ever. Amen.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD, PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

Religion And Psychiatry---A Partnership

By ALFRED A. GROSS

Executive Secretary The George W. Henry Foundation, New York, N. Y.

There are still people who consider that religion and science are at war with each other, just as there are still people who believe it necessary to prolong the Civil War. For a long time it was fashionable in certain theological and in certain scientific circles, to look upon religion and science as enemies engaged in deadly warfare. Just before the turn of the century a very learned man at Cornell produced a book called The Warfare Between Theology and Science, which served as a guide to atheist street preachers and some with more learning who should have known better. Marx's slogan, "Religion is the opiate of the people," did nothing to bring about mutual respect and understanding between the clergy and the religiously-minded, on the one hand, and certain types of scientific workers and their less-educated followers on the other hand. In the 'twenties of this century, Harry Elmer Barnes, who is an excellent sociologist and penologist, in a public address, declared that while in the Middle Ages theology was regarded as the Queen of the Sciences, theology had been dethroned and Mental Hygiene was substituted in her place. Vestiges of the war remain. There is a highly vocal group of psychiatrists who feel that religion is a handicap or worse to their treatment of the mentally ill, and in recent months we have seen a prominent Catholic clergyman ventilating his complete misunderstanding of the aims and methods of modern psychiatry on an extremely competent psychiatrist of his own faith. Monsignor Sheen was not alone in his distrust of modern psychiatry, nor is that distrust confined to the clergy of his church.

In the gray dawn of history, religion and medicine were one. The priest, the shaman, the witch-doctor, call him what you will, was at once doctor and clergyman. In the Middle Ages, the clergy in the western world had a virtual monopoly on medicine, and it was comparatively late in mediaeval history that the doctors set up as independent practitioners of medicine. I am sure you will recall that even the Greeks, who became just a little disdainful about the Homeric theogony toward the end, had priestly adumbrations of the healing arts. What corresponded in Grecian civilization to a modern hospital was conducted by priests. And what was true of the priestly doctors among the highly civilized Egyptians was equally true for the medicine men and witch-doctors of the American Indians, the Australian aborigines and the tribes of Africa. The instinct to relate religion and medicine seems as old as the world. The early Church accounted cures by the religious to be miracles, especially in cases where others had tried and failed. And not all of the cures attributed to the followers of Mary Baker Glover Eddy are completely spurious.

There was a man called John Rathbone Oliver, whose writings had a certain vogue in the late 1920's and early 1930's, who was at once a physician and High Church parson. He preached and wrote constantly asking for a revival of the mediaeval practice of having priestly doctors as persons who could cure both mind and body. In his own life he attempted to carry out his theories, for Dr. Oliver is said in many quarters to have done unusually good work as a psychiatrist. And the greatest of all, of course, is Albert Schweitzer—theologian par excellence, organist and magnificent interpreter of Bach, who left behind him a matchless European reputation to establish a mission hospital in the Belgian Congo. If anyone deserves to be crowned with Paul's tribute to St. Luke it is Albert Schweitzer. To the modern man, it seems obvious that there is no real conflict between religion and psychiatry, and that religion and psychiatry are completely disciplines working together to help make mind and body free.

Religion and psychiatry are working together to find the answer to the despairing question from Hamlet: "Who can minister to a mind diseased?" And, so, too, are many of the other social sciences. Psychology and the social sciences also are contributing to the cooperative enterprise. Man cannot live unto himself alone. The minute man Friday arrived on Robison Crusoe's Island each had to make adjustments to the other. How much more so it is in our complex urban civilization where man is powerless, of his own unaided efforts, to feed or clothe himself and where nowadays his recreations are businesses involving literally millions of dollars. So the psychiatrist, when he is called in to treat an individual, must regard him not as an isolated phenomenon. A surgeon can perform an appendectomy and send the sick man on his way rejoicing. However, there is a period of convalescence and a period of readjustment even in such a simple matter, comparatively, as an appendectomy or a hemorrhoidectomy. How much more, so, for instance with the casualties of war, where the combined resources of medicine, surgery and psychiatry, with all of the auxiliaries they can call in, sometimes fight a losing struggle to restore a victim of man's most colossal stupidity, war, to something approximating a useful life. Clergy and doctors have learned to work together in military hospitals. Of course, there have been stiff-necked doctors who have felt that chaplains were worse than useless and there have been chaplains who justified the doctors' ill opinion.

The cooperative working of psychiatrist and clergyman is not a new thing. One still remembers the Emmanuel Movement which flourished around and for some time after World War I. Elwood Worcester, the rector of fashionable Emmanuel Church on Newbury Street, in Boston, shocked the proper Bostonians in that he was able, in cooperation with another clergyman and a psychiatrist, Dr. Isador Coriat, to get some exceedingly fine results with human material destined for the scrap heap. The movement died out with Dr. Worcester's departure from the scene. Something of the sort was tried spectacularly in New York by William Norman Guthrie at St. Mark's-in-the Bouwerie and a local psychiatrist. Unfortunately, the enterprise proved unsound and ended in disaster. Professor George W. Henry, of the Department of Psychiatry of Cornell University Medical College of New York, was approached by the Chief City Magistrate a few years ago with a request to help solve the problem presented by the wholesale arrests of homosexuals who were picked up on charges of disorderly conduct in subway toilets, moving picture theaters, public parks and suchlike. He evolved a scheme under which the judge placed the defendant on probation and required him to undergo psychotherapy and consult with a clergyman, preferably of his won faith, who would be able to counsel him. In many cases the cooperatively planned treatment was productive of highly favorable results. One of the court probation officers, William Wolfson, in his study for his master's degree seemed to bring out the fact that the men who had undergone treatment were less liable to reappear in Court on a similar charge than the untreated men. Dr. Henry's experiment, with some modification, is being continued in that court under different auspices.

Here we have a situation in which the representatives of religion and psychiatry were able to work out a cooperative enterprise in which minister and doctor together were able to relieve the insecurity which drove human beings to nuisances in public places. This is not to say that these men were cured of their homosexual desires or perhaps even overt behavior. It is saying that their basic insecurities were explored, a measure of insight given them, and their insecurities relieved to the extent that some of them no longer found it necessary to search for libidinous gratification under sordid circumstances with such men as they could find furtively. And what is possible in one area of human nature and conduct is possible in others.

The public is being made increasingly aware of the shortage of psychiatric personnel. There are simply not enough psychiatrists to go around. Startling figures are occasionally presented for public consumption of the increasing numbers of the mentally ill and of the greater and greater need for mental hospital beds and outpatient facilities. An alarmist could easily feel that the world is rapidly on its way to the mental hospital. This is simply not so. Psychiatry is among the newest of the sciences, and is just coming into its own. Conditions are attracting public notice which went unheeded a hundred years ago, or perhaps as little as ten or twenty years ago. The public is becoming conscious of mental illness. The words "mental hospital" carry far less stigma than the old term "insane asylum," and the public is learning to use the modern terminology. At one time it was considered disgraceful to have a mentally ill relative, as in certain old fashioned circles one dared not refer to cancer or even tuberculosis. Nowadays, a fashionable subject of conversation is one's sessions with the psychiatrist. It was not too long ago that one dared not use the words syphilis or gonorrhead in public: one referred to social diseases. And there were large sections of the clergy who openly deplored any efforts on the part of medical science to make rapid cure of these diseases available. They preached the doctrine that the wages of sin was syphilis, in pretty much the same manner that there are still clergy who deplore painless childbirth as contrary to Scripture. The clergy of this type (and they are not extinct) are the ones who are quite certain that mental illness is a divine visitation, and it would be a psychiatrist with the patience of Job who would want to have a person of this sort within a mile of his patient.

A moment ago I said that the public was becoming increasingly conscious of the presence of mental illness. When life was simpler, when the world was smaller and more self-contained, the complexities of modern urban civilization did not contribute to the making of subjects for the psychiatrists' care. Here, however, we dare not theorize; we must deal with a situation and not a theory.

At this point it may quite properly be asked, What does the speaker mean when he uses the terms religion and psychiatry? Ordinarily definition should be given at the outset of a paper such as this, but here it was felt that more general introduction should be given. We are using the words religion and psychiatry in their conventional and commonly accepted sense. Everybody knows what they mean; precious few of us are capable of defining the terms precisely. First psychiatry, because it is a bit easier. It may be that we can best come upon the definition of the word by simply looking at the two Greek words which make it up. Psychiatry is the healing of the psyche. Formerly medicine and religion made a point of insisting upon the dichotomy of body and soul. Certainly the psyche is not the soul in the old-fashioned sense of the word, but its implications are sufficiently close that when one suggests that both psychiatrist and priest minister to sick souls one knows very well what is involved. Psychiatry, then, isthe branch of medicine which treats mental malfunctioning and other personality distortion.

Religion is somewhat harder to define. The number of textbook definitions are legion; none of them is particularly satisfactory. Here are two definitions, strangely contrasted and yet, as one looks at them, not altogether dissimilar, as texts, so to speak, for our attempt at definition. The first is from Schleiermacher: "Religion is a sense of dependence upon God." The second is from Alfred North Whitehead: "Religion is what a man does with his solitariness." Again let us return to philology. The word religion has its root in the Latin religare, to tie up, to connect. We see the same root in the words one hears among the doctors: ligament, ligature. Religion, then, is the connection between man and the forces governing the cosmic process, calling these forces God or whatever name you will. Implicit in this definition is the fact that the relationship is a moral and uplifting one, and that the end-object of the relationship is the improvement of man's condition, both with respect to himself and his immediate and larger environments. God and the good have become identified with each other. This, it seems, is the chief aspect of religion. The holding of public worship, the uplifting of mankind through the efforts of religious groups dedicated to specific causes; the observance of local religious folkways seem subordinate to the chief object of religion, which is the establishment of a relationship, preferably a right relationship, between man and God.

To bring about order, both religion and psychiatry have developed a special body of knowledge and a corps of interpreters and practitioners of that knowledge. The one we call priests or ministers; the other psychiatrists. These are a specially selected and trained elite group, admitted to full enjoyment of the powers and duties of their profession after a long and arduous apprenticeship, jealous of their prerogatives, and constantly, human nature being what it is, stiffening the requirements for admission to the elite group. At this point the cynical might quote the definition of education of a mediaeval Oxford don, who defined the commodity as the knowledge of the Scriptures in their original tongues; a proper contempt for those who lacked the knowledge; and the ability to make a bit more money than one's neighbor. Both the professors of theology and the professors of psychiatry use a language which is not "understanded of the people." Some psychiatric reports are couched in an idiom which is highly esoteric. Some religious productions require a skilled corps of interpreters.

Another interesting similarity is that the elite corps of psychiatry and religion have an army of camp-followers in their wake: educated, half- educated and illiterate; authorized, half-authorized and self-appointed. And not a few of the army of camp-followers, in their more honest moments, are quite persuaded that they can do a better job than the officially ordained group. This is not for a moment to belittle the useful service that is rendered by the auxiliaries to psychiatry and religion: deaconesses, Sunday School teachers, parish secretaries and the host of other workers that the complexity of our religious systems require. Nor could psychiatry as it is practiced in hospitals nor religion get along without the boards of trustees, vestries and contributors. Organization is inescapable, and one fears there will be a hierarchy even in the Kingdom of Heaven.

Now we can get to the nub of the matter: how can religion, or the clergy, and psychiatrists work together? In the first place, a relationship must be established upon a mutual respect for each other's capacities and a knowledge of each other's limitations. It is unwise for the psychiatrist to take on himself the role of the religious counsellor, save insofar as the doctor-patient relationship must be in all things a moral one. And certainly the parson, especially when he is working with a psychiatrist, must on no terms undertake to usurp the role of the doctor. Doctor and parson must stay on their own sides of the fence: otherwise the patient suffers. Many cases illustrate that a clergyman and a psychiatrist were able to work together. Can we generalize from their experiences?

In the first place, the clinically trained clergyman will have learned how to detect the symptoms of mental aberration. He will have acquired some ability to spot problem cases, and he must learn how to know when a psychiatrist must be called in. Here he may have to do a great deal of spade work, especially if he is working in a rural parish, preparing the patient, his family, and the community. And he may be working in rural areas where psychiatric resources are not available, and will be on his own. Here one counsels safety: take a minimum of chances. There will always be a certain number of risks, but no clergyman wants to set up in business as a lay psychiatrist. There will be a certain number of things he can do well; there will be a number of minor disorders where he can function well. He must learn what these are and stick to them. If there is a moment's doubt, the parson should either get a doctor or stay on his own side of the fence.

Now let us turn to the other side of the picture, where the minister is going to work cooperatively with the psychiatrist. Find out, in consultation with him, just what role he expects the parson to play, and how best he can help the doctor restore the patient to mental health. It is quite certain that the spheres of interest will overlap; do not be afraid of that. Find out the areas the psychiatrist proposes to explore, and stay out of these. Above all things else, the minister should be accessible to the patient. Let him tell anything he wants. Do not be afraid even to let him tell how much he hates his psychiatrist. Let him talk out all his aggressions, his frustrations, his defeats. Learn how to listen, and learn how to keep a poker face.

In one great area, however, the minister can play a role of incomparable importance—in relieving feelings of guilt. Very few of us can do as good a job of condemning our neighbors as we can do of condemning ourselves. That is especially true of those whose situation requires a psychiatrist. A helpful listener must learn to take anything and everything in stride—including the taking of human life. Never for a moment permit the patient to feel that he is being condemned. Condemnation is God's prerogative and possibly that of the criminal courts. It is the minister's function to reassure sinful men of God's forgiveness, and the limitlessness of His forgiveness. The patient will be expecting the clergyman to condemn him and to lecture him on his evil course. It is a wise pastor who is able to disappoint him. In one office there is a profane lay assistant who has been heard to say, "I don't give a good God damn what you are today or what you were yesterday. I give a great many damns about what you can make of yourself tomorrow, next week, next year." This advice, couched in language somewhat more in keeping with the clerical profession, is not without its validity.

There will be cases in which the formal apparatus of the confessional, as practiced in Roman Catholic circles, can bring about the best therapeutic results. However, if the confession is too formal and stylized, it becomes meaningless. Don't sentimentalize; don't weep over the lost sheep. Those to whom religion is meaningful need constand reassurance that they are important in God's sight; that God is genuinely interested in their welfare; that He wants them to become the sort of men and women that they themselves, in their better moments want to be; that no matter how far they have lost their touch with the decencies of life it is never too late to repair one's self respect, and do an exceedingly good job of it.

Do not be afraid of what the patient may tell. Almost nothing is incredible, and that the capabilities of the human animals for folly and downright evil are limitless. With the psychiatrist the parson will have a chance to understand why Matthew, Mark, Luke and John fell short of the goals they set out for themselves. Perhaps their goals were unrealistic. Perhaps their background, their education, their early life, their school, their environment, made them pursue a will-o'-the-wisp, and each of them, in his way, unable to face reality, chose to escape from a world that was too much for them, and, in the escaping, got into trouble with themselves and the community. For such as these, the Church should have no condemnation to offer; they do an excellent job of self-condemnation. For such as these the Church holds out the hope that it is possible to find help to retract one's steps, to pick goals more in keeping with one's capabilities, and that there is a strong possibility that, with some help, the patient may be able to lead a useful and perhaps even happy life.

At this point one can almost hear something like this: "What you have to say may all be very true. But there comes a time when the patient must leave the hospital, or when his sessions in the psychiatrist's office must come to an end. After all, religion is an organized affair, and there are churches and church activities. What about it? Do we send the patient to church, and what happens if the church doesn't take?" The same situation is equally true of prisons and prisoners; their doors open both ways. Prisoners must live in the community, and they must be prepared to accept the community, and, if good probation and parole work is done, the community has been prepared in some degree, to accept them. The situations are not dissimilar. Here no hard and fast rule to be laid down. Some patients will respond to acceptance by a church and flourish in its atmosphere. Others will require different solutions for their spiritual needs. When a patient is referred for church membership, the situation must be carefully gone over with the parish minister. The minister must be given some understanding of the problem, but naturally care must be exercised to see that no confidences are violated. What is more, no persons should be suggested for membership in a church unless it is felt that he is acceptable to the congregation. Rejection by a congregation can work incalculable harm. And a stupid minister, without understanding or tolerance, can undo in five minutes what may have taken years to be built up. Each case must be managed on its own special circumstances. Where, in the simpler situation, the minister is dealing with a parishioner in his own church with mental conflicts, your task is simplified a hundredfold. He can then judge the situation at first hand, and can move slowly or rapidly as the exigencies of the case require. These may seem very elementary counsels to give, but they are things that are so often overlooked as one becomes involved in the more technical aspects of the interrelationship of the ministry and psychiatry.

One last thought remains. Our present-day world, torn between conflicts of ideas, struggling to work out moral standards where what was yesterday's certainty is today's ethical confusion, needs desperately every force that can stand four-square for the decensies of manners and morals. Traditionally the Church has stood for goodness and the decencies. Although weakened, it still retains some of its hold on the people. In a world frantically struggling to find security, the Church can make itself the rock to which the forces of good can anchor. Despite the repudiation of morality when evil is made to appear good if it

The Backslider

It was my nephew, Geoffrey, who opened my eyes to the shocking fact that I had become a backslider and who persuaded me to go to church for the first time (except Harvest Festivals) since the war. So I had better begin by explaining how Geoffrey appeared on the scene at all. I am a bachelor of forty and live in a nice flat by myself and earn my living writing articles for the papers. I am supposed to be on expert on youth problems, having years ago run a Boy Scout troop for six months and written a book about it which enjoyed a ready sale. The line I generally take in my articles is that the young fellows of today are lazy, unenterprising, selfish and irreligious When they are not indulging in crime they spend their time watching greyhound racing and going to the pictures.

These articles are very popular and bring me in a nice sum every year, because older people like to think how much better they were when they were young.

I enjoy living alone, and except for Mrs. Puffin, who comes in every day to "do" for me, I lead a peaceful life. Or I did until the letter came from Geoffrey's mother to say that she was off to Australia for a year with her husband and that she was sending Geoffrey to stay with me. It was the more surprising since Geoffrey's father and I had quarrelled in 1936 over a car I sold him that would not go, and I had seen little of them since. Pretty cool I thought it, but my sister put in a P. S. which explained it. "I've just read your latest series of articles on 'Can Degenerate Youth Be Saved?' and I think you will be a good influence for Geoffrey."

Geoffrey arrived with his luggage on Saturday evening. I was in a shocking temper because I had spent the day transferring the books and bookcases from my study to the sitting-room, as Geoffrey would have to use the study as a bedroom, and Mrs. Puffin had helped me, under protest, saying that she did not approve of boys and would probably give notice almost at once. We had made the study into quite a smart bedroom and Mrs. Puffin had a big bowl of flowers on the dressing-table.

The first thing Geoffrey did was to carry the flowers into the sitting-room, saying that I must have thought he was a girl. We had supper together in moody silence, looking at one another covertly over our halves of the evening paper.

"I won't come to church with you tomorrow morning," he said, "if you don't mind. I'd like to explore the district. But I'll come with you in the evening. What's the parson like? Our chap at home is a grand fellow. He was an Army padre and got a medal in North Africa. . . . ."

"Our chap," I said evasively, "is not so bad." I didn't dare tell Geoffrey that I had drifted into the habit of going to the pictures on Sunday evening.

There are about twenty churches in our suburb, and I took Geoffrey to St. Luke's, which was nearest. He assumed that I was a regular worshipper there and asked me about the choir, and whether the church had a Scout troop or a football team, and seemed surprised when I confessed my ignorance. As we came opposite the church Geoffrey tried to read the big notice-board by the light of a nearby street lamp. But the board was weather stained and quite illegible.

"That's a bad sign," said Geoffrey. "You can generally take it that a church with an illegible notice board is pretty dead."

I was already becoming aware that Geoffrey was not in the least like the boys I wrote about in my articles. He was much more vivid and alive, and he seemed to have an opinion about everything and not to be in the least frightened of expressing it. He had a rather plain face that lighted up and become worth looking at when he spoke, and he seemed to talk most of the time.

We went into the church, and were met by a mouldy smell. Not the clean mouldy smell of an ancient village church, but the horrible stuffy smell of a suburban church where nobody ever bothers to open the windows.

"What a stink!" whispered Geoffrey.

It was 6:25, but only nine people were present, and they were all old and —as Geoffrey said afterwards—moth-eaten. The place was dimly lit, and the organ was giving forth a slow lugubrious noise like the wailing of many cats.

The choir filed in. Both of them. Then the service began. It was the usual evening service that I had known as a boy, and even in those dismal surroundings and led by a dull, lifeless parson I found myself strangely moved by parts of it. The words of the General Confession, that I had recited so trippingly in the far-off days of my youth, now seemed to have a terrifically topical meaning for myself. I had drifted into the habit of thinking of myself as rather a decent sort of fellow, and lately I had often said with a smug grin, "a man can be a perfectly good Christian without going to church," but as I knelt there beside Geoffrey and took a sidelong glance at his eager countenance I was reminded of the dreams and ideals I had known at his age. What great things I had meant to do for Christ and His world! And what litttle, what very little, I had done. I had a horrid glimpse of myself as fat and selfish and visionless.

The singing of the hymns was dreadful. The nine regular worshippers, with one exception, produced a mere united bleat. The exception was a very shabby little old lady with white hair and one of the sweetest faces I have ever seen. It is often true that when the flesh wears thin the soul shows through, and the old lady's face might have stood as a symbol of human goodness. There were deep lines of suffering, but they only set off the kindliness and the courage and the faith that shone out of her eyes and made her beautiful. She sang the hymns as if she were quite oblivious of the dismal church and quite unaware of the rest of us. She was singing only to delight her Master.

Geoffrey's voice, newly broken, varied alarmingly between baritone and contralto.

Then came the sermon. The pale, sad parson told us that it was a very wicked world and that the modern generation was too selfish and idle to go to church. His sermon was one long moan from beginning to end, and its effect on me was to make me wonder, after all, if a man could not be a good Christian without subjecting himself once a week to such smug dolefulness. The parson seemed to have forgotten why people should go to church, to worship and to know their master . . . he was obsessed with the virtue of church attendance as an end in itself.

The miserable affair dragged on to a conclusion. The parson hurried home, and was not there to greet us at the door as we went out.

"My padre always says good night to everybody," whispered Geoffrey.

But the job was not left undone, for the kind-looking old lady came and shook hands with us.

"I'm Mrs. Colton," she said. "I run a class for girls on Sunday afternoons . . . you must excuse Mr. Poldigger not saying good evening, but he has an invalid wife and always hurries back to her. I've known Mr. Poldigger since he came here as vicar forty years ago, and he is such a sincere man. He lost his only son in the first war, and he and Mrs. Poldigger have never quite got over it. . . . ."

She shook hands with Geoffrey and told him that she used to have three sons of her own and that she liked to see young people in the church. Then

What About The DPS?

Church groups ought to take leadership in offering resettlement opportunities to the Displaced Persons now being admitted to America from Europe. The Displaced Persons Act authorizes the admission of 205,000 displaced persons over a period of two years. The government has directly asked the cooperation of the Churches in this resettlement program. On October 21, the first shipload of these unfortunate people sailed from Bremerhaven for American shores. Time is of the essence in this project.

The Roman Church has been alerted to use the law to the fullest extent of its possibilities. The National Catholic Rural Life Conference recently held in Wisconsin devoted much of its program to ways in which jobs and homes could be secured in rural areas for displaced persons who are Roman Catholics. Our Jewish brethren are working at this task also. It is now up to Protestants to show much greater interest and activity than we have done thus far.

For under the Displaced Person's Act, certain guarantees must be given before admission for permanent residence is permitted. The displaced person must have a guaranteed job which does not displace an American citizen. He must also have available housing which does not displace American citizens, and which is both safe and sanitary.

It is to be hoped that Episcopalians will carry their share of leadership in this humanitarian project. Cooperation with other Churches is certainly wise, but in many areas an alert congregation might well be the spearhead in securing local interest in this work. Those who are disinterested might again read Christ's words in the parable of the sheep and the goats. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these."

The Men's Corporate Communion

The conception of a great corporate communion of the men and boys of the Church each Advent is a glorious one. It could be an experience glowing with fellowship, rededication and blessing. Yet somehow each year it seems to fall short of what it might be. Is the problem in its motivation? The project seems to be "promoted," rather than to spring up out of the life and the needs of the men of the Church. Perhaps this is the reason why, though it is well promoted, with more than adequate promotional materials, its observance is spotty across the nation. Men come because of outward pressure rather than because of inward motivation. They ask, when articulate, "Why do we have this corporate communion? What is the point of this corporate act at this time?" One may say that it is enough simply to obey our Lord's command to "Do this." But that is not sufficient as a reply to the corporate nature of this service. These questions need to be answered if this corporate act is to become a glowing spiritual experience which flows out into life, rather than just another occasion promoted primarily to receive an offering. Nothing we have seen links the service to the prophetic message of judgment of Advent, nor with preparation for the celebration of the Incarnation at Christmas. Little seems to link this service with life, in all its peril and chaos today. Nothing emphasizes the Christian responsibilities of men to a nation and a world far from true peace, within or without. Nothing seems to suggest to our men that there are problems and opportunities in the Church itself waiting for militantly Christian men to tackle them! The service seems to reflect the current American attitude revealed in the recent Ladies' Home Journal poll that religion has little to do with business or politics. The Presiding Bishop's Committee for Laymen's Work which has such a fine record of accomplishment might well think this through at their January meeting, so that in future years this great corporate act might be filled with meaning because it is related to life.

Frederick W. Neve

Frederick W. Neve was one of the great missionaries of the Episcopal Church. Born in Kent, England, he ministered in the Church of England for seven years following his ordination in 1881. Then he came to a parish in the foothills of the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia. It was not long before the young rector lifted up his eyes unto the hills. There he saw a stalwart and fine people, neglected by both state and church. Schools were few. Roads were bad. Churches were far between. In 1890, he built his first church for the people of the mountains. A school was established in conjunction with the church. Lay workers went into the community to demonstrate the interest of the Church in every sphere of life. The sick were cared for. Homes were transformed. Life was changed in the mountains. Churches soon stretched across the seven mountain counties of the Diocese of Virginia. Years of sacrificial labor, much of it in the saddle or on foot, saw churches, schools and hospitals spring up as thousands of souls were gathered into the Church.

But even this great work did not exhaust Archdeacon Neve's capacity for service. He was an indefagitable writer. For a time he was an associate editor of "The Southern Churchman." He founded the Order of the Thousandfold to call men and women to be greater channels of service for God's Holy Spirit. He gave of himself freely to all good projects in the vast area for which he was spiritually responsible.

Changing conditions have changed the mountains. Good roads now penetrate where Archdeacon Neve fifty years ago went so perilously. Power lines now bring electricity far back into the hills. School buses and consolidated schools offer free public school education to mountain children. The Shenandoah National Park has taken over the tops of the mountains. Nor was the recent war without its effect. Boys from the mountains travelled the world over and served their country with honor. Now returned to their homes, they have brought back into the mountains knowledge of far-off lands. The mountains and their needs have changed. But throughout the mountains, men and women will be saddened by the death of one who came to them when others passed them by. Archdeacon Neve recognized a great Christian obligation and opportunity, and as a good soldier of the Lord Jesus Christ, he fought the fight of faith. God be praised for his life!

What Is Necessary Is Not Always Possible

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

I continue to get many rather fervent appeals in my mail from people who insist that all good men ought to spend their time trying to establish world government. "Do you believe," writes a recent correspondent, "that present international arrangements can prevent a war? And if you do not believe so, are you not bound to support the plan for world government which will guarantee peace?"

I certainly do not believe that there is any guarantee of peace in present international institutions. The United Nations represents a minimal institution of international accord across the chasm of international mistrust. It follows of course that a world government, if it could be established, would be a better guarantee of peace.

But the "if" is a very great one. The question is: can it be established? Almost every correspondent, writing on this subject, assumes that the necessity of an institution is the proof of the possibility of its attainment. If that only were true. Life would be much less tragic if it were true.

The real situation is that the mistrust between Russia and the West is so great that even the most minimal bargains between ourselves and them have become difficult. We cannot agree on a currency program in Berlin. We cannot agree on atomic energy control.

If we cannot agree on these issues, why should it be thought a possibility that we could agree on a world government in which the minority must have a very considerable trust in the good faith of the majority? Human communities are based upon the foundation of mutual trust.

Constitutions and laws can elaborate and perfect the human relations of a community where that trust lays the foundation. But institutions do not have the power to create the trust in the first place. That is why the project of world government is irrelevant at the present time. It is not irrelevant because world government would not work if we had it. The project is irrelevant because the moral and spiritual resources for its establishment are not available.

If the necessity of an institution guaranteed the possibility of achieving it, Europe would not have had centuries of anarchy after the disintegration of the Roman empire. It needed a new integration as soon as the old order broke down. But the resources for the new order of Europe were not immediately available.

Our generation has been so accustomed to achievement and success that it cannot imagine why there should be periods of frustration. Yet there are such periods; and wisdom requires that we do what we can for peace under such circumstances rather than dream of what we cannot do.

One is reminded of the advice of Jeremiah to the Jews in captivity. They thought the captivity would be short. He declared that it would be long; and that they would have to learn to pray "for the peace of Babylon." It seemed very perverse advice to his contemporaries. They resented it. But Jeremiah was right.

Our present statesmanship may be too opportunistic; but it does not suffer too much by comparison with an idealism which is irresponsible.

she hurried away and left us feeling not quite so depressed.

A war memorial plaque was in the porch with young Poldigger's name on it. Then, a bit higher up, Geoffrey found another plaque with three names on it: Richard Colton, aged 18; George Colton, aged 19, and Peter Colton, aged 22.

We walked home rather silently, but presently I told Geoffrey that it was not my regular church, and that in fact I had not got a regular church. He seemed relieved.

"Then we can go to a different church every Sunday," he said, "until we find a really good one. There's bound to be one good one in a place this size. If all churches were like St. Luke's there wouldn't be much wonder if chaps preferred the pictures. . . . ."

Yet as we fried our sausage meat for supper and made the cocoa I think we both knew in our hearts that the evening had not quite been wasted. For the old lady, with her three dead sons and her welcome for the strangers, had preached us the sort of sermon that even the best of parsons could hardly match.

GIVING

Go break to the hungry, sweet charity's bread.
"For GIVING IS LIVING," the Angel said.
"Must I be Giving again and again?
The weary, wondering question came.
"No," said the Angel, piercing me through.
"Just give till the Master stops giving to you."

CHRISTIAN SERVICE IN OVERCOMING OUR FEARS

(No. 8 Forward Movement Guides)

Bible Readings: Isa. 35:4. Psa. 91.

The word fear is used so many times in the Bible. Jesus used it constantly. And there are many kinds of fears, good and bad. Here we are concerned with the bad fears, those we must overcome if we are to walk the Disciples Way.

1. What fear can do to us. Physically, it can destroy our inner unity, upset our health, paralyze the will, dry up all but the one emotion. We have indigestion because we are over-anxious. We have eye-strain. We develop a decreased resistance to disease. Thus the person filled with fear is shortening life by hurting the body. Mentally fear creates further havoc, poisoning the attitude in every one of life's relationships. Spiritually, long sustained fear tends to cut us off from God. We become like radios with the current turned off, or jammed with "static." There is no love in fear.

2. Roots of fear. These may be a sense of guilt, lack of faith, vain regrets for the past or morbid anxiety for the future. Whatever may be the root, all fear goes back to a basic mental and spiritual maladjustment, a wrong center, a misguided motive power. In all that our Lord taught He goes back to that final mental difficulty. St. Paul shows the way out when he says, "This one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind and reaching forth unto those things which are before I press toward . . ." Phil. 3:13, 14.

3. Overcoming fear. First mentally. Here we have need of discipline, self-discipline. We must try to find what is the cause underneath our emotion. Usually we find we have to rearrange our values, for we are putting fear where no fear was. Once discover the cause and we can shrug our shoulders at it. Examine the situation frankly. This was our Lord's way. Do not fight fear, fight the things that make you afraid. If we do this the battle is half won.

An idea may come into the mind for a second but no one has to open the door wide and entertain the idea. We have the power to shut the door by self-discipline, to think about something more constructive.

One who disciplines himself becomes a disciple. He learns from a master, with a personality. The human being needs more than logic, more than self-interest if he is to avoid becoming a slave to his fear. Here is the need of a right spiritual attitude. The most startling need of the human spirit is escape from loneliness, into confident dependence. Human companionship can never meet this loneliness. The great crises of life find us alone—alone but for one, namely God. We must seek him, have a daily rule of life in prayer that keeps us strong enough to cast out the fears that assail us. Any Christian can follow this prescription for the conquest of fear.

4. Signs of victory. The first sign of victory will be this. In place of former tension, shaky nerves and dark forebodings, we will begin to feel a growing calm, a relaxation which is part of the victorious Christian life. It is the inevitable result of practicing the religion of our Lord "Into Thy hands I commit my spirit." All of this may be summed up in "Perfect love casteth out fear." I John 4:18. How can we fear when we know that surrounding us day and night is the love of God, and that nothing can happen to us which He does not permit. He loves us and is always with us.

CXLIX

The Collects, Epistles and Gospels. There are still some generalities that may be indulged in concerning the Collects, Epistles and Gospels before we take them up for individual consideration.

Practically all of the Collects consist of five parts, as follows:

1. An address to God, which almost always includes a reference to his attributes, such as, "Almighty," "Everlasting," "Most merciful," etc.

2. A reason for our appealing to God, such as, "Our refuge and strength, who art the author of all godliness," or, "Who hatest nothing that thou hast made and dost forgive the sins of all those who are penitent."

3. The request for the specific occasion, as in the Collect for Ash Wednesday, "Create and make in us new and contrite hearts," or for the first Sunday in Advent, "Give us grace that we may cast away the works of darkness and put on the new armor of light."

4. The reason for making the request, "Because through the weakness of our mortal nature we can do no good thing without thee; "Who seest that we have no power of ourselves to help ourselves."

5. In conclusion, mentioning our Saviour's name, as, "Through Jesus Christ Our Lord." This frequently includes a reference to the Holy Trinity, or an ascription of praise to God.

All of the Collects do not necessarily contain each of these divisions, and when they do they are not always in the order given. Thus, in the short but very effective Collect for the Sunday next before Advent, "Stir up, O Lord, the wills of thy faithful people, etc., etc.," the petition comes before the address, and there are numerous other variations, but the order given is a general outline.

The beginning of the Advent Season depends on two fixed festivals. The first Sunday in Advent is invariably the fourth Sunday before Christmas and that always falls on the Sunday nearest to the thirtieth of November, which is St. Andrew's Day. It is easiest to remember it by this latter festival, and there is a great appropriateness in attaching St. Andrew to the first day of the Christian year, because he was the first missionary, "And he findeth his own brother . . . and he brought him to Jesus." (John 1, Vss. 41-42.)

WHAT SHALL I GET NEXT?

As we begin to prepare our Christmas lists we begin to do a lot of thinking of our friends and families. We begin to think especially of what they are like. We think in those terms as we cast around for ideas of gifts for them. We wish to make things for people we love. There is no more satisfaction than in a creative act of making things. During this time our thoughts turn to the person for whom we are working. It is good to do this.

Another thing that we should consider at this time is that we may give people books. There are many lovely books which could be given to the family to read together. It is important to build up a library of religious books as well as secular ones. In the new material published by the Presbyterian USA for church school and home use the library is one of the most important factors. Each child has to have a book for use in the home. This is part of the working plan. The pupil has home work of reading and a notebook (those old enough). The parents and teachers have the same magazine to study their lessons. The home and the Church work together through books and lesson materials.

We, who do not have this, should realize how important it is and establish our own library, our library in the home and in the Church School.

Christmas is a good time to shop with this in mind. On most book counters you will find gifts of books from a twenty-five cent piece, on up.

Another field that we are using more and more in our homes is good recordings. There are some fine new records, single and in volumes, of the "Christmas Story" and "Carols Of Many Lands". Good music in the home is important. Perhaps you have a Public Library

DR. GIBSON ACCEPTS BISHOPRIC

Richmond, Va.—The Very Rev. Robert F. Gibson, dean of the school of theology at the University of the South at Sewanee, Tenn., has acepted the post of suffragan bishop of the Diocese of Virginia.

He has announced that he would assume has duties, as an aide to Bishop Frederick D. Goodwin, in early Summer, subject to the consent of the majority of the bishops and of the Standing Committees of the dioceses, and following close of the spring school term at Sewanee.

Dr. Gibson, a native of Williamsport, Pa., who attended the University of Virginia, was elected suffragan bishop on October 27 at a meeting of the Council of the diocese at St. James' Church.

He did not accept, however, until November 19, when he made the announcement from Sewanee.

The next suffragan will take over special supervision of expansion work in Virginia.

Dr. Gibson, subsequent to his decision, visited Virginia and spent some time in Richmond meeting members of the clergy.

Dr. Gibson, who attended Virginia Theological Seminary as well as the University, has held a parish in Alexandria and has served as associate professor of church history at the Seminary. He is 42 years of age, married, and has two children.

ARCHDEACON NEVE FOUNDED GREAT MISSIONARY WORK

Charlottesville, Va.—The Venerable Frederick W. Neve, D. D., founder of a mission in the Blue Ridge Mountains, died at his home at Ivy Nov. 16.

Dr. Neve, archdeacon emeritus of the Blue Ridge, Diocese of Virginia, would have been 93 years old on his next birthday on Dec. 8.

Funeral rites were conducted Thursday at St. Paul's Church, Ivy, a church in the parish in which Dr. Neve first served as rector when he came to Virginia in 1888.

The service was conducted by the Rt. Rev. W. R. Mason, assisted by the Rt. Rev. F. D. Goodwin and the Rev. Dudley A. Boogher. Clergy of the archdeaconry of the Blue Ridge were active pallbearers and burial was in the church cemetery.

Under his leadership the mission work which he launched, now known as the Archdeaconry of the Blue Ridge, has grown until its mission stations extend to seven counties.

Within the bounds of these missions are an industrial boarding school, a preventorium for rebuilding undernourished children, 25 churches and chapels and six school buildings or other structures serving as places of worship.

Born Dec. 8, 1855, at Berenden, Kent, England, Dr. Neve was educated at Oxford University. He was ordained to the priesthood in the Cathedral of St. Albans, Hertfordshire, England, on June 12, 1881.

Builds Church in 1890

After serving as an assistant in the Church of England he came to Albemarle County in 1888. He became interested in the welfare of a number of underprivileged mountain people in the foothills of the Blue Ridge and for a time held services in a schoolhouse. In 1890 he built a church, St. John the Baptist Mission.

Dr. Neve opened a mission in the Blue Ridge proper, at Simmons Gap, Greene County, in 1900. The work expanded rapidly and the Bishop of Virginia appointed him as archdeacon, with right of way along the Blue Ridge from Albemarle to Loudoun County.

Years of service, on horseback and afoot, in the remote regions of the mountains brought the establishment of the chain of mission stations extending through seven counties.

In 1920, he founded the Order of the Thousandfold, which since has spread to many parts of the world.

Charleston, S. C.—Bishop Carruthers of South Carolina has just made the announcement that the diocese has been bequeathed $275,000 in the will of Mrs. Lena Warren Schaefer, who died in Charleston on January 6 of this year. After making certain personal bequests Mrs. Schaefer left the residue of her estate in trust to the diocese. The income is to be used by the trustees for the work of the diocese.

Mrs. Schaefer named this legacy in memory of her husband, William H. Schaefer, who died February 22, 1935. Mr. Schaefer, a native of Baltimore, was born in 1857. His first wife was Florence Moulton, daughter of William U. Moulton, Boston journalist and publisher, and the well known author, Ellen Louise Chandler Moulton. Mr. Schaefer taught English in the Charleston High School.

After Mrs. Schaefer's death Mr. Schaefer married Miss Lena Warren of Charleston. The Schaefers attended both St. Michael's and Grace Churches.

Bishop Carruthers, in speaking of the gift to the Trustees of the diocese, emphasized the need in South Carolina for a considerable endowment. The diocese contains many small congregations which must have assistance in order to maintain a regular ministry. It operates, or assists in the operation of, a number of institutions which require financial assistance and which are in a bad state of repair. Among these are the Church Home for Women in Charleston and the Church Home for Children in York. It has also a considerable Negro work for which it has received for years assistance from the National Council. More than this, there are many missionary opportunities in the diocese which canot be developed because of lack of resources.

The Board of Trustees of the diocese at the present time consists of Bishop Carruthers, president; Mr. B. Allston Moore, of Charleston, secretary and treasurer; the Rev. Henry D. Bull, of Georgetown; the Rev. Thomas S. Tisdale, of Orangebury; General Charles P. Summerall, Mr. William L. Glover, and Mr. J. Ross Hanahan, of Charleston; and Mr. P. J. Maxwell, of Florence.

COLORFUL EXHIBITS PORTRAY CHURCH'S MISSIONARY WORK

San Francisco, Cal.—More than fifty parishes, missions and church institutions in the Diocese of California contributed exhibits to three convocational programs in San Francisco, Palo Alto and Alameda in the weeks preceding services and meetings for the Foreign Missions Program of Advance, November 14-17.

An amazing variety of colorful exhibits presented vivid scenes and graphic portrayals of the Church's work in missionary fields in the United States and overseas. All departments and divisions of the National Council were represented at a literature table at each of the convocational programs, which included movies, film-strips and also a children's pageant in Christ Church, Alameda. Brief talks were given by the Rev. A. Ronald Merrix, National Council field officer, and the Rev. Frank L. Titus, assistant secretary of the Overseas Department. In Alameda one person at each booth told in turn the story of each exhibit in a two-minute speech over a travelling sound kodascope.

Typical comments heard from visitors were: "I had no idea that our missions were so widespread." "I did not know that so much literature on the Church's work was available." "I have never before seen anything like it."

Practical values in the preparation involved for exhibitors, as well as the effect on visitors, were suggested in the Reader's introduction to the pageant:

"What is the purpose of these 'Christ for the World' exhibits? For weeks our people have devoted time and effort in study and work to present in vivid fashion the activities of the Church throughout the world. We have learned much of the thrilling story of the Church's onward march throughout the world. It has been a glorious experience for many. Yet this is only a beginning, as we shall see by thinking over some words of our Blessed Lord."

After a large number of costumed children had marched through the nave to the chancel, representing peoples and types of work depicted in the exhibits, The Reader continued:

"But there are millions yet unreached. They have not received this knowledge of God. Millions need the Gospel of Jesus Christ and His healing ministry. Would that we could all go and help. You can help by providing the means for others to go. . . . God, in His own ways, will supply the priests, the doctors, the nurses, the teachers and other workers, if you provide the means."

Visiting speakers at services and meetings for the Foreign Missions Advance Program included the Rt. Rev. Reginald Heber Gooden, Panama Canal Zone; the Rev. Charles W. Ranson, general secretary, International Missionary Council; Dr. Paul W. Harrison, "desert doctor" from Arabia.

ACTORS' GUILD COOPERATES TO PRODUCE RADIO PROGRAM

Guild Has 25th Birthday

New York, N. Y.—The Episcopal Actors' Guild of America is celebrating its 25th birthday. It was founded under the guidance of the Rev. Dr. Randolph Ray, rector of the Church of the Transfiguration, known around the world as "The Little Church Around the Corner." The purpose of the Guild is to bind together the theatrical profession and the Church for mutual welfare, understanding, and service. It is a national, non-sectarian organization, with both professional and lay members. National headquarters are in the quaintly raftered Guild Hall of the Little Church Around the Corner. A program of social activities, speakers, and music is carried on almost continuously. Such activities are against a setting of walls covered with historic playbills and photographs and possessions of noted theatrical people. There is Frank Allen's grand piano, Richard Mansfield's desk, the handsome pier glass of Kate Claxton, Daniel Frohman, some years ago, was the guest of honor at a tea, when a fine bronze base-relief of him was presented to the Guild by the sculptress, Florence Malcolm Darnault. When Mr. Frohman died, his expressed wish was carried out, to have his funeral service held at the Little Church.

The quiet charities of the Guild are made possible through the proceeds of an annual benefit performance. This year the benefit was on November 5, a performance of "Life With Mother." Vinton Freedley, President of the Guild, and a well-known producer, made a 25th anniversary" speech of greeting to the audience. Mr. Freedley's predecessors were the late George Arliss and Otis Skinner.

The Guild's charities are a help in every variety of emergency to members of the profession. Mrs. Helen Moore, executive secretary of the Guild represents it at joint conferences of the Episcopal Actors' Guild, the Catholic Actors' Guild and the Jewish Theatrical Guild, considering appeals for aid that each has received.

At present the Episcopal Actors' Guild is assisting actively in the nationwide weekly radio program presented by the Episcopal Church, GREAT SCENES FROM GREAT PLAYS each Friday evening at eight o'clock eastern standard time over all Mutual and a number of independent radio stations. The Guild is on record as being "enthusiastic at this opportunity to aid the Church in its effort to reach the estimated seventy million churchless people in this country."

Honorary presidents of the Guild are the Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill presiding bishop of the Episcopal Church, and the Rt. Rev. Charles K. Gilbert, bishop of New York. Mr. Freedley is president and Dr. Ray is vice-president, warden and chairman of the Council. Charles Coburn, Bobby Clark, and Peggy Wood are vice-presidents; the Rev. Charles B. Ackley, S. T. D., is recording secretary, and John Knight is treasurer.

40TH ANNIVERSARY—FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

Celebrating December 1-3

New York.—Four decades of growth of the movement for Christian unity and cooperation will be celebrated at the biennial meeting of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America at Cincinnati, December 1-3.

The Federal Council of Churches was the first association of a large group of churches in any country of the world for united witness and action, Dr. Samuel McCrea Cavert, general secretary, stated. In various ways, he added, Christians of different churches had worked together as individuals but in no country was there a permanent association of churches of the major families of Protestantism for cooperative action.

"Since the Federal Council was born at Philadelphia, December 2, 1908, there has been a remarkable growth of the cooperative movement among the churches."

The Federal Council now comprises 22 Protestant communions and three Eastern Orthodox bodies, and there are councils of churches in 40 states and 670 counties and cities.

"The churches, through this network of councils," Dr. Cavert said, "are working together in common tasks in the local community, the state and the nation.

"The movement of church cooperation has spread widely in other countries, largely under the influence fo the American example. It was climaxed this year by the establishment of the World Council of Churches as a permanent body."

On Wednesday, December 2, forty years to the day the Federal Council of Churches first convened in the Academy of Music in Philadelphia, the present leadership will join in a celebration in Cincinnati.

Present will be a church leader who has been associated with the Federal

Council as a member continuously since its birth—Dr. George W. Richards, Lancaster, Pa., president-emeritus of the Seminary of the Evangelical and Reformed Church. He will speak on the subject, "The Contribution of the Federal Council to Christian Unity."

Four former presidents, Bishop Francis J. McConnell, Lucasville, Ohio; Bishop Ivan Lee Holt, St. Louis, Mo.; Dean Luther A. Weigle, New Haven, Conn., and Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, New York, will also give addresses. Three other former presidents, Rev. Dr. Edgar DeWitt Jones, Pleasant Ridge, Mich.; Rev. Dr. George A. Buttrick, New York, and Rt. Rev. Henry S. George Tucker, Richmond, Va., will send messages.

At the opening session of the 40th anniversary meeting at the Hotel Gibson Wednesday, December 1, Dr. Cavert will give a review and an interpretation of the Federal Council's 40 years service to the churches and the nation. "The Federal Council—Yesterday Today and Tomorrow," is his topic.

Approximately 350 official delegates of the churches comprising the Federal Council, and 150 other church leaders are expected to attend the three-day meeting under the leadership of Charles P. Taft of Cincinnati, president.

THANKSGIVING FOR THE NEW PRINCE

New York, N. Y.—At the invitation of the Rt. Rev. Charles K. Gilbert, bishop of New York, who presided, "A Service of Thanksgiving on behalf of the peoples of the British Commonwealth of Nations, marking the birth of a son to H. R. H., Princess Elizabeth, Duchess of Edinburgh, and the Duke," was held in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, on Saturday afternoon, November 20, at 4 P. M.

The service was a special one, consisted of a formal bidding of the congregation to prayer and praise; the singing of the 127th Psalm ("Except the Lord build the house"); and prayers appropriate to the occasion. A solemn Te Deum ("We Praise Thee, O God") was sung by the full choir of sixty-five men and boys before the High Altar. The Service concluded with the Blessing given by the Bishop.

The British Consulate in New York, together with other official British interests, prominent Britishers resident in New York, consular representatives of other nations, and the international community generally, were represented.

All the flags of the Commonwealth Nations were accompanied by color guards in the Procession.

The clergy conducting the Service were the Rev. Canon Thomas A. Sparks, pastor of the Cathedral; the Rev. Canon James Green, Precentor of the Cathedral; the Rev. Canon Edward N. West, Sacrist of the Cathedral. Dr. Norman Coke-Jephcott, organist of the Cathedral, directed the choir.

REV. GIRAULT JONES CHOSEN AS SUCCESSOR TO BISHOP JACKSON

Elected on Second Ballot at Convention

New Orleans, La.—The Rev. Girault M. Jones, 45-year-old rector of St. Andrew's Church, was chosen as seventh bishop in the Diocese of Louisiana Nov. 17.

He was elected on the second ballot taken at the Convention in Christ Church Cathedral. He succeeds the late Rt. Rev. John Long Jackson who died on September 2.

Twenty-five were nominated. Six withdrew before the balloting. Each member of the clergy was entitled to one vote, each parish delegation to one vote and each mission delegation to a quarter vote.

Forty-six of the 50 clergymen in the state voted, and the majority was for the Rev. Mr. Jones on the first ballot.

The Rev. Robert Alexander Magill, rector of St. John's Church, Lynchburg, Va., led the poll of laity, requiring a second ballot. In that, the Rev. Mr. Jones polled 32 of the 46 clerical votes and 22½ of the laity ballots to win the election. His selection was made unanimous by a voice vote of the convention.

The bishop-elect has been rector of St. Andrew's for the past 12 years. He was born at Centreville, Miss. The bishop-elect is a graduate of Staunton Military Academy, Staunton, Va., and received his B. A. degree from the University of Mississippi and his Bachelor of Divinity from University of the South, Sewanee.

He was ordained priest in the diocese of Mississippi in 1929 and served in Mississippi in Lumberton and Picayune. He came to New Orleans in 1936.

The Bishop-elect is a member of the national commission of the Seaman's Church Institute, assistant treasurer of the committee of program and budget of the general convention and a member of the national church organization's curriculum development committee.

He is a member of the board of regents of the University of the South, Sewanee, and was at one time director of the Sewanee summer training school.

The Convention opened Wednesday morning with the Rt. Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, retired Presiding Bishop celebrating Holy Communion. Bishop Tucker, who retired in 1946 after nine years as the leading Episcopal clergyman in the nation, makes his home in Richmond, Va. and came to New Orleans to participate in the convention.

Mr. Schmidt stressed the importance of prayer and service and the part played by the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in the spiritual growth of the Church and the individual.

CLOSER BONDS UNITING STAGE, SCREEN AND CHURCH

New York, N. Y.—Hollywood has helped solve a difficulty met by the producers of "Great Scenes From Great Plays," the Church's weekly radio program. The Episcopal Actors' Guild cooperates most usefully in this program, and Mrs. Helen Moore, Guild Secretary, wrote the National Council telling of the difficulty and its solution. Mrs. Moore said:

"From time to time there are heartwarming incidents in the production of 'Great Scenes From Great Plays.' . . . When Henry Fonda, the famous Broadway star now playing the name part in "Mr. Roberts," was invited to participate in "Great Scenes," he eagerly consented, but stated that he would like to re-create the part of "Young Mr. Lincoln" over the air.

"Here came the rub. No radio script existed because 'Young Mr. Lincoln' was written for the screen and the performing rights were held by Twentieth Century Fox in Hollywood. Several alternative plays were suggested to Mr. Fonda, but he felt he would rather portray the young Illinois lawyer . . . his loves, hates and fears . . . than any contemporary character.

"As soon as executives of Twentieth Century Fox learned of the impasse they graciously waived all charges and ordered the script to be mailed from Hollywood to the National Council. Their cooperation is merely another indication of the close bonds uniting the stage, screen and Church.

"Another 20th Century Fox star, Miss Celeste Holm, recently flew from the coast to star in 'Great Scenes From Victory.' "

RESTORATION OF JAPAN'S CHURCHES PROGRESSING

New York, N. Y.—Real progress is being made in the rehabilitation of church buildings in Japan, according to a late report from the Rev. Kenneth A. Viall, S. S. J. E., liason officer representing the Presiding Bishop in that country.

Viall wrote: "To date the churches completely restored or temporarily rebuilt are Gifu; Kawasaki; Holy Trinity, Tokyo; All Saints' Tokyo; St. John's, Tokyo; St. Stephen's, Mito; St. Peter's, Kobe; St. Mary Magdalene, Akashi. In addition to these, which have been helped by our funds, Christ Church, Yokahoma, and St. Michael's, Kobe, have been rebuilt. The work of reconstruction is proceeding on the following: Aomori; Maebashi; Chiba; Toyohashi; Numazu; Hamamatsu; Hitachi; Sei Ai Church, Osaka; Jonan Church, Osaka; Christ Church, Kawaguchi, Osaka; St. Andrew's, Yokohama. All of these churches in the two preceding lists, with the exception of Christ Church, Yokohama, which was rebuilt

BISHOP REACHES WHOLE DIOCESE OVER RADIO

Providence, R. I.—November 14 was the date on which the Bishop of Rhode Island, Dr. Bennett, spoke to the whole diocese over the radio. Each congregation had in its church a receiving radio set, and Bishop Bennett spoke at 11:35 A. M. His subject concerned the Every Member Canvass and Missionary work, specially the new work in Rhode Island, and there is much of it.

On November 29, Bishop Bennett meets with the Rhode Island clergy in a Quiet Day at the Cathedral. The Diocese of Rhode Island is trying to increase its "intake of spirituality and its outgo of Missionary zeal."

BEAUTY—AND A JARRING NOTE

There is no more glorious sight than the riot of color along the Wissahickon in the fall. As I drove to town down that drive the other day its beauty held me. It seemed to say the human family, with its young and old, its red, black and yellow skins is a pleasing sight to God. The only jarring note in that picture is man's inhumanity to man. And that you and I, as we answer Christ's call "Follow me", can do something about. Let's do it! E. F. K.

RELIGION AND PSYCHIATRY

is done for national gain, despite the apparent lowering of standards of public and private morality, despite the Kinsey report, the Church contains within itself the germ of the Good Community. Working together, the clergyman and the psychiatrist can cause that germ to fructify even as the grain of mustard seed. Religion and psychiatry are allies and fellow-workers; if they fail to work together society is that much poorer. If they do cooperate the possibilities of their bringing healing to the nations are limitless.

WHAT SHALL I GET NEXT?

where there are records to lend. If not, it might be a good place for you to begin with this Christmas Season. This service was started in Richmond as a gift from a friend in the city, whose interest was music, at the death of a member of the family, to start this wonderful service for the public. It is an interesting place to visit, as you see people of all walks of life, men, women and children, enjoying hearing the music and then choosing volumes to take home. Why not spend sometime with Christmas music, you may play carols of different lands and talk about the people. You can read the Christmas Story and use music to make it more meaningful.

Let us think in terms of bringing into our homes at this season gifts that will remind us and others that we are Christians. Perhaps this will help you when you think "what shall I get next?"

Are you helping the

Outreach

of your Episcopal radio program?

Of course you are listening every week to GREAT SCENES FROM GREAT PLAYS, The Episcopal Radio Program, but what are you doing to interest your non-Episcopal friends in the program? Have you held a "listening party" in your home? Do you talk about the program with your business associates? Have you sat down with your personal address book and written to at least ten friends to listen?

There are 70 million Americans, approximately one-half of our total population, who have no Church home. According to the Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, Presiding Bishop, it is these 70 million we want to reach and offer them the friendship and spiritual help our Church can give.

Remember, it is your privilege to keep this program on the air. You can do it without any financial burden, merely by subscribing an additional 3% to the Every Member Canvass pledge. Thus you can give tangible help to the Outreach of your Episcopal radio program.

MEMO: TO CLERGYMEN

Re: Great Scenes from Great Plays

"GOD HOLDS THE KEY"

Sir: Thank you for printing "God holds the key". It is a beautiful hymn and we used to sing it often when I was a boy in London at the old Dorset Street Mission where my father was in charge. Why can't we have hymns like it in our book? The "Southern Churchman" is better all the time and we enjoy every number.

ONE DAY NEARER CHRISTMAS

To the Friends of The Seamen's Church Institute, 25 South St., New York.

Dear Friend:

Are you one of the many who helped us give our merchant seamen a memorable Christmas? If you are, we hope you will again send in your contribution and if not, do join our crew of helpers and either pack a box yourself, or let one of our volunteers do it for you. Thousands of seamen look to us for their only Christmas remembrance and we want to see that they receive a gayly wrapped Christmas box of useful and joyful gifts, whether they are on the Atlantic, the Pacific, the Baltic Sea or the China Sea. And our sick seamen confined in the Marine Hospitals, must not be forgotten. Many of these are suffering from the results of their war experiences and injuries. One young tubercular patient with tears in his eyes told our visiting chaplain, "My, I am glad to see a new face. You're the first person to visit me and I have been here in the hospital for over three months." You can judge what a Christmas box will mean to this lad. Here is another patient in Bellevue Hospital expressing his appreciation.

"Today I get Seamen's Church Institute Christmas present. I am happy with this present from 25 South Street and when my wife comes to hospital to see me I tell her I get this present. Thank you very much. Happy New Year for everybody. May Seamen's Institute live 1000 years and never die. This House is very good house for many seamen when no have money to eat, no have money to sleep. This House helps such men. Helped me plenty time. I tell all men this House of Seamen's Church Institute best House in the World."

Christmas morning at the Institute is always a happy time, for during the night Santa Claus has been busy packing some 1400 packages in the seamen's rooms and dormitory bunks and I wish you could have the pleasure that the staff has listening to their grateful comments. One elderly seaman who had sailed the Arctic waters for a great many years and been on many of Bartlett's trips got a thrill when he found that the donor of his box lived in Anchorage, Alaska.

Our boxes contain the donor's name and address if they wish it and this personal touch means much to the seamen as this letter from Caripito, Venezuela, evidences:

"I want to thank you, dear lady, for your lovely gift. The nuts and candy supply has as yet not been exhausted. Some of the native Indians in the jungles around here have sampled the sweets and think very highly of them. Wishing you a very happy New Year and my appreciation for getting your gift, the first in ten years at sea."

From the Manager of the Pacific Far East Line came this expression of gratitude:

"I have received advice from several of our masters that your organization with their usual thoughtfulness has placed aboard various ships in our fleet a supply of Christmas packages prior to their sailing in which you remembered every man in the crew. This Company wishes to express appreciation for this action on your part which is in perfect keeping with our own policy of promoting and improving the morale of the men going to sea. We salute you and thank you."

Through the kindness of the Isbrandsen Line we were able to send 500 Christmas boxes to the British Missions to Seamen in Rotterdam, Hamburg and Antwerp. The following excerpts from letters of thanks illustrate how much the gifts meant:

"Thank you for the marvelous Christmas boxes. The seamen have not seen parcels like these ones for years and were like children opening a stocking, as they took each package out of the box one by one and opened them with excitement and curiosity. They departed pouring blessings upon the S. C. I. and us." (From the British Chaplain at Rotterdam.)

(This letter is from Miss Guthrie in Hamburg who at one time was on the staff of the Seamen's Church Institute of N. Y.) "The Padre and I climbed into our Ford van on hearing of the arrival of "The Southland" and we rattled off to Bremen early one morning arriving at the ship just after the huge case had been landed. With the help of an obliging young clerk we eventually got it on the van with me on the top, the only space available. And at every bump back through the bomb damaged docks to the Customs' Office I nearly hit the roof! Though we resented the German inspector (the British inspector was not available at the time) we were both secretly pleased that the case was forced

Blessed Lord, Who hast caused all holy Scriptures to be written for our learning; Grant that we may in such wise hear them, read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest them, that by patience and comfort of thy holy Word, we may embrace, and ever hold fast, the blessed hope of everlasting life, which Thou hast given us in our Saviour Jesus Christ. How to Start a Parochial School

By THE REV. VINCENT C. FRANKS,

Rector of St. Andrew's Church, Jackson, Miss.

IT SEEMS that the Episcopal Church is on the verge of becoming school-minded in the parochial sense of the word. Certainly, there are signs pointing in that direction. Here in the deep South there is an extensive day school connected with one of our churches in Houston, Texas; there are parochial schools associated with two of our parishes in New Orleans; one with a parish in Savannah, Georgia and another in Jackson, Mississippi. Doubtless there are others of which this writer is not aware. All the schools mentioned are of recent origin. Indeed, there is such "a sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees," that the Department of Christian Education of the National Council is promoting a conference on the matter at the College of Preachers in Washington, D. C., in January. Lutherans and Roman Catholics have long, and to their great advantage, emphasized parochial schools. Now it seems that Episcopalians are awakening to a wide open opportunity.

Suppose, to begin with, that we make sure of our term and know what it is of which we speak. A parochial school is succinctly defined in Webster's New International Dictionary as, "A school, usually for elementary instruction, maintained by a parish or a religious body." The primary object of the school is academic instruction, but it follows that there will be a religious, even a denominational emphasis which no state supported public school would venture to include in its curriculum.

Controversial topics are beyond the scope of this article. It will not discuss any educational theories, nor debate the meaning of terms or even survey the motives which prompt Episcopalians to start day schools. Rather it is a response to the practical question, "How do you start a parochial school?" It proceeds to answer the question by stating how one parish did it.

No two parishes would have identical situations, yet the experience of any parish should be helpful to another one considering the establishment of a day school. Such a school might be the dream of a rector, meant to be a part of his parish program, supervised by himself and financed (in the beginning) by the parish budget—or it may begin by pressure from his communicants, to be administered in detail by a headmistress and with parents of the pupils responsible for its initial financing. In either case the interested parties would experience many of the questions, problems and "headaches" met by St. Andrew's Church in Jackson, Mississippi. True, it would be impractical for some parishes to consider the venture. Their church properties, for instance, may be in an unfavorable locality, the parish house may be inadequate to meet requirements or the site may be too far removed from bus or street car lines.

There is nothing unusual, insofar as a school is concerned, about St. Andrew's Church in Jackson. It's location is neither particularly good nor bad. The church is on a corner in the heart of the business district of a city of 120,000 people. However, most of the bus lines pass directly in front of our property, stop on the corner, and a majority of our pupils come and go in these public buses. Since many of the parents work down town our location has merit for it means that children can drive in in the mornings with their fathers. A two-story parish house rises just behind the church and the distribution of space lends itself to our purpose. A large well-lighted and well-ventilated room on the ground floor, used on Sundays by the kindergarten, is a perfect room for the children of the primary and first grades. Children in these age groups should not be forced to climb stairs. There is an adequate number of toilets and wash rooms in the parish house, which are important features to any day school. There is a yard that serves as a playground. It is not spacious, but by staggering the recess hours of our graders we make it do.

Let us assume that the reader's parish is contemplating such a project, and that he wants to know in advance some of the problems which would normally arise and how they might be met. What can be done?

The school will continue its policy of working with the individual child to free him from any emotional and intellectual habits which hinder his maximum learning.

At the same time the school offers a well-integrated scholastic program that will assure him of mastery of the skills required at his grade level and develops his ability to think clearly and to value cultural and intellectual attainments.

Every teacher on the faculty has proven her ability as an effective and creative teacher, interested in helping the child attain his fullest development.

First of all, talk. Talk to parish members who have school age children. Arouse their interest. Nothing can be done without preliminary conversations, in homes, on the streets and around the church. The parents will spread the news. Be prepared for all sorts of rumors, good, bad and indifferent. After interest has been aroused call a meeting of the interested parents. Call the meeting at night so that fathers as well as mothers will be able to attend, and call it preferably in the spring so that there will be time to get the school organized in time for the fall session. The chairman of the meeting, presumably the rector, should have a tentative budget ready for presentation and discussion. A sufficient number of copies should be mimeographed so that every one present may have one in hand. Appoint a secretary and keep minutes from the very first meeting. Revenue has to be raised whether you desire to start with one or four grades, and the interested parents will of necessity have to furnish the initial expenditures. The first year will call for the largest expense.

In our case, and it would be typical, two sizeable rooms, another smaller room, a hallway and stairway had to be repainted. So did some sixty chairs, a number of benches which we could use for the first grade children in place of study desks, and some tables for the use of the teachers. The lighting had to be changed to conform to the requirements of the State Board of Education. Study desks, however, had to be purchased for the third and fourth grade pupils, so did playground equipment, a typewriter, book racks, blackboards, wall maps and books for the school library. An office had to be furnished for the headmistress and advertising space bought in the newspapers. A colored maid had to be employed to do the cleaning and see that the children got safely from and to the buses.

How could all this be financed? At our organizational meeting we made it known that if ten parents (the matter had some discussion with a few of them before the meeting) would contribute $300.00 each toward initial expenses we could launch the project. We hoped that the money could be returned at some later date, though no guarantee to that effect could be given. After full discussion, and when we had seen the needed money in sight, a motion was passed that we begin the organization of a parochial school to be known as St. Andrew's Episcopal Day School. A Board of Trustees was elected with the rector as President of the board. An interested member of the church, a lawyer, volunteered his time and experience in getting a charter for the school (a non-profit organization) from the office of the Secretary of State. A charter is an essential, and unless a lawyer volunteers his services there would be some expense in securing the charter. Now we had the sanction of the Vestry to use the parish house for the school, a Board of Trustees, a charter and $3,000.00 in the treasury. We had three months time before the opening of the fall school session.

But we had neither headmistress nor faculty nor assurance that the city would support a private school. There had never been a private school in the city before. For that matter the Episcopal Church is numerically weak here and looked upon with some suspicion. We determined to employ none but gifted teachers and to pay them good salaries. We found a trained headmistress, an Episcopalian, and interested enough in the venture to "take a chance" on her salary. The tuition was set at $25.00 per month for all grades and payable in advance of each semester. We set aside $200.00 for newspaper advertising. A copy of one of our advertisements appears herewith.

A limit was set of 25 pupils per grade, which would mean that the teachers could give each child the personal attention needed. Since schools begin their day at 8:30 A. M. we could dismiss the first grade at 12:40 and the upper grades at 1:00. Consequently the first year all children would go home for lunch. We set our sight high and hoped to open with 100 pupils. We opened with 42.

One of our disappointments was that there were only six children in our second grade, but since the first grade opened with capacity number it carried the second grade financially. We worked—this is most important—in full cooperation with the State Board of Education. Some part time teachers were used who taught in exchange for scholarships for their children. One mother instructed all grades in the appreciation of music, another mother was gifted in the telling of Bible stories. A consulting psychologist, a member of the church, volunteered her services. Some interested church women helped in keeping the books, with answering the telephone, typing letters and cutting stencils. A member of the clerical staff took the boys to the Y. M. C. A. twice a week and instructed them in boxing and tumbling. Milk was delivered to

The New Curriculum

By THOMAS A. STONE

There is much about the new Presbyterian (U. S. A.) church school curriculum that strengthens our faith in Christian education at this time. Many things have operated to delay the finished product, but this month we begin to use the materials from Kindergarten to Young People (4 to 20).

The real contribution of the new curriculum is an up-to-dateness in its Christian education philosophy. The title for the entire series is Christian Faith and Life: A Program for Church and Home. This reveals the new approach. Even though the church school never intended to take Christian education out of the home, but rather to supplement what was given there, our former materials have scarcely been directed at parents or even helpful to them. This new curriculum will make it easily possible for either the home or the church school alone to do more than both have done in the past, and we have not yet seen what both together will be able to do.

The new curriculum recognizes Christianity as the Way for Life for seven days of the week. Truly it is an old philosophy that the Christian is to live Christianity, but it is new when applied to educational method and content.

The Reading Books

The philosophy of the new curriculum is exhibited clearly in the new reading books. The very plan of having the reading books rests on the philosophy for it is expected that they will be taken home, read perhaps with the parents and other members of the family from time to time, and kept there. For each church school department there are from one to four books a year. This means that a young person of twenty, having gone through the departments will have a library of thirty-two splendid books. His Christian education will not have been confined to one hour each Sunday in a church or church school building, but will be tied to many experiences of life.

Perhaps you say, "That is too much to expect of reading books. Can an old content become interesting and vital for young lives?" Our answer is, "Taste and see." Of course the reading books are only a part of the entire curriculum we are to use. It is even more the philosophy, interest, and vitality exhibited on the pages of the books than the mere plan of having such books that makes this curriculum unique.

Let us take our first illustration from the books for the Primary Department. The books for the spring and summer quarters have a home and church setting. "Thine Is the Glory" is the story of Don and Polly actually studying the Lord's Prayer in order to be able to sing it in the church's children's choir. Teachers are mother and father, brother Rick, sister Geraldine, choir director Mr. Alcott, nature, and many common experiences. Growing Pains is about nine boys and girls living in a neighborhood and attending church school together. Here the author, both a mother and church school teacher, uses each experience of the boys and girls for teaching.

There is much interest in all Churches in the new curriculum of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A. This article, reprinted by permission of "The Presbyterian Tribune," is a careful evaluation of the series by an eminent Presbyterian minister.

In these two books we can see readily our boys and girls and those we know. They are being guided in solving their problems in a Christian way. They are growing up to love Jesus and to be Christians in every situation they face. Their life is the life that our boys and girls are living. It means that Christianity may become the way of life for our children.

Since the books will be read by parents (as all other children's books are, too) and teachers, what they will mean to each should be noted. The parents who read these books are going to realize their obligation "to bring up" their child "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," to use the words of the baptismal vow. But more than this, as they come to know the parents of Don and Polly, Bobby's mother, Jim's father, and Peter's father, they are going to see, in many instances for the first time, just how to nurture their children as they have promised. Whether it is a problem of a girl friend being too attractive, a boy being shy and awkward, or a strong fellow acting like a bully, they will know what to do and say. And yet again, it is more than knowing what to do and say. The very manner in which it must be said and done is brought out clearly in the books.

There will also be a special by-product for the teachers as they read these books. Far better than any leadership course, these books will provide an understanding of the interests and problems of boys and girls. One doesn't need to read far to know that this is real. The language is their language. The personalities are their personalities. The loves and hates are theirs. The conceit and humility are true to life. And just as the parents, the teachers also, will learn what to say and do and how to say and do it. Seeing it done makes it easy—at least, far easier,

Now, lest the reader think that I have selected only two books that have such admirable qualities, let me say at once that I believe this philosophy, interest, and vitality to be the most singular attribute of all the books published. In the Kindergarten the reading book, A Star Shone, tells of Jesus; the birth of the baby, his growth, attendance at the temple, healing lepers, loving children, and being a friend to Zacchaeus. The author has the spirit and interest of Christ and children when, at the close of the visit of the children to Jesus, she writes: "But what the children liked to remember best of all, was how glad Jesus had been to see them."

A primary book, I have not mentioned, Let's Go to Nazareth, tells the family and synagogue experiences of seven-year-old Tobiah in the days before Jesus. Tobiah's last prayer was, "O Lord, my God, I want to see the Prince of Peace when he comes. I want to help him." And so the mood of this story prepares our hearts to love and serve Jesus.

In the Junior Department the first annual reading book is about The King Nobody Wanted. It tells in remarkable detail from the four Gospels the story of Jesus from a time of expectancy to the day of Pentecost. The words of the Bible are followed closely and the time is that of Bible days. The setting is real and each event has consequences in the light of its political and social situation. This makes it clear as to what Jesus' decisions and actions meant and as to why they were made. As we read we see ourselves today, facing our problems, being called to be decisive and evangelical for Christ. The exceedingly fine illustrations in this book are thought to be the best at present in the new curriculum.

The Intermediate's story of Men Called Him Master reveals a new Jesus ever struggling to give the essentials of his teaching and preaching that the disciples will understand. There is the call for loyalty to Christ amid the problems of life continually faced. Junior High boys and girls will read and think. Adults who read this book will know that they, too, before Jesus, must think through the implications of each decision just as Judas, Simon the Zealot, and Jesus' other disciples have attempted to do. We see the problems that faced the Zealot and Judas. We understand their difficulties better because of this story. Just as Judas wanted to cooperate with the Pharisees and the Zealot wanted to fight to protect Jesus, so we sometimes fail to follow Jesus' plan. But always it is clear that Christianity must be the Way one is living.

In the reading book for Seniors and Young People, this philosophy is even more evident. Seniors and Young People can read and re-read The Choice and live and re-live its pages. Some people feel that for Seniors this book will require re-reading. It is the story of young Clement's conversion from Judaism to Christianity. In writing this book, Paul Sevier Minear has interwoven a lot of the Bible teachings from Jesus, Peter, and Paul as they prove to be central to the Christian faith. So skillfully has Minear constructed the historical setting that each time Bible passages are brought in their meaning is obvious. The story actually serves to clarify the Bible and the teachings bring a thrill and challenge to the story. The human issues and problems are our own. Whether or not we are Jewish, Clement faces the problems we must face if we are to declare ourselves Christians. We feel ourselves there in the story. We know Jesus is watching as we read. Even if we have to face other life philosophies voiced by our student friends, such as Julian quoting Seneca, we must conclude in our heart that Christiany it right.

Thus, the up-to-dateness of the Christian education philosophy basic to these reading books is clearly evident. The life of the characters is the life of the reader whether he be either four or twenty years old or a parent of children four or twenty. Only as he lives can he be a Christian and it is where he is living that he is challenged. We may doubt if such admirable reading books on the themes for the next two years, The Church and The Bible, can be written as have been prepared for the first year on the life of Jesus. Nevertheless, I am sure they will be. New writers can and will take hope and do what they see has been done.

Let us turn now to the other materials of the new curriculum. Of course it must always be kept in mind that the Bible is the text. The reading books are supplemental and so too are the notebooks, activity pages, pictures, and the magazines for teachers and parents.

Pictures

We won't say much about the pictures and activity pages for the Kindergarten and Primary Departments. One wishes new sets of pictures were available based on the beautiful colored illustrations of the reading books, but as yet that has not been possible. Those provided for the Kindergarten and Primary Departments are just what we have been used to and as good as we know, but we hope they will soon be better. The small illustrations in the books will not be adequate for class and departmental use. Nevertheless, we are proud that all pictures throughout the reading books are both accurate and beautiful, having been approved by archaeological historians as correct in detail.

Activity Pages

The activity pages are indeed the most disappointing feature of the new curriculum. Here we find many items that are appropriate for the public school in a land where we believe in the separation of church and state. Unless we have something that is different from what the public school teaches, and we do have, we had just as well close our church schools.

Workbooks

In the Junior Workbook and Jr.-Hi Notebook we again come to excellent examples of the new basic philosophy. For the Junior the Workbook is divided into three parts that are to be used to help him live as a Christian. The first section is to be detached, folded into a smaller book to fit in the Bible, and used as a book for personal worship. The materials and instructions for each week are related to current church school activities, the articles and stories in the magazine Discovery and in the reading book The King Nobody Wanted. The second section of the Workbook likewise detaches and folds into a smaller book to be kept with the Bible, the reading book, and the worship book. This section is called Discoveries: Old and New. With its directions for research it helps us learn facts about things in Jesus' day. It helps us understand the Bible. We learn specifically why Jesus said and did certain things. We are directed to study about our missions and where our benevolence moneys go. The third section is different with more ideas and suggestions for things to do.

The Jr.-Hi Notebook is in two sections. The first has a page for nearly every lesson on which the pupil is expected to express himself. These materials attempt to direct and stimulate growth in Christian stature. The second section is "We learn to Worship." Again there is something for nearly every lesson. Litanies, stories, prayers, dramatizations, Scripture readings, film strips, hymns, and responses are all suggested.

Magazines

To review in detail the magazines as provided for the teachers and parents in the various departments would expand this article enormously. Therefore, we shall have to confine ourselves to rather general comments. The plan of having such magazines is in keeping with the basic philosophy. Every avenue to a person's life that can be used for Christian education should be used. In this literature for the parents and teachers, there are some general articles with suggestions for the home and church school as far as respects children of the departmental age concerned.

In the first quarter's magazines the whole of the new curriculum is introduced to some extent. Parents and teachers are invited by Miss Dorothy B. Fritz to make the magazines theirs and Dr. James D. Smart, Editor-in-Chief, tells of the new curriculum as a new beginning centered in Christ.

In talking with those who have already worked in laboratory and testing schools with lesson plans incorporated in the magazines, a common criticism has dealt with the difficulty of finding and refinding specific items in each lesson. This is the case in the Junior magazine more so than in any of the others. Our old quarterlies have followed Sunday after Sunday a uniform order. Here, in the magazines the class plan is not labeled and outlined in a number of departments so that one can glance for it and be ready to follow it. Extra projects and activities are mentioned and one is referred from one page to another and at times even to a different book until one's own plan for the church school period emerges. Of course there is the advantage that this tends to familiarize the teachers (and parents too) with the whole unit under study. Yes, undoubtedly with the new materials it will take much more preparation for the teacher. We are looking at a larger subject. We are working with Life. The materials can all be fitted together to make their impact on the pupil, the teacher, the parents, the home, and the church school—and from there on to the neighborhood, community, nation, and world.

In connection with the material for each week's lesson for the teachers there is a section addressed to the parents. Parents are kept informed as to the work and activities of the children. The parents are directed in their reading. Experiences for the family are proposed —the parts for parents and children being noted. Special coming events are planned for. The superintendent is instructed for his work and plans for worship included. However, at times the worship suggestions seem to have very little connection with the subject at hand and sometimes seem beyond the age level for which they have been planned.

Minor Criticisms

Of course specific criticisms can be written of any material. On page 44 of the first issue of the Junior magazine, Discovery, the use of a film strip, "Bobby and Jane's Discovery" is suggested with no reference to its content. Also, in this same issue no source is given for some of the films listed on page 10. At times extraneous things seem to be dragged in—for example: the fact that Don and Polly's older brother is a scout in Thine Is the Glory; the fact

Advent

Advent turns our thoughts to the great prophets of Israel. It is commonplace to depict these men as rebels against the social injustice of their day, and as radicals in their own national historical context. It is not so often that we remember that they were also rebels within their Church. They represent rebellion against the priestly caste in their Church. They are part of a great stream, constantly renewed in the life of the Church, that ever and again reminds the Church of the need to balance its embodied organization with a deep inward and personal experience of faith. In a very true sense, these ancients were forerunners of the Reformation. For that too was not merely a protest against the too priestly religion of Rome, but a positive presentation again in history of the prophetic viewpoint.

In the Church and in the individual, this tug between the priestly conception and the prophetic one goes on. It ought to continue, for both are parts of a whole and a holy religious experience. It is tragic that in some Churches this has been historically resolved by acceptance almost wholly of one viewpoint and the consequent rejection of the other. The Roman Church is a "priestly" Church. Most Protestant Churches are "prophetic" ones. In our own Episcopal Church, the paradox has been kept. We are conscious of both priestly and prophetic strands in our history. But the pendulum seldom stands still. Some in our fellowship swing far to the priestly position. Typically, they minimize the importance of preaching the word of God, and stress the sacramental channels of grace. Others in our fellowship so emphasize the prophetic that they forget the value of the priestly in ministering to the spirit of man. We need to maintain both principles.

But Advent is particularly a time that stresses the prophetic note. It cries out for great preaching on vital themes. Let the clergy heed that call. Let the laity read once more thoughtfully the stirring messages of the prophets of Israel. Let us all remember that without the prophetic spirit in the Church, the flame of faith burns low.

Commercial Christmas

Once again we face the bitter weeks of the commercialized preparation for Christmas. Department store windows blossom with Santa Claus. Bedraggled impersonators of that much maligned character appear on our streets. Raucous loud-speakers blast out interminably the Christmas carols. Every inane radio program sprouts synthetic good will. Strange too, that the public schools, so cautious in other months to keep all religion out of their teaching, now proceed to have elaborate Christmas pageants. The pace grows faster and faster, until, tired out by bustle and rush, we come to Christmas Day not as to a great spiritual climax, but as almost a welcome end to the weeks of desperate, crowded living. Like so many secular promises, when all is complete, we are left without fulfillment. The world prepares for a Christmas it is never prepared to keep.

What can the Church do about this. Not very much. It is the price of the paganism all about us. But there are some things we can do within the Christian fellowship. We can stress Advent with its themes of preparation and judgment. We can make of this first Church season a time of quiet and refreshment in the Church, so that its peace contrasts with this madness that grips the world outside. We can plan to use the wealth of new Christmas carols in our 1940 Hymnal to escape the banality of ones spoiled by commercial repetition. We can try to teach Christian people a sense of proportion in this mad race of Christmas gifts. We can teach our children to have a Christmas creche in the home. We can provide Christmas services and devotions to be used by the family in their home. We can pray for Christian understanding of the Feast of the Nativity of our Blessed Lord.

"Armfuls Of Orchids"!

Not without envy we read in The Constitution, famous Atlantan newspaper, of a group of Presbyterian Churches in that city that regularly give to benovolences more than they spend upon themselves. The Central Presbyterian Church of Atlanta in the past eighteen years has given to others $579,025, while spending $490,862 for its own support. Other Atlanta Presbyterian Churches are making similar records. In the past year, First Church gave away $63,049, while using for itself $57,601. North Avenue, Druid Hills, and the First Church of Decatur had similar proud records. The reporter suggests giving these Churches "a whole armful of orchids, tied with velvet ribbon."

They deserve it! Some of us wonder why Presbyterians have such generous missionary zeal and Episcopalians so little. Can tithing be part of the answer? Perhaps our Commission on Joint Approaches to Unity might inaugerate a series of practical conversations with our Presbyterian brethren looking to the conversion of the Episcopal Church in respect to missionary giving!

The Pride Of A Righteous Nation

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

Recently a popular magazine admonished those of us who persist in criticizing certain American policies that we ought to desist from such criticism, since it impairs the confidence of the nations who depend upon us. The thesis seemed to be that the more we claimed to be a paragon of virtue the more we would commend our cause to the rest of the world.

Actually such advice does not correspond to our experience in personal and intimate relations. We find no one more insufferable in our relations than the individual whose sense of personal virtue puts every one else in the wrong. On the other hand the "gracious" individuals to whom we turn in times of crisis are always humble spirits, who have some knowledge of the similarity between our weakness and their own.

In international relations experience teaches the same lesson. There is a very general respect for America in the whole democratic world. We have been found more resolute and less vacillating than the world expected of us. The European Recovery program proved us capable of a wiser and more foresighted statesmanship than the world had imagined.

But our friends still have misgivings about us. The Asiatic world regards our racial prejudices as typical of the pride of the white race, which they abhor and resent. We are furthermore much too wealthy to inspire the confidence of a poor continent.

The poverty-stricken Europeans have something of the same reaction. They suspect moreover that our particular brand of democracy is too libertarian to serve their purposes; and that it has this color because the wealth of our nation makes it less necessary for us to bring economic life under control for the good of society.

The respect in which we are held is therefore not unqualified. We do not increase it by pretending to a more perfect virtue than we have actually achieved. It is interesting, for instance, how quickly Europeans, who are grateful for the Marshall Plan, react critically to the American pretension that the Plan is motivated by pure generosity.

They know very well that motives of self-interest are mixed with our generosity; and they find it easier to be grateful for our virtue, if we are modest enough to admit that our virtue is not unmixed.

A special temptation to self-righteousness comes from the fact that we have been champions of freedom against tyranny twice in one generation. The evils of both of these forms of tyranny are so obvious that it is rather easy to appear virtuous by comparison.

The speeches of our public men, who extol the virtues of democracy in comparison with totalitarianism, are becoming more boring. Of course democracy is better than tyranny. Yet it may not be as good as it ought to be; and this comparison prevents it from realizing its highest potentialities.

A democracy which degenerates into mere anti-Communism may, in fact, lose most if its democratic virtues.

THE NEW CURRICULUM

that a pretty girl has "yellow curls" and a straight black haired girl is "not pretty at all" as in Growing Pains. Better continuity could exist between the stories in A Star Shone even for Kindergarten children. Primaries will look at the picture of Grandfather Tobin in vain for "a large, flat package that was lying beside him" and that he gave to Doris on her birthday in Growing Pains.

Not all of the plans of the new curriculum can be followed at one time, but most are useable. There is more memory work than teachers can handle in even an extended school, but this provides another area where the help of the parents can be sought. Missions are presented throughout the lessons even as based on the teachings of Jesus rather than occasionally having a lesson or unit of lessons devoted entirely to such a subject. Fragmentariness still exists in the life of Christ even as it does in our Gospel records. Of course, there is the attempt to make one whole story out of His life in the Junior, Junior High, and Senior-Young People's reading books and this is a help.

Evaluation

The whole approach of the new curriculum cannot be called conservative or liberal. Particularly in the reading books, situations in which the Bible teachings could have been given are created and then the Bible statements allowed to stand for themselves—not always in the exact words of the Bible, but very nearly so. Of course there are exceptions: the reference Jesus made to the good shepherd searching for one lost sheep is transferred into an actual experience of the disciples in Men Called Him Master when in a storm they are crowded into a shed where a shepherd is sheltering his sheep until he discovers one is missing and goes to search for it. Jesus then uses the experience in his teaching. The curriculum is only as liberal or as conservative as you believe the Bible to be and as the individual teacher will make it.

All in all, we have a new curriculum based on today's best Christian education philosophy. We need to remember we are not teaching a curriculum, but Christ to the child.

HOW TO START A PAROCHIAL SCHOOL

the school each morning and at 11:00 o'clock all our children paused for a bottle of milk. Parents paid extra for the milk. The teachers and the headmistress met frequently with the parents, fathers as well as mothers, to discuss their children and their childrens' problems. In the spring the headmistress conducted a series of weekly meetings for all the mothers. We closed the first year with all bills paid and $125.00 in the treasury.

Having made a favorable impression on the city in our first year, we reaped a rich reward and began our second year with 101 paying pupils. The attendance had more than doubled. Our present facilities are now strained to the utmost, and in two grades we have had to decline further registrations because of lack of space. Next year we will have to leave our cramped quarters and either rent a large house or build a school. We propose to add a new grade each year and then go on to a junior high school.

The starting of a school is a formidable project, but if a capable headmistress can be secured; if the parish house can be utilized; if as much as $3,000.00 can be raised for initial expenses; if five or more inspired people will accept membership on the Board of Trustees; if none but gifted and sympathetic teachers are employed, and at good salaries—a parochial school or one or more grades can be started in the average parish and its success reasonably assured.

MAN BEWILDERED

The thunder rolled, and the rains came,
And 'twixt dark and dark
The lightening flared its course.
And, cowering 'gainst the rough stone wall of his cave
Was Man—his face blanched white,
Eyes open'd in wondrous fright,
With body trembling—fragile, lost
In the sea of power pounding round about.

BELIEF IN GOD

And then, as the wild night began to roll and tumble away
Far off, into the distance away and unknown, and away—
Man thought, and the more he thought,
The more did his mind grow and flower.
And the years rolled by—
Years upon years—
And 'twas then that he said to himself—
I believe.
I believe in a Maker, creator of all,
Who has formed my hills,
My world, my stars—and me
With lofty mind and genius plan
And as I try to understand
I feel His presence, close at hand
And soothed I come to be,
And happy in proximity to Him that I call God.

WHAT GOD IS LIKE

The Comforter, the Father,
The Shepherd and the Guide—
God of all before and after,
God of now—today and now.
And God of gods my maker is—
Of Truth and Beauty, Knowledge, Love,
Of worlds and lives, of time and space.
And next to Him I know my place—
I follow simply, awed—yet loving,
Active, joyous in His path.

THE SON OF GOD

But on the road of God I falter,
Stumble, wonder, turn about.
I lose my will, my power, my faith.
And turning backward from my God
I fall, and though I try again, I fail
And seeing this, God sent
His son, to raise me up
To help me on, to teach me,
Show me His own way
That I might follow day by day.
God's son was Jesus Saviour called.
He suffered death that I might Live forever with my God.

THE SPIRIT OF GOD

The Saviour gave to me God's grace,
I needed but to see His face
To find it there, and know
The spirit of our Father.

MAN WITH FAITH

I feel as though, from what I've thought
I've grown, for now 'tis scarce
I heed the bellow of
The thunderstorm, though once it was
That its dread mystery
Haunted, crazed, and struck me dumb.
And yet for all my cool oblivion now,
I know but little more, and it could be Even less than I did once. Primeval Man
I was, and was I not closer then
To Him who set me here afresh?
From whence came I then and what did I know?
I know now, now. Yet still I strive
Along the way the God I've found
Has shown me, with His son
And by my faith which is their Holy Spirit,
My faith lives on, I like to think
I've tilled at least one tiny
Corner of the field, and
Have sown seeds and watched them sprout and grow.
And thus I hope
To see it cultivated, all and all—
The span of God's great plan
For me and every man
To freely share and sharing cherish
In a bond of fellowship with our God forever.

EPILOGUE

The Touch of the Maker
The pebbles on a dusty yellow road
That winds its way through meadows green with spring,
The lazy butterfly, the common toad
Who has no care for what the day may bring.
A song, a jest, a swallow on the wing,
The ticking of a clock, the rain, a tree
Whose bended bough doth bear a children's swing,
A friendly hearth, the smell of sand and sea,
The gentle kiss of breezes warm and free,
Amens, familiar footsteps, fireflies,
Imagination, fancy, mirth and glee,
The smiling lines that crinkle 'round old eyes—
All these are mine created for my love,
And I give thanks for them to Him above.

CL.

The Advent Season. Just as the great festival of Easter is preceded by the fast of Lent, so the Advent fast leads up to the festival of Christmas, but in this case neither the festival nor the fast is of as ancient practice as in the Lenten-Easter season.

As we shall see in the consideration of Christmas it has not nearly the antiquity of Easter in the Christian Calendar, consequently the fixing of the preceding fast was more arbitrary, and a matter of church administration.

The first mention of this season is not found until the sixth century. Then it was fixed to correspond with Lent, and to run for forty days, beginning with St. Martin's Day, which is the eleventh of November, and this is still the practice in the eastern church, although now for several hundred years the fasting period in the Anglican, Lutheran and Roman Catholic Churches has begun with the first Sunday in Advent, which is considered the New Year's Day of the Church Year.

The season is not kept so rigourously in the Protestant branches of the Church as it is in the Roman Church, and is observed more as an opportunity for emphasizing and considering the second coming of Christ in leading up to the celebration of His first coming.

In ancient times there were interesting customs associated with this season, and some of them still prevail. In Normandy, for instance, children under twelve years old are employed to run through the fields with lighted torches setting fire to bundles of straw, and thus it is believed driving out such vermin as are likely to damage the crops, so purifying the fields as we should prepare ourselves for the second coming of Christ. Also in the Italian cities bagpipe players go through the streets playing before the shrines to the Holy Mother in the last days of Advent; because there is an old, but probably unfounded, tradition that the shepherds played on their pipes when they went to the manger on the first Christmas Eve, after hearing the angelic choir in the fields.

"CHURCH AND HOME IN A DISORDERED WORLD"

Theme of National Conference of Federal Council

Cincinnati, O.—A national conference on home and church, under interdenominational auspices, to study the educational and spiritual foundations for marriage and the family and other problems was held at Cincinnati, Nov. 29-30.

More than 250 church leaders from all sections of the United States attended the conference which preceded the opening of the biennial meeting of the Federal Council of Churches on Dec. 1.

"The Church and Home in a Disordered World" is the theme of the National Conference on Home and Church, which is held under the auspices of the Intercouncil Committee on Christian Family Life.

The chairman of the committee is Dr. Leland Foster Wood, secretary of the Commission on Marriage and the Home, the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. The purpose of the conference, which follows up the National Conference on Family Life held last May in Washington, was outlined by Dr. Wood.

"It will study basic and continuing problems such as the educational and spiritual significance of the family; ways of using the resources of family life for more effective Christian training, sounder educational and spiritual foundations for marriage and family life, the place of the church and its leaders in the movement for counseling in family relationships and major factors of program and strategy in building family life through the churches."

BISHOP HARRIS VISITOR TO SCHOOL

Sewanee, Tenn.—"The Task of Christianity is not merely to transform the isolated man, but to transform also the society in which he must live," stated the Rt. Rev. Bravid Washington Harris, missionary bishop to Liberia and outstanding visitor on Nov. 2 to the assembled students and faculty of the School of Theology. He further pointed to the ineffectiveness of money in relieving the world situation and asserted, "It is absurd to think that we can stop communism, which is a philosophy of life, with money alone."

On a vacation leave in this country since September 1, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Harris will have completed a travel mission for the National Council before he returns to Liberia by Christmas. He visited the University of the South on a trip to St. Andrew's School, several miles from the University domain. Bishop of Liberia since 1945, he holds a B. D. degree from Bishop Payne Divinity School and a D. D. degree from Virginia Theological School. Prior to his consecration, he was Archdeacon for colored work in the Diocese of Southern Virginia.

In outlining the task ahead for the Christian Church, Bishop Harris pointed out that in such places as China, India, Africa, and South America conditions are optimum for making them seedbeds of communism, although in North America this was not true because of our high standard of living. "But", he said, "we are up against the rapid spread of communism in all parts of the world, and the major responsibility rests with us of this country to fight it not with money, but to implement the communistic philosophy with the Christian philosophy of life—and that on an international scale. If the church can train the leadership of the country, then it will have a lot to say about what kind of country it will be. Our job in the church is not only to save men's souls, but to save the whole man."

1,417 FAMILIES REACHED BY "CHURCH SCHOOL BY MAIL"

Billings, Mont.—"The Church School by Mail" was the subject of a conference held here under sponsorship of the Sixth Province Department of Christian Education.

From the Mountain Mission By Mail, developed by Mrs. Amy Little in New Hampshire, through southern, midwestern and western states, the plan has met with marked success. Long distances make regular church attendance impossible for many isolated families, just as does lack of clergy. The conference agreed that in spite of these difficulties, receiving regular lessons, special cards, Christmas and birthday remembrances, with occasional visits from the nearest clergyman, the archdeacon, the bishop and the director of the Church School by Mail keeps these families within the Church, no matter how isolated they may be.

Referred to as "perhaps one of the most successful of these schools" was the one in Colorado where Mrs. Sallie Boyd has an enrollment of 1,417 families and 635 children this year. The Rev. A. M. Lukens has been appointed rural dean for "The Bishop's Scattered Congregation." Children are prepared for baptism and confirmation by instruction received through the mail, and special services are held for them.

In addition to instructions for children, other techniques have been developed. In South Carolina a Church School Teachers' Institute by Mail reaches 100 or more teachers monthly. An Altar Guild in that diocese sends study material regularly to 150 girls. In Massachusetts the well known "Home Prayers," developed by the Rev. Allen W. Clark, has extended its circulation so that it goes to all parts of the country. It is a printed bulletin containing a sermonette and a service of worship, intended for shut-ins and isolated people.

The National Council's Division of Domestic Missions has in process a booklet summarizing the various methods and course materials for the Church School by Mail.

SOMETHING TO BE DONE

Dr. Pepper Appeals to Church Members For DP's

New York, N. Y.—The Rev. Dr. Almon R. Pepper, director of the National Council's Department of Christian Social Relations, has written to the bishops, to chairmen of diocesan departments of social relations, and to social relations chairmen of diocesan branches of the Woman's Auxiliary, on the subject of resettlement of displaced persons.

It is pointed out that there is work to be done in securing locally resettlement opportunities for displaced persons; that the required blanks may be had from the national Department at 281 Fourth Ave., New York 10, N. Y.; and that blanks, when filled, are to be returned to the Department, not to Church World Service. The Department of Christian Social Relations of the National Council will sponsor the applications for admission to Church World Service.

A parish priest may act as the certifying agent for an individual opportunity (for employment and housing).

"If you know of any people in your diocese who have relatives eligible for entry under this program, they may use the blank supplied for that purpose. Priority is given to such applications."

Dr. Pepper's letter indicated that there is something to be done in this matter by every Church member, and as full information and application blanks are now distributed through the dioceses, details may be had by inquiry of any diocesan department of Christian social relations, or social relations chairman of the diocesan Woman's Auxiliary.

Dr. Pepper reported that some applications have been received already, and pointed out that there are displaced persons who are possessed of trades and skills much needed in this country. Also that there are people from agricultural areas, who need to be placed in similar areas here, where their knowledge and experience may be utilized to best advantage of themselves and their new communities.

CHURCH GROUP DECRIES OUSTER OF DOCTORS

Boston, Mass. — The Massachusetts Council of Churches, representing seven Protestant denominations and about 70 local councils, yesterday went on record as "vigorously protesting" the action of the Farren Memorial Hospital, Montague City, Mass., in dropping four doctors from its staff because they supported the so-called birth control referendum.

The Council unanimously adopted a resolution of protest at its 15th annual convention in the Second Congregational Church, West Newton. The resolution was introduced by the Rev. Dr. Gardiner M. Day, rector of Christ Church, Cambridge.

Violates Liberty

Dr. Day said the action of the Montague City Hospital "like that taken by Mercy Hospital in Springfield a year ago is in direct violation of the principle of American liberty that every citizen has the right to hold and express his political opinions without intimidation or interference."

The four doctors said by Dr. Day to have been dropped for their support of the planned parenthood referendum at the election Nov. 2 were Drs. Merritt B. Low, Milton M. Sisson, Alexander S. Nadas and Perrin Freeman.

Another resolution adopted favored increased appropriations of public money for state hospitals for mental care, supporting the program of Dr. Clifton T. Perkins, state commissioner of mental health.

The convention also adopted a resolution pledging support to President Truman's civil rights program, reaffirmed its stand of a year ago against universal military training, favored curtailment of gambling and called upon ministers and laymen of the 2,000 Protestant churches in Massachusetts to combat "the sale of certain vicious comic magazines and improper radio and motion picture programs."

RELIGIOUS CHRISTMAS CARDS GAINING IN POPULARITY

New York, N. Y.—A steadily widening post-war demand for Christmas cards with reverent themes is reported by greeting card publishers. More than 150,000,000 religious Christmas cards—the largest number ever published—will be exchanged in the U. S. during the forthcoming Holy Season, it is estimated.

REV. GIRAULT JONES ACCEPTS ELECTION

New Orleans, La.—The Rev. Girault M. Jones, rector of St. Andrew's Church, New Orleans, has announced his acceptance of election to be the Bishop of Louisiana. Bishop-elect Jones was elected bishop at the special convention of the diocese which met at Christ Church Cathedral, November 17.

CURRICULUM DEVELOPMENT PROJECT LOCATED AT SEABURY HOUSE

New York, N. Y.—The curriculum development project of the Episcopal Church has been launched in a new office at Seabury House, Greenwich, Conn. Plans for this step have been developing since early in the year when the Rev. Canon V. O. Ward, Canon Chancellor of Grace Cathedral, San Francisco, and director of Christian Education for the diocese of California was chosen to be editor-in-chief of new curriculum publications. He began work June 1. Seabury House was chosen for the base of operations because of the overcrowded conditions at the Church Missions House in New York City. The new location affords room for expansion as the project develops.

The editorial staff consists of the editor-in-chief and one associate editor, Mrs. Dora P. Chaplin and two secretaries, Miss Elizabeth Higginson and Mrs. Joseph R. Lockwood. Another full time associate editor, a priest, to be in charge of producing materials for adolescents, will be added to the staff in the near future. Later an assistant editor, a corps of part-time consultants and additional secretarial help will be employed.

By resolution at the last meeting of the National Council the curriculum development project will proceed under the direction of a new editorial board which will be responsible to the Department of Christian Education. The professional editorial staff is a creation of this board.

Years of research planning and writing are necessary before new lesson materials can be produced. Despite this fact definite steps in the execution of the mandate of the Church have been taken. A manual of instruction, outlining the lore, the faith and the practice of the Church on an adult level is in process of preparation. New plans for teacher training and for stimulating family religion are under way. Specifications for the new curriculum have been worked out. An extensive research into the religious comprehension and learning processes of children is in the process of organization. Such steps involving the goals and the philosophy of the Christian education program of the Church are crucial. They can and are being taken while the Church finds ways and means of financing the production of the new curriculum.

Communications concerning the new curriculum should be addressed to P. O. Box 928, Greenwich, Conn.

PEOPLE OF ALL COMMUNIONS INVITED

Detroit, Mich.—For the purpose of bringing the teachings of the Christian faith to bear on the every-day problems of the times, and pointing out some means whereby this faith may be made relevant and practical, a series of lectures and discussions will be held at St. Paul's Cathedral, from 5 to 6 P. M. each Sunday, beginning November 14.

The meetings will be held in the lounge in the Cathedral House, and are open to the public. Cathedral authorities state, "Any one, of whatever creed or color, is invited to attend, to learn the position of our Church on the timely questions of our day. We particularly invite people of other Communions to join in this educational program."

At the first meeting, the Rt. Rev. Richard S. Emrich, bishop of the Diocese of Michigan, will discuss "The Church's Teaching on Distinguishing the Difference between Right and Wrong." Other teachings of the Church will be taken up by Bishop Emrich at subsequent lectures.

The Rt. Rev. Russell S. Hubbard, suffragan bishop of the diocese, will lecture during the month of December on the Christian Sacraments, and the Church's teaching concerning them.

During January, the Rev. Francis O Ayers, Jr., of "Parishfield," Brighton, the new retreat and conference center in the Diocese of Michigan, will give a series of lectures on a subject to be announced later.

Other capable and interesting speakers will give lectures through Lent and Easter. It is hoped that this project may develop into a year-round discussion group.

A Masterpiece of Beauty and Color

The beautiful rose window of the Cathedral of Notre Dame, a work of infinite beauty and splendor, is perhaps the masterpiece of all art glass windows. Built in the Thirteenth Century, it stands today unsurpassed in beauty and excellence of workmanship. If a world-wide search were made for a monumental material approaching the beauty of the assembled colors of the famous Rose Window, such material would be found in

WINNSBORO BLUE GRANITE

"The Silk of the Trade"

It is found, also, that the beautiful colors of Winnsboro Blue Granite come from the various crystals it contains, which are identical in substance to many of the finest of precious stones and jewels of the order of the amethyst and moonstone. When the surface of this granite—which is a composite of these actual precious stone crystals—is highly polished, all the scintillating beauty and color of these jewels become visible.

Winnsboro Blue Granite is most lasting because it is composed of the most durable minerals known.

Like other high quality materials there are many inferior substitutes which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its durable qualities and lasting beauty.

DEATHS

REV. HUNTER LEWIS

The Rev. Hunter Lewis, vicar of St. James' Church, Mesilla Park, N. M., and pioneer missionary in the lower Rio Grande Valley, died in El Paso, Texas, on November 13 at the age of 79 after a brief illness. At the time of his death, Mr. Lewis was the senior priest in service in the district of New Mexico and Southwest Texas. The funeral service was conducted at Mesilla Park on November 17 by Bishop Stoney, assisted by the Rev. Malcolm N. Twiss of St. Alban's Church, El Paso.

Surviving are one son, Hunter W. Lewis, and five daughters.

Mr. Lewis was born in Powhatan County, Va., in 1869, the son of Henry Howell Lewis and Sarah Robinson (Clegg). He attended the Episcopal High School and the Virginia Theological Seminary. He was a tutor and taught school until his ordination in 1904, when his first charge was the Church of the Holy Communion, Yoakum, Texas. In 1905 he accepted charge of St. James' Church, Mesilla Park, N. M., and a mission field at times covering over 3,000 square miles and a total of eighteen congregations organized or served by him. Affectionately known as "Preacher" to thousands in the area which he served for 43 years, he was the last of the circuit-riding parsons in that area, traveling by public conveyance or hitch-hiking to cover his enormous field and knitting caps for babies be baptized. In 1941 he officially retired, but continued to give oversight at Mesilla Park and nearby stations until a few weeks before his death. He was student pastor to several generations at the New Mexico A. & M. College, and baptized scores of the children and grandchildren of former students there.

It is suggested that articles be wrapped separately before placing them in the box, as it adds much to the pleasure of opening them, also that the box itself be wrapped in Christmas paper and securely fastened with ribbon or Christmas seals. Please avoid sticky candy or perishable fruits. On the outside of the box please attach a card with a list of the articles in your Christmas package.

Chose about twelve of the items listed below:

Playing cards, billfold, cigarettes or pipe and tobacco, fountain pen, soapbox and soap, gloves, notebook and calendar, belt or suspender, candy, hunting knife, key ring, checkers, book, comb, shoebrush and paste, clothesbrush, handkerchiefs, metal mirror, flashlight and batteries, automatic lighter, garters, package notepaper and envelopes, postcards, nuts, harmonica, pocket knife, ocarina.

If you are unable to fill a box personally, a check or money order for $3.00 will pay for having a box filled and wrapped in your name.

Note: If the donor desires a word of thanks from the seaman receiving the Christmas box, a self-addressed postcard may be enclosed. This is especially suggested where children are filling the boxes.

Detach and return to Seamen's Church Institute of New York, 25 South Street, New York 4, N. Y.

Are you helping the

Outreach

of your Episcopal radio program?

Of course you are listening every week to GREAT SCENES FROM GREAT PLAYS, The Episcopal Radio Program, but what are you doing to interest your non-Episcopal friends in the program? Have you held a "listening party" in your home? Do you talk about the program with your business associates? Have you sat down with your personal address book and written to at least ten friends to listen?

There are 70 million Americans, approximately one-half of our total population, who have no Church home. According to the Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, Presiding Bishop, it is these 70 million we want to reach and offer them the friendship and spiritual help our Church can give.

Remember, it is your privilege to keep this program on the air. You can do it without any financial burden, merely by subscribing an additional 3% to the Every Member Canvass pledge. Thus you can give tangible help to the Outreach of your Episcopal radio program.

COMPELLED TO ANSWER

Sir: In every medical college a human brain is taken from a skull and examined. A place in the front less than a cubic inch in size is seen to be the place where all afferent nerves meet, and from which all efferent nerves go out, and also where all thinking is done. Our five senses deliver their reports to this place by means of the nerve vibrations of these afferent nerves. By means of nerve vibrations of the efferent nerves orders are sent to the muscles, etc. What the orders shall be is determined by vibrating nerves that are seated in that place in the brain.

There are 5 billion cells in that little place in the brain. We are born with these cells and die possessing those very cells. Other cells of our bodies live and die at intervals but not these cells. Now, who or what interprets the vibrations and does the thinking? It is Sciene that tells us all but that, and must admit that the interpreter belongs to the spiritual world of which it has heard time and again, for Neandertal man and Homo Sapiens believed in a world of spirits, the savages of islands and continents worshipped "The Great Spirit," the ancient civilized peoples built temples in honor of their gods, and the thinker in everybody's head had as one of its chief faculties—aspiration that looked ever to the heavens.

Science, compelled to answer, does so by confirming the existence of two worlds—the material and the spiritual, and it may suggest that the unchanging cells are the foundation of our recognition of individuality.

CAN NOT AGREE

Sir: I cannot agree with Leslie Glenn about the Church Radio Broadcasts. It has seemed to me that in such celebrated scenes the power and beauty of the original play is greatly lessened; besides all that is lost when a play which was written to be seen as well as heard, is presented on the air.

But if to some these plays really do present "God through art," it seems to me more relevant to use them to encourage the hearers to go to the theater, rather than to church, where usually, sad to say, there is all too little of art, and why should these plays send anyone to the Episcopal Church?

I feel that aside from the shocking expense of the programs, a great opportunity has been lost. When I first heard of them I hoped that our rich Anglican past would be presented to the public—"Murder in the Cathedral," a drama of Glastonbury, of Iona, the Canterbury Pilgrims, Dramas of Alaska and of Haiti—there is plenty of material in the stories of our missionaries and Sir William Drake in San Francisco Bay.

Most Episcopalians have little appreciation of what we are or why. We really have reservoirs of culture in our church, but the "big business" at 281 does not seem to know this.

ARCHDEACON NEVE

Sir: The passing of Archdeacon Neve, one of the most industrious and effective missionaries this Church has ever had, awakens recollections which I hope will be of interest to at least some of those who read the Southern Churchman.

My grandfather, Colonel George W. Kinsolving of Temple Hill near Mechums River Station on the C. and O. Railroad, built the Episcopal church at Ivy chiefly with his own funds. He kept it open as a lay reader while they were without a minister and was also a vestryman at North Garden.

Although he had warm friends in the faculty of the University of Virginia, because of the skepticism characterizing that institution, he sent an only son, Ovid, by stagecoach four hundred miles over the mountains to Gambier, Ohio, in order that the boy might come under the influence of the great evangelical preacher, McIlvaine, who had just been elected Bishop of Ohio. While at Kenyon College the boy was soundly converted under the preaching of Bishop McIlvaine and at once began a beautiful ministry among his fellow-students, including Rutherford B. Hayes and Guy M. Bryan. Young Kinsolving had little sympathy with the type of Puritanism which was much in evidence at that time in Virginia and Ohio. Bishop Meade never mentioned the service rendered the Church by George W. Kinsolving in his book, Old Churches and Families in Virginia. However, more descendants of George W. Kinsolving have served in the ministry of the Episcopal Church than any other layman of his period.

Mr. Neve always appreciated the start given the Episcopal Church at Ivy by Colonel Kinsolving, and frequently referred to it in letters to me. For more than twenty-five years I had the privilege of contributing to the noble work among the mountain people carried on by Archdeacon Neve. Perhaps there is nothing quite equal to it in the missionary annals of our Church in the domestic field. I count it a privilege to pay my humble tribute to this godly

O Lord Jesus Christ, who at Thy first coming didst send Thy messenger to prepare Thy way before Thee; Grant that the ministers and stewards of Thy mysteries may likewise so prepare and make ready Thy way, by turning the hearts of the disobedient to the wisdom of the just, that at Thy second coming to judge the world we may be found an acceptable people in Thy sight, who liveth and reignest with the Father and the Holy Spirit ever one God, world without end. CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

Lambeth and Church Union

By REV. C. S. MILFORD, LONDON, ENGLAND

This article is being published simultaneously by "The Record" in England, and "The Southern Churchman," in America.

There can be no doubt that in the sphere of Church Union there has been something of a reaction from the optimism which prevailed from 1920 to 1930 and was reflected in the Lambeth Conferences of those years. This is of course part of the general change of mental climate which is apparent in almost every department of life. This change was naturally reflected in the Lambeth Conference of 1948. And for that reason we should be all the more thankful that the impetus given in 1920 has borne concrete fruit in South India, and thus presented the bishops with a fait accompli. In the introduction to their report the Committee on the Unity of the Church say "there is one factor in the situation in 1948 which is wholly new, and which by its very nature has altered the entire perspective. For the first time since the great division of Christendom into Catholic and Protestant Churches an act of reunion between these two traditions has happened."

Evangelicals must certainly welcome the warmth of the statements about S. India: the very explicit encouragement to Anglicans to continue to join and to help the Church there; and the clear reaffirmations of the resolution of 1930 that no Anglican church should be established within the area of the C. S. I., in spite of the difficult situation in Nandyal.

There will of course be great and justified disappointment that the bishops could not unanimously recommend the immediate recognition of presbyters ordained in the C. S. I. Even here however there is some ground for satisfaction in the reasons given by the minority, namely that "there has not yet been time for the fruits of the union to be fully experienced and for the character of the Church of South India in its new corporate life to become apparent." This is further amplified in the section on general principles as follows: "The ministry is, in our view, an organ of Christ in His Body and can only function healthily in the Body. None of us hold that tactual succession and correct formulae of ordination can guarantee a true and effectual episcopate or presbyterate apart from the faith and corporate life in which they are set. This is a distinct change of emphasis from that of "The Apostolic Ministry," and represents a position very much more acceptable to evangelicals. As the Bishop of Derby's Committee said, there is no reason to suspect the C. S. I. of any unorthodox intentions; and if the above condition is sincerely applied then there does indeed seem to be good hope that the new presbyters and bishops may soon be fully acepted. There is in particular no reason to think that the C. S. I. will not consider very sympathetically and seriously the first two of the amendments suggested by the Derby Committee and endorsed by the bishops; namely that the statement on the Faith of the Church should be redrafted so as to make clearer the acceptance of the Historic Faith; and that the statement on the Sacraments be freed from certain ambiguities.

On certain other counts however there must be a lurking doubt whether such doctrinal changes and a satisfactory growing together of the Church will necessarily lead to recognition of its ministry by all Anglicans. For there is another difficulty which undoubtedly exists though it can only be read between the lines of the Report. If presbyters from S. India are accepted and allowed to minister in Anglican Churches, will a condition be made that they must not minister with similar freedom in the other "parent" churches? As will be suggested below, this is closely bound up with one of the most important long-term issues. But it cannot be postponed for the future only, since in a slightly different form it is a problem which is already actually arising in the case of ex-Anglicans in S. India. One bishop has already stated that a condition of their ministering in his diocese would be that they should undertake not to minister in any church of another denomination.

There is in fact an inconsistency over this matter in the Report, which was perhaps inevitable but is none the less significant. In Section IIIA of this report the Committee state "The first and dominant concern which we would record regarding all schemes for corporate union is that the resulting united Church should be such as could be in full communion with all its parent Churches." There can be no doubt whatever that this is the firm intention of all the non-Anglicans who are actually engaged in such negotiations; and the non-Anglicans in S. India would never have entered into the union if they suspected for a moment that it would in any way interrupt their fellowship with their "parent" Churches.

On the other hand, points 5 and 6 of the desiderata named by the Derby Committee and endorsed by the Lambeth Committee are as follows:

"There should be a reconsideration of the ultimate relation of the C. S. I. to other Churches not episcopally ordered."

"There should be a satisfactory clarification of the circumstances, if any, in which non-episcopally ordained ministers may continue to exercise ministry in the C. S. I. at the conclusion of the interim period."

It would seem that the bishops have said in effect "Ideally we would like to see you in relations of full fellowship both with us and with your other Parent Churches; but in practice you will have to choose between us and them." It is to be noted that these two points in the Derby Committee's suggestions do not refer, like some of the others, to changes made in the Scheme since 1930. Rather it would seem that the bishops in 1948 have been less ready than they were in 1930 to leave these difficult problems for the future to settle—partly no doubt because the union has now been actually inaugurated, and partly perhaps because there is less optimism now than then about any rapid progress towards reunion at home.

With regard to those already ordained before the union, the problem is not so obstinate. Presbyters in S. India who are not episcopally ordained are not likely to resent the decision that they will not in virtue of the union gain any privileges in the Anglican Communion which they did not possess before. And similarly ex-Anglicans in S. India should not object if they are asked when they are outside that area to refrain from receiving Communion or ministering in Methodist, Presbyterian and Congregational Churches except on special occasions. No doubt many of them will find it painful to accept such a restraint if it is asked of them; but there is an obvious difference between recognition of the Orders within the C. S. I. of presbyters not episcopally ordained, and doing so in areas where there is no immediate prospect even, of organic union.

But what of those ordained since September, 1947? For the moment it may still in theory be possible to distinguish these as ex-Anglicans, ex-Methodists, etc., according to their up-bringing. But in proportion as the Church really grows together this will become increasingly unreal; and future presbyters will be put in an impossible position if they have to chose, when they move anywhere outside S. India, to be in communion with either Anglicans or non-Anglicans but not with both. This is of course only a reflex of the fundamental differences in theological attitudes among Anglicans themselves, which is clearly faced by the bishops on p. 50 of the Report: but it is well that we should recognize that it is not only a question of "ultimate" relations, but will lead to practical problems in the fairly near future.

The Lambeth findings give another cause for anxiety about the future. The Committee on the Unity of the Church, while welcoming South India as a fait accompli, make it abundantly clear that they greatly prefer the Ceylon scheme, and hope that this will be taken as the model for the future. This is very understandable, for the Ceylon scheme is in two obvious ways much easier for Anglicans to accept. The statement on the Faith of the Church more clearly safeguards tradition. As mentioned above, it may not be difficult for S. India to come into line in this respect. But the other difference is more important. Ceylon provides for a unified episcopal ministry from the start, and thus obviates the interim period. The act by which the Ministry will be unified is deliberately not labelled supplemental ordination, but it is a sacramental act, in which the bishop of each diocese, already consecrated by three bishops from outside Ceylon, will lay his hands on the heads of all the presbyters of his diocese.

Most Anglicans would certainly welcome such a plan as the model for other union schemes; though there are some even among Anglicans who regard South India as theologically sounder, just because it involves a clearer acceptance of non-episcopal orders and a recognition that we insist on episcopacy because it is our rule of order and not because of our doctrine of grace. But what of the other negotiating bodies? Proposals for supplemental ordination were again and again considered in S. India and given up because they were unacceptable to non-Anglicans. It is true that the Ceylon method, by avoiding the term supplemental ordination, has won acceptance by the joint committees both in Ceylon and in N. India. And since the Lambeth Conference the C. S. I. has appointed a small panel of theologians to examine the whole question afresh. But there is as yet little sign that the Presbyterians will accept such a plan. The only Presbyterians in Ceylon are a small Dutch Reformed body, and they are reported to be standing aside; while one of the leading Presbyterian theologians at the "Round Table Conference" in N. India dissented from the unification proposal there. And Bishop Newbigin in his book, "The Reunion of the Church," argues very strongly in favor of the S. India method as the only right one. The Presbyterians hold a very definite theology of Orders, and insist that their ordination is real and valid and must be recognized as such.

The actual words of the Committee are: "The unification of the ministry in a form satisfactory to all the bodies concerned, at the inauguration of the union or as soon as possible thereafter, is likely to be a prerequisite to success in all future proposals designed to secure the reunion of the Churches."

The Church Times commentator noted with satisfaction that in this Lambeth Report there is no mention of "real" ministries, that the bishops had freed themselves from the influence of Headlam and Streeter, and that their theology does not "date". The debate on this matter will no doubt continue; but it must be emphasized that the issue is not between theological principle and a sentimental desire for unity, but between the two equally definite theological principles—and that those of Headlam have been widely and continuously held in the Church of England ever since the Reformation. It will be tragic if through a rigid insistence on one way of unifying the ministry South India remains an isolated and unrepeatable experiment.

In the sphere of reunion with the Free Churches at home, the Conference could not endorse the proposal made by the Archbishop of Canterbury two years ago that the other Churches should receive episcopal ordination while remaining for the present separate bodies. They hold that such a plan would not sufficiently provide for a real growing together. It is to be hoped that this will not be made a reason for doing nothing at all. The negotiations which have been carried on intermittently since 1920 have been almost exclusively concerned with matters of theology, and the task of working out an actual method of growing together remains practically untouched. It is obviously far more difficult than in a region such as S. India, where, owing to the past observance of comity, there is little overlapping between the Churches.

Little need be said by way of comment on the pronouncements regarding other Episcopal Churches. Evangelicals will be grateful for the downright statement that there are still most serious divergencies of faith and practice between us and the Church of Rome, apart from the question of the papacy. In the case of the Eastern and Orthodox Churches the Conference had for the most part to report that little fresh progress had been made, largely owing to disturbed conditions in Europe and the Middle East. But the proposal that there should be a conference every five years of bishops representing as many as possible of such Churches is a gesture to which one can only pray that there will be a generous response.

CHURCH DETERMINED TO VITALIZE RURAL WORK

New York, N. Y.—Contrasting vividly with the sum of only $600 in the budget for rural work in 1940, the proposed budget of $77,150 for 1949 offers convincing evidence of the Church's determination to vitalize its ministry to rural people.

The 1949 budget figure is entirely for field work, for staff salaries and central office expense are carried within the general budget of the Division of Domestic Missions. Of the budget, approximately 50 per cent is designated for established rural field projects and for grants to supplement local funds for developing new fields which show high potentiality of demonstrating effective rural Church extension. Included in the present established projects are the year-round field work of the National Town-Country Church Institute, Roanridge, Diocese of West Missouri, regional and provincial training centers, and demonstration fields in a considerable number of dioceses and districts which are making strategic advance into new rural communities.

Next major category of disbursements is the $21,000 which goes toward additional education of clergy, seminarians and women trainees in policies and and methods of town and country Church work. Through the National Conference on Rural Work and the twelve regional rural conferences more than 300 clergy are annually enrolled in short courses related to the Church and the rural community. Most of these short courses are made available at state colleges and universities. This budget item aims to cover from one-third to one-half of the expenses of clergy attending these courses, most of whom are in the rural field. In addition to improving methods of work, this in-service training affords opportunity for contact and fellowship with other

A Bishop's Ban

At the United Council of Church Women assembly in Milwaukee, a service of the Holy Communion was held on the last morning of the convention. One thousand women participated in the Lord's Supper. At the same hour, twenty members of the Protestant Episcopal Church went to a special communion service in a nearby Church because Bishop Ivins of the Diocese of Milwaukee expressed his opposition to the convention service. As long ago as last spring, the bishop wrote to the clergy that "pressure is already being brought to bear upon our women to participate" and that "of course, no intelligent or loyal churchwoman can participate in, nor should she be present at such a service." Nonetheless, a great majority of the delegates of the Episcopal Church joined in the convention service. They would not break the unity of their fellowship.

Such an incident places our Church in a false position. There is no canon or rubric of the Protestant Episcopal Church that forbids communicants of our Church to receive the Lord's Supper in another Christian Church if the laws of that communion permits him to do so!

When we gather fraternally as Christians to plan cooperative work, we ought to worship together too! Shall we plan and not pray? Are committees to replace the Holy Communion? Shall we work together and not worship together?

Bishop Ivin's position, of course, is that the Lord's Supper can only be celebrated by a validly and regularly ordained priest in Catholic orders. Therefore the convention service was not a true communion service. There still is no law of our Church forbidding its members to participate in a service of another Church. We do not minimize the importance and significance of the divisions between Christian Churches. We would not countenance the breaking of any law of our Church. But we do resent it when individual opinions are pronounced from Episcopal thrones as though they were the considered law of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Fairs And Bazaars

This is the annual season for fairs and bazaars. Months of crochetting, knitting and sewing come to a climax. Days of baking and cooking end at the Church. The Parish Hall is crowded with people buying what they have just given and eating food they have previously donated.

It is undoubtedly a time of good fellowship, though sometimes tempers are frayed by the pressure of work. But it is also an economic and a Christian absurdity. It leads to practices that are on the borderline of Christian ethics. There was unwittingly grim truth in the announcement of a rector to his congregation one Sunday morning. "We have tried to raise money in the usual manner for our Church. We have made an honest effort. Now we are going to hold a bazaar."

But there is an even deeper evil than incipient gambling. Parishes begin to depend upon fairs and bazaars for their financial support. The budget is balanced by the profits from the fair. The Parish Hall supports the Church. Such a situation does not mend easily. Communicants give less in the Every Member Canvass because of the cost of going to the fair. Christian stewardship cannot be taught or practiced in such an atmosphere.

Let us have times of good fellowship in our Churches. Let's have dinners and dances and parties. But let us rid the Church of this unworthy dependance upon bazaars to support the work of the Lord. A well-worn anecdote of Horace Greeley still has application today. A lady wrote to him telling of the sad financial plight of her Church. She said that they had tried having cake sales, dinners, strawberry festivals and bazaars until they were at their wit's end. Could the eminent editor offer any suggestion to them?

His answer was given in two words: "Try religion!"

The American Bible Society

Advent reminds us of the poor fashion in which our Church supports the American Bible Society. Ever and again we pass fine sounding resolutions of endorsement in General Convention. But year by year we are at the bottom of the list of Churches in financial support of this fine organization.

At the moment the task of the Society has been greatly enlarged by the destruction of war. Millions of Bibles were destroyed in many lands. To replace them has stretched the resources of the Society to the limit. Meanwhile, the work of translation, distribution, encouragement of use, and service to the blind must continue.

A letter from the Presiding Bishop to the clergy each Advent asks for a special offering to be taken in our Churches for this cause. This annual appeal has never received any wide-spread response. It never will. The clergy instinctively dislike special offerings of any kind. This one is badly timed. It comes just at the end of the Every Member Canvass, and just before the customary Christmas Offering.

The wise action would be to make an annual appropriation to the American Bible Society in the budget of the national Church. The 1949 General Convention ought to do this. The amount, even if it equals the highest amount we Episcopalians have ever given to this cause, would not increase any quota noticeably. The latest report shows we Episcopalians gave the American Bible Society $6,537 for an entire year! That's 2/10ths of one cent per Episcopalian per year. In addition, the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief gave to the emergency work of the Society, $40,-941. This is a bit more than a cent per year for each of us! Such giving would increase the quota of a Church of one hundred members exactly one dollar a year!

If we are not prepared to do this, and much more, we should withdraw as one of the constituent Churches to whom the Society looks for support. It is not right that we should use the society and not support it in some decent measure.

The New Radio Reports

A report from Mr. Robert Jordan, Director of Promotion, tells of surprising achievements by the new radio program, "Great Scenes from Great Plays," in gaining a sizeable listening audience. According to the quoted Hooper rating, the listening audience is twice as large as that of the Lutheran Hour, which has been on the air for twelve years, and is about equal to the twenty-year old Catholic Hour. The Church will rejoice that the program is building a listening audience so splendidly.

Two questions will still remain. Does the program touch the hearts of the people who listen to it for the Christian gospel? We are told that as a result of the first four broadcasts, over 35,000 enquiries were made. Yet this question cannot be answered too quickly, promising as this sounds. Much of the answer, also, will depend upon the care with which the parochial clergy follow up the people touched by the program.

The other question is that of cost. The appeal of Mr. Jordan is for 3% of the total budget of a parish. This means in most cases, a gift which may be up to 50% of the missionary giving of a Church.

Yet this ought not to deter us from supporting this program. This we ought to do and not leave the other undone. If the Church can spend a million dollars and more a year on a radio program, then it can give far more than it has in the past to Christian education, to other forms of evangelism, and to the missionary work of the Church. If Mr. Jordan can secure the contributions he is seeking, it will serve not only to carry on his fine work, but it will demonstate to the Church that we have set our sights far too low.

A Better Chance For All

By JOAN YOUNGER

Associate Editor, Ladies Home Journal

Whenever I think of tuberculosis, I think of two tubeculous young people I met in a county in the South. At first they represented a statistic to me. X-ray tests had found that two out of every one hundred high school students in their county had TB. But Sarah was a rusty-haired, freckle-faced teen-ager with a smile like a surprise present and Jack tried to keep his cowlick slicked back but couldn't. His grubby fingers showed traces of cigarettes and his deep brown eyes looked at me with such trust that they caught at my heart. When I'd talked to them a few minutes, they left, and I asked the doctor how they would now be cared for.

"Well," he said, "we give the family strict instructions to boil their plates and spoons to protect the rest of the family. We try to work naps into their schedules and arrange for a good, healthy diet. But, for any real care, well, we haven't enough hospitals, enough clinics, nor even enough doctors. Two years ago we hadn't even an X-ray machine."

He looked away from me, out of the window into the coal rich hills that walled in the county. I shuddered. This is awful, I thought. Every young person has a right to medical care if he needs it. What if these two were my children?

"What about their parents?" "What do they say?"

The doctor shrugged. He was neither a cold man, nor a defeated one; but he had lived long enough among the sick to learn patience.

"Many of these people are licked before they start," he said. "It's all very well to tell them to sterilize dishes—but they have to carry every drop of water they use from the pump. They have to build a fire every time they want to boil a drop of it. And even when they do it, they know tuberculosis is all around them, and they take it for granted."

But this is the United States of America, I thought. This isn't some uncivilized, uncaring feudal country. This is where the good of one is the good of all.

"Yes," said the doctor. "That is our ideal. That is what we are working toward. But it takes time and interest.

Things are better in that county now than they were two years ago when I was here. The people are aroused. The children have a better chance. A tuberculosis association, supported by the sale of Christmas Seals, has been formed and is working with the health department to control TB in the county. The people have become better informed about this communicable disease and how they themselves can help prevent it.

A new tax-supported hospital is going up. More facilities are available to those who are ill. But they still have a long way to go—just like the rest of us. Because if we really work at it, we can railroad TB right out of every home in this country, and give every Jack and Sarah and their parents a better chance at strength and health.

The problem, then, lies in first finding all TB cases. This can best be done by x-rays of apparently healthy people. The x-ray can find TB before the victim knows there is anything wrong with him. Treatment can then be begun and TB can be cured. Seal by Seal, we can all help cut down the threat of TB and the sorrow it causes by supporting an organized movement to control TB. We can spare our children the anguish of this disease.

The more Seals we buy and use the more x-rays can be provided for the good of everyone.

The Pride Of A Righteous Nation

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

The election of a Negro as captain of the football team at Yale University is the culmination of a whole series of similar events in the world of sports which began with the admission of Negro players in the major baseball leagues.

There have been Negro players on college football teams in the North for a long time. The election of a Negro as captain is, however, an innovation. It is the more remarkable when one considers that the football captain has a very particular place of eminence on the college campus.

Frequently extravagant claims have been made as to the significance of sports in teaching morals. The claims seemed particularly excessive when enthusiasts insisted that athletic relations between nations eased national tensions and taught interracial understanding in addition to inculcating habits of fairness.

It is not likely that games between national teams will contribute materially to the establishment of an international community. The Olympic games are valuable enough in their own right; but one ought not to expect too much of them.

But the breach in the racial barrier in American sports throws the matter into a somewhat different light. The problem in interracial relations is always to what degree it is possible to push aside group prejudices so that a person may be considered in his own right and so that it be understood that "a man's a man for a' that."

Evidently the reason why sports can contribute to this end is that athletic prowess is an easily recognizable form of excellency. The spirit of fairness which is usually called "sportsmanlike" conduct is more subtle; but it is obvious that athletic prowess alone does not suffice if it is not accompanied by this moral quality. When, however, the two forms of excellency are combined in one character a form of excellency emerges which is sufficiently vivid to be recognizable above the fog of class and race.

In New York, the Mayor's committee on racial understanding published a car ad, picturing a group of youngsters of all races playing a game of ball. The picture bore the caption: "What difference does it make that he is a Negro if he can pitch?" That is the point.

Those of us who seek, in our religious communities, to create a genuine fellowship of grace, in which men know and respect each other as persons, must humbly admit that real grace in human affairs is more frequently revealed in associations which make no claim to be communities of grace than in those which do. In that sense there may be facets of the true community of grace in the world of sports.

$1,087,181.66 NOT $1,807,181.86! !

New York, N. Y.—The Church papers have recently credited the United Thank Offering with $1,807,181.86 on hnad. Wonderful, if true—but unfortunately not true! A transposition of figures adds about $800,000.00!

The increase as of September 30 is not large enough to give us much hope of an increased Offering at the Triennial Meeting September, 1949.

OUTSTANDING THIS MONTH

APARTMENT FOR PEGGY

The warmly appealing story of a student-veteran and his eager young wife, with all the ups and downs of their early years together, "Apartment for Peggy" is one of those rare films of young married life that manage to provide good entertainment without the aid of such shopworn props as marital triangles and cocktail marathons. Our congratulations to 20th Century-Fox and Director George Seaton. They have set a pattern worthy of study by their peers.

"Apartment" is in every way a skilled and sympathetic rendering of a novel by Faith Baldwin, whose name these days guarantees a lively plot, wholesome situations and a sound approach to social problems. Simply and straightforwardly told, it spins out the kind of drama we can all applaud—real without being "realistic," tender but never maudlin, humorous but never raucous. And as timely as the predicament of that young couple around the corner!

The predicament at first belongs to Jason (William Holden), a returned veteran who is trying to find a home and economic comforts for his pretty young wife Peggy (Jeanne Crain). While overseas he caught hold of a compelling ideal which leads him, sustained by her faith and encouragement, to go back and finish his education. He believes in this ideal; he holds it high in spite of rough going and slow progress. The vicissitudes of the high cost of living and increasing responsibilities make him falter. He loses his ideal in the relentless conflict of dollars and cents versus the less tangible recompense of being a teacher.

As Jason gives up the struggle and sets himself to make money the quickest way he honestly can, Peggy feels their love and their bright dream slipping away. Even the friendship of their guardian-professor of philosophy, Dr. Barnes (Edmund Gwenn), leaves her hopeless. The professor takes it upon himself to go to Jason and persuade him to come back, only to have his own financial shortcomings thrown up to him by the disillusioned young man.

Parallel with the young couple's problems is that of the professor who has planned deliberately to end his life when a book he is writing is completed and he feels no longer useful or wanted. How his plans are changed and how all three straighten out their difficulties make an engaging piece of comedy-drama.

A young woman facing motherhood, and her ideals for her forthcoming offspring, contrasted with the old man's regrets on a life that has lost its savor, brings an honest approach to responsibilities which must be met by many young people these days. The frankness with which it is treated is healthy, clean and commendable.

The life on a university campus—any campus—is well depicted, and the visual and auditory accompaniments of technicolor and music add to the general pleasure. A, Y.

THE SNAKE PIT

In choosing such a production as "The Snake Pit" for POM honors, our reviewers feel that it should be made clear, right at the outset, what this picture is and what it is not.

First, it is not family entertainment. Indeed, many will feel it is not entertainment at all. Not funny and not flossy, it is not suited to children and young people unable to grapple with its sharp social implications. Far from being an "escape" film, "The Snake Pit" is starkly real and confronts you with a message so skillfully dramatized that it will live with you for days, maybe months.

Then why choose it? Why depart from the usual PMPC pattern of seeking films primarily suited to family enjoyment? Our answer: "Because here is a film that Christian adults need to see. It will do more to show the pitiable plight of the mentally ill than will all the arguments one could marshall. Yet it goes beyond sensational revelation; it traces causes, points the way to help patients, reveals how in some instances they may be restored to health and normalcy. It is a film that the socially conscious persons, activated by humanitarian considerations, cannot afford to miss."

Having said as much, we should also point out that 20th Century-Fox's rendition of "The Snake Pit" is cinematically superb. The producers, Anatole Litwak and Robert Bassler, have taken Mary Jane Ward's novel and treated it with respect and dignity. The story is not only highly informative but deeply moving. It gets under your skin as no mere "spectacle" could.

The story is that of Virginia (Olivia de Havilland), a young married woman whose mind snaps under the strain of emotional disturbances. Taken to a state hospital for the mentally ill, she receives sympathetic care by a skilled psychiatrist, played with admirable poise and understanding by Leo Genn. In flashback we see phases of her life which explain her aberrations. And in the other patients who thickly surround her we get a realistic view of life in such an institution.

Every characterization is well-nigh perfect. Mark Stevens is good as the husband tragically faced with the problem of a mentally ill bride, and so is Celeste Holm, a kind-hearted fellow-patient on the way to recovery. But it is Miss de Havilland, who portrayal of Virginia, who deminates the picture She is Virginia, with all the pathos, distress and despair the young woman endures. A greater compliment we cannot give.

GREAT MUSIC TO BE ON AIR, DEC. 24

New York, N. Y.—Departing from its regular pattern, Great Scenes from Great Plays will offer a program of great Christmas music on Friday, December 24, with Metropolitan artists Gladys Swarthout and Lawrence Tibbett as featured singers. The program will be on the air at the usual time, 8 P. M. Eastern Standard Time, and listeners are asked to "see your local newspapers for hour in your own time zone."

Nathan Kroll, who composes, arranges and conducts the music on the program regularly, will lead an augmented orchestra, and a chorus of sixteen carefully chosen voices.

The program opens with orchestra and chorus in "O Come All Ye Faithful," then the Bach chorale, "Sleepers! Awake!"

Miss Swarthout will sing a carol written especially for her by John Jacob Niles,—"The Silent Stars." This will be the first time the song has been on the air.

A series of international Christmas carols follows, the selections being drawn from the Ukraine, Switzerland, England and France.

Mr. Tibbett sings the glorious "Cantique de Noel" (in English) by Adolph Adam, and the orchestra renders the Corelli "Christmas Concerto."

Presiding Bishop Henry Knox Sherrill will read the Nativity Story from the Gospel according to St. Luke, and the program closes with the beloved carols, "Hark! The Herald Angels Sing," "O Little Town of Bethlehem," and "Silent Night, Holy Night."

The Department of Promotion has announced that Great Scenes from Great Plays, in its first month, received a "Radio Pulse" rating in the New York area of 6.3, double that of any other religious program. For example, "The Greatest Story Ever Told" received a rating of 3.7; "The Catholic Hour," 3.3; "The Church of the Air," 1.2, and "The Eternal Light," 3.3.

MEDITATION

Forward Into All The World.

The last of series of five based on Forward Movement Guides.

Christian Worship, Christian Service. These two cannot be separated. "It is in the very nature of Christianity," says Archbishop Temple, "that truly to possess it inevitably leads to passing it on." Let us think first what Christ means to us. He is our Master. In His name we were baptized and He is the leader we follow. If we look into our own hearts we know that whenever we have listened to Him and chosen the path of generous service and cleanness of life and honesty of purpose we have found satisfaction. We are Christians and we owe all the blessings of life to a Saviour.

Now let us try to get His view of it. If Christ is really our Master can we stop short of asking this: What is God's purpose revealed in Christ? In His eyes the men and women and children He has made and loved are equally valuable. He cares nothing for human boundaries. Europeans and Americans are no more dear to Him than are Chinese, Hindus, and Africans. The natural instinct of a rightminded person is to share what he has received. With whom shall he share it?

The range of modern missions is too great to describe in detail. 55,000 missionaries in all the churches, a quarter of a million native workers leading to as many as 19 million Christians in all the non-Christian lands. We must add to these some three million pupils in schools and in nearly a thousand hospitals.

Even when we limit ourselves to the work of our own Episcopal Church the outlook is so wide. But when we speak in technical terms of "the evangelistic work of the church abroad" let us not think simply of distant dioceses, unknown parishes, church buildings and preachers in pulpits. Let us remember rather that it means sharing the news of God's love and man's high destiny. We seek to share a remedy not invented by us but revealed to us by God. That means plans and practical action open to every man and woman and child. It means first of all to know Him for we can not give wholeheartedly to any cause of which we are ignorant. It means that we must also take every chance to learn what our Church is doing and how it is doing it, and what the needs are and how they are being met.

When we know even in slight measure the needs we are prepared to pray. God can use our prayers as a genuine force toward the attainment of His purposes. Once we know enough to pray and care enough to pray we are ready to give. This is our concrete share in a living enterprise. He is needed everywhere. There comes a call from Him to be fellow-workers with Him in the greatest enterprise of the ages.

"My son give Me thine heart, and let thine eyes observe My ways." Prov. 23:25. "Lord, when saw we Thee an hungered, and fed Thee? or thirsty, and gave Thee drink? When saw we Thee a stranger, and took Thee in? or naked and clothed Thee? Or when saw we Thee sick, or in prison, and came unto Thee? And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me." Matt. 25:37-40.

THE PRAYER BOOK PAGE BY PAGE

CLI

Of course it will be immediately recognized that the word "Advent" is derived from the Latin verb venio, meaning come plus the prefix ad, which implies repetition or a coming again, and the season has this double significance of the first and second coming of Christ. His entrance into the world, which has already taken place, is celebrated during the Christmas Season, so we lay the principal stress on his second coming throughout the Advent season.

THE COLLECT.—This prayer is an excellent specimen of the English of the day of the first Prayer Book. It appears for the first time in 1549 in that book and was almost certainly composed by Thomas Cranmer, to whom are attributed a great many of our more modern Collects.

It contains a double petition, which like the Epistle and Gospel considers the two comings of our Saviour, one in humility, and the other to be in "Glorious majesty."

The Epistle taken from the 13th chapter of Romans, emphasizes the tremendous importance of our putting away "The works of darkness . . . now in the time of this mortal life," that we may be prepared to meet our Saviour when He "Shall come again in His glorious majesty to judge both the quick and the dead." Thus, purifying ourselves at this time is stressed so that we shall have the proper preparation for meeting Him as our judge.

The Gospel, taken from St. Matthew, the 21st chapter, beginning at the first verse, might seem to be more appropriate for Palm Sunday since it gives the account of our Saviour's triumphal entry into Jerusalem, and the spreading of Palm branches in front of Him. Its purpose, however, is to remind us that even as He entered Jerusalem once in triumph, so His second coming shall include a victory over the whole world and not be temporary as was the case on the first Palm Sunday, but that His glory shall then be both universal and permanent.

R. CARY MONTAGUE.

GOD AND HIS PEOPLE

We need to think in Advent of "God and His People" as we prepare for Christmas. This title I like. It is the name of a course used in Church School.

As we prepare and plan our Christmas pageant let us not fail to think in terms of God and His People. How can we make our Pageant—the beautiful story—take on a real warm personal message for everyone present?

Here we have God's greatest gift to His people brought to our mind through drama. We visualize it, we hear about it through carols, and we listen to it read from the Scriptures.

But again is it about God and His People? Too often we think in terms of God's children around the world. This is important and truly wonderful but this is easier to look at. They are His people. It is a beautiful sight to see the young maids and men dressed in costumes of many lands around the Manger. But let us not stop there this year. We need to bring it down to our own personal life even more.

This phase of life is very important for each one of us really to feel and believe. To God—each one of us is "His people." Have you thought how you can add this idea to the group around the Manger Scene . . . people of every walk of life?

Why not have a procession of working men and women and boys and girls come before the Manger Scene with the others? A plumber with his tools, a housewife with her symbols and the boys and girls with their books and games. These are God's people. Their work of every day should be done in God's name. Have we taught this and have we made people to realize this enough? Many people do not realize that our talents given to us by God must be returned to Him, if we are one of His people.

This is teaching Christian vocation which we all need. It is good, also, for us to have the pageant end on a very personal note. It is one thing that we

ST. TIMOTHY'S REALIZES ITS GOAL

Herndon, Va.—On Sunday, Nov. 28, at three-thirty in the afternoon, the Rt. Rev. F. D. Goodwin, Bishop of Virginia, visited St. Timothy's Church. After a service of Evening Prayer there were two children baptized. Following this the Bishop and rector led a processional of the choir and congregation to the newly completed Parish House, where the Bishop conducted a service of dedication. A tea was served by the ladies of the church following this service.

The Parish House is a completely new building, one story, attached to the church by a connecting room and side porch. In the house is one large room, 30x60, in which there are folding divisions to make four classrooms, and one assembly room. For social purposes this room can be thrown open as one large room. Besides this there is a fully equipped kitchen, storeroom, a completely enclosed nursery classroom and toilets. There is also a partial basement under the building for additional storage. The building is heated by gas and the main room is lighted by flourescent lights. There is also a fireplace in the main room, making this area ideal for small social purposes. Friends and members of the church have given candlesticks and vases for the Church School altar, and six dozen folding chairs for the parish house. The men of the church have built tables to be used for suppers and bazaars. The paln now is to start renovating the church. The Rev. L. W. Bell is the present rector.

YOUNG PEOPLE PROMOTE PEURTO RICAN EVENING

Bethlehem, Pa.—When young people of the Episcopal churches of the Lehigh Valley set out to raise money to further youth work in Puerto Rico, they went Puerto Rican all out.

Jack Williams, president of the Youth Council, and the Rev. Dean T. Stevenson, Advisor for Youth, were in charge of plans and operation.

Women of Trinity Church, Bethlehem, prepared a dinner, Puerto Rican style, and displayed in the dining room articles made in Puerto Rico.

Speakers at the meeting after dinner were members of the faculty of Lehigh University, all of them natives of Puerto Rico who are now serving in the Spanish Department of the University. A social evening followed, presenting Puerto Rican games and dances. Guests of the party were six young men, Puerto Ricans, who are visiting in this country and are located at a nearby labor camp. These visitors sang native songs and did native dances.

PRESIDING BISHOP'S BOOK FOR LENT

New York, N. Y.—Things That Matter is the name of the Presiding Bishop's Book for Lent, 1949. It is a compilation of the best writings of the late Bishop Charles Henry Brent, and it will be published by Harper & Bros., on January 19, 1949.

Editor of the book is the Rev. Frederick W. Kates, rector of Christ Church, Oswego, N. Y., who is the author of a short biography published in September by the Student Christian Movement of London; A Bishop Brent Day Book, published by the Forward Movement, and numerous articles on various aspects of Bishop Brent's life and thought.

Considered one of the founding fathers of the World Council of Churches, formally organized at Amsterdam, Holland, last August, Bishop Brent is regarded by Churchmen as one of the most distinguished sons of the Episcopal Church. A parish priest in Boston, Mass., until 39 years of age, he was called in 1901 to be the first Missionary Bishop of the Philippine Islands. Following duty as Chief of Chaplains, A. E. F., during World War I, he served as Bishop of Western New York until his death in 1929.

The title of the forthcoming book for reading and study during Lent is the one chosen by Bishop Brent for his last book which was never written. It will includes a biographical sketch, the Bishop's last statement to his clergy and people, a superb statement of his final position on matters to which he had devoted his life, prayers and meditations, instructions on the life of prayer, and a section of excerpts from letters to friends in bereavement.

The price of the book will be $1.75, and $1.50 each for ten or more copies.

EPISCOPAL COMMUNITY HOUSE ESTABLISHED

The Community Chest Drive in San Antonio, Diocese of West Texas, contained a new item this year. It was the "Episcopal Community House." This is the successor of St. Mark's Community House established in 1939 when Bishop Jones was rector of that parish. The work was chiefly among Latin Americans and was supported by the "Women of St. Mark's". For several years it was possible to carry on an extensive program of social work—clinics, adult education groups, recreational activities for all ages—when more support was needed. When rumor of its probable closing spread, the neighborhood itself raised some $1,800 by entertainments of various kinds. However a decline in leadership made further changes necessary and Bishop Jones suggested that the parishes of the city undertake its support. This was accepted and it became the "Episcopal Community House".

A unique feature in the present budget is that it must raise 10.4% of its own support, the community chest allottment being 43.2% and the Episcopal church 46.4%.

New York, N. Y.—Dr. O. Frederick Nolde, prominent Lutheran churchman, has accepted the portfolio for International Affairs in the Secretariat of the World Council of Churches, it was announced today by the World Council's New York office.

Dr. Nolde will retain his post as Dean of the Graduate School of the Lutheran Seminary in Philadelphia. As Director of the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs, established jointly by the World Council of Churches and the International Missionary Council, Dr. Nolde has for the past two years worked closely with the United Nations' Human Rights Commission and Trusteeship Council on matters of religious liberty.

A native of Philadelphia, Dr. Nolde has long been active in religious education. After receiving an A. B. from Muhlenburg College, Allentown, Pa., and a Ph. D. from the University of Pennsylvania, Dr. Nolde joined the faculty of the Lutheran Theological Seminary, where he has remained ever since 1928.

Noted for his experience in the religious aspects of international affairs, Dr. Nolde was a consultant to the United States delegation at the formation of the United Nations in San Francisco in 1945, and is the author of many books on the subject, the most recent of which is "Power for Peace," published in 1946.

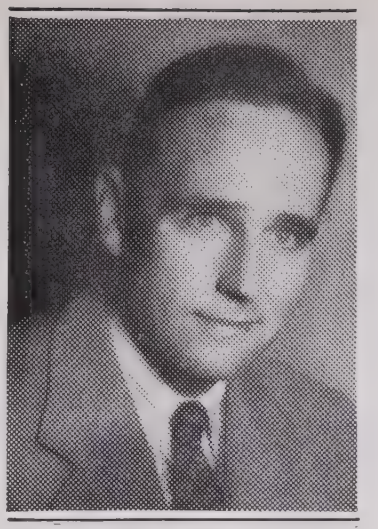
BATTLE CHARGE PUT TO AUDIENCE

Chestnut Hill, Pa.—Two hundred and fifty members of the parishes of St. Paul's and St. Martin-in-the-Fields listened on November 16 to recruiting officers tell a story that was for many of them an International emergency, namely "The State of the World's Mental Health". Mr. Arthur Bunker and Miss Isobel Leighton of the Governing Board of the International Committee for Mental Hygiene put the battle charge to the audience and told them they could win or lose it. They stressed the financial legislation and social responsibilities of citizenship in working for better facilities for the care of mental patients. The International Committee of Mental Health is an outgrowth of the Congress held in London last summer and is now the official advisory agent to Unesco. The Rev. Robert Morris, of Philadelphia's Episcopal Hospital and official observer to the Congress from National Council and Federal Council of Churches, put the challenge of nurturing family well-being as the antidote to mental breakdowns right in the lap of the Church. Dr. Arthur P. Noyes, superintendent of the Norristown State Hospital and Dr. Frederick H. Allen, newly elected president of the International Association of Child Psychiatry joined in the "experts" panel during the question period and gave authoritative answers to the many questions.

To the question "Does the higher education and emancipation of women even partially account for the disintegration of the family?" "No" said Dr. Noyes "More education and greater service to the community and world's causes in healthy minded women makes for better rather than worse mothers."



Robert D. Jordan will head interdenominational campaign for World Relief next Spring. Mr. Jordan is Promotion Director of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and developed this year the radio campaign that brought well over a million dollars for World Relief from Episcopal Church Members. This year the 23 Church groups that make up Church World Service will have a joint campaign, under Mr. Jordan's direction, using many modern techniques, looking toward raising the entire amount for all the non-Roman Churches in a single day.

D., rector of St. James' Church, Grosse Ile, will be placed, shortly after the first of the year, in charge of an entire Mission Field in the northern part of the diocese.

Mr. Forsyth, who first came to Michigan in 1922, will have the title of Canon Missioner, and will be in charge of the East Tawas field, comprising the counties of Crawford, Oscoda, Alcona and Iosco.. NEW PROJECT ASSUMED BY ST. BARNABAS GUILD

Newark, N. J.—A new missionary project is being assumed by the St. Barnabas Guild for Nurses, according to announcement made by the Rev. Dr. John G. Martin, chaplain-general of the Guild.

By vote of the Guild's Biennal Council, meeting recently in Boston on its sixty-second anniversary with some eight hundred nurses and others attending, the Guild members are sponsoring the work of a nurse in the Philippines. Through its United Benevolent Fund, the Guild will provide the salary of Laura P. Wells, R. N., now directing social service in St. Luke's Hospital, Manila.

Miss Wells, a graduate of Mt. Holyoke, 1910, and St. Luke's Hospital Training School, New York, trained Chinese nurses from 1915 to 1940 at St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Shanghai. During the war she worked in the social service department of St. Luke's, New York, and in 1947 returned to the Orient for work at St. Luke's, Manila.

MISSION AT GRACE HOUSE GROWING UP

Roanoke, Va.—Some of the most interesting and active missionary work in the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia is at "Grace House on the Mountain" in Wise County, near St. Paul, Va.

The missionary in charge is Deaconess Anne Newman, with a background of a number of years' experience in mission work, and her assistant is Miss Alice W. Mayer, unusually capable and a graduate nurse. That "On-the-mountain" part in the name of the mission is most appropriate, for it is on top of the world, with a wonderful view into three or four counties. Last spring a new dwelling was erected for the missionaries and they will be more comfortable this winter than they have been in years past.

So much for the introduction to this story:

In many places where the Church is engaged in social work, religious education and similar activities, there is a tendency for the mission to be, among other things, an everlasting Santa Claus, with the local people continuously on the receiving end.

But not so at Grace House. Deaconess Newman writes to the Bishop of the diocese:

"Yesterday, at the afternoon service, the congregation presented the Mission with a gift of two knob-tread tires and tubes for the car for winter driving in the mud and snow without chains, and a pair of much-needed fog lights for the car. We appreciated their thoughtfulness, as getting chains on frequently in winter is quite a problem, especially as driving with them on pavements after getting off the mountain causes them to break, and if they are removed at the foot of the mountain they must be put on again before starting back up to the Mission."

That shows perfectly the other side of the picture and the appreciation of the people for the work of the missionaries, expressed in the most definite and tangible way. They do things like that at Grace House.

CONVOCATION ON CHURCH IN TOWN AND COUNTRY

San Jose, Calif.—At the recent meeting of the Convocation on the Church in Town and Country held there, Dr. Paul H. Landis, dean of the College of Agriculture and head of the Department of Rural Sociology of Washington State College, pointed to the danger of the loss of social controls once exercized by the Church in rural community life, now succumbing rapidly to secularization. "The rural Church has lost its welfare function to the secularized social welfare services of civil authority. It has also lost much of its control over the family and marriage, to civil authority," Dr. Landis declared.

He blamed the widespread secularization of rural populations on large scale migration to urban areas which permit country people to "escape the constant surveillance of the pastor and church folk." Among problems that have emerged from the relaxation of social controls Dr. Landis listed problems of personal adjustment experienced by rural youth; a lowered rural birth rate; and the decline of the Church to a secondary place in the community.

Dr. Ross W. Sanderson, director of research for the Congregational Christian Church, emphasized the need for cooperative action among Church bodies for maintaining an adequate ministry in the smaller communities. "Little churches, like little nations, are strangely helpless; unless they act together, they are undone," he said.

The necessity for Christian education again to be fulfilled in the home was the plea of Dr. John B. Ketcham of the International Council of Religious Education. "Nowhere else may religion be taught so easily and with such abiding results as in the home. Parents teach religion by what they say and do and are."

Fifty clergy of the Episcopal Church participated in the Conference. The Rt. Rev. Summer Walters of San Joaquin was chairman of the Commission on the Town Church and spoke on the panel on the training for better rural work.

The Rev. John R. Pickells, chairman of the Town and Country Department of the Diocese of Chicago was the National Council's representative. The Ven. William F. Bulkley, chairman of the Rural Commission of the Eighth Province was in charge of the Episcopal sessions.

MRS. CHAPLIN JOINS STAFF OF CURRICULUM DEVELOPMENT

New York, N. Y.—Mrs. Dora P. Chaplin has accepted the position of associate editor on the professional staff in charge of Curriculum Development for the Episcopal Church. She will take up her residence in Greenwich, Conn., as soon as she can be released by the Church of the Redeemer, Chestnut Hill, Mass., where she has served as director of Christian education during the past three years.

Mrs. Chaplin and her daughters, Ann and Elizabeth, came to the United States seven years ago from England where she had achieved professional standing as a religious educator and writer. She continued her studies in this country under the direction of Dr. Adelaide Case, late profesor of Christian education at Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass. In addition to her parish work at Chestnut Hill she has been acclaimed by the larger community as a leader, lecturer and counsellor in the field of Christian education and Christian family life. She is the author of the currently popular book, Children and Religion, a Religious Book of the Month Club selection for June, 1948.

In her new position, Mrs. Chaplin will assist in the preliminary research project concerned with understanding the religious needs of children. She will enlist and supervise writers in the Children's Division, and create and edit lesson materials and guides for parents and teachers.

She will be available for a limited amount of field work including lectures and summer conferences.

Mrs. Chaplin's base of operations will be the new editorial office for curriculum development which has been opened by the National Council at Seabury House, Greenwich, Conn. The curriculum development project is directed by Canon V. O. Ward, editor-in-chief. He came to this work from Grace Cathedral, San Francisco, where he was director of Christian education for the diocese of California.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH ACTIVITIES

Wytheville, Va.—On the Feast of St. Michael and All Angels there was a Corporate Communion for the Woman's Auxiliary and a presentation of United Thank Offering. Mrs. Guy Laughon is Custodian.

In October there were two interesting events in connection with religious education. The Sunday School had a Rally Day and on the Thursday of that week, twelve teachers and substitute teachers attended the Convocational Institute held at Christ Church, Marion, and which proved very beneficial and enjoyable.

Youth Sunday was observed by the Young People's Service League with a Corporate Communion at 8:00 A. M. The president of the League, Bill Barnitz, made a short address at the 11:00 o'clock service.

The committee appointed to receive funds and pledges for the rebuilding of the organ reported at the October meeting of the vestry that they had collected in pledges about half of the amount required.

As in former years, the church was opened during the summer months on Fridays for personal prayer and devotion.

On the third Sunday in September the Rev. R. E. Withers of Farmville, Va., officiated at early communion and preached at 11 A. M. service in the absence of the rector, the Rev. D. L. Gwathmey, D. D.

INVEST IN LIBERIA, BISHOP URGES

Mission Leader Says Nation's Human, Natural Resources Offer Big Opportunity

New York, N. Y.—There is no place in the world where a limited financial commitment by the United States would pay bigger dividends than in the Republic of Liberia, the Rt. Rev. Bravid W. Harris, bishop of the Missionary District of Liberia, said on November 21 at a service at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

"The American Government has a responsibility to this republic, one on which it must not default," Bishop Harris said. "Considering the financial commitments we have in Europe, Asia, and other parts of the world in our fight to establish world peace, the small sums involved here are of limited proportions."

"Liberia is on the threshold of perhaps its greatest development, the country is rich in rubber, iron ore, gold, and other minerals as well as cocoa and timber, and has a large labor force free from communistic influences.

"Under wise leadership there is no reason why both the human and natural resources of this country cannot be developed to the mutual benefit of both investors and the Liberian people. We have an opportunity here to assist in pointing the way, in making a demonstration and charting the course for other areas in the development of a progressive and democratic country."

Bishop Harris outlined for the congregation the four-fold policy of the Episcopal church in Liberia, which includes agricultural development, an adequate health program, the extension of education facilities, and evangelistic work."

VISITING ENGLISH LECTURER VISITS BERKELEY DIVINITY

New Haven, Conn.—The Berkeley Divinity School's Chapel Hall was crowded on November 22 for the Rev. A. G. Hebert's Mary Fitch Page Lecture on "The Authority of the Bible." The Bishop of Connecticut presided and Dean Urban introduced the speaker. M r.Hebert said among other things:

"We see today a flight from authority to freedom, and still more from freedom to authority both in Church and State. Christian freedom is not merely ability to do what one wants, but the state of being liberated in Christ. As such it depends on the mighty acts of God recorded in the iBble and witnessed to by the Church. Only God has absolute authority—hence one should not expect to find detailed infallibility in the Bible, as in fundamentalism, or in the Church, as in its Catholic counterpart. Our attitude towards authority must be loyal, yet critical, alert yet reverent. If the papacy should some day be interpreted not in terms of infallibility but of faithful witness to the truth, that would be a great day for the Church. Through the Scripture God calls us to that service, even that bondage to Christ as St. Paul calls it, which is perfect freedom in Christ."

After the lecture, the School welcomed a large number of guests at tea in the new administration library and classroom building, formerly the Henry F. English house at 38 Hillhouse Avenue.

INDIAN WORK IN ARIZONA ADVANCING

Phoenix, Ariz.—An encouraging announcement is made by the Bishop of Arizona in that a full-time worker has come into residence among the Havasu Indians; this worker being Miss Letitia Viole, for many years a worker representing the Christian Social Service Department of the Diocese of Western New York among the Seneca Indians in that Diocese.

Miss Vinele will be the only person resident in the village of Supai other than the Indian families who live there. Miss Viele will reside in the Government teacher's residence until the completion of her living quarters and the arrival of the full equipment for these quartersi n the Quonset Chapel—St. Andrew's—which was flown into the canyon by helicopter last April.

The supervision of this work of the Church among the Havasu Indians is under the direction of the Rev. Robert P. Frazier. Mr. Frazier has also accepted appointment by Bishop Kinsolving of the self-uspporting Mission of the Epiphany at Flagstaff together with St. John's Mission at Williams.

It is further noted that, for the first time in several years, a full complement of U T O Workers, and in addition a secretary, are now in residence at Good Shepherd Mission, Fort Defiance. This is an advance in the promotion of Christian interest and life among "the least of these, our brethren."

CHURCH DETERMINED TO VITALIZE RURAL WORK

Church leaders and provides a boost in morale in these men, many of whom work in definite isolation from the Church as an institution.

For a few selected clergy who have demonstrated their proficiency and consecration in the rural ministry and who are qualified for study toward advanced degrees, scholarship grants are available for year-round graduate study. Thus, within clerical ranks, is developing a group of men who are not only experienced rural pastors but who also have a sound technical knowledge of rural sociology and rural community life.

Are you helping the

Outreach

of your Episcopal radio program?

Of course you are listening every week to GREAT SCENES FROM GREAT PLAYS, The Episcopal Radio Program, but what are you doing to interest your non-Episcopal friends in the program? Have you held a "listening party" in your home? Do you talk about the program with your business associates? Have you sat down with your personal address book and written to at least ten friends to listen?

There are 70 million Americans, approximately one-half of our total population, who have no Church home. According to the Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, Presiding Bishop, it is these 70 million we want to reach and offer them the friendship and spiritual help our Church can give.

Remember, it is your privilege to keep this program on the air. You can do it without any financial burden, merely by subscribing an additional 3% to the Every Member Canvass pledge. Thus you can give tangible help to the Outreach of your Episcopal radio program.

CANON BRYAN GREEN'S PREACHING SHAKES NEW YORK

Sir: The Episcopal Church in the Diocese of New York has been shaken from center to circumference by the evangelical preaching of Canon Bryan Green from England. I have been in the ministry 53 years and have never witnessed such scenes as the packed audiences in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine have witnessed this week.

It is staggering to look at that young man of God as he plunges in his strong fiery words every night. The shades of Wesley rose up with quite a touch of John the Baptist and swayed those vast crowds that packed every seat and stood.

His unconventional manner is all that could be desired by anyone anxious to see a change from the still, unmoved methods most clergymen follow. He said: "The Bishop told me to preach twenty minutes, but I am going to preach forty in order to get in what I want to say." Several amens were heard over the crowds and caused some to suffer very perceptibly in their ecclesiastical formality.

Of course I was caught up in the third heaven, where St. Paul once went and came near taking further flight as the missioner led the great audience from one point to another with a marvelous ease.

I surely was speechless when I saw vast numbers making their way down the aisles to the improvised "Inquiry Room," where he gave a fifteen-minute talk to all who came seeking really to be a true Christian. He said vestrymen and others high in the church would be welcome to this. His exhortations were much like Moody would give on a like occasion. I stood on the fringe of the people to get the reaction to such methods as we were seeing, and propounded the question to all the clergy I met and other well known people: "What is it that gives this man such power to move the masses? Why have not the clergy generally the same power?"

I answered this way: "This man has been to the Upper Room and received the infilling of the Spirit in a way that only a few have done." The Apostles were fine men and could preach sermons that would satisfy most any vestry, but which did not satisfy the Lord Jesus Christ. He told them frankly and plainly that they must tarry in the City of Jerusalem until they were endued with the power from on high and that then they would be fitted to do what He had called them to do

Oh that the Bishops would see this truth and lead the way to the Upper Room and all get down before God and receive the fullness of the Spirit to fit them to do what they were commissioned to do. Worldly minded bishops and clergy will never be able to do this. Acts 1:8; Zech. 4:6; then will follow Dan. 12:3.

START CRUSADE FOR "PERSONALIZED MISSIONS"

Sir: Your article on "Personalized Missions" is one of the most timely that I have read in a long time. Wont you start a crusade concerning it? You cannot stir a person's heart just by asking him to increase his pledge to Every Member Canvass. I have just attended a marvelous meeting of the United Council of Church Women recently held in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. It was proved to us there that only Jesus' way of love can possibly save us from destruction and I am firmly convinced that every dollar we spend on missions is the best insurance we can have for peace.

The Collect

O Lord, raise up, we pray Thee, Thy power, and come among us, and with great might succor us; that whereas, through our sins and wickedness, we are sore let and hindered in running the race that is set before us, Thy bountiful grace and mercy may speedily help and deliver us; through the satisfaction of Thy Son our Lord, to Whom, with Thee and the Holy Ghost, be honor and glory, world without end. Amen.

Roundup of the Biennial Meeting of the Federal Council of Churches

DECEMBER 1-3, 1948

In its fortieth year, 575 men and women took part in the biennial sessions of the Federal Council of Churches in Cincinnati, Ohio, December 1-3. Meeting in a hotel ballroom transformed with a liturigcal altar and a symbolic stained-glass window, sessions were presided over by Charles P. Taft, Cincinnati attorney and national civic leader, the first layman president in the Council's history.

Delegates glanced back to December 2, 1908, the first Council meeting, as the gavel used then by the first president, Methodist Bishop Eugene R. Hendrix, was presented to Mr. Taft by another Methodist bishop, Arthur J. Moore, of Atlanta. "Finally," Mr. Taft said smiling, "after two years in the chair, I may now have found some means of keeping these unruly Council members in order."

For the first time delegates were assigned to six Sections, each of which considered a special field of interest and then recommended action to the plenary session. Dr. Roswell P. Barnes, announced this "experiment or inovation" as a response to comment that delegate participation in the past was not adequate. "Whatever keeps this Council a genuinely democratic body, with each member and constituent denomination taking part, is a necessary part of our procedure." Sections dealt with Lay Participation, Ministry of the Church to Older People, United Evangelistic Advance, Church and Human Rights, Church and Juvenile Delinquency, and Aid for Displaced Persons. Each Section was asked to bring its report and recommendations on the final day of the Council meetings.

Keynoting the fortieth anniversary, Dr. Samuel McCrea Cavert, who has been general secretary since 1921, traced the dramatic changes apparent in four decades, and pointed out that the real testing of the new ecumenical movement is "in Main Street and Jonesville and Middletown. . . . It is a sheer illusion to talk of an ecumenical Church unless there is a truly ecumenical spirit in the local community where Christians of different denominations live together day by day." Dr. Cavert went on to note the increase in lay participation which has characterized the Council's history, symbolizing the Reformation doctrine of the priesthood of all believers.

POINT TO EXPANDED PROGRAM

This expansion of the Council's program was highlighted as Dr. J. Quinter Miller, associate general secretary, presented the 33 staff executives who now head up the Council's activities as part of the total personnel of 105 Council workers. Council membership, he commented, now includes 22 Protestant and 3 Eastern Orthodox bodies, with a combined communicant membership of nearly 28,000,000 American Christians. (At this session, two more denominations were added as their applications for membership were accepted: the Religious Society of Friends of Philadelphia and Vicinity with some 5,000 members and 50 meetings, and the Romanian Orthodox Church with 21,000 communicants in 42 parishes. Both were accepted by the Council without dissenting vote.)

At a great dinner in the Masonic Temple on the first day of the biennial, four ex-presidents of the Council gathered up program and insights of the first forty years and pointed forward. Memoable anthems by the Hughes High School's cappella choir set the mood as Methodist Bishop Francis J. McConnell (president, 1928-32) emphasized the courageous social action program of the Council, especially as represented by the weekly publication, "Information Service," which he said "has always kept the great human values in focus." Another ex-president (1934-6), Bishop Ivan Lee Holt of St. Louis, reviewed the effective program of evangelism which the Council has advanced since 1936.

The address of Dean Luther A. Weigle of Yale Divinity School, Council president, 1940-42, traced the trends which are leading toward formation of the National Council of Churches. The Federal Council and seven other national inter-church agencies may be included.

"Local church councils, pressure of united religious education and home missions effort, and needs among college students, all demand even greater cooperative effort, such as the National Council can provide," he declared.

One of the few women speakers, Mrs. Van Santvoord Merle-Smith, Presbyterian, U. S. A., of New York, in presenting "a church member's view" of the Council, spoke enthusiastically of the new National Council as an enlargement of the program of the Federal Council. "Being a woman," she said, "I know it is possible to change one's name without changing one's personality."

Witty, 79-year-old Dr. George W. Richards, president emeritus of Lancaster Seminary of the Evangelical and Reformed Church, spoke as one who had attended the first session of the Council in 1908, and has been a member continuously since that time. He spoke of a new day of cooperation, in which the so-called "essentials" of our forefathers have become today in many instances "parts of a passing system; and with the conscientiousness that compelled our fathers to hold on, we are compelled to let go." The result, Dr. Richards attested, is "not Protestant division, but Apostolic unity of spirit with diversity of forms."

A fourth ex-president of the Council, Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of New York, made ringing claims regarding this "Apostolic unity" as it has affected areas of life larger than the Federal Council. "The idealism behind the United Nations charter, and behind the great World Council of Churches formed this autumn at Amsterdam, is in large part traceable to the program of the Federal Council," Bishop Oxnam declared. To document this claim, he read a passage from the United Nations charter preamble framed at San Francisco, where the Council's Commission on a Just and Durable Peace was importantly represented by its chairman, Mr. John Foster Dulles, and its secretary, Dr. Walter W. Van Kirk. At the same time, he said, "I doubt we could have had the World Council of Churches without these forty years of history in the Federal Council here in America."

Further testimony to the influence of the Council came in messages from around the world. President Truman's greetings expressed appreciation of "the invaluable contribution which the churches of the Federal Council are making to the faith of our people, to social welfare, to interracial cooperation, and to international order." Word came also from church federations in Mexico, Brazil, Switzerland, Holland, Czechoslovakia, the Near East, Australia, New Zealand, and India, Pakistan-Burma. An eloquent anniversary prayer was given by Dr. William Barrow Pugh, of Philadelphia, stated clerk of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., who as a young man took part in the first Council meeting in 1908. Two other bishops—the Rt. Rev. Henry Wise Hobson, Episcopal bishop of southern Ohio, and Bishop J. A. Gregg of the African Methodist Episcopal Church participated in the program.

LAYMEN TO THE FORE

For the Council's only public mass meeting, in Taft Auditorium, giant stage letters, "1908-1948" with a huge Celtic cross at the center, provided setting for a hard-hitting program on the relation of the Church to everyday secular life. More than 1,000 attended.

Most colorful layman on the platform was Branch Rickey, who as president of the Brooklyn "Dodgers" baseball club brought last year the first Negro player into major league baseball. As Mr. Taft presented him with a testimonial for Christian sportsmanship from the Council, Mr. Rickey accepted the award with gracious informality. "Our posterity," he remarked, "may well wonder why anyone should have been thus singled out, for merely choosing a fellow-American to do a job he was qualified to do, without reference to his color." Prolonged applause confirmed the Council's action in making this unprecedented award, and the modest dignity of the Methodist layman who accepted it.

In his presidential address, Mr. Taft pounded home the recurrent theme of his two-year term: that the Church must become more relevant to every aspect of lay concern and vocation. "The layman is more than 99 per cent of the churches, but nobody would know it from the way they move ecclesiastically or talk for the newspapers. . . . Most of us are tame laymen, well broken to harness, guaranteed not to upset too much." The Church, he demanded, must place the Gospel squarely in the midst of lay job life and personal experience, and use laity more fully in church programs as well. Granting that through the message of able pastors, "many men in high places do surprisingly enough turn out to be Christians and seek God's purpose," he called for an entirely fresh appraisal of lay participation in the activity and thinking of Christianity.

Dr. Reinhold Niebuhr, professor at Union Seminary in New York, the other major speaker at the large public meeting, dealt with equal vigor with the relation of the Church to secular life. In characteristic form, he painted Christianity as the one alternative to either complacency or despair, but warned Christians against utopianism, sentimentalism, and cocksureness. "Like Jeremiah," he said we must no longer pray for the impossible 'peace of Jerusalem,' but settle for the 'peace of Babylon' in the very place of our captivity." Disagreeing with Mr. Taft, who had criticized modern Christianity as remote and "agrarian" in relation to complex modern life, Dr. Niebuhr insisted that our faith reflects all too clearly our current secular culture. He expressed the hope that American faith may derive an "eschatology," a sense of other-worldly hope, from postwar European Christianity, as a corrective for our superficiality and pride: "The more we live by hope, the less will we live by our own virtue."

Again the atmosphere of worship for the mass meeting was provided by an a cappella choir, from the Walnut Hills High School, whose rich "secular" vestments of blue and gold, added to the dramatic setting for the program. The choir, directed by Mrs. Nelle Murphy, was enthusiastically received. Moving pictures in color taken recently by Mr. Julian Bryan, for Church World Service, were shown with a running comment by Mr. Bryan. He described not only the Protestant relief efforts through Church World Service but commented favorably on Jewish and Roman Catholic relief efforts. Bishop A. R. Clippinger of Dayton, Evangelical United Brethren delegate, gave the prayer at the mass meeting. Hon. J. Leighton Stuart, Ambassador to China, who was to speak on "The Church and the Far Eastern Crisis," was detained in China by the "crisis" to which his topic referred.

NOTABLE WORSHIP SERVICES

Two noonday worship services were attended by packed crowds. One, with the background of Russian Orthodox tradition, was led by stately bearded Professor Georges Florovsky, who has recently come to the country from Paris to teach in St. Vladimir's Orthodox Seminary, New York. The other was under the quiet leadership of Professor D. Elton Trueblood of Earlham College, who led a brief service in the pattern of silent worship of the Society of Friends.

POLICY DECISIONS OF THE BIENNIAL

In response to overtures made directly to the Council, and reports of the Sections, specific decisions were recorded in business sessions. The Council was told that the plan for a new National Council of Churches had been approved by 16 member communions with an aggregate membership of over 25 million, considered without action by two denominations, and not yet considered by 6 groups with a combined membership of less than 600,000. It gave its approval to expedite plans to form the National Council and urged all member denominations to make their decision soon.

ATTACKS "SPECTATOR" ATTITUDES

As the Section of Lay Participation reported, the Council adopted its vigorous report calling for greatly enlarged lay responsibility and status in the Church. Mr. True D. Morse, a St. Louis businessman, was chairman of the Section, and the address highlighting its theme was given by Mr. Francis S. Harmon, vice-president of the Motion Picture Association of America and chairman of the Riverside board of deacons in New York. "Glorification of the professional" in every field of life today, Mr. Harmon warned, is developing a spectator attitude and short-circuiting the actual lay life of the Church.

Ministry of the Church to Older People was considered by a Section chaired by Rev. Otis R. Rice, chaplain of St. Luke's Hospital, New York. In his address outlining this field, Rev. C. E. Krumbholz, executive secretary of the Lutheran National Council's Department of Welfare, pointed out that in 1900, 6.4% of Americans were over 65, whereas now 10.5% are in that age bracket. Quoting a Chinese proverb, Dr. Krumbholz said, "Old people are worthy of reverence not because they have lived so long, but because they have lived so much!" Approval was voted of an intensified program of study and publication in this field.

The third Section, on plans for the United Evangelistic Advance, was presided over by Professor Elmer G. Homrighausen of Princeton Seminary, whose recent work on evangelism for the World Council in Geneva provided fresh background, was keynoted by Dr. Edwin T. Dahlberg, Baptist pastor in Syracuse. Calling for 1950 as a "Year of Evangelism" Dr. Dahlberg, president last year of the Northern Baptist Convention, commented that the century's "first fifty years have been tragic beyond measure, with wars, depressions, and skepticisms that have worked havoc in all the relations of men with God and with each other. The second half of the century should be a challenge to redeem our record"—inaugerated with a dynamic evangelistic campaign. This Section report was enthusiastically approved by the Council.

BACK HUMAN RIGHTS PROPOSALS

New history was made by the adoption of the Section report on the Churches and Human Rights. Professor William G. Mather of Pennsylvania State College gave the initiatory address, declaring that "Christians must decide whether men are to treat each other as if each were a nuisance to be suppressed or tolerated . . . or a son of God whom Jesus of Nazareth thought worth enough to die for." After discussions chaired by Mrs. Leslie E. Swain, president of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Missionary Society, the Section reported to the Council a statement speaking strongly for unsegregated church life, and demanding action for every practical measure guaranteeing civil rights.

For the fifth Section, on Church and Juvenile Delinquency, the chairman was Dr. Shelby Harrison, executive director of the Babe Ruth Foundation. In his address dealing with this field, Mr. George Stoll, Louisville, Ky., attorney described the program carried on by the Louisville Council of Churches' committee on institutions, whose club and legislative program has cut down materially in delinquency there. He called for Church programs based on the claim, "no action without research, no research without action" in dealing with youth problems.

Section VI, dealing with Church Responsibility for Displaced Persons and Overseas Aid, was chaired by Dr. Franklin C. Fry, president of the United Lutheran Church. Its call to action was made by Rev. Almon C. Pepper, executive vice-president of Church World Service and New York Episcopal canon. He summoned every congregation among the churches "to resettle at least one Displaced Person or family of Displaced Persons."

In addition to the Section reports, the Council received with considerable discussion a report of the Commission on the Witness of the Church in Our Time, presented by Professor Walter M. Horton of Oberlin Graduate School of Theology. Its three main chapters—Security, and Almighty God; Peace on Earth, and Christ the Reconciler; Moral Stamina, and the Holy Spirit—were summed up as the basic concerns of the Kingdom of God. In debate, there was a call that the Council define more sharply its doctrinal Christology, but by an overwhelming vote reference was made to former declarations of the Council as completely acceptable for such definition.

Climaxing the discussion of program content, and bringing to a close the inspirational sessions of the Council, was a solid address by Rt. Rev. Stephen Neill, formerly Bishop of Tinnevelly, India, who is now associate general secretary of the World Council of Churches. He declared: "I can devote myself to the service of the World Council only on the understanding that its primary concern is just this, to get the Gospel of redemption through Jesus Christ, out into all the world, to see to it that this message is proclaimed literally to every human being now living in the world." Formerly Bishop Neill said, "our ancestors were quite clear that all eternity depended on the answer demanded by the Gospel. It was literally a matter of life and death. But why should the world be concerned about all that," he asked, "when we are so little concerned about it ourselves?"

BISHOP STAMM IS PRESIDENT

Selecting its leadership for the biennium of 1948-1950, the Council took unprecedented action in the choice of a president and vice-president. At the Friday morning session the delegates elected Bishop John S. Stamm, Harrisburg, Pa., as the successor to Mr. Taft and chose a woman, Dr. Mildred McAfee Horton, president of Wellesley College and war-time head of the Waves, vice-president.

Bishop Stamm, vice-president the past two years, and senior bishop of the Evangelical United Brethren Church, is the first representative of the evangelical churches to head the 40-year-old Federal Council. Mrs. Horton, who was not able to be present, is the first woman elected to a major office in the history of the Council.

Harper Sibley, Rochester, N. Y., former president of the United States Chamber of Commerce and president of the Church World Service, was re-elected treasurer, a post he has held since 1942. Rev. W. Glenn Roberts, Hartford, Conn., secretary of the Connecticut Council of Churches, secretary since 1944, was chosen for another term.

The election was a brief ceremony. The retiring president was in the chair when the new officers were elected. The report of the nominating committee was presented by the chairman, Rt. Rev. Frank W. Sterrett, Bethlehem, Pa. Mr. Taft called for other nominations from the floor. Hearing none, he called for a vote and the response was unanimous.

Other members of the nominating committee, named by the Executive Committee two months ago, were Rev. John Alexander, Decatur, Ga.; Rev. Hugh C. Burr, Rochester, N. Y.; Rev. Gaines M. Cook, Indianapolis, Ind.; Rev. D. T. Gregory, Dayton, O.; Rev. W. H. Jernagin, Washington, D. C.; Rev. William E. Lampe, Philadelphia; President J. Earl Moreland, Ashland, Va.; Chancellor Nicholas Pidhorecky, New York; Rev. William Pugh, Philadelphia; Rev. F. Eppling, Reinartz, N. Y.; Mrs. W. W. Rockwell, N. Y.; and Rev. John S. TerLouw, Brandon, Wis.

The Business Committee headed by Dr. John M. Alexander, (Presbyterian U. S.) of Atlanta, Ga., considered several resolutions, including one calling for abolition of the House UnAmerican Activities Committee and another calling upon the American government to make no military alliance or to give economic support to the Spanish regime of Generalissimo Franco. The Committee reported its belief that "all these matters are of such consequence that they ought to be more carefully studied than is possible during the brief time available in the last session of the Cincinnati meeting." The Committee therefore recommended that they be referred to the Executive Committee for careful attention.

The plenary session defeated a motion to refer the Franco resolution to the Executive Committee. Instead it was adopted in principle and referred to the Department of International Justice and Good Will for study and report to the Executive Committee. The Department is headed by Dr. Edwin E. Aubrey, professor of religion, University of Pennsylvania and formerly president Crozer Theological Seminary.

The Department will meet in New York on January 18.

The other resolutions including the one expressing opposition to the continuance of the House UnAmerican Activities Committee were referred to the Executive Committee as recommended by the Business Committee.

MR. TAFT TURNS OVER GAVEL

In the closing hours, the new president was inaugurated. Mr. Taft, still recovering from an attack of virus pneumonia, smilingly turned over the symbol of his authority—the 40-year-old gavel—to his successor.

Bishop Stamm said he was humbled by the responsibility but had accepted "with a firm dependence upon Him whose wisdom is unfailing and Whose strength is all sufficient—the great head of the Church—Jesus Christ our Saviour and Lord."

He paid tribute to the selection of Mrs. Horton as vice-president with the statement that "this year a new approach to the total task of the Church is made in the selection of one of America's great Christian women to serve in this capacity. . . . I have every confidence that the influence and work of Mrs. Mildred McAfee Horton will add much to the work of this Council."

New Prophets in Israel

With the spotlight of public attention focussing repeatedly on events in the Holy Land, new names have been emblazoned across the marques of world affairs—Chaim Weizmann, David Ben-Gurion, Moshe Shertok and other leaders of the new state of Israel.

In the colorful imagery of popular journalism, these "amateurs" at diplomacy, who are now playing major roles in the highest councils of nations, have been variously described as modern counterparts of Washington and Jefferson, or of Moses and Joshua. Daniel A. Poling, in a commentary on Israel's President, Chaim Weizmann, said, "The man . . . is a prophet as great as the ancient ones of Israel."

What type of men call forth such extravagant comparisons?

Weizmann, for one, would rather identify himself as "a Jew from Motele and Pinsk." He often has spoken these words—with pride and a touch of defiance, for there was a place where such words were heard with scorn. Weizmann remembers it well. More than half a century has elapsed since he left his native Russia. But neither the long years as one of Britain's most honored citizens, nor the plaudits of the world of science, have erased the painful memories of his youth.

Motele, where Weizmann was born in 1874, and Pinsk, where he was educated as a boy, were in Imperial Russia's notorious Pale of Settlement. It was there that young Chaim had branded in his mind the fundamental canon of his religion—that man, fashioned in the image of God, is a creature of dignity—even if he lives in a ghetto.

The Pale of Settlement was a desolate, marsh-bordered reservation on the western rim of Russia. To this bleak land all Jews in the country were banished by Ukase of Czar Alexander III, whose ruthless campaign of religious persecution may well have been patterned on Nero's oppression of the Christians in ancient times. Those who lived within the Pale of Settlement eked out a precarious living in the few trades which they were permitted to follow. Like other Jews throughout Europe, they enshrined learning, cherished the family relationship, and lived in the light of "The Book". Through submitting to the rifle-imposed dictates of the Czar, they practiced daily and accepted in the hearts only the law of Sinai.

One night in Motele, in 1890, the Weizmann family was observing the Passover holiday, celebrating the Exodus from Egypt and praying for their eventual return to the homeland which God had given unto Abraham. A rumble of hoofbeats and a clamor at the door interrupted the service. The troops of the Czar stormed in. The menfolk of the family, including 16 year old Chaim, were stood against the wall, arms raised. They were searched, the house ransacked. Then the troops departed.

Chaim Weizmann, seething with humiliation and futile anger, recalled the words of "The Book" with new understanding: "The Lord shall set His hand again the second time to recover the remnants of His people. And He shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel and gather together the depressed of Judah from the four corners of the earth." Thus, in the Pale of Settlement, was kindled the zeal that later characterized Zionism. It developed from a desire not only to worship in peace; but for a land where Jews could live with dignity.

In the same mold were cast most of the other leaders of Israel. David Ben-Gurion, prime minister of the new nation, was born in Plonsk, in what is now Poland, long an unhappy home for Jews. Moshe Shertok, Israel's foreign minister came from a similarly oppressive environment, the Ukraine. They, too, were warmed by the fire of the sacred Torah and the wisdom of the Talmud. To such men, Zionism was a religious mission. In their devotion to what often seemed a hopeless cause, in their eloquent, relentless appeals to the conscience of mankind, they are truly reminiscent of the prophets who were their forebears.

It was not just a refuge for which the Zionists struggled. In 1906 Britain offered them a homeland in Uganda, Africa, an area of 8,000 square miles, larger than the present State of Israel. When Lord Balfour asked why the Zionists refused it, Dr. Weizmann explained that only the land of "the Book" would do for the people of "the Book". "If Moses had returned to life and heard Jews accept Uganda, he would have broken the Tablets of the Law a second time," Weizmann said. "The Jewish people never will produce the energy to build up a wasteland unless that wasteland is Palestine."

Religious influences not only motivated the reclamation of Palestine; but also served as a major force in shaping the government of Israel. Men cannot be divorced from their backgrounds, nor the acts they perform from the way of life they hold dear. This fact is borne out in our own Declaration of Independence which clearly reflects the moral convictions of the Founding Fathers. With that document they wove into the structure of Government the ethical code of their Judeo-Christian heritage. Similarly, the Declaration of Independence of the world's newest democracy, with its sensitive concern for the well-being of the people, embodies the ethical concepts of brotherhood and human dignity which the founders of Israel derived from their religion.

Israel's Declaration sets forth these aims: "The State of Israel will promote the development of the country for the benefit of all its inhabitants; will be based upon the precepts of liberty, justice, and peace taught by the Hebrew prophets; will uphold the full social and political equality of all its citizens without distinction of race, creed, or sex; will guarantee full freedom of conscience, worship, and culture; will safeguard the sanctity and inviolability of shrines and holy places of all religions; and will dedicate itself to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations."

Anyone familiar with the views of the Israeli leaders could have predicted the character of this document, for it was foreshadowed time and again in their public utterances. In 1942, Ben-Gurion said, "But it is not in vain that we struggled for many centuries to maintain our identity, that Jewishness which was molded in our ancient homeland, where our prophets bequeathed to humanity the still unrealized vision of human brotherhood and justice, love of neighbor, peace among nations."

In the light of such a background, it is not surprising that four of the members of Israel's 38-man Council of State are rabbis. Two, in fact, are on the 13-man cabinet. A fifth rabbi is a member of the Supreme Court, and at least two other members of the cabinet were educated in rabbinical colleges. Four of the political parties represented in the government advocate a national legal structure based on the Mosaic Code.

Daily life in Israel is pervaded by the same strong religious flavor. In the cities of Tel Aviv, Jerusalem, and Haifa, most stores and factories are closed on the Sabbath, and municipal transportation ceases. A typical scene is reported in a recent news dispatch from Tel Aviv, describing the celebration of the traditional holy day, Simchat Torah (Rejoicing of the Law).

"Large crowds of old and young, carrying scrolls of the Law and holiday baners, danced in Tel Aviv's main streets. Onlookers joined in the singing of religious and patriotic songs. At the height of the festivities, a throng

Are We To Be Allies With Franco Spain ?

A number of recent occurrances hint that the United States is attempting to come to an agreement that will be close to a military alliance with fascist Franco-governed Spain. Secretary of State Marshall, it has been reported, has attempted, without success, to persuade Mr. Bevin of England and M. Schuman of France, to join with the United States in urging modification of the 1946 United Nations ruling that ambassadors be withdrawn from Spain. It is also noteworthy that Chairman Gurney of the Senate Armed Forces Committee on his recent return from Europe argued that in the near future we should try to secure an outright military alliance, backed by Lend-lease, with Spain.

The military strategy of these proposals is obviously to prepare a defense bastion that centers in the Pyrenees and Spain in the event of a war with Russia. We understand that some military men in this country and more in England and France object to this plan as militarily unsound. Be that as it may, it certainly is unsound from an ideological and democratic viewpoint. Spain is avowedly a fascist state. It is ruled by a dictator who was a former Axis partner of Hitler and Mussolini. It is of deep interest to American Protestants that Spain is religiously fascist also. There is not only no freedom of religion for Protestants in Spain today, but there is outright persecution. It is strange that we hear so much of the lack of religious freedom in Yugoslavia, Poland and other communist dominated countries and so little of the same lack in Spain. Can it be that the Roman Church is the reason for this silence about Spanish persecution of Protestants? The reluctance of our American newspapers to publish the facts about Spain may be one reason why the dubious maneuvers of our government with a former Axis partner have aroused so little protest in our country.

North Texas Newspaper Series

It is always encouraging when there are signs of progressive thinking and forward looking planning in our domestic missionary districts. Too many of them have been static for too long! Under the leadership of Bishop Quarterman, the Missionary District of North Texas is exhibiting new vitality and vigor. Significantly, its giving has quadrupled in two years! A new venture in which it may well give leadership to the entire Church is the employment of professional talent to prepare a series of newspaper ads for the Church. Mats for the first set of four ads have just been issued. They aim to secure the interest of the non-Church-goer. We believe they will succeed in doing that. They are not only worded to appeal, but each ad is headed by an apt drawing and a one word "teaser" caption. Shrewdly, the bishop suggests that the ads should not be used on the Saturday "Church Page" of the newspapers, but inserted on an earlier day of the week. He suggests that they be placed on the sports page, or near the comics! There they will catch the eye of those to whom they are directed—the man or the woman who goes to no Church! Bishop Quarterman will supply the mats for these first four ads to any interested diocese or parish at a cost of forty cents a set. Let's hope that many of them are ordered and used by the Church. Such a newspaper campaign would tie in splendidly with "Great Scenes from Great Plays" on the air. Apparently North Texas' magazine "Adventure" is well named!

An Important Discovery

One of the great hopes of all biblical scholars is that somewhere a new manuscript of the Bible, or of a part of it, may be found that will be older than any we now possess. All of the Bible as we now have it has come down to us as the result of many copyings by scribes of old. Small errors in punctuation or in actual words crept into the writings in the process. Sometimes these changes give a new shade of meaning to a passage. Sometimes they make a passage almost untranslatable.

Last winter Bedouins engaged in black marker smuggling between Transjordania and Palestine hid out in a cave near the Dead Sea. Far back in the cave they discovered pottery jars containing scrolls, wrapped in linen. They were obviously old. The Bedouins turned the scrolls over to Syrian monks. They in turn brought them to the American School of Oriental Research at Jerusalem. The American scholars were astounded at what they saw when they opened the linen coverings. Here was a complete manuscript scroll of the Book of Isaiah. Here also were ancient commentaries, including one on the Book of Habbakkuk. The scrolls were dated as early Macca-bean, or second century before Christ. They are hundreds of years older than any previous manuscript of the Book of Isaiah!

If further study and investigation confirms these first judgments, this is a most important discovery. Once again, the Holy Scriptures are dramatised for us! Once again we are reminded that the Bible is ever "Good News" to those who come to its sacred pages! That's worth remembering at Christmas-time, the time of "Good News!"

THE ANGEL STANDING—Faith Alone Gives Poise. By Archibald Rutledge. Fleming H. Revell Co. Price 75 cts.

The author of the humorous "It Will Be Daybreak Soon" and Life's Extras," has this time gone to the Scriptures for his theme. From "And I saw a mighty angel standing," Revelation 10, the author develops his conviction that while man stands with one foot "on the shore" (the material necessities of life), he should keep his other foot "on the sea" (the great invisible spiritual realities of God), and that men and women of today can live like that! The author was voted by the legislature Poet Laureate of South Carolina.

SKY DETERMINES. By Ross Calvin. University of New Mexico Press.

"Sky Determines," by Ross Calvin, is a fascinating interpretation of the Southwest, its culture, its traditions and its history. One cannot read its pages without a strong desire to visit such a land and to absorb for oneself the so different beauty of its cobalt skies and soft brown stretches of uninhabited earth. Of particular interest are the descriptive chapters concerning the ancient and forgotten people of New Mexico, the march of the Spanish Conquistadores, and the life of the modern disinherited "Mexicanos." This book combines a variety of interests and yet so successfully as to retain the attention of the archeologist, the historian, and the plain everyday traveller among men. This is a different kind of non-fiction by an author who knows and loves his subject. The sharp, clean cut illustrations in the Indian motiff by Peter Hurd contribute greatly to its atmosphere.

PAUL'S EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS. By E. F. Scott. Scribners. $2.00.

This is a brief and incisive commentary on the most famous of Paul's letters by one of America's foremost Biblical scholars. This letter, says Scott, "is essentially a modern book, and only when we so read it can we apprehend its message." It is Paul's emphasis on sin and man's awareness of it, on God's forgiveness and man's inability to earn it, on man's personal responsibility to God, on God's deliverance through Christ, which must be recaptured by modern man, and this letter of Paul to the Romans will

THE DOCTRINE OF OUR REDEMPTION. By Nathaniel Micklem. Abingdon-Cokesbury. $1.50.

This book deals with the problem of how men are saved, what is called the doctrine of the "atonement" or redemption." Micklem is a sound and conservative scholar who knows how to write clearly, and this little book makes clear what we should know about this subject. There have been many different views of redemption, and the author provides a brief summary of the best ones.

THE OLD VIRGINIA GENTLEMAN. By Dr. George W. Bagby—Fifth Edition—Edited, enlarged and arranged by his daughter, Miss Ellen M. Bagby. Published by the Dietz Press, Richmond, Va., Price $3.50.

A revised and enlarged edition to "The Old Virginia Gentleman," by the late Dr. George W. Bagby, of Richmond, was issued by the Dietz Press December 1.

The volume, edited and arranged by the author's daughter, Miss Ellen M. Bagby, of Richmond, contains several sketches by Dr. Bagby that have never before appeared in book form. Twenty-nine illustrations, the majority of which are photographs of Richmond in bygone days or of personages of the past century, was also included.

Dr. Douglas Southall Freeman has written an introduction and biographical sketch of the author for the new edition, which is issued as a memorial to both Dr. and Mrs. Bagby.

A "lost" editorial written by Dr. Bagby in 1854 for the Lynchburg Daily Virginian, is one of the works of the author to be included in the new volume. Written on the topic, "Christmas," it was lost when the files of the Lynchburg paper burned. Miss Bagby herself had never seen a copy of it until she found one recently in the Jones Memorial Library in Lynchburg.

Also repeated in the new volume is the author's sketch entitled "How Rubenstein Played," which is his most widely known work.

The works of Dr. Bagby under the title "The Old Virginia Gentleman," were first published in 1884 and enjoyed a wide sale. In 1911 the book was brought out by Charles Scribner's Sons with a preface by Thomas Nelson Page. That preface is also included in the present volume.

In Mr. Page's article he says: "When the old life shall have completely passed away as all life of a particular kind must pass, the curious reader may find in George W. Bagby's pages, pictured with a sympathy, a fidelity and an art which may be found no where else; the old Virginia life precisely as it was lived before the war, in the Tidewater and Southside sections of Virginia." Mr. Page added that he thought Dr. Bagby's essay on "The Old Virginia Gentleman" was "the most charming picture of American life ever drawn."

The new volume has a total of twenty--nine essays or sketches by Dr. Bagby.

A PASTORAL TRIUMPH. By Charles F. Kemp. Macmillan. $2.25.

This is a study of the pastoral ministry of Richard Baxter in Seventeenth Century Kidderminster, England, directed primarily to clergymen. Though famous in his day as a preacher, this Anglican Puritan nevertheless stressed the vital importance of pastoral work and conducted an extensive program of counselling and instruction which reached every family in his parish. Mr. Kemp points out the lessons Baxter offers modern pastors in spite of his outdated methods and ideas. A bibliography on pastoral work is included.

THE ADULT BIBLE CLASS

By HARRIET BROWN MOORE

San Antonio, Texas

Mrs. Moore writes: "My reason for writing it is that I am now over seventy years of age and the time is coming when I can no longer teach adult Bible Classes. So I wish to make my experience available to new leaders in that field."

There seems to be a tendency in many parishes to restore or inaugurate Bible classes for adults. Much is being written about the knowledge (or ignorance) of the Bible on the part of Episcopalians. Because I have been engaged in such teaching for some fifty years, I feel that I can give some helpful hints to new leaders.

First of all, I am convinced that these classes should have a very definite beginning and ending both as to subject and as to time. Seasonal classes will appeal to many whereas that which "goes on and on" will weary them. Then a special subject will invite attendance and it, of course, has a time limit.

My experience has also shown that the "organized" class is less successful, generally, than one which has no machinery as part of its procedure. Some hesitate to become members if attendance is noticed; some will attend often if no such notice is taken.

Among the courses I have used there are four which I arranged and which have proved of interest in several different parishes. I am describing them very briefly but shall be glad to write in detail to anyone who is interested in any of them. The leader will have to do some work and will need books of reference but this will be repaid by the interest shown by the class members.

Sermons in the Book of Acts is one such course. What the apostles and others preached about will include all the addresses from that of Simon Peter on the day of Pentecost to the last address of St. Paul. Each member of the class should be given a typed sheet of the Apostles Creed (triple spaced) and as each tenet appears in sermon or address a check is recorded. At the close of the course all will be greatly interested in the comparative use of the different articles.

The Bible in our Hymns will appeal to those who have grown up with a love for the words as well as the music of this part of our worship. The authorship and the circumstances of the writing will be incidential; the lessons from the Scriptures will prove interesting. For example the Trinity Hymns will furnish beautiful passages from allusions in the verses. The vision of Isaiah, the worship picture from Revelation, among other. "Ancient of Days" is full of Bible references. Another group is the "Christian Soldier Hymns." Study will include such passages as Miriam's Song of Triumph at the Red Sea, St. Paul's description of the Christian Armor, the warring psalms and many, many others. The hymns on Holy Communion will offer inspiring passages—Our Lord's Discourse on the Bread of Life, St. Paul's account of the Institution, the Old Passover Feast, etc., etc. The making of this course will furnish joy to the leader who loves her work.

The Life of Christ through the Book of Common Prayer is a course of value to the newly confirmed but may be illuminating to some who have used the Prayer Book for many years. First there is the finding of the LIFE in regular services (sentences, antiphon, canticles, prefaces) and then the events of the Life through the Gospels beginning with the Annunciation. Often not only the second lesson can be used, but sometimes the first lesson (through prophecy and type and the Epistle—interpretation of Christ's teachings.

The Jewish Church and Ours can be a most interesting course on worship. As the first Christians were Jews it was most natural that parallels should arise. So the study of manners and customs, rites and ceremonies, feasts and fasts, vestments and buildings may be compared or contrasted with appreciation of both.

Perhaps I have overstressed original courses when so many fine books are available. However, I am sure that any leader will care much more about a source which he or she has helped to build than for one secured ready-made.

PRAYER

Dear Lord, I do not know what trials may come,
Or down what unknown paths Thy hand may lead.
I only know that in Thy gracious love
I find the strength and courage that I need.

I do not ask to see the path ahead;
But, Heavenly Father, in each darkening hour,
Grant me, I pray, the wisdom and the will
To know, through faith, Thy boundless source of power.

CLII

The Second Sunday in Advent. The Collect for this Sunday appeared first in the Prayer Book of 1549, and is almost certainly the product of the mind and pen of Archbishop Cranmer. It is based almost entirely on the Epistle taken from the 15th chapter of Romans, and practically ignores the Gospel.

Its reference to "all holy Scripture" together with the opening words of the Epistle, "Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning," have caused this Sunday to be known throughout the Protestant world as "Bible Sunday."

It is not always realized that "the things written aforetime" here mentioned by St. Paul refer entirely to the Old Testament, since at that time none of the New Testament had yet been written.

The wording of the Collect, that we may "read, mark, learn and inwardly digest them," is an emphatic figure of speech, which at least on one occasion was taken too literally. The following true story is related by a missionary to Haiti: He was visiting a sick parishioner, and because she was not able to open the front door he entered by way of the back porch. As he did so he noticed a badly mutilated Prayer Book, with most of its leaves torn out and little left but the covers. He rebuked his parishioner for treating a Prayer Book so irreverently, and she replied, "Well, you see it said in that book that I should read, mark, learn and inwardly digest it. I tried reading it and learning it and marking parts of it, but it didn't seem to make me any better, so I decided to go all the way and took out the pages and made tea out of them, and drank it. But," she added, "even that hasn't cured me."

Probably this convert was expecting too much of the Book of Common Prayer, but she certainly believed in doing her part.

It must be remembered that at this date (1549) the Bible had not been available in the English language very long, so it was quite natural that a Collect should be devoted to its beauties and benefits, especially as revealing the great hope and belief in a future life.

National Council Meeting

By GEORGE LORENZO GRAMBS

With three executive sessions punctuating its procedures and an address that can only go down as having been given on Japan by Mr. Douglas Overton of the State Department, formerly a teacher in Saint Paul's University, Tokyo, the December 8 and 9 meeting of the National Council at Seabury House can only be described as preparatory for the February meeting. Its importance, as the Presiding Bishop stated the first thing Wednesday morning, lies in the work of the departments done in preparation for February.

It was the sort of meeting for which it would be hard to write in newspaper fashion a headline. There was a tone of anxiety about the Church's program in 1949 with the probability of having to cut the budget in February in compliance with the canon if the dioceses do not support with fully-accepted quotas the forward steps that have been demanded. Adding to the strain on the budget is the evacuation of missionaries and their families from that troubled land of China. The Presiding Bishop would call attention to this now rather than go out after deficits later.

Mr. Russell E. Dill, treasurer, reported that $456,759.03 remains to be collected for 1948 in the last month, actually up to the time the books are closed on January 17. In other words, 10/12 should have come in by December 1. 98.5% of it has been received. Last year 101.9% was the record at the same time. While the difference isn't much percentage-wise, it is substantial, since the Church said it expected to pay $155,000 more this year than in 1947. Bishop R. Bland Mitchell sounded a note of encouragement by saying that he knew years when the record was not so good, and he was confident there was no cause for worry.

The whole financial matter culminated in a resolution introduced by Bishop Elwood L. Haines, and adopted by the Council:

"RESOLVED, That in view of the apparent seriousness of the budgetary outlook for 1949 in the National Council, the members of the Council undertake, wherever necessary, to encourage and stimulate, by personal approach or otherwise, in their several dioceses and provinces, the pledging in full of the diocesan quotas for 1949."

And to keep it from being, in Bishop Malcolm E. Peabody's words, "only a pious hope," members were assigned particular dioceses in their respective provinces as their personal responsibilities.

NEW MEMBERS

New members took their places in the Council as the result of provincial elections: the Rev. Meredith B. Wood from the Province of New York and New England; and the Province of the Southwest's Rev. C. Gresham Marmion, Jr. The Provinces of New England, Washington, and the Mid-West retained on the Council membership Bishops Norman B. Nash, Angus Dun, and Lewis B. Whittemore, respectively.

RESIGNATIONS

Two resignations were reported by the Secretary, Dr. C. Rankin Barnes: Dean William H. Nes as a co-opted member of the Children's Division in the Department of Christian Education; and Mr. Arthur H. Gilbert, as a veteran member of the Committee on Trust Funds.

PROMOTION

Bishop McKinstry said that the major part of this Department's report would be given in executive session.

One diocese, he learned, is increasing its giving by 10%, and two sizable parishes their giving by 20-25%.

He described three churches, into which new people came because of the Episcopal Radio Hour. The rector of the first did nothing about welcoming or getting acquainted with the visitors; the rector of the second complained because the visitors didn't make themselves known to him; and the third person welcomed the visitors in his parish Church, got their names and addresses, and started up a Confirmation class.

The Council has only two salaried field officers, so it is necessary for the Department to revert to its former practice of enlisting volunteer field associates without compensation, who will be willing to give two weeks' time per year to the work of the Department. The resolution calling for this was adopted by the Council.

Bishop McKinstry reported the appointment by the Presiding Bishop of three co-opted members, Mr. William Ramsay of Proctor-Gamble; the Rev. John E. Lodge, of Wilmington, Del.; and Mr. Virgil Simpson of E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., to serve in the Department.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

Bishop Angus Dun reported the Department's resolution calling for the appointment of Dr. Theodore Switz as a consultant in Christian Education at a salary of $2,000, which was adopted by the Council after being approved by Finance, to be paid out of the audio-visual appropriation.

In the matter of the extension of publication facilities, the Council adopted the Department's resolution that the Presiding Bishop appoint a committee to study the problems involved in the publication of the new curriculum.

YOUTH

Bishop Charles C. J. Carpenter reported that the National Youth Commission will meet January 27 to February 2 at Monteagle, Tenn., which meeting he described as having a minimum of adult interference. The first Youth Convention was held in Philadelphia at the time of the last General Convention, and a second one is planned for the next General Convention in San Francisco. Bishop Carpenter expressed the hope that the youth could be accommodated in San Francisco at a minimum expense.

DISCUSSION COURSES

The Epiphany discussion course on "Successful Marriage and the Christian Family" and the Lenten course on "The Prayer Book Speaks in our Uncertain Age" were described by Dr. Switz. One thousand sets on the former have been ordered so far, which probably means that the clergy of our 7,740 parishes and missions need some educating in the value of study groups for adults. "It is the sort of thing," Mr. E. Townsend Look said, "that should be called to the attention of our Seminaries." Bishop Peabody's opinion was that the reason clergy are inept at this sort of thing is that they have such poor examples before them in diocesan and General conventions.

DOMESTIC MISSIONS

Dr. George A. Wieland, having taken up his business with the Standing Committee, had only one resolution to report. The concerned a retiring allowance for the Rev. Henry Brownlee Smith, who is regarded by Bishop R. Bland Mitchell of Arkansas as one of the finest Christians he knows. Mr. Smith, who is now past the retiring age, but has been active up to the time he suffered a heart attack in September, had chosen to spend his entire ministry in the small and difficult fields of the home missionary areas at a minimum salary. After approval by Finance, the Council voted to augment his inadequate pension so that he will have a total retirement income of $1,500 a year, the grant being subject to revision at any time by the National Council.

Dr. Wieland was in receipt of a resolution from the Finance Committee of the Seventh Province about the spending of money in the Domestic Mission Field, with particular reference to aided dioceses. It raised the question as to what the National Council does with the Church's money. There is an assumption on the part of some people that the National Council is to save money. The opposite one is that the Council spend it. "Do we spend, or do we invest?" asked Dr. Wieland. It is his conviction that the Council is to invest money anywhere in the continental U. S. at the point of greatest opportunity and greatest need. One of the things which he thinks is not realistic in this year of 1948 is the classification: dioceses, aided dioceses, and missionary districts.

Dr. Wieland's reply to the resolution, which came without any real endorsement, is to promise that when the Seventh Province's Finance Commission makes specific recommendations they will be considered by the Council.

CHRISTIAN SOCIAL RELATIONS

Dr. Robert A. Magill reported that the work of the Urban Commission has developed in an astonishing way. A survey to be made of the City of New York by the Diocesan Board of Christian Social Relations there, with the aid of the students of the General Theological Seminary, will have the help of this Department.

As to displaced persons, while there is a great deal of criticism of Protestant effort, our Church, Dr. Magill said, seems to be doing its part.

$1,458,000 is the total received this year in the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief, the first million of which came in response to Bishop Sherrill's radio message on February 29, the rest being contributions that came in later. Our Communion is the largest contributor of UNdesignated funds to Church World Service, which is making a real contribution to the work in which we are interested, particularly in the Asiatic division.

The Department is participating in religious seminar groups which include the C. I. O., the A. F. & L., the American Farm Bureau, and the National Conference of Co-operatives.

Dr. Magill submitted a resolution that the Department fully approved the Rev. James W. Kennedy's communication calling upon General Convention to give attention to the World Council of Churches.

COLLEGE WORK

Bishop Norman B. Nash reported that the College Work Division is in active pursuit of a new secretary, without whom the Division is limping.

ARMY-NAVY DIVISION

Dr. Percy G. Hall reported that our Church has 59 chaplains in active service at the present time, 147 in the Army Reserve, 162 in the Naval Reserve, and 26 in the National Guard.

He pointed out that many of the young men who are enlisting for one year are required to serve six years thereafter in the active reserve, but think that the one year finishes the whole duty. Those who enlist for 21 months must serve three years in the active reserve.

Inasmuch as the training areas are so few and cover wide areas, it will be necessary for the Church to work toward one goal and support the work in the dioceses where the Army camps are located.

The Division has been working on some sort of program so that the whole Church will be following the same methods of ministering to the needs of Episcopalians in the Armed Forces, the need for which was stressed by the synod of the Third Province. The Division has prepared an identification card, on the back of which will be printed:

YOUR SPIRITUAL ARMOUR

Keep your spiritual equipment right.

1. By praying daily for guidance and strength.
2. By reading some part of the Holy Scripture daily.
3. By attending Worship Services regularly.
4. By receiving Holy Communion at least once a month.
5. By keeping thoughts pure.
6. By choosing clean words.
7. By takfng your buddy to Church with you.
8. By writing regularly to your loved ones.

Cards will be supplied to the clergy to inform the Division where the members of their parishes are located so that Episcopal chaplains or nearby rectors can make contact with them and minister to them.

Bishop Dun, after an exceptionally fine piece of work in helping with the planning of the new Chaplains' Memorial Building in Washington, has resigned as one of our representatives on the General Commission on Chaplains in Washington. Bishop Henry I. Louttit was appointed by the Presiding Bishop to fill the vacancy.

LAYMEN'S WORK

The Presiding Bishop's Committee on Laymen's Work is completing six years of enlisting men in the work and worship of the Church. It is not a top heavy organization. New leadership is being created, and the Rev. Arnold M. Lewis, Executive Director, predicted that many new faces will be seen in General Convention next year.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

At the last General Convention the Woman's Auxiliary had an evening devoted to personnel, with such good results that the Executive Board recommends to the Committee of Arrangements the planning of a joint evening meeting of the same nature. The problem, as pointed out by Bishop Sherrill, is to work it in on a crowded ten-day calendar, but it will be proposed to the Committee of Arrangements.

The Board voted, reported Mrs. Arthur M. Sherman, $8,000 to $9,000 to make small gifts to active women missionaries, and from the Emery Fund $2,000 for retired missionaries. The Board is working on the program for a series of practical workshops.

AMERICAN CHURCH INSTITUTE FOR NEGROES

In his report, Mr. M. M. Millikan reported that the enrollment at Gaudet Normal and Industrial School in New Orleans has dropped 50% because of new access to free high school education for Negroes. If there ceases to be a need for Gaudet, it may be used for an orphanage.

Bishop Malcolm E. Peabody presented the report of a joint committee composed of the Council's Committee of Reference and the Trustees of the American Church Institute for Negroes, which has been working for the closer integration of the Institute with other parts of the national organization of the Church, and a more direct control by the National Council over the affairs of the Institute.

Inasmuch as the Institute is a separate corporation, its actions must be in keeping with its charter and by-laws and as approved by its trustees. However, its trustees are free to make a continuing arrangement with the National Council which they will not change without references to the Council. The trustees propose to apply the following policies, which will not be changed without the concurrence of the Council:

1. Instead of electing as president of the Institute the Presiding Bishop, who has asked to be relieved of this responsibility, it will be their policy to elect the head of the Home Department to provide a common head for the three related fields of work of Domestic Missions, College Work, and the A. C. I. N.

2. Its budgets will be submitted to the Home Department for review and for subsequent approval by the National Council.

3. To meet the necessity of commanding the full confidence of the National Council, the Institute will report to the Council the slate of trustees proposed for election from time to time, to seek endorsement of its slate, and respect all deletions from it prior to elections.

4. It will present its slate of nominees for the Board of Trustees at the February National Council meeting.

The Council approved the foregoing, so it will be made effective as soon as possible by the A. C. I. N.

CHINA

The Council meeting at this time of civil strife in China, adopted a resolution expressing to the Chung Hua Sheng Kung Hui "deep sympathy in her trials and sure confidence in her witness to the Faith that overcometh the world. We assure our brethren of our oneness with them and of our prayers for them and for China in her travial."

Mr. J. Earl Fowler read a cable from Bishop Roberts and Mr. Gilson asking for the remittance of the appropriation for the first six months in 1949 now, $91,000, if evacuation is necessary. Remittances to the interior may become impossible. The Council responded by appropriating the anonymous gift R. D. B., received in 1937, amounting to approximately $39,750, to the China Emergency Fund to be applied to the cost of evacuation of our missionaries and their families from China.

Mr. Arthur Allen, Treasurer in the Hankow area, reports that Russians are coming into that area, and that the staff have to dig trenches one day each week. Passports will not be renewed if they don't get out and get out fast.

JAPANESE MISSION IN MINNESOTA

In response to a request from Bishop Stephen E. Keeler, the National Council appropriated from the Kate Latham legacy $10,000, to be added to Minnesota's $6,000, for the purchase of a property to be used in the Twin City area as a social and social service center for the Japanese in that area. If ever the mission is discontinued, the property is to be sold promptly and the National Council reimbursed.

FINANCE

Mr. Dill reported the proposed mechanization of the Finance Department by the installation of new bookkeeping machines at a cost not to exceed $12,000. The Council aproved, the cost to be paid from undesignated legacies.

The Council aproved a budget for the Good Friday Offering, the estimated income of which is $45,000. The Presiding Bishop told how the Bishop in Jerusalem praised the work being done by Dr. Walter Conrad Klein.

The Council adopted Dr. Wieland's resolution calling for the creation of a Division of Town and Country Work in the Home Department, involving an increase of only $500 in salary.

SEABURY HOUSE

The Council adopted the resolution presented by Mr. Thomas B. K. Ringe and Bishop Arthur R. McKinstry, complimenting the Presiding Bishop on his efforts which provided Seabury House as a conference center and meeting place, where over 1,200 men and women have attended meetings. To the resolution was added appreciation of Mrs. Sherrill's part as hostess. Mr. Alexander Whiteside added another resolution of thanks to the staff at headquarters who have done so much to make the visits to Seabury House pleasant and comfortable, with a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to them.

Bishop Sherrill presented briefly a financial report on Seabury House. $160,000 has been raised, $75,000 borrowed from the National Council which is on Bishop Sherrill's conscience, because he doesn't want to touch mission funds for Seabury. $100,000 was paid for the property, the rest of the money having been spent for remodeling buildings, painting, equipping the kitchen, etc. $30,000 is left in the bank, with $8,000 in bills to be paid. A new fire law in Connecticut dealt a fresh blow in requiring the addition of fire escapes that will cost $17,000. The yearly budget of Seabury House is $24,000, of which $10,000 comes in in rentals, leaving $14,000 to be raised. Bishop Sherrill will ask General Convention for $10,000. Endowments are expected that will provide the rest. If eight or nine more houses could be built on the property, they would be just as good as endowment because of their rental value, and, besides, they would help solve the housing shortage.

SALARY REVISIONS

Dr. Barnes did make known to the press in his minutes the nature of the third executive session: a revision of salary schedules at 281, the total increases of which, including the 5% cost-of-living bonus, will not exceed $7,000. The purchasing agent, Mr. Harry L. Dietz, just one of them, was promoted to the office of Assistant to the Treasurer at a salary of $6,000. Mr. J. Earl Fowler's salary will be increased temporarily while he is serving as Acting Director of the Overseas Department in the absence of Bishop Bentley, who, on the latest report, is en route to Japan via the Aleutians after a week's conference with Bishop Gordon in Alaska.

king, that the Wuhu workers are in Shanghai, except for Bishop Craighill who is still in Wuhu; and that Mrs. Craighill, Miss Elda Smith, John Morrett, Miss Bessie Sims, the Rev. and Mrs. J. M. Wilson expected to sail November 29 on the transport Republic. A cable received later stated that Sister Augusta left December 2 for Boston by air.

Bishop Roberts' letter was reassuring, on the whole, as to the present situation. "Please bear in mind," he wrote, "that we are in constant touch with the highest authorities over here on the whole subject. For instance, Charles Long has been able to make contact with the Embassy and even Ambassador Stuart himself, in Nanking, and has several times telephoned to us in Shanghai. Last week I met with a group of missionaries at Consul Cabot's house, with Ambassador Leighton Stuart present and the whole situation was thoroughly gone into. I am, myself, a member of the American Association Committee which is composed of about 25 Americans from all walks of life in this city, and we get the latest information and generally try to follow a common policy. In the light of all these opportunities we try to make the wisest decisions, but it is not always easy, as you have to take a chance on the future. . . . Please encourage relatives and friends of the workers here to relax and not be worried. Our workers are most eager to stay at their jobs and it is a pain to have to urge any of them to go home."

RED DEAN'S VISIT MET WITH CANCELLATIONS

Detroit, Mich.—The visit of the Very Rev. Hewlett Johnson, "Red Dean" of Canterbury, to Detroit, was accompanied by a flurry of protests, cancellations and withdrawals which finally resulted in his making only one scheduled appearance in the city, on November 29, at the Music Hall, instead of several, as had been planned.

An address scheduled for Monday afternoon at Wayne University fell through because of disagreement between the Dean and a special program committee of the University as to the subjects to be covered in his address. A visit to the River Rouge plant of the Ford Motor Company, requested by the Dean for himself and his party, with oportunity for an address to the workers, was turned down because the company felt the visitors might be subjected to "unpleasant incidents."

The Dean spent a quiet day on Tuesday in Ann Arbor where he made one formal public address, to a capacity crowd of more than 1,000 at the Masonic Temple on the Road to Peace with Russia, which was largely a reiteration of the speech he delivered Monday night in Detroit. Thirty-six students gathered in the Lounge at Lane Hall at noon to hear Dean Johnson.

In a letter to all of the clergy of the Diocese of Michigan, Bishop Emrich had declared that Dean Johnson "speaks solely in his own name, and his views are opposed to the official statement of the Church." The local welcoming committee had included several Episcopal clergymen, some of whom withdrew their names before his arrival. Bishop Emrich's letter made no recommendations or suggestions, but offered several facts for the consideration of the clergy.

When he arrived in Detroit, the Dean was welcomed more by followers of Henry Wallace than by members of the Church. Asked about the clergy who had withdrawn from his welcoming committee here and elsewhere during his tour, he observed that "some might be scared by a Bishop."

marched to Premier David Ben-Gurion's residence. Ben-Gurion came outside and, with a Torah in his arms, joined the crowds in the Simchat Torah dances."

The fact that without the Jewish religion there would be no Israel is indisputable. But no one has described the legacy which Judaism bequeathed to the builders of the new country more effectively than President Weizmann. At the 1947 Herald Tribune Forum, where he shared the platform with John Foster Dulles, Reinhold Neibuhr and Barbara Ward in a discussion of religion's answer to the question, "Modern Man, Slave or Sovereign?", Weizmann said:

"The persistent and obstinate monotheism of the Jews in the face of all persecution has always been an accompaniment of this belief in human perfectability. One stern God demanding the perfection of one humanity. This is almost a summary of the Jewish credo.

"Indeed, it was so summarized by Hillel, the greatest of the post-biblical sages of the pre-Christian era. Confronted by a pagan who wanted Judaism in a nutshell, as it were, Hillel replied: 'Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. This is the law; all else is commentary.'

"Now I venture to submit that if a man pursues an idea, he thereby asserts his freedom and his sovereignty. For if he is only the creature of external circumstance, he cannot pursue an idea, or anything else. . . . To defy external forces, to rise above circumstances, is to proclaim the sovereignty of the same spirit.

"Monotheism, the supreme importance of perfectability in this sad, sublunar world, the refusal to be bullied by superior force . . . these are the leading elements in the Jewish contribution to human progress."

In these words, spoken by their President, is found the essance of that faith from which the Isreelis drew the inspiration and strength to build a free nation.

ROUNDUP OF BIENNNIAL MEETING FEDERAL COUNCIL CHURCHES

President Taft, first layman to serve as president, Bishop Stamm said, "I share with all of you in my sincere appreciation of the devoted and distinguished leadership he has given."

"The years immediately ahead will no doubt present added urgencies for united Christian action," he continued. "The task facing the churches can only be accomplished if the thought, prayer and service of the Churches are pooled in a larger way. There are those who believe this can only be accomplished through a complete change of patterns; those who see the only hope in Church union. Others see through the kindling of a great sense of unity in and through the spirit a more spiritually dynamic way. By the use of the Churches they believe the larger measure of united service can be achieved. Perhaps both methods must be used. There are more churches which can and should unite. The most important thing is not church union but Christian unity. Only as there is achieved unity in union will there be progress in united action."

With the adoption of courtesy resolutions thanking the Council of Churches of Greater Cincinnati, its secretary, Rev. Kemper G. McComb, and the many other individuals who contributed to the success of the three-day sessions the 40th anniversary reached its final moments.

Standing on the dais, surrounded by the officers and administrative heads of the Council Bishop Stamm pronounced a benediction and then called upon the gathering to rise and join in the closing hymn, "The Church's One Foundation."

The 21st biennial meeting of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, stood adjourned.

O Come, Let Us Adore Him!

Christ Lives Today

A CHRISTMAS MESSAGE TO ALL CHRISTIAN PEOPLE

By the Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, D. D.,

Presiding Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church

The birth of a baby in Bethlehem seemed of small significance to the rulers and the peoples of the ancient world. Yet almost two thousand years later, their empire has long since fallen into ruin while Christ lives as a vital power in the hearts and minds of millions of men and women of every race and clime.

Here more than a parable is an historic fact to guide us through the perplexities of today. Truth, goodness, love—these are eternal realities because they are of God.

Our generation can only be led into the paths of peace as we individuals kneel at the manger and thus find the secret of the good tidings of great joy which shall be to all men.

Personal Notes

Following the service, which was attended by many of the clergy, accompanied by lay people from their parishes, an informal reception was held in the Cathedral House in honor of the new Canon.

Christmas In The Church In Hawaii

By THE RT. REV. HARRY S. KENNEDY,
Bishop Of Hawaii

Tradition has built around Christmas the festive evergreen tree, glistening with tinsel and metallic globes, the lighted candle, the holly and mistletoe, the blazing Yule log, the festive cake. And far off Hawaii, with its blue skies and creamy surf, soft air and blooming flowers provides a unique experience to one who finds himself in this Pacific Paradise for the first time at Christmas, for here the expensive imported Christmas tree is found only in the homes of the fortunate; holly and mistletoe, flown from across the sea, take on an air of unreality, and the Yule log has no fireplace in which to burn.

But Christmas in Hawaii, tuned to a modern world, finds streets with ropes of tinsel and gay lights from which huge, red bells sway in the soft trade winds; shop windows that dazzle the eyes of potential buyers, Santa Clauses that jingle bells over Salvation Army Christmas kettles, and the eager faces of children as they survey the wondrous wares of merchants.

Yes—Christmas in Hawaii has many of the superficial aspects of Christmas, but it also has the blessedness of Christmas prevailing in our Churches today, because there were those who heeded the command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel!" Today our children of diverse races—Hawaiian, Caucasian, Filipino, Japanese, Chinese, Korean, and Portuguese—sing together in sweet accord in our Churches, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace to men of good will," and in their pageants of the Nativity renew the message of God's greatest Gift to man.

Christmas is Christmas to the Christian whether he basks in the warmth of the tropics or chills to the arctic breeze. Our Nativity plays may have a young boy playing the part of Joseph who is a stalwart Polynesian with the blood of Hawaiian kings; Mary may be portrayed by a sweet faced Oriental—a Japanese whose parents speak little or no English; the Wise Men might have one the descendant of Dr. Sun Yat Sen, founder of the Chinese Republic, who once attended our Episcopal Iolani School for Boys, another a Filipino, whose background is that of the Philippine Independent Church, and still another a Korean from a Buddhist family. Shepherds and angels may be Caucasians of American, English, German extraction, or any other of our diverse strains. Christmas trees will be the Royal Palms or branches from a coconut tree, decked in the traditional finery of gay colored balls and sparkling tinsel. A Nativity scene in Hawaii truly depicts to the Christ Child there is no east, no west, no north or south!

Arthur Asayama—Japanese

Snow at Christmas to the majority of our people is the myth of a Christmas card and story book. Santa Claus transports his cargo and reindeer by modern airplane facilities. Only to some on the Island of Hawaii, where Mauna Loa and Mauna Kea stand some thirteen and fourteen thousand feet above the ground, is the opportunity afforded to see snow capped mountains. At certain seasons these majestic volcanic mountains find upon them a mantle of snow.

"Peace to men of good will!" Considering the real meaning of Christmas, Hawaii is more attuned than other areas to the spirit of Him whose birth is the reason for the festivities. For His life was devoted to these precepts: "Let brotherly love continue. Be kindly affectioned, one toward the other. . . . Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." Romans 12:10, Psalms 34:14, 133:1.

We who live in Hawaii sometimes take for granted the harmony that has been achieved among persons of diverse cultural, racial and religious backgrounds. The inherent graciousness of the Hawaiian may be attributed to much of this Aloha (love, affection, good will) that exists between all people in the Islands. From the time of the early missionaries they have shown an eagerness to learn the Christian way of life—and to live it. The sunny skies of Hawaii have made sunny hearts in Hawaii. Prejudice and bitterness find little place in the Hawaiian's way of life.

"Behold I bring you tiding of great joy!" Hawaii today brings good tidings to the churches throughout the world, for here it can truly be said that men of good will have found peace in working together, living together, worshipping together. To be sure, there are still many others to whom the message of Christmas and the hope of Easter must be taken by those of our Church—our work is not done in a land where Buddhism still holds back the opportunities of evangelism—but our Church is in Hawaii, our challenge is before us. God grant that we may lead those who have not yet experienced the good tidings of Christmas to the Babe of Bethlehem, so that today and tomorrow Christmas may come and light a star of hope over a disordered world.

HOLY JOYS OF CHRISTMAS DAY

The Holy joys of Christmas Day
We cannot let them slip away.
Lost in confusion, noise, and snare,
Of hurrying crowds, and worrying care.
Of costly gifts and anxious thought.

Christmas means Altars decked in white
Made beautiful with candle light.
The worship of the Holy Child,
So tender, sweet, and undefiled.

To one who needs—some timely aid,
Or strength to one of life afraid.
New grace to meet the coming year,
Knowing that God is always near.

These Holy joys of Christmas Day
We cannot let them slip away.

Two Christmas Plays

By SARAH, BOB AND JUDY GAMBLE

The Wooly Lambkin

Scene: A shepherd's mother, his wife, and two or three young children.

The grandmother: "It is such a cold night, I wish Daniel had taken the blanket with him. It will be very cold watching the sheep."

Mother: "He thought the children would need it. It is late, it is time for them to be sleeping."

The children say their prayers, and lie down with a blue shawl drawn over them. One of them has a small sheepskin. When the prayers are completed—

Oldest child: "I prayed that the Messiah would come soon."

Second child: "Do you think he will be born a baby, or all grown up?"

Third child: "I think he'll be born a baby and have an ivory cradle and a golden crown."

Second child: "I think he'll be born grown-up and ride in a golden chariot, and all the Roman soldiers will be afraid, and run away."

A man and woman approach. The woman is dressed in a dark cloak, much as are the shepherd's family, and her head is bare.

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Two years ago Mrs. Clarence James Gamble of St. Michael's Church, Milton, Massachusetts, found herself being led by two of her children into the task of organizing and writing a new Christmas play. It was Bob (nine years old), who felt that a Christmas pageant should somehow be more closely related to the bringing of gifts by the children than had been the case in the past. Judy (twelve years) joined Bob and their mother and before long a new play was on the planning boards. Many ideas were brought out by the children and much discussion ensued before "The Wooly Lambskin" finally emerged. That year it was presented at St. Michael's. One year late "The Invisible Gifts" came to pass in the same way. These plays are presented here in their original form. No attempt has been made to finish and complete their every detail, for each cast of players should have the creative experience of completing the play for themselves.—Editor.

The Invisable Gifts

There is a screen at the top of the chancel steps which represents the stable door.

The play will open with the singing by the congregation of: "We Three Kings."

Toward the end of the singing a group of quite ordinary people of Bible times, three children and two adults, come up the aisle to the steps. The children, who have come faster, stop first.

Child: "They were so grandly dressed! Did you see his crown?"

Child: "And each was carrying a box, a most beautiful box!"

Child: "One box was gold, I am sure, and there were jewels in it. I saw them shine!"

Grown person: "Where could they have gone? I was sure they came this way!"

Grown person: "They couldn't have taken this street. It's such a poor, mean street, with nothing at the end but an old stable."

Grown person: "No they must have taken another turning. No use waiting here to see them again. We'd better be looking somewhere else."

The grown people leave, but the children linger.

Child: "I'm just as sure as sure this was the street they took even if it does end at an old stable."

Child: "Look! Look!"

The stable door opens, not wide enough for anyone to see in, but wide enough for the Kings to come out. They come one by one, each bowing deeply in the doorway.

Child: (to the Kings as they start down the steps), "Why did you go into that old stable?"

King: "To offer our gifts to the Great King."

Child: "Great King—in that stable!"

King: "Yes, it seemed strange to us too, but it is where our Star led us so we cannot be mistaken."

King: "He is but a few days old, so we laid our gifts at His feet, Myrrh, frankincense and gold."

Child: "Must you have gifts to give Him?"

King: "It is why we came, to pay Him homage."

The Kings leave.

Child: "I would like to see the Baby King."

Child: "But we haven't any gifts."

Child: "We haven't anything at all to give Him, so we can't see Him."

Child: "We'll just have to go home, and we came such a long way!"

While the children are speaking the door opens again, a little way, and Joseph comes out.

Joseph: "Did someone call? Can I do anything for you, children?"

Child: "We wanted to see the Baby King, but we can't because we haven't any gifts for Him!"

Joseph: "Oh yes you have, you have very beautiful gifts to give."

Child: "No we haven't. We're poor people. We haven't anything at home even."

Joseph: "I'm a poor man too. I'm just a carpenter, but I have these two hands. They are my gifts. They will serve the Baby all the rest of my life."

Joseph speaks to the first child: "What did you do today?"

Child: "My father works at the Inn over there, so I helped him clean the rooms."

Joseph: "If you made the rooms clean and pleasant, so that tired travelers could rest, that was a good gift."

He lifts the child's hands so that they look as if they were carrying something. "See, you have a fine gift for the Baby there."

Joseph speaks to the second child: "What did you do today?"

Child: "Oh nothing much. I played ball, and then I looked after the baby so mother could go out."

Joseph: "You were a good sport in the game I am sure, and you helped your mother. Those are very good gifts for the Baby" (raising the child's hands), "one in each hand to give Him." He turns to the third child.

Joseph: "What have you been doing?"

Child: "I go to school, I had to study most all day."

Joseph: "You are learning how to help people when you are older, to write their letters for them, perhaps to teach. Your gift isn't finished yet, but nevertheless it is a very good gift to offer the Baby."

Joseph lifts the third child's hands, then he turns and opens the stable door wide, so that Mary with the Baby can be seen. The children kneel and lay their invisible gifts before the Baby.

(A hymn may be sung at this point.)

Two children from the congregation, with their wrapped-up toys come to the steps. Joseph speaks to them and says: "These children have toys for children who have none of their own. Whenever you give from a loving heart to others, you are giving to the Baby King, the Christ Child. There are many other children here with Christmas presents for children who have none. Will you bring them to the Manger?"

When the children have brought their gifts, and the offering has been taken, and laid with the children's gifts, Joseph and Mary come forward. Joseph, quite simply, says: "Thank you, all," and Mary, looking at them, and then at Joseph, says: "How many presents they have brought!" Then looking at the children in the congregation, she says: "But there are other presents here, no one can see. If we could see them we would see they filled the church, up to the very top of the roof. They are all the things grown people and children do to help others. There are the gifts fathers, like Joseph, give their children by working all day long to support them. There are the gifts mothers give, caring for children, cooking for them and taking them to and from school. There are the gifts of doctors helping sick people get well, of teachers helping children learn, postmen carrying letters, milkmen carrying milk, and many more. These are the gifts no one can see, that fill the whole church, and that are more precious than the presents we can see, even the myrrh and frankincense and gold that were brought by the Kings."

The choir leads the congregation in singing a Christmas Carol.

(If it is preferred not to break the tableau of the Holy Family, the minister may say Mary's closing speech.)

THE WOOLY LAMBSKIN

The man: "May we rest here a few minutes? My wife is tired and it is very cold outside."

The shepherd family make room for them. The woman sits down near the children and talks softly to them.

(Organ plays softly.)

The shepherd's wife: "Are you going far tonight?"

The man: "We must reach Bethlehem tonight. We must be there to register and to pay our taxes."

The shepherd's wife: "You have only a little farther to go—you are almost in Bethlehem."

The woman rises: "Thank you for the shelter. The rest has helped me, and I am not so cold."

The shepherd's wife: "You are not warmly enough dressed for this cold night. You should stay here."

The shepherd's wife: "Take this blanket. It will keep the wind off."

The grandmother: "And take this shawl to cover your head."

One of the children: "And this wooly lambskin to keep your hands warm."

As they put these garments around the woman, the blue cloak, the veil over her head, they form on her the traditional Mary costume.

One of the children: "We were praying to have the Messiah come soon. Perhaps you will see him. Do you think they will have an ivory cradle for him, or will they welcome him with a golden chariot?"

Joseph: "Whatever they have, they could not possibly give Him a more beautiful welcome than you have given two strangers tonight."

Joseph and Mary leave. The shepherd family settle themselves to sleep. The organ plays as Joseph and Mary leave, and as the family falls asleep the choir sings very softly, as though from a great distance, "It Came Upon the Midnight Clear."

When the singing is over the shepherd comes to his family and wakens them.

The shepherd: "We were abiding in the field, keeping watch over our flock by night. And lo, the angel of the Lord came upon us, and the glory of the Lord shone round about us, and we were sore afraid.

"And the angel said unto us: 'Fear not, for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people.

" 'For unto you is born this day in the City of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.

" 'And this shall be a sign unto you, —ye shall find the Babe wrapped in "And suddenly there was with the swaddling clothes, lying in a manger.' angel a multitude of the heavenly host, praising God and saying:

" 'Glory to God in the highest and on earth, peace, goodwill toward men.'

"Let us now go even unto Bethlehem to see this thing which has come to pass, which the Lord has made known

"Behold I Bring You Good Tidings Of Great Joy"

The traditional greeting for this season is "Merry Christmas" and one of the loveliest marks of Christmas is the spirit of joy it brings.

This festival of faith gathers to itself all the natural forms of human joy, all things bright and beautiful. It gathers to itself the elemental joy of good companionship and the shared feast. Colored lights on Christmas trees, stockings bulging with mysterious gifts opened by children when the first light breaks, gay packages and cards exchanged among friends—all these are rightful Christmas joys.

All joy is good after its kind, all joy that is clean and is not purchased at the cost of another's hurt. The Christ whose coming we celebrate is no enemy of the common joy of men. We would be cynical Scrooges indeed if we were not glad for all true joy that men anywhere in our troubled world can have today.

Nevertheless, there is a deeper joy that is offered us. It is a joy that can dwell with pain; a joy that can be a light in darkness, a joy that can stand in the face of our own failure and wrong and the failure and wrong of our fellows.

That joy has come to those who have glimpsed even from afar the embodied charity entering our world in Christ: charity that suffers long and is kind, that vaunteth not itself, seeketh not its own, is not easily provoked. That strong and living charity has given new dignity to the failing and the despised. That Christ has humbled the proud. He has companioned with man in sorrow and darkness and made them strong.

Before Him we can kneel in penitence and rise forgiven and forgiving. He has shed a glory on life that can call out a Hallelujah even for the sore-stricken.

We celebrate again His coming, His giving of Himself to us and for us, His life so freely spent and so victorious in being spent.

For this we rejoice.

May you be granted a taste of this deep joy, given as the world cannot give.

May you be delivered from the disquietude of this world and permitted to behold the King in His beauty.

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy."

Christmas, A. D. 1948

"Where is peace?" cries the weary heart
Of an earth still stricken with pain.
"Where is peace?" echo back the dead
Who died, new worlds to gain.

The peace that came is a tawdry thing,
A sham, a shadow, a shame;
The hope that burns is a feeble thing
And sputters a flickering flame.

Yet peace was earned by those who died
That mercy and hope might live,
Who nobly gave their youth and might—
What are we seeking to give?

Do we give hate, the bigot's pride
That blights and sears all life,
And selfish greed for some cheap prize
Which breeds our fears and strife?

Or, give we love, and joy, and our hand
With the faith that must never die
That all mankind may friendship find
As children of God Most High.

He comes again at this Christmastide—
Will "peace on earth" herald His Birth?
Peace will come to the hearts of men
Who bring "good will" to earth.

Christmas In Life And Song

By THE RT. REV. B. M. WASHBURN

Bishop Of Newark

All down the ages young and old in their yearly remembrance of the Holy Birth have found in carol, hymn and song the natural expression of their joy in an historic event of deep significance. For Christmas our 1940 Hymnal includes no less than thirty-three hymns and carols, which is twice as many as it provides for Easter and the five succeeding weeks. In date the texts range all the way from the fifth century to the twentieth. In their origin they are Latin and Greek, French and German, English and American. A fourteenth century writer boldly claimed that Good Christian men, rejoice was first sung by angels to Heinrich Suso, the mystic as they drew him into a dance! Adeste fideles seems to be the work of an unknown Jesuit monk. Calm on the listening ear of night was written by a Harvard divinity student after a visit to the Holy Land. Phillips Brooks wrote for his Sunday School at Holy Trinity Church in Philadelphia the greatly loved "O Little Town of Bethlehem. All my heart this night rejoices, from the pen of Martin Luther, was written to be sung on Christmas Eve by his own family. "Christmas Day for Dolly" accompanied the text of Christians, Awake, Salute the Happy Morn, which was a Christmas gift from the author, John Byron, to his little daughter. Only an extraordinary event of profound significance could have been so heralded in every age in every tongue.

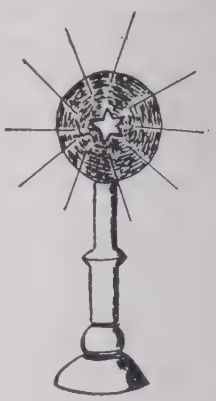
Some of our hymns do little more than recite the fact of the Saviour's birth in a paraphrase of the Gospel story of the Nativity. All of them are centered in the historic fact. It is a very simple fact—that long ago a certain child was born, who, growing to manhood, by his life and death enriched forever human life. This is the fact which makes the Christian faith more than a philosophy, more than human speculation, more than a pious hope. It is indeed a very simple fact, but religion ought to be so simple that all can enter into its inspiration and its cheer. We cannot always find an immediate answer to our subtle questions. Perhaps this means that such questions have less real importance than men assign them. The wise men of the East proved their wisdom by their rediness to throw aside, at least for a season, their intricate speculations. Coming to Bethlehem they knelt before the Baby in the manger. There at least was reality and substance. Christmas comes to us also, in our restlessness of thought and our fever of activity, with it's calm insistence that there is a central truth in the light of which we may walk safely and surely through life's puzzling paths. The splendor of the Christ life, with its tragic earthly close, captured even in the first century the imagination of choice souls. In each succeeding age men have seen that through the Christmas Child there is revealed the quality of life which alone can bless the world. This is the Christmas fact—that loving sacrificial living is the highest gift of God to man, and man to God.

Few of the hymns merely recite the Gospel story. Many treat of its theological implications in the terms of the historic Creeds. As the child grew in wisdom, and stature, and in favor with God and man, the amazing wonder of the Holy Birth little by little dawned upon men. To devout and thoughtful men more and more of the breath-taking meaning of Christmas comes. The Babe of Bethlehem is seen to be the most complete revelation that God can give to men of what He is and of what they ought to be. Christ is the Word of God to man. He can be the Saviour of the world because in Him God and man are at one. God hath visited His people and He comes to stay. He has involved Himself in everything which concerns us all, our temptations, our defeats, our victories. He may be found in factories and banks, on buses and airplanes, before kitchen ranges and kings' thrones. And He looks to us so to live and work and pray that others will see that He is there.

Ever since the first Christmas it has been dangerous to draw too sharp a line between the sacred and the secular. As William Temple tells us, Christianity is the most materialistic of religions. This is the result of God's laying on the doorstep of the world the Christmas Gift of His only-begotten Son. So we keep Christmas best when we keep it in materialistic fashion. This we do when we go to our own Bethlehem, our own House of Bread, and there kneel before the Altars of our parish Churches to receive Bread and Wine, two common substances, which God uses as a means by which He may visit and redeem His people. In the bread we break is the toil of farmers, miners, railway engineers, bakers, salesmen and a host of others. All our complex social and economic structure is involved. We do well on Christmas Day to ask for His blessing both on the bread and wine and on the society of which we are a part.

One of the Christmas carols quaintly emphasizes a second way of keeping the great day:



Now to the Lord sing praises,
All you within this place.
And with true love and brotherhood
Each other now embrace.

It follows as a natural consequence of drawing near to God that we find ourselves drawn closer to one another. Kinship with God the Father spells kinship with men our brothers. Peace and goodwill are the Christmas imperative.

It is the good-will to men which prompts God's Christmas giving and our own. In giving the Christmas Child, God gave the world a gift which was Himself. It was a great gift because life is always the greatest gift that can be given. Gifts are the natural expression of our love for one another. The greatest of all gifts can be purchased without money and without price. Such are the lover's gift of his own life in complete devotion, the husband's gift of his own life in utter loyalty, the mother's gift of her own life in sweetest care, the son's gift of his own life in tender understanding. God grant us one and all a Joyous, Grateful, Blessed Christmas. At altars and firesides, in offices and shops may we give and receive the good-will of which the angels sang at Bethlehem.

Christmas In A Missionary District

By GEORGE H. QUARTERMAN

Bishop Of North Texas

In the Mission Field at Christmas tide, we strive with the whole Church to remove the X- the unknown factor of the commercialized "X-mas" and to fill the season with the known, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son". So shall it be in ranch home, small hamlet and large city that the children of God in the bosom of the Christian family will hear again an angels' song more significant than a reindeer's bell, of a gift of God more priceless than any tinselled package. Even more, the avowed disciples of a victorious Saviour will seek Communion with Him in the manner he set forth, "Do this in remembrance of me".

As in an earlier day, many will come from afar. It's more than blocks from ranch to town and from town to city. So be it, with our Christian brethren everywhere, we share uplifted hearts and voices of praise directed unto God.

But not all. The clergy shortage casts a shadow this Christmas on the Mission Field. Four mission priests can't serve a field requiring ten. A mission congregation asked me this. "Can we leave the lights on in the Church all night Christmas Eve? We can't have our Christmas Communion then for we have no priest but we'll let the light shine out from the Church upon the town". Praise God, let the light shine out! Pray God that men will offer themselves for His ministry in the Mission Field. Then may He come to all who would receive Him. Then may we all sing, "Hosanna in the Highest".

The Spiritual Dimension

By Reinhold Niebuhr

Very frequently one hears the sage observation that the crisis in which we live is "spiritual" rather than economic or political. Every one nods his head approvingly at such an observation but not many bother to explain what it might possibly mean. The speaker is usually pretty vague about the meaning.

We might take a slice of current history to illustrate what the "spiritual" dimension of the present crisis involves. France is continually protesting against the American and British policy of raising the production level of Germany and also against the policy of keeping the Ruhr territory incorporated in the German Economy.

We have insisted on this policy because without higher production Germany will remain an economic liability and the whole of European recovery will be imperiled. Furthermore if the Ruhr production is taken from the German account there is no possibility of German economic self-sufficiency. The import-export budget cannot possibly be made to balance.

The French are naturally concerned about the danger of a stronger Germany. We ought to do all we can to allay those fears. German power must be under control for a long time to come because of the justified fears of those who have been ravaged by Germany.

But the French fears are obsessive to the point of being neurotic. They prevent France from being a healthy part of a healthy democratic world. The most immediate possibility is that they will drive France into a quasi-fascist Gaullist political program. Thus French preoccupation with the German evil tends to produce the evil in France which it fears in Germany.

Here we can see a "spiritual" dimension of a political problem very clearly. A political problem is always a problem in relationships between men and nations. The spiritual problem is not some other problem than the political one. It is the same problem in its deepest dimension. If a political problem is looked at in this dimension it becomes apparent that my relation to some one else is partly a problem of my relation to myself and to God.

Thus an excessive form of self-righteousness which makes it impossible for me to exhibit any charity toward a vanquished foe may really be an expression of my own unacknowledged and unforgiven guilt. It may be that France is so obsessively fearful of Germany because she has failed to acknowledge to herself that the Vichy period of her ignominious relation to Nazism proved that she did not resist Nazism to the hilt.

If she could acknowledge her own share of guilt in past evils more openly she might not live so consistently in the past and move toward a brighter future. Her present policy darkens the future with the evils of the past.

This is merely one example of the spiritual dimension of present political problems. The spiritual dimension is

The Word Was Made Flesh

I, who have only words to bring
To Bethlehem, to Bethlehem,
Like baubles on a fragile string,
Yet offer them, remembering
A tale that flashes down dark ages:
How once there journied far three Sages
To Bethlehem, to Bethlehem,
And each of them was carrying
A gift unworthy of a King—
Yet with a wise and secret smile
They counted mile on weary mile
To Bethlehem, to Bethlehem,
Knowing He they sought would understand—
That in that mighty Infant Hand
The incense, myrrh and gold would be
By long-awaited alchemy
In Bethlehem, in Bethlehem,
Symbol of Priest and Seer and King.
So with the gift I dare to bring
To Bethlehem, to Bethlehem.
I know the Eternal Word will make
The dull words offered for His sake
Suddenly to glow and shine
Like water changing into wine—
By His acceptance, they will be
Not my poor tinsel trumpery,
But jewels to blaze within His shrine
In Bethlehem, in Bethlehem.

MANGER SCENE

Above them burned the holy star
Which heralded His birth;
The tiny Babe so helpless there
Sent to redeem the earth!

The wise men came—they worshipped there
That Babe in manger low;
They shared the Virgin's vigil sweet,
Their hearts with love aglow!

Oh! weary world with sorrow bowed,
Forget your wounds today——
Give Him your heart—let Him come in,
And enter there to stay!

CHRISTMAS REFLECTIONS

As we think of Christmas in a reflective mood it brings to our mind many pictures. The joy that has come into the world because of the birth of Jesus Christ our Lord is reflected in the hymn, "Joy to the World the Lord has come." Even those who have been saddened through the year or now are alone in the world, can remember at least one experience of happiness shared with another.

With crunchy snow under our feet we three small children, with our arms hung with laurel wreathes tied with hugh red ribbons, used to go laden forth early Christmas morning. The neighbors on our street never hung wreathes on their front doors, as they knew from our custom one would be delivered early in the morning. This was our first act each Christmas. Then after a cheery greeting to them all we hurried home for our Christmas stockings and presents.

In the Diocese of Virginia there has been sent by the Bishop a Christmas Family Service to all "his flock." It is easy to picture this being used in mountain cabins, in a church home and school, in a rectory, in a city home and in a country home. Here we see families gathered to "worship the King." It is wonderful to be part of this family.

There is another picture of the teaching of Christmas. In a cold spot, at the head of a stairs with but little heat, and a red plush settee and some stair steps for seats, a class was presented the "Christmas Story." We forgot the wintry zero wind as the teacher told us that each year Christ's birth should mean more and more to us. At ten years old we sensed that she knew what she meant by her words and her sincere and glowing countenance. We recalled it sometime after and knew that as we grew Christ's birth—Christmas, became more meaningful and wonderful.

The scene of other Christmas reflections is in a small town. There are gathered together a group of young people, warmly wrapped against the wind's cold blast, to sing Christmas carols. There was the annual visit to the woman who sat by the window in her wheelchair. Then the tree lighted at the window of the "Home for the Oldest Folk in Town," was the next stop. We went through the building singing carols. We saw them enjoying their Christmas Eve party. We saw them remembering other days, but their faces lighted up as we sang the familiar carols. Some of them sang with us. It made us "glow" with joy.

From the cold tramp around the town we went quietly into the warm and beautifully decorated church. There we joined with our families in the celebration of the Holy Communion. This was Christmas.

May "Joy to the World, the Lord Has Come" mean more each year as we labor in His field.

CLIII

Before leaving the Second Sunday in Advent it is well to remind ourselves of the great familiarity that St. Paul had with the Old Testament Scriptures, for it is characteristic of the education that a Jewish boy received in his time. Scholars who have made a careful study of his writings have found that, in the Epistle to the Romans, this great Evangelist has made more than eighty quotations from the Old Testament. Furthermore a close comparison of these quotations shows that they were made from memory, and not just copied. This is evidenced by the fact that they are not absolutely accurate in every detail.

Also, before passing on from this subject, we should pay a tribute to the great usefulness of the American Bible Society, which has now published, either the whole or some part, of the Bible in more than one thousand different dialects and languages, reaching from the Arctic Circle to the southernmost points of South America and South Africa, and including the islands of the sea.

This great fact is all the more impressive when we remember that our Saviour said, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but My words shall not pass away." Lk. 21:33. The fulfillment of this prophecy is astounding in view of the fact that Jesus never left us a single written word with which to preserve those words of His which "Shall not pass away." This fact alone should be convincing proof of the divinity of Christ.

The Gospel for this Sunday concludes with that amazing prophecy from our Saviour's lips, and coupled with the opening words of the Epistle, "Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope" (Romans 15:4), present a wonderful background for thoughts about the Bible, including both the Old and New Testaments, so that we have here a complete background for Bible Sunday, an occasion which should never be overlooked in our Protestant Church, since it affords such a splendid opportunity to emphasize the use and value of our English Bible in all its translations from Tindal to Goodspeed.

"FAITH THE ROCK AND CHRISTMAS"

1853—On bare Indian Rock, in the great Ocean-Sea,
Were gathered a group (just like you, or like me).
To worship THE LORD were they come on that day,
And to hear and receive what our Prayer Book should say.
Was it Trinity-Seven? Or, Trinity-Nine?
(Just look up the Collects, in your Book, or mine.)
"Lord of power and might," —did they read that first day?
Giver of good things to all, whenever He may—
"Graft deep in our hearts the true love of Thy Name,
And in Thy sweet mercy keep us safe in the same.
"Grant to each of us, Lord, Thy strong Spirit to think
And to Do such good things, that we ever may drink
"Of that spiritual ROCK giving also our Meat"—
Let us pray, Brethren dear of THAT always to eat.

1948—And today, at our "Christ-Mass" we fervently pray
That the Little LORD JESUS may close to us stay
Who maketh us glad every year at HIS birth
(Just read from your Prayer Book, and sing in your Mirth.)
And the Almighty GOD, who hast given His Son,
Will make you, and me, and the World-to be One.

VOCATIONAL CONFERENCE FOR COLLEGE MEN AND WOMEN

El Rancho del Obispo, Healdsburg, Calif.—The Diocese of California and the Eighth Province held an extremely interesting Vocational Conference for their college students at El Rancho del Obispo, the conference center for the Diocese of California, on Thanksgiving weekend. This Conference was organized by Mrs. Alicelee Caulfield, provincial secretary for College Work, and the Rev. Canon Charles W. Carnan, Jr., executive secretary for College Work in the Diocese of California.

Forty-nine students, representing a good portion of the campuses of the area, were present, and each and every one entered wholeheartedly into the Conference and participated in the enthusiastic discussions which followed each speaker.

The Conference was opened after supper on Friday evening by the Rev. Charles W. Woodhams, who spoke on "The Religious and the Secular Call." Miss Katharine Grammer, dean of St. Margaret's House, Berkeley, led a most interesting discussion on "Christian Personality." Mr. Philip Adams spoke to the group on "The Place of Christianity in the Economic Field." The Rev. Canon Carnan led the worship services, was the celebrant of the services of Holy Communion each morning, and spoke to the Conference on "Lay Work in the Church."

Following the service of Holy Communion Sunday morning a panel discussion was led by the Rev. Canon Carnan, Miss Grammer and Mr. Adams, for the purpose of summarizing the preceding discussions.

At the close of the Conference it was planned to hold another in the spring, the subject being, "The Church, Labor and Management."

CLERGY—DOCTORS HOLD DINNER-MEETING

Englewood, N. J.—Instituting what may mark a new era in inter-professional cooperation between clergy and doctors in the Northern Valley of New Jersey, a dinner meeting, attended by sixty-six members of the two professions was held at St. Paul's Parish House on December 7. The Northern Valley is the eastern half of populous Bergen County in the suburban and industrial area between the Hudson and Hackensack Rivers, served largely by the Englewood Hospital, which is currently conducting a three million dollar drive for expansion of its facilities.

The chief address at the Conference was given by the Rev. Otis R. Rice, chaplain of St. Luke's Hospital, New York City. A frank discussion ensued on methods by which the two professions can better cooperate in their mutual ministry to the sick. The practical decisions resulted: A course on medical procedure and hospital technique will be given for the clergy by the Staff of the Englewood Hospital, and another Conference will be held in February to consider the advisability of a part or full time chaplain at the hospital.

This movement for better clergy-doctor cooperation was iniatated by the Englewood Ministerial Association and was planned and conducted by a comimttee under the chairmanship of the Rev. James A. Mitchell, rector of St. Paul's Church, working with a committee of physicians under Dr. Russell K. Tether, who has been head of the Medical Executive Committee of the Englewood Hospital Staff. It has aroused much local interest, including favorable editorial comment.

Initial impetus for the cooperation of the physicians was given when the Rev. Mr. Mitchell sent sixty of the Hospital Staff mimeographed copies of an editorial appearing in the Southern Churchman entitled "Clergy and Doctors," which had been reprinted from an English Church paper. This editorial suggested the advisability of such local inter-professional conferences.

BISHOP BENTLEY IN JAPAN

New York, N. Y.—A letter from Bishop John B. Bentley, director of the Overseas Department and vice-president of the National Council, tells of his safe arrival in Japan, by air from Alaska, where he and Mrs. Bentley spent a week.

Bishop Bentley, at time of writing, had followed a busy schedule of conferences, services and confirmations. He visited much of the destroyed area in Tokyo and saw the church buildings which were destroyed or damaged, discussing with Bishop Makita, Fr. Viall and others the future needs, questions of church locations, etc.

Visiting St. Luke's Hospital, still in small and inadequate quarters, while the U. S. Army continues to occupy the St. Luke's International Medical Center plant, Bishop Bentley wrote: "This morning we made a tour of St. Luke's Hospital and found the staff busy attending to more than 500 clinic patients daily, as well as 24 or 25 in-patients. I have never seen so much being done with so little before. Every inch of space is being used, every piece of equipment is overtaxed, every facility overwhelmed. There is great and grave need to make other and more ample arrangements."

The Bishop's present itinerary will keep him in Japan until about the end of December.

PAYS OFF IN "HUMAN DIVIDENDS"

New York, N.Y.—The Youth Division of the National Council has received a report of "human dividends" as a result of the Youth Conference held recently in the Seventh Province. A local newspaper coined that phrase, its three-column headline reading, "Episcopal Church Youth Session Pays Off in Human Dividends."

Attending the conference was one boy who had been in serious trouble. He had been arrested with an older bandit who had high-jacked in three towns. The boy was the victim of a broken home; parents divorced; left with his mother, who has four other children by a stepfather who does not particularly like the boy.

The boy is being cared for now at St. Francis Boys' Home, Ellsworth, Kansas, and is under the guidance of the Rev. Robert H. Mize, Jr., director of the Home, and one of the leaders in the recent Youth Conference.

Mr. Mize brought the delinquent boy to the Conference for two days. He said at the close that he looked happily forward to his new home at St. Francis, and said, "This has been the most wonderful time I have ever had."

COMMITTEE MEETS TO RECOMMEND DR. GUERRY'S SUCCESSOR

Sewanee, Tenn.—The committee appointed to recommend to the Board of Trustees a Vice-Chancellor of the University of the South to succeed the late Dr. Alexander Guerry had its first preliminary meeting in New Orleans on November 30. Those present were: the Rt. Rev. Frank A. Juhan, Chancellor of the University; the Rt. Rev. Thomas N. Carruthers, Bishop of South Carolina; the Rev. Henry Bell Hodgkins, of Pensacola; Dudley Gale of Nashville; Ben Cameron, of Meridian, Mississippi, and Charles McD. Puckette, of Chattanooga. Bishop Carruthers was elected chairman of the committee and the Rev. Mr. Hodgkins secretary. ST. LUKE'S OPENS CEREBEAL PALSY SCHOOL

Atlanta, Ga.—In cooperation with the Cerebral Palsy Society of Georgia, St. Luke's Church opened the first Cerebral Palsy School in Georgia on December 7, it was announced by the Rev. J. Milton Richardson, rector.

This school, which is held in the recently rebuilt and remodeled Parish House of St. Luke's Church, will enroll cerebral palsied boys and girls from four to eight years of age. The aim of this special school is to give children with cerebral palsy a chance at normal life.

Pupils will be given eyesight, ear, speech coordination and mental tests as the basis for their training. There will be conferences with the mothers of such handicapped children to give them an understanding of what the children need and of what they can do for them at home.

Besides a teacher for the school furnished by the Atlanta Board of Education, there will be a medical director of the school furnished by the Aidmore Crippled Children's Hospital at Atlanta. Arrangements have been made also to have a physiotherapist visit the school daily to give each child the therapy prescribed by his personal physician. The Junior League Speech School will provide a speech teacher to give the children speech therapy.

EPISCOPALIANS STUDY MODERN MARRIAGES

Washington, D. C.—Marriage, 1949 model, is getting the once-over from study groups in Episcopal churches in the Diocese of Washington.

"Successful Marriage and the Christian Family" is the official title of the discussion series, which is the first Family Study Program of the National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

The total program, according to church officials, is an attempt to provide an opportunity for parents and youth to think together about the church and religion.

Eventually there will be a unified parish program. The marriage series is a beginning in which youth, young married people and more mature adults are joining in the discussion of the problems of modern marriage.

Four brief pamphlets have been issued by the National Council as guidebooks for marriage study groups.

In addition, a volume on how to organize a lively discussion has been published for use by group leaders.

The four study volumes are entitled: "Marriage: 1949 Model Versus Christian Marriage"; "Building a Successful Marriage"; "Personal Adjustments in Marriage"; and "How the Church Helps the Christian Family."

Written in a brief and readable style, the pamphlets mince no words in telling the facts. Sex is not taboo, in-law problems are frankly discussed, solutions for money problems are suggested.

But the books do not eliminate possibilities for discussion. Each one concludes with a series of suggested questions for group examination

At St. Timothy Chapel the group began its study in October, and the young married people and college students in the group meet once a month for supper and lively talks. The Rev. Malcolm Marshall, rector of St. Margaret's Church, spoke at the initial meeting.

At All Souls Memorial Church the discussions have been taking place on Sunday mornings under the leadership of the rector, the Rev. Frank Blackwelder.

Study groups are now being organized or are planned for January in the following Episcopal churches in the diocese: Esther Memorial, the Rev. Berry B. Simpson, rector; Grace, Silver Spring, the Rev. Francis M. Hamilton, rector; River Terrace Chapel, the Rev. Andrus B. Smith, vicar; St. Columba's, the Rev. C. Randolph Mengers, rector; St. John's, Georgetown, the Rev. William MacD. Sharp, rector, and St. Margaret's, Mr. Marshall.

RELIGIOUS ACTIVITIES ON GOVERNOR'S ISLAND

New York, N. Y.—Post Chaplain (Major) Julian S. Ellenberg is in charge of religious work at Governor's Island, N. Y., which centers in the beautiful and historic Chapel of St. Cornelius, which is a part of the parish of Trinity Church.

Chaplain Ellenberg wrote recently of the work now being done, noting first, that the doors are open all through the day and until eleven o'clock at night.

"On three weekday mornings a kindergarten meets in the Church school room. Intermediate boys, who meet in the upstairs robing room, have Lt. Col. E. C. Wood of the Light Aviation Section, First U. S. Army, as their teacher. Some of these boys also serve as acolytes. Intermediate girls have for their teacher Miss Betsey Mullen, recent Sweet Briar graduate, and Mrs. Charles F. Adams. This group meets in the deck part of the Yacht Club, Island Teen-Agers' Room. The Yatch Club is a reclaimed part of the Chapel basement or nave crypt. Previously used for storage, it now meets a long-felt and crying need. The Yacht Club is most colorful. As one enters the private hallway his eye is caught by coiled ropes which partially cover the 2,000 pound capstan. Such assures 'safe anchorage' for all. Stepping upon the gangplank one is made to feel that a voyage of pleasure is commencing. Navy blue canvas hangs from the gangplank rails made from two-inch ship's rope. Old ship lanterns give light. Blue, red and yellow enamel life preservers hang from the walls. Entering the 'deck' one notices an oil mural of skies, gulls, ships and lighthouses; and plexiglass-covered portholes add to the shiplike idea. Opposite the deck entrance is a galley or snack-abr. Upon entering the ward-room, the teen-ager finds a shuffleboard,

A CHRISTMAS LITANY

O God, deliver us—
From a civilization content, at Christmas time,
To behold the joyous light in children's eyes,
While nearby stands another child whose tears
Of hopeless yearning streaks the show-glass panes.
From a civilization whose lip-service to Thee
Arises from communities where the low intonations
Of the pipe organ is contrasted to the whistling
Shriek of icy winds through the broken window pane
Of nearby poverty.
From a civilization content that, at this time,
For pomp and grandeur, ease and luxurious comfort,
Mirth and happiness to light the hilltop,
While in the near dank bottom dwells,
Frenzied care, poverty, want, hopelessness and despair.
From a civilization that clamps behind cold bars of steel,
One who for hunger's sake steals a loaf of bread,
While those who are trained in astute cunningness,
Enjoy the homage of their fellow men because
Their fraud was hid behind the hallowedness of law.
If it must be proved by our lives,
The truth once stated, that all have sinned and gone astray,
Let it be found in weakness made of many fires,
And wills framed in lack of rigidness.
But, oh, not let it be by—cold bloodedness.

RANDOLPH ROSEWELL PAGE.

reading lamps, ship chairs and tables for games. On the walls are framed pictures of early and historical ships. There is also a room with ping pong table and a bench for onlookers. The Club has been an incentive for an Island-wide, well-organized and supervised youth program. It serves also as a parish hall for various meetings.

"The Chaplain's assistant, in addition to his other duties, serves as acting scoutmaster of the Island Boy Scout Troop No. 100. The able choir, maintained by Trinity Parish and supervised by Miss Gladys Shailer, provides music for the 10:30 Morning Prayer and Sermon, and for other services.

"The St. Cornelius Chapel rises splendidly from among the buildings of this Island fort to remind all that God is the sure fortress of men and nations."

MICHIGAN'S GOVERNOR-ELECT STRAIGHT FROM THE CHURCH

Detroit, Mich.—On the day after the November election, the people of Michigan looked at their morning papers and rubbed their eyes. The new Governor-elect, it seemed, was a young man named G. Mennan Williams, who had barnstormed around the state with his pretty young wife in a modest convertible during the electioneering period, and who wasn't particularly famous for anything.

Then the Church people of the state awoke to the fact that G. Mennen Williams was one the "old boys," and that Mrs. Williams is also a product straight from the Church.

The following article appeared in the December 1 issue of "The Cathedral News," a new venture of St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit:

How does it feel for a church to send one of its sons to a high place in government?

St. Paul's is now experiencing that sensation, for G. Mennen Williams, the Governor-elect of Michigan, and after January 1, its Governor, is a member of the Cathedral Parish, and stems from a family long devoted to the Church.

In fact, the new Governor's father was a member of the vestry and served for a long time as its secretary.

About the sensation! Well, it's pride, mostly. Regardless of our political preference and our faith in the Gallup poll, we must admit to a warm sense of proprietorship when we consider that one of our most consistent worshippers is the first gentleman of the Commonwealth.

The Cathedral News congratulates him, his charming wife and his family.

He is proud of his choir boy background and likes to remember that it was membership in St. Paul's famous boys' choir that implemented in him an early interest in government. For the boys had a self-governing organization and he took such an interest in it that he determined he should be a lawyer and a lawyer he became. And now he's our Governor!

Another thing, since we're talking so much about pride in this article, Mennen William is proud of the fact that, as a choir boy, he was the winner of the Dean's Cross, which is awarded not only for good performance, but for consistent new Governor has been consistent in his attendance at practice sessions.

This is a good place to say that the attendance at the Cathedral all down the intervening years, from choir boy and Sunday school days to the present time, which finds him a member of the Junior Vestry. We just hope that his new duties, which we realize will be many and arduous, don't keep him away from us too often.

And finally, and again: Congratulations, Governor, and the best of luck!

So ends the article in the Cathedral News. And we might just add that the family of the Governor-elect's lady, the former Nancy Quirk, has been president for many years in St. Luke's Parish, Ypsilanti, and that we feel Michigan is richly blessed in having two such fine young people in positions of power and influence.

THE NEW G. F. S.

The Presiding Bishop recently wrote in part to the President of the Girls' Friendly Society, "Thank you for your letter containing the report of the recent action which made the GFS an Assisted Agency under the Department of Christian Education. I believe this is a real forward step and I wish you to know of my desire to help the good work in every possible way."

This approval of Bishop Sherrill's followed two recent events in GFS history. The first was the constitution action that made the GFS a youth organization. Now the GFS is an organization for all girls from the grade of 7 to 14 as Junior Members, and girls from 15 to 21 as Members. All women over 21 who support the GFS are known as GFS Sponsors.

This action cleared the way for a second important step. After an extensive study, the Department of Christian Education approved standards and accepted the GFS as an Assisted Agency of the Department of Christian Education functioning through the Division of Youth. This gives the organization official standing within the Church and makes clear its place in diocese and parish.

The GFS has a week-day activity program to help girls translate Christian teaching into everyday living. It has branches in 73 dioceses and missionary districts, including branches in Cuba, Puerto Rico, Japan and China. In the past year GFS has admitted 3,000 new members, of which 2,000 were in new branches.

Bishop Banyard of New Jersey recently said that he hopes to see a GFS in every parish of his diocese. As a means of helping girls and training them as future churchwomen and leaders, there is a place for the Girls' Friendly Society in every parish.

MISSION WORKERS EVACUATED

New York, N. Y.—First news of evacuation of some mission workers from China reached the National Council in the form of a cable from Bishop William P. Roberts of Shanghai. The message said that the Rev. Ralph L. Tucker and family were coming to Boston by air. Mrs. John J. Morrett of Anking, with her baby, will come to Los Angeles by air. The Rev. and Mrs. Leslie L. Fairfield and family are sailing on a military ship.

EXPECTATIONS—1948

Emergencies in the China field due to internal strife and increased living costs throughout the world have limited the possibility of "lapsed balances," that is, unusued appropriations. To balance the General Church Budget for 1948 will require full payment of every Expectation and overpayments where possible.

Percentage-wise payments on Expectations, as of December 1, 1948, are not as good as of December 1, 1947. The attached statement discloses that $456,759.03 must be collected in the final month of the year. It will be no small task and will demand the earnest attention of all—laymen, laywomen, vestrymen, priests and bishops. It can be done.

A Blessed Christmas and a happy and fruitful New Year to each of you.

Faithfully yours,

RUSSELL E. DILL.
Treasurer.

HOUSE GIVEN FOR DIOCESAN CENTER DEDICATED

Charleston, S. C.—Several hundred persons from throughout the Diocese of South Carolina attended the dedication ceremony for the recently occupied Diocesan House, 138 Wentworth Street, on December 5. Bishop Carruthers and Bishop Thomas, retired bishop of the diocese, conducted the service of dedication which was followed by a social hour .

The building was given by Miss Marguerite C. Miller of Charleston last year for a diocesan center. In addition to the gift of the building itself, Miss Miller has furnished one of the rooms as the bishop's chapel. One of the large rooms has been furnished as a diocesan Library by Mrs. George L. Buist, of Charleston, in memory of her son, Reginald Hudson Bedell, Jr., who lost his life in World War II. Mrs. A. Kinloch McDowell, also of Charleston, has furnished the bishop's office in memory of her husband. A number of other memorials have been given and several hundred gifts of money have been received, enabling the diocese to renovate the entire building. The largest of these gifts was one for $2,000 from Bishop and Mrs. Thomas. The building of Greek revival

BISHOP GOODEN REPORTS GROWTH

Ancon, P. C. Z.—Bishop R. Heber Gooden of the Panama Canal Zone reports that he has confirmed ten persons at St. Andrew's, Cocoli. This was the first class to be presented in the new church there, and the first class to be presented to the Bishop by Chaplain Milton A. Cookson.

Bishop Gooden reported also on considerable growth of both Church congregation and Church school. "In fact the church was so crowded," he said, "that we had to put the Confirmation class in the choir, and I had quite a task getting into the pulpit." In adition to civilians the service was attended by a number of Navy people from the "West Bank Navy Station."

TWO CHRISTMAS DAYS

unto us." The choir and people sing: "O Come, all ye faithful."

They go down the aisle where they meet the three kings, and perhaps other shepherds, returning with them to the chancel steps. As they reach the chancel the choir sings again, this time loudly, the screen is drawn aside, revealing the Holy Family. Mary is wearing the shawls given by the shepherd's family, and the Baby is wrapped in the lamkskin.

The shepherds kneel, the kings present their gifts, with appropriate music. Then the youngest shepherd child, coming close to look at the Baby, says: "The Baby is wrapped in our lambskin. We didn't know we were giving it to Him."

And Mary says: "Whenever, out of loving kindness, you give to someone in need, you are giving, whether you know it or not, to the Holy Child."

The children of the congregation are then asked to bring their gifts while the entire congregation sings: "Angels, From the Realsm of Glory."
